Order's Efforts on Behalf of Jews in the Balkan States

On the initiative of the Division of Intercourse and Education of the Carnegie Endowment Fund for International Peace, it has been proposed that a committee representing the United States, Great Britain, France, Russia, Germany and Austria be appointed to make an impartial inquiry into the alleged massacres in the Balkans during the recent war. There is no doubt that the commission will find that such massacres did take place. To ascertain, however, what did take place is not of so much importance as to prevent, if possible, what may take place. What protection will the Balkan governments accord to the Jews and Moslems in the conquered territory? That question is to the people interested of the utmost importance. The Turkish government has always accorded to its Jewish citizenship a large measure of protection in the enjoyment of life, liberty and property; but the treatment which has been accorded to the Jews of Roumania has been of the greatest concern, not only to the Jews of Roumania but to the Jewry of the world. For many years our Order has been striving to bring about a better situation as regards the Jews of Roumania, and while progress has been slow, it is believed that its constant agitation of the question, with the resultant publicity given it, has served measurably to improve the situation and has brought nearer the hope of recognition of the rights of the Jews of that country.

When the Turkish-Balkan war broke out our Executive Committee foresaw that as a result of the war territorial re-adjustment would be likely to follow which would change the status of the Jews in some of the Balkan states, probably for the worse. On Nov. 11, 1912, the following cable was sent to the President of the First Lodge of England, No. 663, London:

"Kindly consider advisability of appealing to British government in case it participates in settlement of Turkish situation to urge equal rights for all subjects regardless religious belief.

"Kraus."

On Dec. 30, 1912, another cable on the same subject was sent to London. A letter written by the lodge at Salonika to the Grand Lodge at Constantinople states:

"We noticed the contents of the letter of the London lodge regarding privileges granted to our community and received with pleasure your subsequent news on the same subject."

On Jan. 6, 1913, the Executive Committee met in Washington. The eastern situation was fully considered and an appropriation was voted to aid the Roumanian sufferers.

Resolutions expressing the sentiment of the people of the State of Illinois that all the inhabitants of the Balkan states ought to be accorded equal rights regardless of religious belief were prepared by us and submitted to the Illinois Legislature. They were unanimously adopted on April 2nd last, and it was ordered that a certified copy be forwarded to the Secretary of State at Washington.

When the news reached us that Roumania had demanded of Bulgaria the Fortress Silistria and adjacent territory, our representative at Washington, the Hon. Simon Wolf, was on March 6th requested to appeal to some leading paper in that city for an editorial endorsement of our position, namely: That the Jews in territory to be ceded to Roumania should not be deprived of the rights of citizenship theretofore enjoyed by them in the ceded territory. On the same day a similar request was sent to the president of District Grand Lodge No. 1 to obtain like editorial expression in the city of New York. On March 12th the Washington Post published a splendid editorial on the Roumanian situation. On the same date the undersigned wrote to Mr. Louis Marshall requesting his assistance in securing from some of the New York papers editorial support of our position. A favorable reply was received from Mr. Marshall, also one from Dr. Silverman, president of District No. 1. Mr. Marshall succeeded in interesting the New York Times and the New York Evening Mail. Both papers published strong editorials. The Chicago Daily News and other leading papers did likewise. In acknowledging Mr. Marshall's work the undersigned wrote him under date of March 25th:

"I very much appreciate the two editorials you mailed me. Our organization has been quietly working for years to obtain the desired result and some progress has been made. If this chance of the powers intervening should be missed it will probably not come again during our lifetime. Therefore no efforts should be spared anywhere."

On March 24th last we wrote to Mr. Simon Wolf, requesting him to call on the Secretary of State and petition that this government suggest to the powers that equal rights be granted to the inhabitants of the Balkan States, regardless of their religious belief. Our request was promptly acted upon by Mr. Wolf, who called upon the State Department and fully presented the matter, his last visit in connection therewith being made on April 18th. It was the opinion of the Executive Committee that such a suggestion by the American Government, if made, would at least have a moral effect, which, even if not at once effective, would eventually lead toward the desired result. It was also believed that our appeal to President Wilson and Secretary Bryan would not be made in vain. In this we were not mistaken. The action of our government was in accordance with its best traditions and was well received by the secular press.

The Balkan delegates to the peace conference met in Bucharest, the Roumanian delegate, Premier Majorescu, acting as president at the conference. On the 5th day of August, 1913, he submitted to the delegates present a note from the American Government expressing the hope that in the Bucharest treaty a paragraph would be inserted granting full religious liberty and citizenship to all the inhabitants in territory which should be taken from one country and given to another. Mr. Majorescu, after reading the note, stated that it was not necessary to make such a declaration in the treaty because such is now the law in all of those lands. All of the delegates present coincided with the chairman. Premier Majorescu, however, forgot to add that the Roumanians had enacted another law, namely: That all those who do not profess the Christian religion are aliens and that the law granting equal rights as construed by Roumania does not apply to aliens. When we received the news of the action, or rather non-action, of the delegates assembled in Bucharest, the following communication was sent to the Secretary of State:

Chicago, Aug. 9, 1913.

Hon. W. J. Bryan, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: According to the news reports, your appeal for equal rights to the inhabitants of the Balkan states, regardless of creed, did not meet with the measure of success which it deserved, and which was so ardently hoped for it by the sufferers in at least one of the countries in question.

Such result, while it may temporarily disappoint, does not discourage those who are patiently waiting, and those who are prayerfully watching and hoping for the day that will witness the principle you advocated, in universal operation among civilized men; for it is a part of their philosophy to regard every effort in the right direction as a step farther toward the ultimate attainment of that fundamental justice, which to be more fully accorded needs only to be better understood.

Your position on this question as Secretary of State of this great nation reflects credit on you as well as upon the State. The names of those in power who stand up for rights of man will live and be held in grateful remembrance long after they are gone.

Please permit me to express to you on behalf of the organization I represent, as well as personally, our very great appreciation of your action in the premises. Very truly yours,

Adolf Kraus.

The New York Herald published that the dispatch as to the action of the peace delegates at Bucharest caused Mr. Bryan to issue a formal statement paraphrasing his note. It reports Mr. Bryan as saying that he received vigorous representations from Jews all over the United States against the treatment of Jews in the Balkans and especially in Roumania; that several committees of prominent Jews from various sections of the country recently called on him and informed him that their people were being deprived of both civil and religious rights in some of that territory, that with the committee was Mr. Simon Wolf, a prominent Washington lawyer, formerly president of the B'nai B'rith, and that it was because of the fair representations of these committees that he dispatched his note to Bucharest.

The answer to the American note, although disappointing, does not discourage, in fact, a prompt compliance with the views of the American government would have been surprising. But the people of Roumania have once more had their attention called to the views of a great nation upon their conduct. In due time it will bear fruit. We are not ready to believe that the men of Roumania are by nature more heartless than men of other nations. They have been trained to their views from childhood up, and the broader, more just views must come to them by the slow process of education and national enlightenment. In the Roumanian army which marched into Bulgaria were more than 15,000 Jews, ready to sacrifice their lives for Roumania. That time must come, and come soon, when the Christians of Roumania will see the light and realize that men who are willing to die for their country ought at least to be accorded the right to live in it.

An appeal is being made by the Jews of Roumania to the citizens of Roumania for just and equal rights. the Minister of War has promised to ask parliament to create all the Jewish soldiers citizens. Will the parliament do it? If it does it will give full rights to a small percentage only of the Jews, but even that will be an immense stride forward.

ward. Adolf Kraus.

MR. LOUIS MARSHALL AS PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE, HAS ISSUED THE FOLLOWING STATEMENT:

On January 14, 1913, the American Jewish Committee, recognizing the fact that a considerable part of the European territory of the Ottoman Empire would be divided among the various nations that were engaged in the Balkan war, and that the Jewish residents in that territory might in consequence be seriously affected in their civil and religious rights, urged President Taft and the Department of State, to make representations to those concerned in the war and to the European powers, in order that the status and rights of the Jews who might be transferred from the jurisdiction of the Ottoman Empire to that of the several Balkan States, might be protected. Conditions at that time were such, however, that our Government was not in position to act as requested.

On March 28, 1913, this subject was presented to President Wilson, and on a later date to the Department of State, by Dr. Cyrus Adler, on behalf of the American Jewish Committee, and our Government was requested to exercise it's good offices to obtain assurances from the nations concerned in the negotiations for the treaty affecting the conquered territory, that the inhabitants of such territory would be assured the fell enjoyment of civil and religious liberty without distinction of race or creed. The representative of the Committee has received a series of letters from the Department of State during the past month, indicating,

(1) that the Department had instructed the American Ambassador at London, to express to the British Foreign office, whose head was the Chairman of Ambassadors of the European Powers concerned in the pending negotiations, that the United States would regard with satisfaction the inclusion in any agreement that might ultimately be concluded in regard to the settlement of the affairs in the Balkan Peninsula, of a provision assuring the full enjoyment of civil and religious liberty to the inhabitants of the territory in question, without distinction of race or creed;

(2) that the American Ministers accredited to Greece and Montenegro and to Bulgaria, Roumania and Servia, had subsequently been instructed to make to those Governments a communication similar to that which had been made to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs by the American Embassy in London;

(3) that the views of our Government had been communicated to the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, as Chairman of the Ambassadorial Conference, and also to the delegates of the five States participating in the Peace Conference at Bucharest, and that the latter Conference had decided that it would be superfluous to include in the Treaty of Peace a special provision of the nature contemplated, inasmuch as the Constitutions of all the States involved guarantee civil and religious liberty, and that the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Roumania took occasion to declare the view, that in accordance with the principles of international law all citizens of annexed territories, without distinction of race or religion, become citizens of the annexing State.

The action of our Government is most gratifying, resulting in the assurances of the conferees, that the Jewish citizens of the annexed territories are to be accorded the same consideration as that which other citizens residing therein are to receive. Jews in Bulgaria and Servia enjoy the full rights of citizenship and are not discriminated against in any way. The public and formal assurances of the Roumanian Minister of Foreign Affairs give occasion for the hope that a larger number of Jews will be accorded equal rights under Roumanian rule and that this act may pave the way for the complete emancipation of the Jews in that kingdom.

The American Jewish Committee will continue to watch over the interests of the Jews in the Balkan countries, and feels that it can rely upon the aid of our Government in this humane undertaking.

ROUMANIA PROMISES CITIZENSHIP TO JEWS IN ARMY.

A cablegram received says that the Roumanian government has promised to give the rights of citizenship to every one of the 30,000 Jews who have been fighting in the war with Bulgaria. Ten per cent of the Jewish population, according to this figure, are now bearing arms for Roumania and will be enfranchised.

The Jews in Roumania

By

George Clemenceau

I once spoke of the sad position of the Armenians who have reason to fear that the Turks will let them feel their wrath over the defeats which they have suffered and may institute massacres among them. These poor people live in constant dread of Constantinople, of the Kurds and of those who ask Europe for aid. For if they are given too much protection they are afraid that the bad mood of their masters may bring them disagreeable results. I have met people who expressed themselves freely to me, saying in substance: "Do not defend us too strongly!"

To be sure, the Jews of Roumania have escaped from Turkish rule, upon which they can only be congratulated. But the race prejudice in the Balkan lands, where so many tribes touch one another without ever blending together, are of a peculiar nature. There the only advantage of not having been slaughtered in the regular way is derived from the benefit which the change of masters has brought to them. I say the change of masters, for in reality they fell from one yoke into another.

I am not doubting the noble disposition and the fine civilization of the Roumanian people. But it also seems that the anti-Semitic prejudice has developed there to its highest perfection. In a way this can be explained by the fact that with subject peoples religion forms the greatest obstacle to complete assimilation. Unfortunately the reverse side of this advantage, the prejudice against religion and also against race, is a sad phenomenon in our culture.

The Jewish people has atoned in a fearful manner for the fame of having given to humanity a God with the accompaniment of parents and apostles. It is still paying for it and the end of the martyrdom cannot be perceived, for there is no nation that has not crucified innocent persons.

When the representatives of the Great Powers deliberated at the Congress of July 1st, 1878, about the recognition of Roumania as an autonomous principality, Mr. Waddington, the first representative of France, proposed that the Congress should subject the independence of Roumania to the same conditions as it did the independence of Servia. This proposition explicitly referred to the Jews of Roumania, as can be proven by the protocols of the Congress. Though Mr. Waddington has explained that: "Servia which demands to enter the European family upon the same conditions as the other states, must first recognize the principles which form the basis for the social organizations in all European states and must accept it as a necessary term of the favor which it is striving for."

All the representatives of the Powers joined in this proposition with the exception of Prince Gortshakow, the first representative of Russia, who raised some objections, stating that the Jews in Berlin, Paris, London and Vienna, to whom surely no one would refuse to grant political and social rights, should not be placed in the same class with the Jews of Servia, Roumania and of some of the Russian provinces, who according to his opinion are a real plague for the native population.

The reader will understand that it is not sufficient to compare a people with a public calamity in order to be able to rob it of all rights. If the Jews had been asked they certainly would have returned the compliment to their adversaries without hesitation and with much more justification because they were the victims of massacres but never the tormentors.

At the time when the Independence of Roumania was discussed Mr. Waddington acknowledged that a few local difficulties offered themselves in Roumania, but he added that the representative of France "cannot deviate from the great rule of equal rights and religious liberty and that Roumania must recognize the duties and even the inconvenient part of the situation the benefit of which it claims." He said further: "The difficulties will be easily overcome when these principles will be recognized in Roumania and the Jewish people will know that it cannot gain anything except through its own powers and by uniting its own interests with those of the native people." Mr Waddington's proposition caused a disunion among the delegates. Prince Gortshakow explained that "in consequence of the statements with which the proposition was substantiated he would support it completely." The proposition found expression in article 44 of the Berlin treaty, from which I quote the following paragraph: "In Roumania the difference in religion and confession cannot be held against anybody as ground for exclusion or disability relative to the enjoyment of civil and political rights, the access to public offices, business and dignity, or the exercise of the various trades in any place whatever."

As the official recognition of Roumania by the powers was tied to the fulfillment of this article, Roumania was compelled to alter its interior legislation in the spirit of these definitions.

Roumania objected and claimed that it could not grant state community to the Jews as they were aliens, not only in their religion but also in their language, their dress, their customs and their strivings. It added that they were uneducated and fanatic, especially accessible to foreign influences and in consequence of their great number they were easily able to disturb the unity of the national character. Finally it closed by stating that the population was entirely adverse to a general emancipation of the Jews.

In consequence of the pressure brought to bear upon it by the Powers, Roumania determined to change article 7 of its constitution which excluded all non-Christians from citizenship and on the 13th (25) of October, 1879, a new law designated that all aliens without difference of faith can attain Roumanian citizenship, but the same can only be bestowed by a vote of Parliament.

Thanks to the expression "aliens," which it again used in regard to the Jews, even concerning those whose forefathers had lived in the land for centuries, Roumania was able to fool the Powers and to avoid doing its duty.

As the Powers were determined not to be satisfied with false play, Roumania made an effort to give them satisfaction by declaring its willingness to abide by article 44 of the Berlin treaty. Austria and Italy accepted this declaration and gave notice of their recognition of the new kingdom. Great Britain, France and Germany after some hesitancy followed this example, but they first addressed an identical note to the Roumanian Government in which they recognized Roumania as an independent state but made the special reservations in cases the changes in the constitution should not be adequate to secure the adherence to the Berlin treaty.

In a circular of August 16, 1880, adrssed to the diplomatic agents of France, Mr. de Freyciuet, Minister of Foreign Affairs, expressly accentuated his point of view.

Roumania, now its own master, soon showed how earnestly it took its obligations. There are hardly 200 Jews to whom it has granted citizenship within forty years. The Roumanian Jews are today aliens in the land where they were born, aliens, although their settlement in the principalities of the Danube was firmly established by the writers of history of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, aliens in the midst of a people with whom they united their existence, aliens, notwithstanding their participation in the public duties and in the hardest of all, the military service, aliens, though they do not belong to any other state communion and are not permitted to enjoy the protection of any power and form a prodigy from the international standpoint, as they really belong to no country.

Do they at least enjoy those securities which in all cultured countries are granted to the strangers who live there? By no means, and Roumania has contrived to promulgate an entire system of draconic legislation against these so called aliens, which concerns them only and which prohibits them from choosing any kind of a career, any trade or handicraft and which does even worse, for it closes the doors of its elementary schools, intermediate and high schools to their children and to their youths.

The Jewish soldier in Roumania who shed his blood upon the battlefield is liable to see the day when he is refused admittance into a workshop because he is an alien. His children will be excluded from attending school because they are sons of aliens.

The Jews of Dobrudsha, which was annexed by Roumania in the year 1878, those of Silistria, which was recently surrendered by Bulgaria, are citizens—by treaty—but the Jews of Roumania, who have lived in the country for centuries, are designated as aliens by the Roumanian Government, although they are subject to the duties of all Roumanian citizens, although they have shown an undoubted loyalty, and although the development of the country is partly depended upon their activity.

I have the wording of the laws before me, which contain these monstrosities. I am ready to quote them if they should be disputed in the press. The well-known Luigi Luzzatti stated correctly in the "Corriere della Sera" on March 3, 1913, that "The Roumanian Jews are the last slaves to be found in Europe."

AN INTERPELLATION IN FAVOR OF THE ROUMANIAN JEWS.

Deputy Reitzes recently submitted to the Austrian Parliament an interpellation in favor of the Roumanian Jews. In this interpellation the fact was established that the fate of the newly incorporated land is not all secured and that the Jews who live there are in danger of being degraded to second class citizens. The interpellation sharply criticized the perfidious politics of Roumania in regard to the Jews and he showed that Jews of the new territory are also unprotected in their rights. It is very questionable whether in the present state of affairs anything can be done for the Jews of Roumania. Unfortunately it has lately been demonstrated that the Great Powers are only on rare occasions inclined to act in favor of Jewish interests. Yet these Jewish interests are also the interests of Europe. For it cannot remain a matter of indifference to Europe that a country declares as outlaws hundreds of thousands of its inhabitants. It would be a good deed if the representatives of the cultured states would turn their attention to the solution of this problem. Unforunately it is to be expected that the Austrian Government will dispose of this interpellation with a few empty diplomatic phrases. But the fact that this question is being spoken of in public is to be taken as a sign of progress. Sooner or later the cultured powers will become convinced that it is to their interest to heal this wound in Roumania.

THE NEW YORK EVENING POST PUBLISHED THE FOLLOWING EDITORIAL.

Our State Department's note to the Balkan peace commissioners at Bucharest, suggesting the insertion into the contemplated treaties of a clause guaranteeing civic and religious liberties to the inhabitants affected by the proposed territorial rearrangements, need not have produced the shock of surprise which it has occasioned in some European capitals. One would imagine that European diplomacy had become pretty well accustomed to unconventional happenings in the Balkans. As a matter of fact, President Wilson's intercession has a very notable precedent. Before this, an American Secretary of State had protested against the treatment accorded by the Roumanian Government to its Jewish subjects. The argument then advanced at Washington was that anti-Jewish discrimination in Roumania directly affected us by swelling the stream of Jewish refugees to this country. Roumania is now about to acquire a considerable stretch of territory from Bulgaria. This, and the fact that a general reconstruction of the political map of the Balkans is now under way, makes an opportunity for reminding the Roumanian Government of the systematic violation of the rights accorded its Jewish citizens under the treaty of Berlin.

Nor is it in Roumania alone that Jewish interests are bound to be affected by the new order of things in the Balkans. The Balkan states proper have hitherto had no Semitic question of importance. But if Bulgaria is to acquire Adrianople, with its considerable Jewish population, the question will emerge. Still more important is the case of Salonica, with a proportionately larger Jewish element than any other city in the world. Salonica is, of course, to go to Greece, and the addition of so large and influential a body of citizens to the limited population and resources of that country cannot be effected without marked results in internal national policy. A guaranteee of civic and religious equality is of momentous importance to the Jews who have hitherto lived under the tolerant rule of Constantinople.

JEWISH STUDENTS ADOPT CHRISTIANITY.

As a result of the persecution of the Jewish students, eighty of them have adopted Christianity in order to enter the Kieff Commercial Institute.

THE UNITED STATES AND ROUMANIA.

Practical results were hardly to be looked for from the well-meant efforts of the United States to secure civil and religious liberty in the Balkans, but the mere expression of a benevolent wish can do no harm, and so far as Roumania is concerned sufficient precedent is found in the vigorous protest in 1902 of Secretary Hay against the treatment of Jews in that country. The interference of the United States made a great sensation at the time, and for awhile some improvement in conditions was reported as a consequence of the publicity given to the matter.

Of late, however, there have been fresh complaints, and the grievance of being compelled to perform military duty while denied the rights of citizenship has been aggravated by the war. It has been reported that over 20,000 Jews were called to arms for the invasion of Bulgaria, and while, as it happened, no resistance to the advance was offered, if the Bulgarians had been able to defend themselves the Jewish conscripts would have been in the anomalous position of having to fight for a country which persistently treats them as undesirable aliens.

Many appeals have been made by the Roumanian Jews in this country to have the United States government once more use its influence to correct these abuses. But our only ground for meddling is the fact that a very large number of Jewish refugees from Roumania have come to this country. That warrants a special sympathetic interest, and upon occasion a discreet expression of that interest; it certainly would not warrant anything more than that. America is historically the asylum of the oppressed of all nations, but to take up the grievances of those who come here would be too big a contract. We give shelter to the unhappy; we cannot undertake to redress the wrongs of their friends and relatives abroad.

The curt way in which the note from the United States was disposed of by Mr. Majoresco, premier of Roumania and president of the Balkan conference, is not surprising, when it is considered that these little states, under the shadow of the great powers, are wrestling with crucial and complicated problems which concern national existence. We need not wonder that an appeal from the United States in behalf of the treaty of Berlin commands scant notice, when the powers which made that treaty are holding off their hands. With its enforcement we have no possible concern, and our appeal must rest on humanitarian grounds which would be quite as strong if the treaty did not exist.

Mr. Majoresco's view is that for the Balkan states to insert in their peace treaty stipulations assuring civil and religious liberty in ceded territory would be superfluous, because such liberty is already guaranteed by the laws of all countries concerned. So it is. But ironically enough the systematic persecution of the Jews in Roumania began with the accession in 1866 of King Charles, one of whose first acts was to give a constitution which guarantees civil and religious equality and freedom to all citizens; the treaty of Berlin in 1878 added no stronger safeguard.

But both the constitution and the treaty have from the outset been effectively nullified by this very simple expedient; the Roumanian government has held that all persons living in Roumania who did not profess the Christian religion were aliens, and that therefore the provisions did not apply to them. It is as insincere and as factitious as the "grandfather clause" by which Negroes are deprived of the ballot in our southern states. The crusade in Roumania against the Jews has never been due to religious hostility; the real motive for persecution, as in Russia, is economic.

It is a distressing problem, and there is no short and easy solution. When a racial question is acute only compulsion from outside which may involve ills no less serious can secure fair play, and the result seems to be much the same whether the government is autocratic or popular. It is not surprising that many Jews have of late become disheartened and declare internationalism a failure: the only escape from oppression, they say, is in colonization, in Zionism. It is a sad commentary on the intolerance of the world after nearly 20 centuries of Christianity, but it may be so. The best that the United States can do is to set an example of fair and liberal treatment. By interference we can do nothing; by holding to the idealism which has made America a synonym for liberty and equality we can do much. As to the Balkans we are only spectators, but sympathetic spectators.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

The American Flag; Its Message and Meaning to The Jewish American

By Jacob Furth Jr., St. Louis, Mo.

How many are there who have given deep thought to the true significance of the Stars and Stripes? Alas! too few Americans appreciate its real meaning and the message it conveys. In speaking of the American Flag, the question of its origin very naturally arises.

Not quite one year after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, Congress passed a Resolution providing that the new Nation should have a National flag, consisting of thirteen alternating red and white strips and a blue field of thirteen stars. A committee composed of George Washington and two others was appointed to have such a flag made.

The design was carried to Betsy Ross in Philadelphia, and she made the first American flag. The flag was displayed for the first time June 14, 1777, and to commemorate the first appearance of our flag we now celebrate Flag Day. Several changes were made in the flag during the first ten years after its birth, but they were all abolished. It was finally decided to observe the admission of a state by adding one new star for each state on the Fourth of July following its admission.

The colors in our flag may be taken in a symbolic sense, the red repreesnting the blood shed by our Revolutionary fathers and their ardent love of their country, the white symbolizing purity and the blue truth.

If we look into the past we see what great deeds the flag has inspired. The sight of our flag filled our soldiers with renewed hope and courage and has not unfrequently changed a seeming defeat into victory. How many thousnads have laid down their lives that the flag might live?

The sight of our flag fills our hearts with emotion, but we rarely appreciate its deeper significance. It symbolizes the thirteen original colonies, the struggle, trials, and successes of our Nation; in short, its whole history. The flag should spur us on to emulate the examples of our noble ancestors by trying to become useful and productive citizens of our glorious country.

The Jewish American, I am quite sure, experiences the same feelings of pride and patriotism on seeing the flag, only very much intensified.

Reviled, hunted, and persecuted even to death for centuries by all the world, the Jew comes to America where he is accorded freedom, protection, and the same rights as are granted to people of other creeds. America has become the haven of refuge for our persecuted co-religionists and has granted them an equal chance to rise in the world. The flag of the United States should recall to the Jewish American his debt of gratitude to this country and should awaken within his bosom feelings of love, loyalty, and devotion to the flag and to the country which it represents.

A great orator once said in speaking of the American Flag, "The flag never did and hope never may represent but one policy. That policy is individual manhood, the right to enjoy religious and civil liberty; the right to believe in and worship God according to the dictates of your own conscience; the right to stand protected equally before the law with every other man in the enjoyment of freedom, of personal rights, and of property." This "Gorgeous Ensign of the Republic" symbolizes and protects the great ideas set forth so beautifully and graphically in our immortal Declaration of Independence and which lie at the very basis of our government, the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

This should be, if it is not already, the true message and significance of the flag to the Jewish American.

What feelings of pride, patriotism, and loyalty does the Jewish American feel when on returning home from traveling in a foreign land he sees as he enters New York harbor, the Statue of Liberty, holding aloft the eternal torch of freedom and he sees also the American Flag floating everywhere? Spontaneously there come to his mind the words of the Poet:

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burn'd
As home his footsteps he hath turned
From wandering on a foreign strand?"

What an inspiring sight it is to him to see the Stars and Stripes floating over Columbia.

"'Tis the Star-Spangled Banner
Oh! long may it wave,
O'er the land of the free
And the home of the brave!"

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AUSTRIAN GRAND LODGE.

The eighth annual meeting of the Austrian Grand Lodge was held on May 4th, 1913. Grand President Brother Professor Ehrman occupied the chair and Brother Counsellor of Justice Dr. Kusnitzky attended the session as representative of District Grand Lodge No. 8. The order of the day embraced a very wide range of questions.

Thanks to the zealous and circumspect work of Brother Ex-President Dr. Sonnenschein of Silesia Lodge, the endeavor of the Grand Lodge to organize the Jews of Austria is advancing towards a favorable consummation. The Jewish congregations of Silesia have united and a voluntary organization has thereby been called into life which the Government will soon sanction. It was resolved to establish a Jewish Central Archive for Austria, and the sum of 2,000 Kronen was appropriated for this purpose.

The following subventions were granted:

One thousand Kronen for the purchase of 200 copies of Dr. Ziegler's Jewish popular works, the same to be distributed free of charge.

Five hundred Kronen for the Jewish Library in Jerusalem.

Two hundred Kronen for the Bureau of Jewish Statistics in Berlin to aid the publication of its books.

One thousand Kronen (annual contribution) for the Galician Aid Society.

The following officers were elected: Brother Professor Sol. Ehrman, Grand President; Brothers Dr. Kohn and Dr. Schanzer, Vice-Presidents, besides Brother Ex-President Dr. Hammerschlag, who is Vice-President for life; Brother Schnabel, Secretary; members of the General Committee: Brothers Ex-Presidents Dr. Hirsch, L. Jerusalem, Perlhefter, Polatschek, Schulhof and Dr. Sonnenschein.

In the month of October Eintracht Lodge of Vienna will celebrate its 10th anniversary by the laying of the cornerstone of its own house for the Toynebee Hall and Children's Retreat.

SOCIETY OF JEWISH YOUTHS OF GERMANY.

The third Convention of the Union of Societies for the Jewish youths was held in the City of Frankfurt, O'M., on May 11th, 12th, 1913, in the meeting rooms of Frankfurt Lodge No. 372. The Grand Lodge of Germany was represented by two delegates, Brother Maximilian Stein, who is a member of the Board of Officers of the Union, and Brother Grand Secretary, Dr. Alfred Goldschmidt.

Over 600 persons attended the evening session. The following were among the prominent speakers: The representatives of the City of Frankfurt, the community of Frankfurt, the Evangelical and Catholic denominations, Brother Stein, of District Grand Lodge No. 8, and the Union of Jewish Women. The orator of the day was Dr. Werner of Munich, whose topic was: "The Lesson of Judaism as a Blessing for the Jewish Youth." During the afternoon sessions reports were submitted by Brother Dr. Ludwig Hollander on the "Choice of Vocation by the Jewish Youth," and by Miss Cora Berlinger on "Girls' Organization."

In his speech Brother Stein said among other things: "Already in 1891 the need to form societies for the youth was expressed in the Grand Lodge. Upon the invitation of the Grand Lodge in May, 1909, the representatives of such societies assembled in conference for the purpose of establishing a Union. The Union started with 1,500 members and today it comprises 15,000 members. More than 100 societies have joined the Union. The aims of the Union are similar to the tendencies of our lodges. It strives to arouse in the Jewish youth the feeling of Jewish solidarity, to heighten the influence of knowledge and conscience, to keep alive the interest in Judaism and to increase its spiritual possessions in connection with education, culture and patriotism. The activity of these societies is a welcome supplement to the work of our lodges."

Report of District Grand Lodge No. 10

With earnest and indefatigible work District Grand Lodge No. 10 is striving to fulfill its duties. There is plenty of opportunity for it. Besides maintaining the institutions which it has created and which are zealously active for the good of our co-religionists, there are occurrences every year which do not find the hearts of the Austrian brethren impervious and whose call for aid does not pass without being heard. In the year 1912 nearly 100,000 Kronen were devoted to benevolent aims, 10,000 Kronen being for the Balkan co-religionists alone. The great fire-catastrophe of Pressburg, which entirely destroyed the Jewish community, which was many centuries old, bringing hundreds of families to the beggar's staff and thereby arousing the compassion of all Jewish hearts in the whole world, also awakened a great activity in our ranks. The appeal of our Grand President, Professor Ehrman, to the individual lodges of our District for participation in the aid work resulted in the collection of more than 10,000 Kronen within a few days and the members of the two Vienna lodges living in Pressburg have raised among themselves and their acquaintances nearly 30,000 Kronen which are to be used for the purpose of founding new livelihoods.

If we consider that in consequence of the Balkan war the economic conditions of Austria are very much depressed, that before one collection is finished a new one is already beginning; that our brothers, on account of their social standing, cannot avoid the general collections in city and country, we will then readily concede that these results reflect honor upon our brethren.

Besides the collections for these purposes District No. 10 has called into life institutions which enjoy the high esteem of all and which have proven to be a great blessing to our coreligionists. There is first the Galician Aid Society which finds work for thousands of Jews of Galicia, which has lately succeeded in placing Jewish laborers in the coal mines of Silesia and which has attained such a big standing that the Austrian Government co-operates with it. Not less beneficial is the work of the "Free Employment Bureau" which was established by the brethren in Vienna. The number of positions found reaches into the thousands. The benevolence of the brethren is not confined to Austria alone. In addition to the considerable amounts expended for the Jews of Morocco, our lodges have also erected ten houses for the Yemenite Jews in Palestine.

The work performed in the field of culture also deserves praise. The valuable book of Brother Dr. Zollschau, which has received great recognition in the educational world, was published with the aid of the lodges; the same is the case with the second volume of the "Juedishen Volkschriften" of Brother Dr. Ziegler, which are enlightening factors on the nature of Judaism also in non-Jewish circles. A great activity has been developed aiming to establish an archive, which shall form an archival center, in connection with the Jewish museum which is under the patronage of brethren. Eintracht Lodge of Vienna, which founded the "Institute for the Training of Jewish Nurses," will soon celebrate its tenth anniversary and to commemorate this event it is preparing to erect its own house for the "Toynbeehall" and "Children's Refuge." In the fall Bohemia Lodge of Prague, the largest Lodge in Austria, will celebrate its twentieth anniversary in its own Lodge-home, which will form a new monument to the greatness and prominence of our union. There is no doubt that on this occasion it will appropriate considerable sums of money for benevolent purposes. Not only in regard to outside work of benevolence does our District manifest activity but also in its inner good work it moves along constantly rising and developing. Thanks to the initiative of Bohemia Lodge it has become possible to care for widows and orphans of deceased brethren in a model manner. With all these activities the District never forgets that it forms only a part of the great Order of B'nai B'rith, and that it must look beyond its own horizon to the welfare of the entire body. District No. 10 has readily complied with the wish expressed by the Worthy President of the Order to create a relief fund for emergencies. Yes, it has done even more! In order to bring this fund in a short time to a solid basis it levied a tax upon its members reactive for the full year of 1911. We live in cordial relations. This is evidenced by the fact that the conventions of our Grand Lodge are attended by representatives of the other. This proves the friendly contact between the German and the Austrian Districts. Last year it was Brother Dr. Metzenberg of Berlin, member of the General Committee of the Grand Lodge for Germany, and this year Brother Dr. Kuznitzky, Grand Vice President of the same Grand Lodge, who honored us with their presence. The last convention of the Grand Lodge for Germany was attended by our worthy Grand President as a representative of Austria. In consequence of this brotherly feeling the representatives of the General Committees of both districts contemplate the holding of a joint meeting to discuss subjects of mutual interest. There is much which is of common interest to Germany and Austria, much which is as near to the hearts of the German brethren as it is to our own hearts.

Protests Against The Caricaturing of The Jew on the Stage

We publish herewith the correspondence between Mr. Leon Schwarz of Mobile, Ala., ex-president of District Grand Lodge No. 7, and the Wells Amusement Co. of New York regarding elimination of any play containing anything of an offensive character.

Mobile, Ala., July 14th, 1913.

Mr. Jake Wells,
President Wells Amusement Co.,
New York City.

My Dear Sir:

I address you, as directed, as a representative of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith, an international Jewish organization.

I am confident that you are aware of the protests which are being made, not infrequently, throughout the country, by those of the Hebrew faith, against the offensive caricaturing of the Jew on the stage or in motion picture shows.

Allow me to draw your attention to the reasonableness of our position. We are not hyper-sensitive—and we understand, in order to produce innocent humor, that types of people or races must be drawn upon, but we most emphatically insist, to do that, it is not necessary to ridicule in an offensive manner and wound the feelings of the people of any faith, denomination, race or nationality.

The local representative of your theatre in Mobile, Mr. Ed. V. O'Connor, a gentleman held in high esteem by us, when called on, promptly expressed a willingness to co-operate looking to the elimination of any play, act or picture containing anything of an offensive character, but suggested and recommended that you could, as the booking authority for this and your number of other theatres, accomplish vastly more than the local managers.

We feel assured that you will promptly recognize the fairness of our contention in this matter and that we will have your co-operation and aid, which we beg to assure you in advance, will be duly appreciated and acknowlelged.

Yours very truly,
Leon Schwarz.

New York, July 17th, 1913.

Mr. Leon Schwarz,
Independent Order B'nai B'rith,
District Grand Lodge No. 7,
Mobile, Ala.

My dear Sir:

I am just in receipt of your favor of the 14th inst. and contents carefully noted. In reply to same I wish to state that I am thoroughly in accord with you and you can rest assured that we would not intentionally be a party to anything that would give offense.

Of course it would be unfair for the people of any nationality or faith to attempt to draw the line to such an extent that would mean the elimination of character impersonation entirely from the stage. In that event there would be no place in the country for theatricals as a profession.

It is unfortunate that a certain element of amusement purveyors use so little judgment or consideration in pursuing their vocation. You can rest assured that we will do all within reason to avoid displeasing the Jewish people of your city by permitting no offensive caricaturing of the people of that faith, or I might say of any other faith or nationality. I recognize quite easily the difference between an "amusing caricature" and an "offensive" one.

Yours very truly,
Jake Wells.

A PROTEST

We herewith publish correspondence between Brother Julius I. Peyser of Washington, D. C., ex-president of District Grand Lodge No. 5, and at present a member of the General Committee of the District, with the manager of the American Bankers' Association.

Washington, D. C., July 17, 1913.

Mr. L. W. Gammon, Manager, Protective Department, American Bankers Association, 5 Nassau Street, New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

As a careful reader of your journal and as one who has been affiliated with banks and banking associations for the past ten years I have noticed, particularly, that under the head of "Protective Department" in the descriptions of persons charged with criminal offenses, published by your journal, you have undertaken by inferences and innuendoes to treat the reputable Jewish population of this country with very scant courtesy. In the descriptions of persons who are charged with criminal offenses you have failed to state the religious belief or creed of any person or persons, with the exception of those of the Jewish faith. You emphasize this fact in the July (1913) number and therefore I beg leave to call your attention to the following:

Louis Hecht (page 39) you described "Americanized Jew;" R. Livingston Fernbach (page 40) "Is a German Jew;" Henry Orlofsky (page 40) "described as a Jew." I am unable to understand the meaning of the description stating that the said Hecht was an "Americanized Jew." Do you mean to say that he is an American by birth or adoption and a Jew by religion? The description of Fernbach that he "is a German Jew" causes me to presume that you intended to say that this man is a Jew in religious belief born in Germany; and in case of Orlofsky "described as being a Jew" seems to make one inquire into the rules and measurements you have invoked to obtain this description. I infer and presume that the said alleged criminals have two hands, two feet and a head the same as other persons charged with crime, who may accept or believe in any other religious faith. And I further presume that they see the same daylight and the same sun as the writer who prepared the descriptions, and, why in the name of all that is fair your journal should undertake to put the description of a particular religious denomination as a part of a criminal record is a proposition that is hard to reason out unless it is done for the purpose of openly causing more persecution upon the people of a religion whose ancestors were scholars and philosophers when the ancestors of the compiler were wild wandering nomads on the banks of the Euphrates.

May I inquire why in the description of H. P. Dew (page 41) an alleged criminal you did not state that he was a German Lutheran or French Methodist? And why you did not put under the description of Herman Colucci (page 40) that he was an Italian Catholic or whatever nationality or religious belief he might claim? And why you did not put under the caption of Lester L. Smith (page 38) that he was an Americanized High Churchman or something of this kind to show his religious belief? It appears more keenly that the eye of intolerance is still upon American citizens of Jewish persuasion making them suffer for the actions of a few who may have gone astray. Why then specify the religious belief of a Jew and not of the non-Jew.

Have you ever meditated and considered that the greatest man in the eyes of the Christian world was born of Jewish parentage: that the scholars and leaders of this faith have been teaching civilization for four thousand years? Therefore, if your journal published one side of a story, for the sake of fairness will you not publish some facts to show that the percentage of believers in the Jewish religion convicted of criminal offenses are in a compara- [illegible] very much in the minority? And if you desire to cast reflection on the Jews by showing the mistakes and errors of a few please remember that the leaders in the banking world are of the Jewish faith, have won their laurels in spite of persecution. This letter is written as an American citizen who demands equality and fairness. Why not eliminate in your descriptions the religion of the alleged criminal, or in each description publish the religious denomination of each person who is charged with offenses. What right [illegible] to offend the good name of a [illegible] religion by showing to the world [illegible] of a few? When [illegible] the past three or four years [illegible] a religion not Jewish were convicted under and by virtue of the National Banking Act did you mention that they were Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists or Episcopalians? I need no reply to the last question as I know only too well that you did not, and, therefore I beg leave to close asking in the future for you to be just and fair to a religion that is the mother to the one in which you place your trust.

Yours very truly,
J. I. PEYSER.

THE AMERICAN BANKER'S ASSOSOCIATION,
Five Nassau Street, New York.
July 18, 1913.

Julius I. Peyser, Member General Committee, District Grand Lodge No. 5, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:

This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 17th, criticizing certain articles in our monthly Journal-Bulletin under the head of Protective Department. From your interpretation of the word Jew as used in these articles, you would no doubt be correct, but I will state for your information that in using the word Jew, it is not in connection with the individual religion, but merely refers to the word Jew as a race characteristic, the same as we use the word Irish, Scotch, West Indian, Negro and Phillipino, as all of the above might be subjects of any country and still hold their race characteristics. It would be a physical impossibility for us to refer to a man as a Catholic, Protestant or any other religion as you know for instance, an Irishman may be a Catholic, Protestant or no religion at all, and the Irish race would have just as much grounds as you have for criticising us. I will further state for your information that all descriptions as published in our Journal-Bulletin, are furnished by bank officials, police authorities or similar officials or individuals. If they classify a man as a Jew, Irishman or any other race, we publish it as reported.

We are not prejudiced, as might be inferred from your letter and in conclusion I will state that I do not consider your criticism a just one from the standpoint upon which we use the word Jew.

As to the violation of the National Bank Act, I might state for your information that we have never published any article relative to such crimes, as we do not handle cases of defalcations, or other crimes of bank officials or employees, or I might say inside jobs.

I am very glad you are a reader of our Journal-Bulletin and I trust that this letter will fully convince you that we do not cast any reflection on any race or creed.

Very truly yours,
L. W. GAMMON.
Manager, Protective Department.

Washington, D. C., July 25, 1913.

Dear Sir:

Not to continue a protracted correspondence, I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of July 18th in reply to my letter of July 17, 1913, and I fear very much that you do not realize or appreciate the reflection upon the Jews that the descriptions in your Bulletin-Journal have made. You state that the word Jew is "not in connection with the individual's religion, merely refers to the word Jew as a race characteristic, the same as we use the word Irish, Scotch, West Indian, Negro and Phillipino," and this is why the position which you take is untenable. The word Irishman is used, meaning a citizen of a certain country and the same can be said of the Scotchman or West Indian. In other words, a Jew born and living in Ireland, in Scotland or in the West Indies would properly be an Irish Jew, a Scotch Jew, or a West Indian Jew. You also undertook to compare the Jew with the negro: a negro is of a race, not a creed and not of a country, for example, a negro may be an Irish Catholic, if, perchance, he was born in Ireland and professed the Catholic religion and still be a member of the negro race. In other words, the race question, the nationality question and the religious question do not appear to be clearly definite by your Department. There are five great races and the Caucasian race is one of the group. The Jew belongs to the Caucasian race and which said Caucasian race is divided into three divisions, Semitic, Aryan and Hamitic. But these propositions are absolutely aside the mark. A Jew is a person who professes the Jewish religion or Judaism, and, is not of a race or a nation. The Jew is a member of the Semitic family, the same as the Arabian and some of the Oriental peoples, and, since the downfall of the Jewish Empire over nineteen hundred years ago, a Jew can only be properly considered as professing a certain religious belief. It follows, therefore, that the Jew, if he lives in Germany is a German Jew, in other words, he is a citizen of the country in which he lives and professes a particular religious faith, the same as any other citizen who is non-Jewish may profess a particular religious faith. Your statement that you do not refer to a "Catholic, Protestant or any other religion because an Irishman may be a Catholic, Protestant or no religion at all," to my mind, does not answer the argument and is unexplainable. As aforestated, a Jew being born in this country would be an American Jew the same as a Jew born in Ireland would be an Irish Jew, therefore being an American or an Irishman as the case may be is a matter of country and being a Jew, Catholic or Protestant is a matter of religion. I fear your Department takes the view which ought not to be corrected, that it has a right to reflect on the Jewish religion and not the non-Jewish religion. While from your letter you give the assurance that you are not prejudiced, nevertheless, the descriptions assume an attitude that is different. I also conclude from your letter that you think that the Irish race would have just as much grounds for criticising you if you would allude to their nationality. That is correct, and answers the very question which I originally placed, for, if the Irish race would have just grounds when you reflect upon its nationality then in all events the Jew would because you reflect on his creed. I appreciate the fact that the information as to descriptions published by your Bulletin-Journal is furnished by others, nevertheless, I think the said descriptions ought to be properly edited before they are printed. I feel justified in making the criticism, notwithstanding the fact that you undertook to show that you use the word "Jew" from only one standpoint; your confession was correct but your avoidance incorrect.

Thanking you for the consideration and believing the elimination of descriptions of religious beliefs of alleged criminals in your columns is for the best interests of all. I am,

Yours very truly,
J. I. PEYSER.

THE INFLUENCE OF EMIGRATION UPON PHYSICAL DEVELOPMENT.

The French journal "La Nature" recently published a very learned article on this question. Among other things it stated that in the year 1908 the Emigration Commission of the United States commissioned Professor Franz Boas to make a special study of the physical conditions of the newly arrived immigrants. Professor Boas has now explained his antropometric observations in a volume which has recently appeared in which he reaches quite remarkable conclusions. He states that he has made the discovery that among the descendant of immigrant Jews the head is gradually getting shorter and among those who are descendants of Sicilians it is growing longer. The weight and circumference of the body is increasing among the Jews and diminishing among the Italians. At first Professor Boas was inclined to deduct from this phenomena the existence of an American race towards which the individual immigrants of European race are tending, but he soon abandoned this view. How is this phenomena, especially the change in the size of the head, to be explained? Some think that this result is simply accidental, others wish to ascribe it to the so-called selection at the time of emigration and others again are inclined to take the view that it is only the consequential change in manner of life. Dr. Boas is also willing to accept this latter view. In regard to the Jews this view is supported by similar observations undertaken by Ammon, in the Duchy of Baden, Levi, in Italy and Dr. Maurice Fishberg. These savants have established the fact, after many years of observation, that the children of farmers who move to the cities show a conspicuous change in the skull formation. Fishberg has affirmed the same of the Jews who adopt an agricultural pursuit or who emigrate from small towns to large industrial centers.

Life is a fragment, a moment, between two eternities, influenced by all that has preceded, and to influence all that follows. The only way to illuminate it is by extent of view.—William Ellery Channing.

PROTEST AGAINST "NO HEBREWS" ADVERTISEMENT.

The Graham and Morton Transportation Company of Chicago have again, in their printed folder, published advertisements of hotels with the notice, "No Jews Wanted."

The Publicity Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., entered its protest, and the following correspondence is self-explanatory:

Chicago, June 25, 1913

Mr. J. S. Morton,
Care Graham & Morton Transportation Co., Benton Harbor, Mich..

Dear Sir:

On July 22, 1908, we addressed a protest to you concerning advertisements appearing in your booklet in which various hotels and boarding houses advertised "No Jews Wanted," "No Hebrews," etc. On July 30, 1908, you favored us with a reply in which you expressed regret for the incident, and in which you further stated that in the future all matters of this kind would be eliminated. We assumed that you meant what you said.

Our attention has now been called to the circular folder printed by you for this year in which the same objectionable matters appear. You will find instances of this kind in the list of resorts under Group No. 3, Group No. 5. and Group No. 11. We are therefore compelled to refer the matter to the Executive Committee for proper action unless you can furnish us with a satisfactory explanation of the occurrence of this objectionable advertisement after your promise that the same would be eliminated in all future publications.

As the Executive Committee of the District Grand Lodge will meet next week, we will thank you for your speedy reply.

Respectfully yours,
SIG. LIVINGSTON.
Chairman of Publicity Committee.

GRAHAM AND MORTON COMPANY TO MR. LIVINGSTON.

Benton Harbor, Mich., June 26, 1913.

Mr. Sig. Livingston,
Chairman Publicity Committee,
Chicago.

Dear Sir:

Your communication of the 25th just received. I am very sorry that the oversight you call attention to has occurred again. All I have to say is, it was purely an oversight, unintentional and unknown on the part of this company until you called attention to the fact, and it is one that would not be approved for a moment had it been discovered. We appreciate the patronage of your people and try to have them treated in the same manner that everybody else is treated, which, we trust, in a general way is satisfactory. This explanation is all we have to offer, and trust it will be satisfactory. We will endeavor to see that it does not occur again.

Yours very truly,
J. S. MORTON, Pres.

A. B. MORSE CO., TO GRAHAM & MORTON.

St. Joseph, Mich., June 27, 1913.

Mr. J. S. Morton, Pres.,
Benton Harbor, Mich.

Dear Sir:

The writer is deeply chagrined at your letter of June 26, in which you state that the phrase "No Hebrews" and "No Jews" has crept into the book this year.

The writer has always given his personal attention to this matter and has looked over the proof very carefully before printing, and has eliminated from year to year all such phrases.

This year, when the composition was completed, the writer was away from home. For this reason, our people here sent proofs either to your office or to Chicago. Some corrections were made which were taken care of in the regular way, but it seems that nobody looked after little things of this kind. This is hardly an excuse nor an apology, but is simply an explanation. Personally, I would not have had this thing happen for a great deal. It simply goes to show that there are some things which a person cannot delegate to anybody else.

Yours truly,
A. B. MORSE CO..

A JEWISH JUDGE IN IRELAND.

The official journal of the Government announces that the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland has appointed Mr. Jacob Elyan as judge. Mr. Elyan is the son of Rabbi Meyer Elyan of Cork, who not only has often distinguished himself in general public life in Ireland, but also has rendered valuable services to his co-religionists in Ireland, for which he was accorded distinguished honors by various Jewish welfare institutions.

Twenty-fifth Annivesary of the Institution of Bohemia Lodge

Dedication of B'nai B'rith Club Building at Prag

On September 20 next Bohemia Lodge No. 430 of Prag will celebrate the 25th anniversary of its institution with imposing ceremonies. The program of festivities will include the dedication of the new B'nai B'rith Club Building, jointly erected by Bohemia and Praga lodges. A short sketch of some of the activities of Bohemia lodge will no doubt be of interest to our readers.

The Orphans' Home.

In the year 1895, with a view of fittingly celebrating the Emperor's Golden Jubilee, it was proposed by some of the members to establish a home for orphans, and a committee was appointed to consider the question. The following year the lodge resolved to invite the co-operation of the lodges in Pilsen, Karlsbad and Reichenberg and in 1897 it was definitely resolved to erect a Jewish Orphans' Home in Bohemia under the auspices of the above lodges, making it obligatory upon all their members to contribute to its support. Subsequently the property located at 68 Kgl. Weinberge was purchased at a cost of 84,000 kronen, and on the day of the Emperor's Jubilee the Home was dedicated and 16 orphans were admitted. Due to the liberality of the members, whose contributions, in the first year of the life of the new institution, exceeded the sum of 56,000 kronen, the number of inmates was increased to thirty. In 1902, four years after the opening of the Home, it was materially enlarged by the acquisition and remodeling of the adjacent building, at which time provisions were also made for a gymnasium and a swimming pool. The number of orphans rose gradually until 59 were taken care of in 1907.

The year 1908 was a memorable one for the Home. The directorate resolved to observe the emperor's Sixtieth Jubilee through an expansion of the Home's activities and purchased a tract of land comprising an old castle in good condition and surrounded by a spacious garden, using the premises for a vacation home for the orphans. A year later this property was made use of as a branch institute of the Home and twenty orphans were installed.

The original Home was granted the privilege of assuming the name of "Kaiser Franz Josef I. Jubilaeums Knaben Waisenhaus" and the branch home "Kaiser Franz Josef I. Israelitisches Knaben-Waisen und Ferienheim."

The wards are also being taken care of after their discharge. Some are placed in the apprentice home, connected with the Orphans' Home, and others are being financially aided to pursue their studies, for which purpose three distinct funds are available.

The Home has at present 371 patrons who contributed over 338,000 kronen, and contributing members whose annual dues amount to over 28,000 kronen. The assets of the Home consist of investments representing 284,885 kronen, also the grounds and buildings free of any incumbrance. For the purchase of grounds and buildings and for maintenance charges up to date 723,000 kronen and for subvention to orphans after their discharge 16,000 kronen have been expended. The total receipts from all sources since the founding of the Home exceed one million kronen, and the total number of inmates accepted is 146.

It is noteworthy that of the total receipts of the Home, Bohemia lodge and its members contributed 300,000 kronen.

The Care of Widows and Orphans.

While the care of widows and orphans is obligatory upon all mankind, this duty has special significance as to families of departed brothers. Here tender benevolence must join hands with true brotherly love.

Bohemia lodge recognized the significance of this duty to its members and enacted proper laws and regulations to that end. According to these laws upon the death of a brother, the president appoints in open meeting a member of the lodge, who enjoys the confidence of the family, as protector or guardian, whose duty is to establish a lasting and cordial intercourse between the lodge and the family, to ascertain in a discreet manner the financial condition of his wards, aid them with counsel and advice and in the case of indigent families furnish them with material aid out of the widows' and orphans' fund of the lodge. Up to 1910 this material aid averaged about 4.000 kronen annually. This sum is relatively small for the reason that the necessity for financial assistance presented itself but in rare instances. Since 1910 however these expenses have gradually increased and in 1912 13,000 kronen were expended for the relief of indigent wards.

The Home for Women.

In 1910 Bohemia lodge resolved to establish a Home for Women which is to be unique, its main object being to provide a home for the nearest single female relative of deceased brothers. It is not the intention to maintain an institution for the support and maintenance of poor widows, but rather to afford to all the women of departed brothers, who were thus bereft of their natural protector and guardian, the means whereby to maintain their formal social position and standing and to offer them protection against the attacks of the outer world and to guard them against accidents. It is hoped that these women will find in such a home, free from ennui, that mental incitation, that physical care to which they were accustomed and which is the duty of the lodge to offer the widows of its members, without however infringing in the least upon their freedom and liberty.

B'NAI B'RITH CLUB BUILDING OF PRAGUE.

It is expected to locate this home away from the turmoil of the city and yet easily accessible to the center of the city. The rooms will be modern in appointments and will be responsive to all hygienic requirements. In addition to a central dining room, reception and play room and adequate garden each woman will be assigned the use of one or two rooms which she may furnish in accordance with her desire. The economic arrangements (kitchen, laundry and cellar) will be under the management of a competent housekeeper. All tenants, for such they may be called, are to enjoy equal rights and privileges but will also fulfill equal duties. They will be privileged to receive guests and to entertain visitors, and will be free to leave the home at will. They are expected to contribute a reasonable sum for the maintenance of the Home, and whatever deficit may accrue will be covered by the three lodges who stand sponsors for this model institution.

The New Club Building.

From the institution of Bohemia Lodge the question of a suitable home for its activities was continually under consideration and as early as October, 1893, it was proposed that the lodge secure its own home.

The project did not make much headway until February, 1900, when a committee was appointed to solicit subscriptions from among the members and at a meeting held on June 12, 1900, the committee reported having secured over 200,000 kronen in the shape of donations and subscriptions.

In 1911 a building committee was appointed to co-operate with a similar committee of Praga Lodge, and this committee selected the site at 971 Rosengasse as appropriate and practical from many standpoints. Preliminary papers were executed, which were approved at a joint meeting of the two lodges, Bohemia Lodge participating to the extent of 75 per cent and Praga Lodge 25 per cent of the estimated cost of building the home. Architects were engaged and competitive bids solicited with the result that it was decided to erect the building at a cost of 186.000 kronen exclusive of the cost of the land. In August, 1912, the necessary permits were secured, and in the following month the demolition of the old structure was begun, and before the end of the year the new building was under roof.

The building contains three stories. On the main floor a well equipped public restaurant with a capacity of 100 guests is located, which is separated from the club premises. A spacious stairway leads to the 5 meter high dining room on the first floor, intended for club and social purposes and with a seating capacity of about 200. On the story above the lodge hall, another hall 16 meters long, 10 meters wide and 6 meters high. and supplied with a gallery, is to be found. This hall is sufficient to accommodate about 250 persons. On the same floor are also located two large reading and reception rooms. A half story higher several committee rooms are located. On the third floor is a large hall with a floor space of 80 square meters and two balconies facing the garden. This hall is intended for social purposes and in summer the large balconies will enable the guests to enjoy the open air. Adjoining this hall are several smaller rooms. On the first floor there is also a suite of three rooms, intended to be used as an office. The front part of the building contains three large apartments.

The interior finishings, the equipment and the furnishings of the halls and rooms leave nothing to be wished for and the two lodges of Prague may justly be proud of their home.

DR. PARKHURST ON RACE PREJUDICE.

The "American Citizen" is a welcome addition to our magazine literature. It exists for a distinct purpose. It is the organ of an idea. It is intended primarily as an advertisement of the history, quality and achievement of the Jewish people, set forth in a way to disabuse the Gentile mind of its anti-Semitic prejudices.

It will be read by Jews and ought to be read by Gentiles, and will be if there is in them that openness of mind and generosity of heart that are ingredients of all Christianity that is of the genuine type.

While there is an essential distinction between Judiasm and Christianity, and while every Christian should be distinct and outspoken in his recognition of that distinction, yet it should never be forgotten by us that Judiasm is the foundation upon which Christianity builds and furnishes the root out of which Christianity develops.

It was Jesus Christ himself who said: "I came not to destroy, but to fulfill!" The iron that was in the moral and religious constitution of the old prophets is still a part, and a very considerable part, of the strength and aggressive energy of the new faith.

Racial Distinctions Play an Important Part in History.

The Old Testament is not a back number, and makes one part of the Christian's Bible, and if he ignores its contents and treats them as something which he has outgrown his system of belief and tone of character will lack an ingredient of which he cannot afford to be destitute.

In our contemplation of the Jews, Jewish history, character and religion, it should not be forgotten that racial distinctions make a large contribution to progressive history. They play something the same part in the make-up of human progress that the several zones and climates of the physical world play in accomplishing the purposes of the material world.

A part of our earth's perfection consists in its varieties of altitude and temperature. The polar and the tropical regions are essential to the earth's well being and to human success as well as the temperate regions.

So it is of the several races. Each has its separate function. Each makes its special contribution to the welfare of the whole. Differences are more valuable than resemblances. And this observation includes not only the Jews and Gentiles of the western world but the peoples of the east, whose type of character varies so widely from our own, and who in course of time will infuse into Occidental civilization an element that will be to the betterment of the western world, even as our civilization here in the west, if we behave ourselves, will prove to the intellectual, moral and religious enrichment of the Orient.

It is with thoughts such as these in mind that we require to approach our contemplation and study of the Jewish race as of all races distinct from our own. Differences should not be a barrier to our approach to them, but rather a provocation to closer and more interested access to them.

They are no more different from us than we are different from them, and if it be true, as Christians are apt to claim, that Christianity is possessed of more of the spirit of universal brotherhood than any other religion, then it will be especially true of the Christian and one of his evident characteristics that whatever racial peculiarities exist in Jewish character will not operate discouragingly nor in a way to alienate. He is a cheap Christian who can admire and love only those that are like himself.

Jews have never been in favor with Gentiles, and that was as much the case prior to the Christian era as since, a fact which takes all the vitality out of the theory that the prejudice against Jews is due to their having been the crucifiers of Christ. Aside from that there is too much innate justice in the human heart in general to allow of passing an adverse judgment on the race at large for what was done by a little knot of Jews two thousand years ago.

The cause of anti-Jewish prejudice is farther to seek and is to be discovered in the fact that their religion was from the start an exclusive religion. It constituted a barrier set up by the Jews themselves.

The Possibilities of the Jew

Address delivered by Rev. Dr. Edward N. Calisch, of Richmond, Va. at the Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., July 1913

Brethren: You are gathered in Convention here to consider the work and progress of your District as a part of our beloved Order. Parenthetically I may say that it is one of the most progressive and prosperous parts of the Order, and I wish here to convey my congratulations to you and to express my pride in your achievements. As earnestly as our thoughts are engaged in the welfare of the Order we must yet look back to that source from which the Order sprang. Judaism and the Jewish people are inseparable. One does not exist without the other. Let us then consider tonight, as thoroughly germane to the purpose of our Order, the possibilities that lie before us and our faith.

The theme is one full of keen interest to every thinking lover of Judaism. There is not a man or woman, born within the pale of the mother of faiths. to whom at some time has not come the earnets question of the future of that faith. Proud as we are of our peerless past, reverently grateful as we must be for the heroic martyr lives that have been freely sacrificed for the maintenance of our hope, we cannot look out over the present without some misgivings as to what may lie hidden in the unrevealing grasp of even the immediate future.

As a dwarf standing upon the shoulders of a giant, we of the present are perched upon the monticles of knowledge and experience, gleaned from the past by the sweat of the brow and the anguish of the soul. We are neither skeptical, nor blindly credulous. We know that the Jews have been preserved through a series of continuous catastrophies, whose occurrence to any other community or race of people would have proved their complete annihilation. We know that this preservation cannot have been due to causes other than natural, for while it is true that ours is a special mission for God, yet the inviolable laws of nature proclaim that God works no miracle, even for His favorite. He accomplishes His great ends along the very lines which, in the beginning of time, His ineffable wisdom laid down for the everlasting government of cosmic life.

A study of the past will reveal to us that nowhere in all history have there ever been any leaps or bounds in the long procession of cause and effect, that no movement has even successfully taken place till conditions were ready for its advent.

From the height of our present wisdom, back and down to the depths of primeval ignorance stretches the long incline of development, up whose endless length the generations of men have climbed tardily and painfully. Above our heads gleam still higher, the snow-capped summits of greater achievement, which shall be gained by generations yet unborn. "Evolution" is the term by which this age has characterized the process of growth. It is a romance of science, 'the most daring," says Henry Drummond, "it has ever essayed to pen." It is a "history of the steps" by means of which the world and man have come to be what they are. It is the story of the slow revolving aeons, through whose endless lengths has rung been added to rung in the long ladder of uprising life. From pebble to mountain, from seaweed to lofty palm, from snow-drop to fathomless ocean, from the single cell to the complex miracle of the human body, has the chaos of inchoate life unfolded along the lines of God designed development. The history of all life has been one of gradual growth, as Holmes puts in his incomparable verse, "The Chambered Nautilus."

"Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread its lustrous coil;
Still as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archway through,
Built up its idle door,
Stretched in his last found home, and knew the old no more."

But the world grew more than physically. When upon the apex of created grandeur was placed man, there was put within him the germ for another, and a higher growth. Into his nostrils was breather the "ruach chajim" of the great Creator, the breath of the possibility of a divinely lived life. That too has grown. To it also came there an evolution from rudimentary moral weakness and ignorance upward towards the heights of spiritual strength and wisdom.

But this growth was not alike to all men. The nations of the earth have been gifted with varying possibilities whose realization was a contribution to the sum total of human progress. Each, in turn, has realized its possibilities, and, when realized, has slipped from the stage of history, as a player who has spoken his part and makes his exit. Each nation, each race, each class of men have been the successive steps upon which mounted the genius of the race. Each civilization has been as the chambers of the nautilus, in which humanity has dwelt for a time, but,

"As the spiral grew,
Stole with soft steps its shining arch-
way through,
Built up its idle door,
Stretched in this last found home, and
knew the old no more."

To find out what have been the possibilities of Israel, we shall touch lightly upon several epochs of past history. Taking up the thread of inquiry at a point when Israel first became self-conscious we find a pastoral people, dealing their herds to the grassy meads, or upturning the sod of that sacred soil destined to be the womb of such glorious births to the human race.

From the Jordan to the Mediterranean, from the heritage of Naphtali to the confines of proud Judah, there streamed on the festal days, the faithful to the sacred City of God. The ploughmen from their furrows, the heardsmen from their flocks, the merchant from his bazaar, the dresser from his vine, the keeper from his vigil, thronged to the glorious edifice on Moriah's mount, and, as they clustered there, from the lips of the robed priest rolled forth the swelling anthems of their grateful praise.

But the scene gradually shifts. The walls of the house of God give way to the cruel barriers of Babylon. Instead of the home of their father's God, 'tis the imperial city of Syrian power. Instead of the happy song of the harvesters comes the wail of exile, as they sit and weep by the sad waters of Babylon.

Again the environment alters. Once more in the courts and chambers of the restored temple stand the serving priests, and from their lips roll forth again the happy melodies of grateful praise. With the greater glories of the second house, thère lives a people again redeemed, again led from captive narrowness into the wide realms of liberty and self-government. But during the period of that second commonwealth mighty changes are taking place. The genius of history passed from the east to the west of the Holy Land. Humanity had stepped out of its Mesopotamian cradle and taken its first steps toward the land of the setting sun. India, Syria, Persia had bloomed, flowered, and withered, and their seed had been wafted o'er the Aegean isles to the home of a new civilization. With the conquest and death of Alexander the Great, and the division of his empire, the new power, that had been slowly maturing in the Grecian peninsula, began to make itself felt. Marathon, Thermopylae and Salamis were fought, Greece was supreme. Gradually, yet none the less surely, Hellenistic culture o'erspread the known world. Judea felt its influence, yielded to it and thereby paved the way for its own national and political catastrophe.

Again in a new power rose out of the occident. Still further to the west strode now, with stronger steps, the genius of human history. The orb of Greece reached the perihelion of its power, and began its downward course, while steadily the Roman standard went from conquest to conquest. With the overthrow of Grecian supremacy, the city on the Tiber became the dominant force of the world. But all the wisdom of its oracles could not foresee, nor all the power of its legions suppress the potency of two events, insignificant at the time, but becoming eventually the two most puissant factors in all its subsequent history of human civilization. The birth of Jesus of Nazareth and the founding of the school of Jabne, by Rabbi Jochanan ben Saccai, were the centres of two circles of influence, whose circumferences have not yet been reached.

Victory upon victory was gained by the Roman eagle. From the shores of Albion, through the vine clad hills of the Spanish peninsula, from the Pillars of Hercules to the eastern sands of the Mediterranean, spread the conquering legions of Rome's insatiable lust, till they found themselves balked for a short period outside the walls of Jerusalem. The conflict was fierce, desperate; merciless. Famine, dissension, and pestilence were within; the trained conquerors of the world without. On the 9th of Abh the end was come; Jerusalem had fallen, the temple lay in ruins, Rome was supreme. Again from out the west and the north came a new power. Again the genius of human history strode towards the Occident. Rome ran its course and fell, as a vast flower that had gone to seed, the pollen of its civilization was carried by its conquerors o'er the forests of Europe. With the spread of Roman culture spread also the power of one of the factors of which we have spoken. Rome had become Christianized ere it fell.

Its new faith fell not with it. The victors took it with them as so much booty and appropriated it to themselves. Christianity then began its triumphant career down the corridors of the centuries, till now, today, the civilized world nominally worships at the shrine of the Galilean teacher.

Thus has the potentiality of one of those events became actualized. Its destiny is being fulfilled. But the other, what of it? What message does the tale of the years bring to us of that little school at Jabne, within whose narrow walls was confined the light of an older faith? Had it then run its course? Had it reached the climax of its possibilities, and was it forever to have been laid low with the building of the walls of the Holy City? Did the coffin, which shrouded the pretended dead body of Ben Saccai, enclose the real corpse of Judaism?

The years give answer,—No. Step by step it has gone on, beside its victorious daughter faith. With each civilization that has risen and fallen it has been present. It has rocked the cradles of the giant empires of the past, and shovelled the dirt upon their coffins. Mid all the crash of falling thrones, it has stood, inconquerable as time itself,—for the reason that its possibilities have not yet been realized.

Because human civilization has been rather a march of arms and of intellect than of morals has it been that those nations, who stood for conquest and for intellectual achievement, have succumbed to the inevitable, when greater conquest and greater intellectual achievement superseded their exploits. Because physical knowledge and material power rather than spiritual life and ethical strength have been the steady purpose of human progress, have those peoples fallen, whose knowledge and power had reached their limit, and whose capacities for acquisition were outgrown? And it is for this reason that that people who stood not for these, but for the knowledge of God and the power of righteous life, has not yet yielded to the common death that has befallen all its contemporaries and many of its successors. Because the Jews stood for faith and not for intellect, because they have cultivated the heart and not alone the head, because they struggled for God and not for dominion, have the Jews occupied a unique place in the history of men.

Idle were it for me to speak further of Israel's indestructibility, in striking contrast to the perishing of the peoples of the past. Suffice to say that the Jews are here today, after having passed through an ordeal which cannot but have some message to narrate. We learn two things if we are wise, from that message, one is the manner of life which enabled our fathers to survive, as they have — the other the manner of life which we must adopt, would we survive and make more near the day of the realization of our possibilities.

We today are the heirs of the deeds of our fathers. Through all the years of their struggle for righteousness they added strength unto strength and power to power, as ring is added to ring in the trunk of a tree. What we are today, physically, mentally, morally, is the fruit of our fathers' growth. That of which we boast, and the virtues which even the reluctant admission of the world gives to us, are the products of our fathers' lives, of the manner in which they grew.

Our thrift, sobriety, domestic sanctity, keen mentality, our love of order, obedience to law; our loyalty, patriotism, our power of endurance, our humanity, our charity, our filial affection, our honor for the aged are all things for which we must thank our sires, for that was the manner of their growth. Even our enviable record in the mortality tables of life insurance is due to the cleanness, the moderation, the temperateness of the life which they lived. Are we so living that we shall leave to our children a like heritage of honor and of strength?

'Tis a crucial hour, the dawn of a new day in the hope of Israel. During all the past ages has there been a night of faith, when the innumerable stars of polytheism and superstition studded the firmament of human religious knowledge. Now the hour of dawn has come Christianity has been the pathmaker for us. It has weaned the world from paganism, led it through the childhood of simple, religious belief. It now yields to the deeper knowledge of the spirit of God which the Jew has conserved through the ages. The Christian martyrs have spilled their blood for us. Their missionaries today are working for us, teaching to the ignorant world the A, B, C of faith upon which we shall build the glorious superstructure of the nearer knowledge of God, and the nobler conceptions of His divine existence and of human life and duty.

How that is to be done I will not here attempt to say save in one thing—that our world conquest will not be one of doctrine or of dogma. Let theologians wrangle for this. What the Jew shall realize shall be the possibility of a divinely lived life—the life that is pure, holy, righteous. It is not necessarily our part to make all men Jews, but to make all men righteous. The yeast that is put into the dough does not make the dough all yeast, but it lifts the sodden mass of inutile matter and gives to it life-giving power. As the leavening, spiritual power of the human race, it is not our possibility so much to make all men accept our doctrines as mere doctrines, as to give life and holiness to the race.

I firmly believe the possibilities of the Jews are greater today than they ever have been. I believe they are nearer realization than at any time in all history. I firmly believe that when the Master Architect of universal life shall consummate the structure of human destiny, Israel will occupy a high, prominent and nobly conspicuous part. Then the stone which human builders have all these ages rejected will become the keystone in the arch of civilization, placed there in accordance with the plans of the Divine Designer. But I no less firmly believe that Israel will not be put into that place till he is ready for it, shaped, carved and graven as becomes the place we fill. When the woodman wishes to use his axe and he finds its edge dull. he will lay its edge upon the grindstone till it is fitted for the task. We are the axe to be used to cut down the upas tree of ignorance, superstition and corruption, whose deadly fumes spread their pall o'er the earth. We have been upon the grindstone of men's hate for ages. Now the logos of history is feeling the edge of us to see if we are ready; and think you we are fitted for the task if we are dulled in virtue, blunt of spirituality, with the jagged edge of unworthiness?

Mr. Kraus has said that the B. B. is the fighting machine of Jewry. So it is. But we must first fight for ourselves to save ourselves from our own mistakes. from paying the inevitable penalty of our own folly. The crass materialism of the age has penetrated our ranks. We must make the spirit of altruism the spirit of the B. B. to be felt by our people, by our elders, our young men and women and our little ones. The sense of moral responsibility must be awakened within us the renewed and strengthened consciousness that "not by might nor by power, but by the spirit of God" have we maintained ourselves in the past. and through it only can we hope to achieve the realization of our noblest possibilities in the days yet to be.

The history of Israel has ever been a palimpsest of triumph and humiliation, of victory written over with defeat, but I believe defeat has been written for the last time. The signs of the times point now more clearly toward the realization of our possibilities than ever before—the opportunities are here. It lies for us to grasp them. The work that is being done in schools, colleges, congregations, societies—especially by such work as you are doing in this I. O. B. B. are all, all factors in the accomplishment of it. We need only to continue in this direction, to go from good to better, from better to better still.

"Build thee more stately mansions, O
my soul,
As swift the seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past,
Let each new temple, nobler than the last.
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou, at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."

NEWS FROM LONDON

BY OUR CORRESPONDENT DR. M. EPSTEIN

London, August 18, 1913.

The present time of year is what is usually termed the "silly season." The town is empty; those who are able to do so are spending the vacation by the silver sea or on the mountain tops. Society has finished its round of gaieties, and there is a holiday feeling abroad. The newspapers are the chief sufferers. They find it difficult to fill their pages. The courts are not sitting, so there are no scandals, grave and gay, to chronicle. Parliament is ending a dull session and offers little in the way of excitement. Even the Balkan war has ceased. What then do the newspaper men do? They are keenly on the scent for anything, no matter how small, to draw out and to magnify. It fills up space. Often, too, it is interesting. And if nothing offers itself, a correspondence is started, generally in the office itself, on such themes as "Should Bachelors be Taxed?" or "Ought Horses to Wear Long Tails?" We have no doubt that our readers in America are fully acquainted with these journalistic tricks, which appear to be universal, but which are usually characterized by silliness only. Hardly ever are they associated with breach of confidence or low journalistic morality.

What applies to the general press holds good for the specifically Jewish press also. Here in England at the present time we have in reality no Jewish press; we have only two Jewish papers, both managed by the same people. For them, too, the season is slack. There are few meetings to report. The United Synagogue is on vacation; and some of its constituent synagogues are being painted and decorated. The notables of the community are out of town. There are no great and striking sermons to reprint. A marriage, an engagement, an obituary notice—these are about all the events that give scope for "copy." Something special is a godsend. Something special turned up. At the last meeting of the lodge four new candidates presented themselves for admission. Two were elected and two rejected. The matter concerned the lodge alone. But the rejection had, rightly or wrongly, stirred up some feeling among members, and some one or other either wrote a letter or gave information for a letter to be written to the Jewish Chronicle, complaining that the two people who had not been elected had not been fairly treated. The letter was published, though the editor must have been fully aware that he was being party to a breach of confidence.

The Council of the lodge held an emergency meeting to consider the matter and decided to question every member of the lodge present at the meeting as to what light he could throw on the origin of the letter. Whether this course was wise or foolish, right or wrong, it was the concern of no one but the lodge. Somehow or other the Jewish Chronicle got hold of the queries that were issued, and published the document in full, though it was headed "Private and Confidential." Once more the editor was knowingly party to a breach of confidence.

Not only did he publish the letter, but he devoted no less than four of his paragraphs of the week to the incident, attempting to make the action of the Council of the lodge look ridiculous. Everybody who is in the least acquainted with the seasonal fluctuations in the supply of newspaper "copy" will know full well that had this incident occurred in a busy month it is questionable whether the matter would have been made public at all, and if it had been published it would have received but brief treatment. Hence, the "silly season" is in part responsible for the enlarged publicity and the good advertisement which this business gave the lodge. But this is a secondary matter. We have mentioned it because we believe that it was necessary to put the publication both of the letter and of the circular in its proper perspective. We are absolutely certain that the Jewish Chronicle intended to do the lodge no harm. Whatever else one may say about the editor, it is impossible to assert that he is a fool. He knows a good thing when he sees it, and we are pretty sure he appreciates the lodge and its possibilities.

But there is a much more important aspect to this matter. There is the larger communal aspect. The publication by the Jewish Chronicle of private and confidential documents, no matter to what or to whom they had reference, shows a lamentably low ethical standard. Even journals should have high ones, and a good many do. The journal of the community, the premier journal of the community, which has done so much for Anglo-Jewry, which has fought many a victorious battle in the Jewish cause, which commands no little respect abroad, should have the very highest journalistic ethical standard. Moreover, it ought never to forget, not even in the "silly season," that it is a Jewish paper, and that therefore its motto should be noblesse oblige. It might well learn a lesson from the lodge in promoting brotherly love and harmony in the community. Will anyone assert that its policy in publishing confidential documents makes for such an end? Today it is a breach of confidence in which the lodge is concerned, tomorrow it may be one in which some other institution may be concerned. And from an important Jewish organ like the Jewish Chronicle we do expect higher things.

The truth is that ever since the only two English communal papers have come under one management, the Jewish Chronicle has adopted the somewhat high-handed policy of a monopoly holder. It was perhaps to be expected. That was the pity of it. As long as there were two competing papers, their friendly rivalry made for good. As long as there were two papers the Jewish Chronicle was more ready to give expression to public opinion in its correspondence column. Since the beginning of the monopoly period it has been less ready to do so. At the recent dinner of the Anglo-Jewish Association, Sir Edward Stern made some remarks which, (whether properly or not does not matter) gave rise to adverse criticism on the part of some of the more thoughtful members of the community. A letter was sent to the Jewish Chronicle giving expression to the criticism. It was never published. Had the monopoly not existed, the probability is very great that the letter would have been inserted. The actual letter is of no consequence whatever. What is of consequence is the high-handed policy.

There is only one reflection that must occur to every thoughtful man's mind. A monopoly in communal journalism is as bad for the community as, let us say, the beef trust, or any other, for the general body of citizens. The beef trust, or any other, must be broken. So must the monopoly in communal journalism. Naturally it is difficult. But it ought not to be impossible. In all other communities the number of Jewish papers is legion. In England there is practically only one. We refer, of course, to those printed in English. A little competition would be healthy for the communal life. If it were perfectly clear that a high standard actuated the Jewish Chronicle there might be the less need for another paper. But the flagrant breach of confidence to which the publication of the lodge document bore witness gives one pause. It is a pity that, expecting much, and with good cause, we were so grievously disappointed. From the point of view of the lodge the incident is of little moment, from the point of view of the community it is the straw which shows how the wind blows.

We still need the "clean hands and the pure heart" of the Psalmist. In an age of loosening bonds Jews should not forget that their's is the high standard, and this applies all round, whether to newspapers or to individuals. We certainly have such individuals, and when their number is lessened by the hand of death we have cause for regret. Such is the case on the loss of Carl Stettauer, a man of clean hands and a pure heart, who did noble work for his people, and did it without any ostentation. He was a tower of strength inside the community; outside it he was not without honor. He was a member of the Stepney Borough Council, of which he on one occasion might easily have become the head; and of the London County Council, the body which governs greater London. He was Treasurer of the United Synagogue and much else besides. But no mere enumeration of his offices can adequately convey his real importance. It was the man, the personality, that mattered; and it was his outlook which marked him. His was no narrow view of Jewry. A Bavarian by birth (how many prominent Jews, by the way, come from Fürth!) and an Englishman by naturalization, he could understand the great Jewish appeal, without limitation of clime or government. All Israel are brethren. What an excellent brother of the Order he would have made! His name will be ever associated with his journey to Russia after the Kishineff massacres; he will share with Sir Moses Montefiore the glory of having undertaken an errand of mercy in the same cause.

Not all distinguished Jews are like Stettauer. A good example is that of the late Dr. T. M. C. Asser, the world-famed international jurist, who died at The Hague last July, in his seventy-fifth year. Asser was a name renowned among European jurists, and he occupied a prominent position in his own country. But he was a Jew only by birth, and during his life-time he showed scarcely any interest in Jewish affairs. Curiously enough his death was little noted in Holland generally—some say just because he was a Jew; and by the Jews still less—some say just because he cared so little for Jewry. Nevertheless, he was in his way a great man, and his native land reaped the fruit of his labors, Jew though he was. After all, whether Gentile or Jew, whether "bond or free," a man may be of benefit to his country by his personal individuality. This twentieth century of ours will surely make this claim good and write it down as the magna charta of mankind.

Wherever thoughtful men foregather this doctrine appears to be respected. Judge a man as a man, not by his color or his race or his creed. Every University Settlement worker has heard of Canon Barnett, the founder of Toynbee Hall. Jews should honor his memory for many reasons. His was a great heart filled with the milk of human kindness in an abundant measure; he was a man in the best sense of the word. But above all else he stood for toleration, and the East End Jews had a good friend in the Canon. If only there were more like him! If there were more like him in Russia! We should then perhaps hear less of Beilis cases and such like abominable charges. The recent International Medical Congress which met in London last week was another instance of that brotherhood among nations which might be. Any movement or institution that makes for international understanding and therefore for universal peace, must be of interest to the Jew. This congress was a case in point. But apart from this general reason there was also a special reason. At a joint meeting of the Sections of Psychiatry and of Forensic Medicine the "psychology of crime" was discussed, and much time was devoted to the so-called "ritual murder" accusations. The Beilis case was mentioned, and among others Sir James Crichton-Browne refused to believe that this was a case of ritual murder. In this opinion the members of the two sections concurred by acclamation. How long, O Lord, how long? How long will Russia remain a by-word to the nations for superstition and intolerance and ignorance? And yet politically she is a mighty force in the council of nations.

Dr. Hyamson is leaving England at the end of this month and by the time these lines are in print he will be on American soil. There may be differences of opinion about his fitness for the Chief Rabbinate; there can be none at all about his capacity to deal with some of the problems of New York Jewry. He is bound to succeed. For he has the greatest of all gifts—sympathy; and his modesty reminds one of some old-world rabbi. He himself is a little frightened of his years. "One cannot begin at my age," he says. But on the other hand he forgets his ripe experience and above all, the readiness of America to welcome and understand a good man. It is curious, by the way, to note the associations of his congregation with Anglo-Jewry. Joseph Asher came from over here, so now does Hyamson; while our present Chief Rabbi comes from them.

"I have had exceedingly great work; I have been looking around a good deal; I have found that all my opinions have not always been accepted everywhere; I have made many friends and some foes also"—such might be the words of Dr. Hertz to characterize his stay in London since his election to the Chief Rabbinate. And they would be true. It has been for him a time of learning and observing the task before him. There has been no constructive work as yet—there could not have been any. In the coming winter we shall no doubt see the beginning of things, when his influence will be bound to make itself felt. In his process of observation he also came to the London Lodge, where a full meeting was present to give a hearty welcome to a member of the Order who has risen so high. We of the London Lodge will ever remember that our Chief Rabbi is a Ben B'rith (in the special sense), and we feel certain that he too will always bear it in mind. That will make for communal prosperity. We cannot but think that any member of the Order will be sure to act in accordance with its platform, and if the Anglo-Jewish community will gain, and gain enormously, by the application to its life of high principles, it will gain more than ever if those principles are brotherly love and harmony.

COMMUNICATED.

St. Louis, Mo., June 26, 1913.

B'nai B'rith News:

At a meeting of prominent citizens of this city held in May last, at which matters concerning the general interests of the city of St. Louis were discussed, a member of the Order, Brother Ben Altheimer, made a suggestion that in order to arouse the patriotism of our children and make them better citizens, a spirit of greater reverence for the flag ought to be inculcated among them. He suggested that this should be done, not only in the public schools, but in the Sunday schools as well, as it would furnish an opportunity for Jewish and Christian children to meet in joint celebration of Flag Day. To stimulate the movement, he offered a number of prizes to such Sunday schools as chose to enter the contest, for the best essays in each Sunday school on the subject, "Our Flag; Its Meaning and Message to the Young." Four Jewish Sunday schools and a number of Christian Sunday schools accepted the offer, and in each Sunday school prizes were awarded, given by Mr. Altheimer to the successful essayists. The idea met with general favor in the press, not only of this city but of the state and even in other states. The governor of the state proclaimed Flag Day as a holiday, and the mayor of the city also issued a proclamation urging its observance. Union services were held in several of the Christian churches, to which Jewish children were invited. At St. John's M. E. Church and at the Second Presbyterian Church celebrations were held. In the latter church Mr. Altheimer delivered an address, and presented the young people with a flag. The St. Louis Republic contained the following editorial on the subject:

"A Religion of Patriotism.

"There were Flag Day services in two St. Louis churches Sunday in which Jewish and Christian children took part. The services at St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was a Sunday school celebration. At the Second Presbyterian Church addresses were made by men responsible for this patriotic observance. And among those speakers it is proper specially to mention Ben Altheimer.

There was much patriotism in Mr. Altheimer's address, and much religion, too. But the religious message of his words was quite as wholesome for the Christian children who heard as it was for the children of his own faith. It is a rare good thing for any child to hear his country extolled with passionate sincerity and to hear the symbolism of his country's flag interpreted in words of reverential devotion.

And who quite so well as the Jew can see in the Stars and Stripes the banner of "justice and tolerance!" When Mr. Altheimer described this as a land "where unity and fraternity have assumed their noblest aspect; where man stands for what he is; where the pursuit of happiness is the privilege of everyone and where the practice of religion according to one's conscience is a virtue," the intellect and heart of a citizen were speaking, to be sure; but

BEFORE THE BAR OF CIVILIZATION.

A timely word spoken by England's Chief Rabbi at an International Congress for the Suppression of White Slavery has covered the face of Russia with shame and barbarous Muscovy, inflicted of unspeakable turpitude, stands before the bar of civilization. It is only one count of the great arraignment which paragraph by paragraph and section by section shall some day be pieced together and presented in full. The thin veneer of civilization under which masquerading Russia has stalked about is torn off her face that her features may be revealed in all their horrible ugliness. No ancient Pharaoh or Haman could have devised more diabolical schemes for the destruction of body and soul of Jewry. The Pale of Settlemnet is a vast dungeon where dire poverty, the result of discriminating laws, is rampant with all the ills attendant thereto, and beyond the Pale there is—the "yellow ticket." In the seat of the inister charged with the duty of preading enlightenment a tyrant is enhroned whose fertile brain is never eary of hedging in the Jewish youth hirsty for knowledge so that the numer of those admitted to institutions of earning grows daily smaller. The emptation to forswear the religion of e fathers is too great to be resisted ut by the fewest. The Jewish educaonal fund which comes from the pecial taxation over and above the eneral taxes levied upon all subjects of e Czar, Jews included, is diverted to her purposes, stolen, misappropriated. wish parents are distracted for want educational opportunity for their offring of both sexes.

But all these vexations are as naught mpared with that terrible tragedy ich is now being enacted in the sacd city of Kiev The details of the ory of a Christian lad done to death a gang of thieves are too well known, o well established Had it not been r the infamous fabrications of the al Rus ians and their abettors and tron near the throne, poor Beilis ould now be a free man. The trial inlves more than the freedom of that poor Jew. The honor of the Jewish people, their good name and fame, the purity of the Jewish religion are the momentous matters upon which a Russian court of justice will pronounce judgment. The mere charge of a "ritual murder" stamps Russia as barbarous. If her ecclesiastics are too ignorant or too steeped in fanaticism, if her minions of the law are too beclouded by prejudice and hatred, if her ministers of state would play with the fire of engendering hostility on the part of the masses against the defenceless Jew, there is still enough of enlightenment and justice and the right kind of the statecraft beyond her borders to hold her up to desecration no matter what the verdict will be. Barring sporadic exemplars infected with the virus proceeding from Holy Russia, the whole civilized west cannot but condemn the evil policy of those responsible for the tragedy at Kiev.

Let them condemn Beilis and the Jewish people. We Jews are inured to the miscarriage of justice. And ritual murder trials are nothing new. We were wont to hear of them in text-books of history. So did we know what massacres were, from books, from chronicles, from the stirring and heartrending threnodies in our liturgy. Who of us did not hear of the crusades, the carnage at Speier, Worms, and Mayence, at the Ukraine? But now a new name has been bestowed upon massacres of Jews, henceforward to be known by a Russian word, "pogrom." Germany has enriched the international dictionary by the word "anti-Semitism," and Russia has given the tongues of mankind the word "pogrom." Certainly great contributions to the linguistic stock.

Ritual murder charges were plentiful in the dark centuries of the middle ages that lie far behind us, though popes and councils pronounced to the contrary. In the nineteenth century the charge was resurrected, exhumed from the grave to which it had long been consigned. With the Damascus libel of which our fathers were witnesses, Kutaiss and Tisza-Esslar and Vienna are fresh in our memories, and now Kiev is to be a household word with our children of tender age.

In spite of it all, we despair not. The truth must prevail. Justice must some day be done. Fanaticism shall vanish in the end. Hatred and malice and persecution must cease. The conscience of the civilized world must be aroused. There may be one more saint added to our catalogue of martyrs. The innocent blood will be avenged. Israel will arise out of the present trouble and perhaps out of many more which may be in store for us, united, solidified, his body like unto a rock to withstand the enemy, his mind sane to triumph over obscurantist machinations, his soul pure to proclaim the old vision and the old truth that a civilized world must be governed by justice and not by expediency and stand ready to execrate the miscreants in high and low station who deal in the nefarious trade of inflaming the populace, of fanning hatred and prejudice, of setting one class of mankind against another; to summon all such enemies of truth to its bar and in the name of God and man pronounce them the guilty cowards and culprits which they are, apostates from the religion of truth and traitors to civilization.

ARE WE TO BLAME?

A newspaper of Kalamazoo, Michigan published a news item concerning a rabbi. It described this gentleman as a "kike" rabbi. The lodge passed a resolution of protest and appointed a committee to deliver the same to the publishers. The Publicity Committee was requested to assist and also to protest. This Committee concluded that any further publicity concerning the matter would aggravate the injury. The Committee suggested to the lodge, for its consideration, whether we ourselves were not to blame for coining this miserable epithet.

This slanderous word has become popularized by the Jews themselves. Some use this term in describing persons guilty of tricky business transactions. Others apply the term to the emigrants from Russia and Poland, while others have used the term as applicable to all who profess orthodoxy. No matter how used, it is always expressive of a prejudice of one class of Jews against another. The use of it should not be tolerated by any fair-minded Jew. Unless we check the use of it effectively it will soon become so popularized that it will be used not to describe any particular part of the Jewish body, but all Jews.

Some years ago the word "sheeney" was popularized and applied to all Jews. Will the slang word "kike" be used in the same manner.

A new means of depicting the idiosyncrasies of the emigrant Jew is by moving pictures. A moving picture scroll, entitled "Love in the Ghetto" is being exhibited. The scenes and the acting so exaggerate the shortcomings and the idiosyncrasies, which it is the purpose to depict, that the same is most miserable and disgusting. The astonishing feature of the whole matter, however, is the apparent delight with which this performance is received by audiences composed largely of Jews.

Of what value are protests against the caricature of the Jews on the stage or in print so long as the Jews themselves patronize performances of this kind?

We are to blame. What are we going to do about it?

SAVE OUR COLLEGE MEN.

With the winter season approaching and the Jewish youth enrolling themselves as students in Colleges and Universities, it may be well to view the situation as it presents itself to all of us who have the perpetuation of Judaism at heart.

We in this country are fortunate that our religion is no bar to a college education. No percentage worm cuts admission down, no invidious distinctions are made against the foreigner. There is certainly that temptation to apostasy removed to which the Jewish youth of Russia succumb. In Germany where entrance is as with us unconditioned by creed, except in the case of the foreigner, apostasy either occurs at a time when the college graduate is balked in his professional career by the fact that he is a Jew, or parents that look ahead to ensure the worldly success of their offspring by conducting them in childhood to the baptismal font. But then in Berlin a grocer who is apprehensive of losing his trade will forswear his Judaism, and in Vienna a servant girl out of a position. Such open desertions, deplorable though they be, are not as evil in their consequences as that insidious, hidden, imperceptible apostasy of the spirit.

For all estrangements, the alienation of the spirit is most grievous. Sons and daughters may in a fit of anger sneak away from the parental abode, perhaps never to return; yet the separation is physical, it does not touch the heart which after the fit is over remains true to the ties of blood. But you may live under the same roof with your people, eat of their bread and partake of their drink, and yet in spirit you may be strangers to them. In households where the whole family stand on the same level of education and culture, where perchance your father and your uncles are graduates of the same college you go to, a college education strengthens the bond of family unity Alas, in the majority of Jewish households the fathers are self-made and self-taught at best and uneducated and unrefined in many cases, and the young gentlemen who are sent to college or—which is still worse—make their way through college become mentally estranged to their home surroundings. In the long run you can tell apart those whose education outside the home squares with the home influence from those who have no home influence to counterpoise the collegiate training. But the point before us now is that the Jewish youth are sensitive to the chasm between the world at large which meets them in school and that small world with its petty concerns which they call home.

Knowledge that is superficial knowl,-edge, begets scepticism. The adolescent period is one of doubting and questioning. Our neighbors appreciate the danger and establish in the Universities branches of their religious activities, of their Y. M. C. A. and suchlike agencies. The Catholics have their parochial schools, their Jesuit colleges, their own University. But such of the faith as are students in non-Catholic institutions, state universities for instance, are well looked after lest they be lost to their faith. The teaching in such institutions is neither anti-Catholic nor anti-Jewish. But it certainly is neither Catholic nor Jewish. The Jewish student, coming as he does for the most part from homes devoid of a collegiate atmosphere, is carried off his feet by the contrast. The light of knowledge dazzles him. The superiority and inerrancy of the professor are taken for granted. Here and there an indirect slur on Judaism or a derogatory estimate placed upon the ancestral religion reaches his ears. The break comes sooner or later. Certainly the fewest among Jewish University professors keep warm their attachment to Judaism: at best an attitude of indifference, and at the worst a studied aloofness coupled with hatred of all things Jewish.

We should therefore welcome and encourage all collegiate societies aiming to keep the Jewish student within the fold. Whether we speak with the faddists of a "Hebraic culture" or name it in old-fashioned nomenclature Judaism, whatever agency will tend to strengthen the hold thereof on the Jewish college man deserves wholehearted support. We are in need of educated, cultured Jews, and we want the Jewish lawyer, physician, and professor to be Jews. True culture and Judaism can very well go together. We are a minority exposed to corrosion, and we must protect our own. The missionary that stalks abroad is no formidable foe. But the insidious workings of a foreign culture will undermine the faith of the weaklings. A wave of enthusiasm for things Jewish is in the air. It has penetrated behind the walls of college hall and college dormitory. The will to be a Jew is there, among those that are poorer in worldly goods but of sturdier build to resist the inroads of anti-Judaism. The young men may need guidance and sympathetic counsel. They also need more substantial support. Both will be forthcoming. For we must save our college men to Judaism.

AUSTRIAN REICHSRATH AND ROUMANIAN JEWS.

A member of the Austrian Reichsrath, Herr Reizes, recently called attention to the failure of Roumania to fulfil its treaty obligation in the matter of religious equality. Herr Reizes requested the Premier to exercise his influence with the Foreign Minister to insure that this equality should be carried into practice in a country which is being actively supported by the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF DR. IGNATZ ZIEGLER.

On the 16th of last month Karlsbad Lodge No. 438 celebrated a rare and most beautiful feast. The occasion was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Rabbinical activity of Brother Ex-President Dr. Ignatz Ziegler, the rabbi of the Karlsbad Jewish community. Although the Jewish community of Karlsbad with its 2,000 souls is one of the youngest among the great Jewish congregations of Bohemia, the fourth in line, it has gained international importance because it is visited by many coreligionists from all the different countries. Brother Ziegler is therefore one of the best known rabbis in Austria. Many brethren had occasion to hear his sermons which are distinguished by clearness and warmth of delivery and which instruct and elevate. Many have learned to know the goodness of his heart for to him the lofty motto of our Order "Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony" is no empty sound. Upon his initiative the beautiful Refuge for Poor Jews was built. He raised the greater part of the sum needed for its erection. He also established the "Israelitishes Ferienheim," which possesses its own house in the neighboring Schlaggen forest. In the Order he belongs to one of the most prominent lodges of the Austrian District.

Union Lodge No. 425 of Pilsen is the oldest lodge in Bohemia. It was instituted in the year 1894 and before the first year of its existence passed, Dr. Ziegler was a member of it. He quickly recognized the significance of the Order for Judaism and with the fiery zeal of youth he worked for the establishment of a lodge in Karlsbad. His efforts were crowned with success. Before another year was over Karlsbad Lodge No. 438 was called into life. Bro. Dr. Ziegler was its third president and since that time he has often filled this post of honor. For many years he was a most active and meritorious member of the General Committee.

As a writer he attained great success. He has written many works, but we will only mention one here: "Popular Works About Judaism," the aim of which is to bring enlightenment into those circles which are interested in Judaism.

The Grand Lodge of Austria recognizes the importance of this work and assists its publication by subscribing for 200 copies and by recommending it to the members of the Order.

Brother Ex-President Dr. Ziegler was born in Hungary, is fifty-two years old and stands today in the full vigor of his life. The B'nai B'rith News joins District Grand Lodge No. 10 in the ardent wish that Heaven may grant him many more years of useful activity to his own joy, to the joy of his congregation and to the joy of our Order.

CALL FOR SPECIAL SESSION.

San Francisco, August 25, 1913.

To the Past Grand Presidents and Life Members.

To the Representatives of the Fiftieth Annual Session (1913) of District Grand Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B.

To the Subordinate Lodges of District No. 4, I. O. B. B.

Greetings:

Whereas, District Grand Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B., at its Fiftieth Annual Session, adopted a resolution, reading as follows:

"That a committee of five be appointed, to whom shall be referred all questions concerning the Endowment, and that such committee report the result of its labors * * * to the General Committee. Furthermore, that a resume of such a report be sent to each representative and Past Grand President, and that a Special Session of the Grand Lodge be called by the incoming Grand President for a date within thirty days of the filing of such report, for the purpose of acting upon the same and generally legislate upon the question of Endowment."

Whereas, Such a committee was appointed, consisting of Past Grand Presidents Brothers Sperling, Jonas, Wolfe, Gutstadt and Wascerwitz; and

Whereas, Said committee filed their report with the General Committee at a special meeting of said body, held August 22, 1913;

Therefore, Be it known by all those whom it may concern, that a Special Session of District Grand Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B., is hereby called to convene on Sunday, September 21, 1913, at 10 o'clock a. m., Covenant Hall, B'nai B'rith Building, San Francisco, for the purpose set forth in the above resolution.

I. M. Golden,
Grand President.

Appeal No. 101.

Syllabus.

1. No officer of a District Grand Lodge is empowered to grant a charter for a new Lodge, nor empowered to institute a Lodge until a petition therefor is approved and a charter granted by the District Grand Lodge or its General Committee.
2. When a Lodge declares a member suspended or an applicant for membership rejected, such action if not appealed from, is binding and may not be collaterally questioned or reviewed in a subsequent proceeding.
3. The jurisdiction of a Lodge over a member suspended therefrom for nonpayment of dues continues, and while such condition exists such suspended member is not permitted to join any other lodge.
4. In District No. 1 by virtue of its laws, an applicant for membership rejected in any lodge of that District may not within six months thereafter be proposed in any other lodge in the District.
5. A proper petition for a new Lodge having been received, its charter delivered, and the Lodge instituted by officers of a District Grand Lodge without prior action of the General Committee, the subsequent due ratification thereof by the General Committee validates the same and the legality of the Lodge becomes established.

The points in above syllabus upheld by a majority of the members of the court having jurisdiction respectively.

VICTOR ABRAHAM,
President Court of Appeals.

Decision.

Upon petition for a new Lodge of the Order at Bridgeport, Conn., the President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, assisted by other officers of the District, instituted Harmony Lodge No. 711 in that city on January 16th, 1912. A charter for such lodge had not been granted nor had a petition therefor been presented to the District Grand Lodge or its General Committee.

Among those then admitted into Harmony Lodge were three who then stood as suspended members of Abraham Lodge No. 89 of Bridgeport and one whose application for membership had been rejected less than six months before by Abraham Lodge.

The law of District No. 1 provided that "A candidate who has been rejected shall not again be proposed in any Lodge until the expiration of six months from the date of its rejection."

At a meeting of the General Committee of District No. 1 held January 28th. 1912, Abraham Lodge filed its complaint against all of the above acts in connection with the institution of Harmony Lodge. The General Committee referred the complaint to the District Grand Lodge and at the same meeting sanctioned the action of the President in the institution of said Lodge.

District Grand Lodge No. 1, in convention, on February 5th, 1912, adopted a report of a Committee finding against all the contentions of Abraham Lodge. Against this action of District Grand Lodge No. 1, this appeal is prosecuted.

Haas, Livingston, Seelenfreund and Abraham, J. J. hold that the action of the President of District Grand Lodge No. 1 in instituting Harmony Lodge was without authority. Wiener and Block, J. J. also hold such act was irregular.

Wiener, Block, Livingston, Seelenfreund and Abraham, J. J. hold that the status of the three suspended members and of the rejected applicant as declared by Abraham Lodge must be so recognized herein and is not here reviewable, not having been originally appealed from, and that their admission into Harmony Lodge was illegal and void. Wolfe, J. so holds as to the three suspended members, but holds that the application for membership in question was never legally acted on.

Wiener, Block, Wolfe, Haas, Livingston, Seelenfreund and Abraham hold that omitting these four there were a sufficient number of applicants signers of the petition for the new Lodge, to fully comply with the requirements of the organic law.

Rosenbaum, J. contra.

Wiener, Block, Wolfe, Haas, Livingston, Seelenfreund and Abraham, J. J. hold that on January 28th, 1912, upon the General Committee sanctioning the action of the President in instituting Harmony Lodge, the same was sufficient ratification and that when the District Grand Lodge acted, Harmony Lodge had a legal existence and that the appeal from such conclusion of the District Grand Lodge be dismissed.

Coons and Rosenbaum, J. J. vote generally to dismiss the appeal.

Kuznitzky, J. sustains grounds 1 and 6 of the Appeal, and based thereon, finds Harmony Lodge illegally instituted.

Appeal against the conclusion of District Grand Lodge No. 1 finding Harmony Lodge No. 717 to be a legal Lodge, is dismissed.

VICTOR ABRAHAM,
President of the Court.

GREEKS THANK JEWS.

The official Press Bureau in Salonika recently published the following official communication:

"You are requested by the provisional government of Seres and vicinity to express publicly the warmest thanks of the entire Greek population to the Jewish fellow patriots for the brotherly feelings which they manifested under the most trying conditions through which we lately passed.

The Jews of Seres should take good care and preserve well this document, for it was given for such services as obligate one to great gratitude. Thanks to the Jews a great number of prominent Greeks, who drew upon themselves the special wrath of the Bulgarians, escaped sure death. In true defiance of death the Jews kept the Greeks concealed in their houses and plunged themselves into great danger when the Bulgarians surrounded the Jewish houses and searched for the Greeks. The Jews even made subterranean passages through which the Greeks could escape at a given signal. The government journal publishes a long list of Greeks who saved themselves in this manner. It remains to be seen if the Greeks will be content to stop at this document or will consider it their duty to secure a peaceful life to the Jews in the Turkish territory which they now occupy. For the present the 1,300 Jews of Seres have lost all their property and are a prey to the greatest misery. As in all such cases the Jews of the world must extend help to them.

COUNT WITTE ON THE AMERICAN TREATY.

Count Witte, formerly Russia Minister of Finance, has made an important statement in reference to a new treaty of commerce between Russia and the United States of America. He says that before Russia begins to make plans for a new treaty she must recognize that its provisions must apply to all citizens of this country and that she must therefore permit American Jews to visit, travel and trade in Russia. He was a party to the making of treaties with other countries and in all of them the questions to be solved were economic, relating principally to tariffs. There seems to be no difficulty on that score with the United States. The Jewish question seems to be the only stumbling block in the way of arriving at once at a proper understanding.

DEATH OF JEWISH BURGOMASTER.

Frank Heltai, Mayor of Budapest, Hungary, is dead. Heltai was born in Szentes, fifty-two years ago. His parents were strict Orthodox Jews and being reared in such an atmosphere, although he removed from his native town he never lost his membership of the Szentes Orthodox congregation.

In Budapest he studied political economy and law and became a member of the staffs of various newspapers, including the Hungarian paper, Nemzet. He also edited a journal devoted to political economy and later became editor in chief of the official government organ issued by the Hungarian Minister of Commerce. His specialty was commerce and he was the author of several works on that subject.

WISCONSIN LEGISLATURE PASSES JOINT RESOLUTION, EXPRESSING HORROR OF RUSSIAN ATROCITIES.

The Wisconsin State Legislature passed by unanimous vote a joint resolution introduced by Senator Otto Bosshard of La Crosse, conveying the sympathies of the people of the State of Wisconsin to the oppressed Jews of Russia and to their relatives and friends in this country.

This action was taken at the suggestion of Mr. Sol Levitan of Madison, one of the prominent Jewish citizens of the state, and an officer of District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., and at its instigation. The following is the resolution:

Joint Resolution.

Conveying the sympathies of the Wisconsin legislature to the oppressed Jewish people of Russia and to their relatives and friends in this country:

Whereas, Cable and telegraphic dispatches to the press of this country report that the people of Jewish nationality, residing in the southern portion of Russia, are being driven from that country by Russian officials and that the expulsion of these downtrodden people is attended by cruelties and barbarism that hark back to medieval days and the dark ages, and

Whereas, Thousands of Jews from southern Russia have emigrated to and become citizens of this free country and have left in many instances kith and kindred in Russia until such time as sufficient funds could be accumulated to reunite them in a new and free home, and

Whereas, Those emigrants have become good and loyal citizens of this nation, and many of them of this state, and they now learn of the atrocities that are being perpetrated upon those left behind, and they hear the pathetic calls of those hapless people, and

Whereas, The people of this state and nation, blessed in their liberty and freedom, have always enlisted themselves upon the side of oppressed and downtrodden humanity; therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate, the assembly concurring, That the members of the legislature of the state of Wisconsin, in the interest of and as a consolation to those who are suffering through the acts of unenlightened and brutal officials, and as a consolation to those in this country whose wives, children, parents, brothers, sisters or friends are so oppressed and downtrodden, hereby express our sympathies to all such people, and condemn and deplore the acts of all those who are in any manner connected with or responsible for the brutalities practiced upon these hapless and unfortunate people: and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Honorable Secretary of State of the United States and that he be and is hereby requested to use every propr diplomatic means to ameliorate the conditions herein described.

MEDICAL CONGRESS IN LONDON DENOUNCES RITUAL MURDER.

At the International Medical Congress held recently in London, England, the accusation of "blood-murder" for ritualistic purposes brought against the Russian Jews in connection with the assassination of a boy in Kiev, in 1911, was discussed at a joint meeting of the sections devoted to forensic medicine and psychiatry or mental diseases. Prof. George Puppe of the University of Koenigsberg and Prof. Henri Colin of Paris produced evidence against the theory of ritual murder.

A joint report signed by Prof. Augustus J. Pepper of the University of London, Dr. William Henry Wilcox and Dr. Charles A. Mercier, both of London, was presented, expressing the opinion that the evidence proved the crime to have been a coarse and brutal murder committed by a lunatic. The report said:

"We hold the strongest opinion that there was nothing in the details of the murder to suggest the race or nationality of the murderer, and we are entirely and emphatically opposed to the opinion that the crime was a ritual murder."

Sir James Crichton-Browne, who presided, said the Congress was not a judicial tribunal, but entitled to say that it did not agree with the opinion that the crime was a ritual murder. In his own opinion, he said, it was a case of racial antipathy amounting to a criminal conspiracy which seized upon an independent criminal act and distorted and perverted it for its own purposes.

e great hold which the two holi- of the autumn, the "terrible days," ly still have on the Jew may ap- to the student searching for the and wherefore of things, in a ty of lights,. The Jew who de- ces Jewish nationalism and locates um and substance of Judaism in the ious sphere will argue with seem- plausibility that, while the three vals, Passover, Weeks, and Booths, h are interwoven with historical, onal events and above all are bound with the soil and seasons of Pales- , are scantily observed, the New r and Day of Atonement which e none of those associations and ch appeal solely to the religious in- cts, are alone powerful to summon luke warm, the wordly, the pleasure- ing back to the synagogue. The re- t may come from the other quarter t, so long as to use a modern term, civil power in the Jewish state had upper hand, years naturally had their innings and sin called for expiation; t the occasions were of moment per- ps to the temple clergy within the red precincts mainly. To the Deu- onomist who addresses himself to all rael, to the nation, and mirrors the nditions at the height of the nation's lf-conscious power, no less than to e prophets antecedent to the fall of e state, the festivals were three in mber, and not five. Ezekiel is the rst to make allusion to a day of atone- ent, or rather he has two of them in e year, in the first month as well as the seventh. When, again to use a odern term, the Ecclesiastics sat at e state's helm, the latter-day arrivals laimed attention at first side by side ith the older festivals and then far bove them. And when the second atastrophe in the life of the nation oc- urred, the two great days which ush- red in the seventh month seemed like made for the dispersion.

There is a bit of sophistry on either side of the argument. In the first place, the movements of history are not accidental. It is true that a casual condition often leads to lasting results. But the casual element may after all appear so to the superficial mind. Delve deeper into the sources of human activity and you will strike the bedrock of instinct. A nation is not inveigled into a course of action or a line of conduct by caprice or by cajolery. It will inevitably follow the line of least resistance and that for it is conformity to its native bent and its innermost striving. If religion took so tremendous and overpowering a hold on the Jewish soul as to submerge and to relegate to the background all the other things that a people covets, it is because the Jewish genius was preeminently religious. The Jew took the theistic conception of the world and of the human destiny with grim seriousness. Just as a Christian is thrilled at Easter, the festival of the Resurrection, by the message "Christ is risen," so is the Jew aquiver with emotion on the New Year at the acclaim "The Lord is become King." It is the day of the enthronement of the Lord, and His enthronement meant the creation of the world and the entering into a covenant with man safeguarding the world's permanence. It is the day of destiny, the day of judgment. The Jew is overwhelmed by the thought of the utter insignificance of man compared with the greatness and holiness of the Aboslute Being who is the Absolute Ideal. The poet—as legend would have it, Rabbi Amnon of Mayence—who penned that weird description of the heavenly judgment at which the angels quake and when all mankind pass in review as sheep before their shepherd, penetrated into the innermost stirrings of the Jewish soul when he on the one hand portrayed the dependence of man's destiny upon the divine decree, the unworthiness of man whose foundation is in dust and who returns unto dust, and the greatness of the One Living, Eternal God, and on the other hand brought into clear relief what Judaism means by the decree of God, how the belief in predestination is by no means akin to fatalism, how with it all human freedom and human dignity have ample scope, how repentance and prayer and righteousness set aside the evil decree. God delights not in the sinner's death; He is ready to accept him if he repent. [illegible] Jewish ethics epitomized: We shape our own characters. We are [illegible] Heredity be it in the Christ[illegible]logical sense or in the modern scientific connotation, cannot enslave us. Not blind, brute force drives us, but in us and with us and about us is a Personality with a holy will and purpose.

If the faith in the Sovereignty of God and His Providential care of the world naturally proceeds from the theistic philosophy of Judasm, there is a third article to which the Jew clings with equal tenacity. And that article is the belief in the Divine Revelation. It is here where Judiasm is more than theism. If I believe in God, in His Unity, in His Providence, I am a religious man, but I am not yet a Jew. To be a Jew you must believe that God reveals Himself. And it will at once be granted that when I say that God reveals Himself it means that God did reveal Himself on certain occasions in the past. The abstract capacity for self-revelation is of small moment, but the concrete occasions upon which the self-revelation of God was enacted are of supreme importance. It is they that make a theistic religion like Judiasm an historical religion. It is this aspect of Judaism and its true bearing that the Jew who believes that Judaism is nothing more and nothing less than a religion, a theistic philosophy and a code of ethics, is apt to forget. The unsophisticated Jew believes that God revealed Himself to Abraham and his descendants, specifically to Moses and the prophets; that God's act of revelation was at the same time an act of redemption, and that in the end of the days, at some definite period in the future, God will again reveal Himself by redeeming His people. When Israel is in bondage, God, as it were, hides His face. When Israel is free, God is manifest. In the historical conception of the experiences of the Divine on the part of the Jew the nationalistic aspect of Judaism shows itself. The proclamation of God as Sovereign (malkiyot) and of His Providential rule of the world (zikronot) marks Judaism as a redigion of a theistic nature that any believer whether Jew or Gentile may make his own. But when it comes to acknowledging the supremacy of the Jew as a vehicle of Divine self-revelation Jew and Gentile part company. Only the Jew's ear is attuned to the trumpet sound with which the first revelation was ushered in, only the Jew's ear is ready to discern the coming trumpet sound which will usher in the days of the Messiah. "Happy the people that know the shout," the shout of joy, the shout of triumph, the shout of acclaim that God, the Sovereign of the Universe, the One God, is our God. in the proclamation of God's Revelation (shofarot) the Jew becomes conscious that his is a great historical past which cannot and must not be bartered away, for the goal is yet before us and the consummation of our great destiny is yet to be. And atonement has always been conceived not merely as a boon touching the individual, but rather as cocerning Israel as a corporate body. Only a pure Israel may hope for redemption. And so the purification of the community becomes the object of the day, even as in the times when the Temple stood and the high-priest officiated the communal salvation was in the forefront of consideration.

The average Jew who is recalled to the synagogue on the two days of the year does not trouble himself with theological niceties. He knows that he is performing an act which on the civic side is called patriotism. He would not waste his time on all the abstractions of the world. His is a concrete act, one pulsating with life, transfused with deep emotion. He comes to bend his knee to the God of Israel. He re-asserts his allegiance to his people, the suffering, bleeding people. He is thrilled by the emotion of brotherhood, of the kinship of blood, of the kinship of ideals. Wheresoever those of the household of Israel are scattered, he knows they are flocking to the synagogue and renewing the covenant of old. And for him who born of a Jewish mother has straved away from the community, it is these two days that constitute the last appeal, the supreme test: if he be not found in the synagogue, then it means that the memories of childhood have been effaced, that the sentiment of kinship with the rest of his people is dead, and that he does not wish to be a Jew. Truly of these two days it is said that they are "a statute unto Israel an ordinance unto the god of Jacob." On these two days Israel musters her sons and God His faithful.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE EDUCATIONAL LEAGUE.

The annual meeting of the Educational League for the higher education of orphans was held at the Jewish Orphan Asylum, Cleveland, on July 6, 1913.

The minutes of the last annual meeting, June 30th, 1913, and of the last quarterly meeting April 13th, 1913, were approved as read.

The Secretary and the Treasurer submitted the following financial statement:

Balance on hand January 12,

Receipts to July 5th, 1913............	604.61
Total		$8,260.16
Expenditures—
To beneficiaries	$1,241.00
To administration	282.58
		$1,523.58
Balance on hand July 5th, 1913.		$6,736.58

The action of the Executive Committee in authorizing the interim appropriation of $75 for A. I. G. of Toledo, student at the Cincinnati Jewish Hospital Training School for Nurses, and of $200 for I. V. of Chicago, student at the Indiana Normal College, of Terre Haute, were formally approved.

The Secretary reported that he had prepared a special report for submission to the Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 6 I. O. B. B., such report having special reference to the number of beneficiaries in District No. 6 and of the number of contributing members in said District.

The Secretary reported that Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer of Des Moines, Iowa, Chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of D. G. L. No. 6 in co-operation with Judge Philip Stein and A. B. Seelenfreund, of Chicago, Rabbi Aaron L. Weinstein of Davenport, Iowa; Charles D. Oreckovsky of Duluth; and Sam Goldberg of Danville, Illinois, had done excellent propaganda work in behalf of the League in their respective communities.

The Secretary reported that he had written a letter to Mrs. Abram Simon, President of the Federation of Temple Sisterhoods, in convention assembled at Atlantic City, N. J., asking co-operation of the Federation with the Educational League.

The Secretary submitted a report as to all of the beneficiaries assisted by the League during the past two and a half years.

The application submitted on behalf of E. S. of Cincinnati, graduate in medicine, who requested a loan of $200 to enable him to establish himself in practice, was rejected after protracted discussion.

The application submitted on behalf of H. P. J. of Cincinnati, formerly a student at the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, and now matriculated in the junior year at Bennett Medical College, Chicago, was approved, and an appropriation of $150 for tuition for the coming school year was made, subject to investigation on the part of the Cincinnati Board and its decision as to the advisability of this student's pursuing his studies in Chicago.

The request of B. M. S. of St. Paul, graduate of the School of Mines, University of North Dakota, for permission to accept a four hundred dollar fellowship for graduate work leading to the degree of Master of Engineering, was granted.

It was reported that R. S. of Colorado Springs, Colorado, for whom an appropriation was authorized at the last annual meeting, was being assisted privately by Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Mandelbaum of Cleveland, who have undertaken to further her education and to relieve the League of all responsibility.

The President reported that D. G. L. No. 5 had embodied the League Constitution in the proceedings of its last convention, and the Secretary reported that in May of this year he had addressed D. G. L. No. 2 in convention assembled at Kansas City, Mo., upon the subject of the League.

The application of M. S., violinist of Cleveland, Ohio, was thoroughly discussed, and on motion was referred to the local board with power to continue the boy's education as they may deem advisable, and with authority to expend a sum not to exceed $150 for the period ending July 1st, 1914.

Upon motion it was resolved that a committee of three be appointed to consider the advisability of recommending the amendment of Article 2 and Article 9 of the Constitution. The President appointed upon this committee Emil Nathan, Chairman; Louis S. Levi and S. J. Kornhauser.

The President appointed the following Committee on Publicity, whose special function it shall be to provide items regarding the League for publication in the B'nai B'rith News: Emil Nathan Chairman, Harry Simon and the Secretary.

The Nominating Committee submitted recommendations as to officers and members of the Board of Governors for the ensuing year, and the following were elected:

Officers.

Martin A. Marks, President.
Emil Nathan, Vice-President.
Dr. S. Wolfenstein, Treasurer.
Alfred A. Benesch, Secretary.

Honorary Vice-Presidents.

Lucius L. Solomons, California.
Max S. Schayer, Colorado.
Simon Wolf, Dis. of Columbia.
Milton R. Hart, Illinois.
Sol S. Kiser, Indiana.
Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer, Iowa.
Morris H. Flarsheim, Kentucky.
Adolph Freund, Michigan.
Jonas Weil, Minnesota.
William Stix, Missouri.
Louis S. Levi, Ohio.
Nathan Cohn, Tennessee.

ARE THE JEWS A WARLIKE RACE?

A great sensation has been created throughout Europe by an article of Baron von Richtofen, a well-known German officer and diplomatist, which article was published in the Frankfurter Zeitung. The writer maintains, in sharp contradistinction to most of his fellow countrymen, that the Jews not only fit for military service, but that they possess great military capacities. Baron von Richtofen proves his thesis by facts from modern history as follows:

"Some of the most distinguished soldiers, whose names are recorded in the annals of France, were Jews or of Jewish origin—Marshals Soult, Ney, Massena, and others. Ney won for himself the name of 'le brave des braves' and Massena that of 'enfant de la victoire,' titles which they well deserved. Even today in France the Jews yield comparatively a greater number of soldiers to the army than the Christians.

"At the time of the Dreyfus affair, the following incident took place in Paris: A crowd of anti-Semites were holding an open-air meeting, when they noticed that a general and a colonel were approaching. To cry 'Vive l'armee!' and lift the officers on their shoulders and carry them in triumph to the end of the street was quickly done. But all of a sudden the general was recognized by some anti-Semites as General Libermann. He and the colonel were both Jews. Instead of 'Vive l'armee!' the cry at once went forth, 'A bas les Juifs!' In Italy one of the favorite leaders of the army is General Ottolenghi, who is a Jew, and besides him the Italian army possesses many other Jews who have rendered admirable service to their fatherland.

"In Germany, in the war of 1870-1871, 5,417 combatants took part, a considerable number of whom were decorated with the Iron Cross. The German Jews fulfilled their military duties with the same loyal faith and devotion as the rest. In Austria-Hungary there are comparatively double the number of Jews in the army than Christians: in the Navy, also, although it is small, there are many Jews.

"Sultan Abdul Hamid once said, that in time of war he could always safely rely on his Jewish subjects. When the war with Greece broke out in April, 1897, from all parts of Turkey Jews offered themselves for voluntary service, and this was repeated in the war against Russia in 1877. At Demokes, a division, composed entirely of Jews, offered resistance to a smaller Greek and Italian division of volunteers. The latter were beaten. At the conclusion of the war the Sultan decorated forty-two Jews with the medal for bravery which is bestowed only in rare cases.

"In the United States during the war with Spain proof was again given of the same self-sacrifice and devotion. The first volunteer who presented himself was a Jew, and the first American who fell on the field of honor was a Jew. It should be remarked that the American generals were greatly worried by the lack of drill and discipline which characterized the thousands of volunteers. Only a small regular army was fit to enter the field. Nevertheless, a regiment of cavalry and infantry was at once formed from the Jewish volunteers, and these were men who had served in Russia and Germany and had received an excellent military training. Most of them were in affluent circumstances when their adopted fatherland required their services. Colonel (afterwards President) Roosevelt spoke in highest praise of the Jews who were in his regiment of rough-riders. He mentions a Jewish sergeant who saved his life during a fight, but was unfortunately killed himself. Many hundreds of

NEWS FROM THE ORIENT

By Our Correspondent, DR. ISRAEL AUERBACH, Constantinople

It was to be anticipated that the experiences which Turkey gained concerning its Jewish element during the last disastrous war would result in stronger feelings of love for the Jews. This has really happened. The sympathy which the Jews of non-Turkish countries manifested for the Turkish cause has also conributed its share to bring about this psychological result, especially the assistance rendered by foreign Jews through their participation in the collection of funds when Turkey was endeavoring to ameliorate the terrible distress among its suffering population.

It is therefore not to be wondered at that during the last few days a veritable shower of evidences of friendship came down upon the Jews from Turkish sources. It comes from many directions, for instance, Reshid Bey, the former Governor of Jerusalem, recently published some extraordinary words of encouragement regarding Jewish immigration into Palestine; several leading politicians of the movement of the young Arabians have expressed themselves in a similar manner. But the best expression of these sentiments was given in a letter which the chief of the cabinet of the ministry of finance has written to the Chief Rabbi in his capacity as President of the Jewish Aid Commission for the war sufferers, because this Commission has subscribed fifty pounds for the starving Musulmen of Adrianople. Among other things this interesting document contains the following:

"A long time ago I learned to admire the social qualities of your race which have earned for it the high position which it occupies without mixing in quarrelsome politics, without making use of murderous weapons or furnishing its envious arch enemies with any moral or material pretext. But newer observations and personal experiences have especially convinced me how superior your race is in toleration, generosity and sympathy, and how fine is its quality of material and moral culture. The very fact that it was able to preserve itself for many centuries without taking refuge in violent means abundantly proves its force and the superiority of its civilization.

"In my capacity as Turk I consider it my special duty to bear witness to our deep gratitude for the loyalty which the Jews never cease to show to this empire and for their fidelity which they have never denied even under the most cruel conditions. . . . I would not omit to state that taken individually also the Jews stand as a shining example. We have never heard the Jew spoken of as a beggar, murderer or trouble-maker.

"We so highly esteem the firm faithfulness, the usefulness and peacefulness of the Jews that we would feel indeed sad if this element of civilization, of wealth and of progress which the Jews represent in Rumelia, were from now on to remain lost to the empire.

The pre-eminently strong initiative, perseverance, solidarity and ability, together with business honesty which have made it possible for the Jewish race, in spite of the desperate exertions of those who strove to annihilate it, to maintain itself and even to develop during all the centuries of persecution, without finding support in national government, in an armed force or any outside help—this superiority should serve in this moment as an example to many unfortunate nations which still possess a national government and a compact national mass."

This is indeed a true song of songs for the Jewish people. It seems that a psychological moment as favorable to the Jews as the present one should not be permitted to pass without taking advantage of it. Just in this same moment others, especially the Christian-Arabs, are making the greatest exertions to obtain possession of important parts of the Holy Land while the Jewish colonization in Palestine continues to suffer from land hunger. Being fully conversant with the facts we must, alas. confess that it will not be the fault of the Turkish Government alone if the Jews have to suffer an irretrievable loss by being deprived of the possibility of bringing important parts of Palestine into their possession. Today it is highly probable that the Government would yield to the wishes of the Jews and would place no obstacle in their way if it would see earnest readiness on the part of the Jewish financiers to enter into purchasing operations. Great areas of excellent land can now be bought, but no Jewish financiers can be found to make available this opportunity in the interest of our people. The more we think of the succesful experiences which the Jews gained with colonization in the Holy Land during the last decade, the more wonder and chagrin this neglect must cause us. These experiences should really encourage Jewish capital, especially when we know that the most earnest problem of the present time is how to turn away a part of the Jewish emigrating masses from their present destinations, particularly from America. It would be good for the Jews to consider that now there is a historical moment of such a favorable aspect which may not come again for a long time and they should act accordingly.

The Departure of the Refugees.

The time has arrived at last when the exile of the refugees who came to the Turkish capital from the seats of war is to be ended. In the course of one week, even before the peace agreement was signed, over 1,000 emigrants have been sent back to their houses, which are now in Bulgarian territory. This was accomplished on ships of the Austrian Lloyd, which has granted a reduction of one-half of the regular price of transportation. The Constantinople Commission has undertaken to care for the returning refugees until they reach the first Bulgarian port, which is Burgas. It also gives to those who leave a certain sum of money for expenses on the way. At Burgas they are received by a local commission, which was established there by the Jews of Sofia, and are sent ahead by rail. The Bulgarian Government lends a helping hand to the Commission by furnishing extra trains at reduced rates. But all this notwithstanding, the second transport of refugees, over 600 souls, met with great difficulties, as in the last moment, presumably on account of the Bulgarian mobilization against Greece and Servia, there was a lack of cars in Burgas, so that our emigrants were forced to camp for several days in that port city in synagogues and schools before they could continue their journey.

Since then a halt has unfortunately occurred in the return journey of our emigrants. Who knows when the 2,100 souls who still remain in Constantinople will be able to start on their homeward journey? To this is added the fear that the able bodied men who have returned home will be drafted by Bulgaria for military purposes to do service in the new Balkan war, or that perhaps in the same regions whence they had to flee before the horrors of war will break out again and will drive them to new restless wandering.

The Kindergarten "B'nai B'rith."

The projected work has now become a reality. The kindergarten in Balat, the suburb of the Turkish capital, which was called into life by the Secretary of the Order, was opened on Monday, June 26th. The idea of a celebration as it was first contemplated was abandoned at the last moment on account of the prevailing conditions here. We entered at once into the full work with the number of 170 pupils and when this fact is considered in the light of the high aim of the institution it in itself deserves to be called a celebration.

The history of the founding of this institution goes back to the time of the visit of the Secretary of the Order, Brother Seelenfreund, in Constantinople. The undersigned then drew a picture before the visitor of the thoroughly sad conditions of the school affairs in the Turkish capital and conducted him into the suffering quarters of the city, into those holes which are there called schools. Brother Seelenfreund was so shocked that he offered to help along in the establishment of a Kindergarten for the poor children of Balat by promising to raise an annual contribution of $1,000 dollars.

Immediately after the departure of Brother Seelenfreund, the undersigned secretary of the Grand Lodge for the Orient, together with Brother Dr. Markus, the representative of the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden at Constantinople, went to work to realize the idea of the visitor. They appealed to the Hilfsverein also to become a contributor to this work and received its assurance of help. Then followed the search for a suitable house, which was finally placed at our disposal for this purpose by the congregation of Balat, in the form of a vacant synagogue with the spacious ground to it. Some of the members of he congregation at first attempted to raise some opposition to the "profanation" of the sacred edifice, but the healthy sentiment of the people gained the upper hand. The still existing Aid-Commission for the fire sufferers in the suburb of Balat furnished the funds necessary for the reconstruction of the old building into school rooms and so the exterior arrangements could be completed during the winter. The Hilfsverein undertook to defray the expense of the interior arrangements.

The wife of the undersigned, who was educated in Germany, was secured as manager, and three experienced lady teachers from Palestine were engaged. The Board of Directors of the congregation organized a school committee whose duties are to fix the tuition fee, to attend to the admission of pupils and to help in the administration of the school buildings. A higher committee is composed of brethren of the Grand Lodge, whose names were published in a previous issue of the News.

The special circumstances under which the Kindergarten was founded exercised a decided influence upon the pedagogical aspect of the same. As the only school existing in the city quarter of Balat is the one maintained by the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden, in which the pupils who leave the Kindergarten continue their studies, it was understood that the Kindergarten had to come in close connection with this school. The most important consequence of this was that modern Hebrew had to be introduced into the Kindergarten as the language of instruction, for this language is the main one spoken by the children of the Hilfsverein school. It is a special characteristic of this land that the Jewish youths are not receiving primary instruction in their mother tongue; the Spanish jargon is absolutely unfit for such a purpose; also Turkish is impossible because Kindergarten teachers educated in this language do not exist. In becoming a Hebrew institution our Kindergarten followed the example set by similar institutions which have existed and worked very successfully for a long time in Palestine and Syria, also upon Turkish territory, for instance, in Salonika. The fact that the community of the city of Salonika, where the conditions are the same as in Constantinople, has upon its own initiative established several such Kindergartens patterned after the first school founded there by the Hilfverein proves clearly that just such institutions are specially adopted to the conditions prevailing here. The children who finish their courses in these schools are, of course, not deprived of instruction in the most important modern languages, which is indispensable in the Orient; they receive this instruction a few years later when their minds have become ripe for the acquirement of several languages. Special value must be placed upon the fact that instruction must here begin with the Hebrew in order that the Jewish children may be strengthened early in life with the strongest influences that can be exerted upon their minds to overcome the work of the missionaries, which is being carried on here with the greatest energy and without any scruples.

The exterior appearance of our Kindergarten is exceedingly pleasing. The rooms inside are all ample, high, full of light and airy. All hygienic demands have been provided for. The interior outfit is the most modern. It was our earnest endeavor to create a model institution which shall reflect honor upon the name of the founder and upon our worthy Order. Today and even before it was opened our institution enjoyed the highest popularity, for more than 700 children applied for admission, but unfortunately, to 170 only could this happiness be granted.

"MERCHANT OF VENICE" BARRED FROM LOS ANGELES SCHOOLS.

"The Merchant of Venice" was excluded from the Los Angeles public schools. The exclusion was ordered by the board of education's committee on courses of study, acting upon the recommendation of J. H. Francis, school superintendent. "I do not believe," said Superintendent Francis, "that 'The Merchant of Venice' correctly portrays the character of the Jew. There are many fine traits of Jewish character that are not brought out in Shakespeare's play."

The 45th annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., was held at Ottawa Beach, Mich., beginning on Monday, July 7, and lasted four days. More than ninety delegates and past grand presidents were in attendance.

The convention was honored by the presence of Mr. Adolf Kraus, President of the Order, and Dr. Ed. N. Calisch of Richmond, Va., member of the Executive Committee of the Order, who was especially delegated by the Executive Committee to represent it at the Convention. During the year the district gained 331 members, making its membership at the close of the year, 4,703. Five new lodges were instituted during the year, of which three were in Canada, and two in the United States.

Reports of the various institutions of the order, among them the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver, the B'nai Brith Free Employment Bureau in Chicago, the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital at Hot Springs, the B'nai Brith Kindergarten of Constantinople, showed useful activities in all the institutions in the matter of carrying out the purposes for which they were created.

The most important business before the convention was the consideration of the proposition to create an emergency fund, which is to be used in cases of calamity to afford urgent and immediate relief. The measure passed the convention by an almost unanimous vote and will be now submitted to the lodges for ratification. Under its plan. a uniform assessment will be levied against the members of the district, which will be turned into the special emergency trust fund.

The Grand Lodge also went on record advocating membership at large, so as to enable the residents of smaller communities where no lodge exists to join the order and be members at large.

Appropriations were made by the Grand Lodge in support of the Educational League for orphans in Cleveland, the B'nai Brith Kindergarten of Constantinople, Turkey, the B'nai Brith Free Employment Bureau in Chicago, the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., for the central B'nai Brith Councils of Chicago, Milwaukee, Omaha, St. Paul and Minneapolis, which are active in the matter of securing employment for the needy, and also are engaged in removal work.

The following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing year: President, Sylvan E. Hess, St. Paul; First Vice-President, Charles L. Aarons, Milwaukee, Wis.; Second Vice-President, Benjamin J. Samuels, Chicago; Secretary, A. B. Seelenfreund, Chicago; Treasurer, Benjamin Braun, Milwaukee; Sergeant-at-arms, Sol Levitan, Madison, Wis. Members of the General Committee—Philip Stein, Chicago; Ed. Sonnenschein, Chicago; Dr. S. N. Deinard, Minneapolis; Jacob Ely, Grand Rapids; Isaac Petersberger, Davenport; Henry M. Seligman, Chicago; Isaac H. Louis, Danville; Dr. H. I. Davis, Chicago.

During evenings, special attention was paid to intellectual advancement, and one evening was devoted to a round table discussion participated in by a large number of the delegates who discussed how best to increase the efficiency of the order in the district. The discussion was presided over by Mr. William Wilhartz. Another evening was devoted to the address delivered by Dr. Ed. N. Calisch on the subject, "Our Possibilities." Dr. Calisch handled the subject in a masterly way and his address evoked much applause at its conclusion. The remaining evening was given over to amateur theatricals and the net proceeds were turned over to the B'nai Brith Free Employment Bureau.

INSTITUTION OF SIMON WOLF LODGE.

On Sunday, June 15, 1913, Brother Arthur L. Kramer of Dallas, Texas, President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, accompanied by Rabbi Geo. Fox and U. M. Simon of Ft. Worth, members of the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge, visited Ardmore, Okla., and instituted Simon Wolf Lodge No. 742 in that city.

A JEW IN THE DANISH CABINET.

In the new Danish cabinet the portfolio of finance has been given to M. Edward Brandes. He is a brother of Dr. George Brandes, the distinguished literateur.

Jewish Orphan Asylum, Cleveland, O.

ANNUAL MEETING

25th Anniversary of Alumni Association

Pursuant to official notice, the fourth quarterly meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Jewish Orphan Asylum, Cleveland, O., was held on Sunday, July 6, 1913, at the Asylum in Cleveland.

In opening the meeting the President welcomed all present, mentioning especially Director Harry Simon, who had been elected the President of District Grand Lodge, No. 2, I. O. B. B. and who expressed his thanks and appreciation for the welcome extended to him.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as read.

The Secretary read the minutes of all meetings held by the Local Board during the last three months—the same were upon motion approved, as read.

The quarterly report of the Superintendent was then read and accepted and the recommendation contained therein relating to engagement of teachers and assistants as concurred in.

The quarterly reports of the Finance Officers were read and accepted. The Standing Committees submitted their quarterly reports, which were accepted.

A letter was read from the Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 2, I. O. B. B. informing the Board that the amendment to the General Laws as offered was ratified, that the proposed amendment in reference to subvention of widows was not concurred in and that Trustee Kaufman Hays had been re-elected.

Trustee Philip Stein—as Chairman of the Committee appointed at the last meeting—submitted in behalf of this Committee the following report:

Your Committee to whom was referred the passage in the last report of our Superintendent setting forth the necessity in his opinion of an early removal of the Asylum to a locality better fitted than the present one to rear and prepare our wards for the tasks of life, beg leave to report that they have carefully and maturely considered the subject, and that while they fully recognize the serious conditions, which confront the Superintendent and render it much more difficult for him and his force to perform their duties, they are of the opinion, that on account of existing economic and financial conditions, they at present regard the proposition to remove the institution as inexpedient and inadvisable.

The report was received and upon motion adopted.

The Superintendent submitted to the Board the list of girls and boys to be discharged, the same was acted upon and all recommendations of the Superintendent were approved of.

The Secretary submitted to the board all applications for admission of orphans filed since the last meeting.

Forty-Fifth Annual Meeting:

The 45th annual meeting of the Board of Trustees and Directors was duly opened immediately after the close of the busines of the quarterly meeting.

The President read his annual report—the same was received and made a part of the proceedings to be printed.

The Superintendent read his annual report—the same was acted upon in like manner. The annual report of the physician was read and accepted.

Director M. A. Marks submitted to the Board the bonds to be executed by the officers of the Institution, as required by the new laws, which became operative having been approved of by the Grand Lodges.

The committee appointed to canvass the vote in the biennial election of twenty-five Directors, submitted their report, giving their finding as follows:

1 Martin A. Marks, Cleveland. 9169.
2 Milton R. Hart, Chicago, 9056.
3 Emil Joseph, Cleveland, 9033.
4 Abraham Wiener, Cleveland, 9010.
5 Fred Lazarus, Columbus, 8998.
6 Charles Stix, St. Louis, 8896.
7 Sol S. Kiser, Indianapolis, 8845.
8 Manuel Halle, Cleveland, 8565.
9 Abraham Bloch, Cincinnati, 8470.
10 Morris H. Lempert, Toledo, 8364.
11 W. J. Freiberg, Cincinnati, 8312.
12 William Wolfner, Peoria, 8205
13 Samuel W. Trost, Cincinnati, 8177.

19 W. Friedlander, Cincinnati, 7695.
20 Edward Sachs, Louisville, 7646.
21 Aaron Waldheim, St. Louis, 7447.
22 H. T. Schloss, Terre Haute, 7327.
23 Louis S. Loeb, Duluth, 6482
24 S. D. Mayer, Lincoln, Neb., 6365.
Hillel Unterberg, St. Louis, 5416.
[illegible]udenthal, Trinidad, 5358.
B. Heinemann, Wausau, Wis., 5188.
Joseph Hart, Grand Rapids, 5184.
B. A. Lange, Springfield, Ill., 4400.
B. B. Woolfe, Leavenworth, Kan., 3138.
Moses Levy, Springfield, Mo., 2924.
William Wolff, Racine, Wis., 2592.

The President declared the 25 who received the highest vote, duly elected as Directors and the Secretary was instructed to notify them, accordingly.

Trustee Philip Stein then offered the following resolution:

Whereas under the laws of District Grand Lodge No. 6, its annual meetings must be held on the first Monday of July, which makes it difficult and sometimes a hardship for members of the Board, who hail from that district to attend the annual meetings of this Board if they continue to be held on the first Sunday of July, now, therefore, be it resolved that our Superintendent be requested hereafter to make such arrangements relating to the time of holding the annual exercises as to avoid any conflict with the meetings of District Grand Lodge No. 6.

Upon motion, the resolution was laid over for action to the next meeting of this Board.

The Board then went into election of officers, which resulted as follows:

Louis S. Levi, President; Philip Stein, Vice President; Kaufman Hays, Treasurer; S. Wolfenstein, Recording Secretary.

Miss A. Buchmann was elected as Financial Secretary and Dr. S. Wolfenstein was elected as Superintendent.

The meeting then adjourned. All the members of the Board present then assembled in the children's dining room to be the guests of the Alumni Association at a dinner, given in commemoration of the 25th anniversary since the Association was founded.

At the close of the dinner, at which Rabbi Meyer Lovitch of class 1897 presided, the President, Louis S. Levi, and Trustees Jacob Furth and Adolp Freund were called upon to respond to toasts.

Address by Dr. E. N. Calisch.

Though it may seem commonplace for me to give any expression to the love and loyalty or the grateful appreciation which we, the children of this Home, feel toward it, yet we must recognize that this expression of our emotions, when honestly and sincerely made, can not be made too often, even as lovers, assured of their common affection, yet rejoice in the spoken reiteration of it. To me at this place and at this time this expression is both appropriate and becoming. It is as the olden writer said, like "apples of gold in pictures of silver is a word spoken in its season."

It is the custom of college students when speaking of the institution where they receive their intellectual training, to call it their Alma Mater. I believe there is no institution in the world that can be more deservedly or more truly spoken of as a kindly, cherishing mother than this Home here in Cleveland. It has been literally a home to all of us, taking care of body, mind and soul. It has sheltered us, fed us, clothed us, has trained the mind, educated the heart and molded the character for us. This institution is sui generis. It is known as such among those who are at all interested in philanthropic work. It is known as such in the archives of the United States Government where its unique and peerless record has aroused official and governmental commendation. Yet this institution is only what it has been made by the man whose thirty-fifth anniversary we celebrate coincidentally with the forty-fifth anniversary of the institution. Emerson said that an "institution is but the lengthened shadow of a man." Here instead of using the word shadow, I would use light. I would say that the career and the usefulness of this Home are but the far-reaching beams of a radiance of such nobility of character, such sweetness of disposition, such self-surrender and self-denial, that one thinks that Dr. Wolfenstein should rather have been named Moses than Samuel. Yet one might say that his naming is correct, for his whole life has been but a realization of the ideal pictured by Sir Joshua Reynolds in his portrayal of the child Samuel. There is in that countenance such serene confidence, such loving faith and heavenly trust, that one almost involuntarily hears the words, "speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth."

To me was granted an especial opportunity of knowing and realizing the depths of the beauty and nobility of this character. It was my privilege to return to Cleveland after I had left, during the vacation season. I was with him in the hours of agony and sorrow when the angel of death entered into his family circle. The calm courage, serene trust, the unfading faith that he then exhibited made an impression upon me that has clung to me during all these years. When I, too, was called upon to go down into the valley of the shadow, I was sustained and comforted by the rod and staff that, all unconsciously, perhaps, he had put into my hands when I was but a lad. I know, too, that this influence has been felt by others throughout the length and breadth of the land, till his whole life has been as a beacon light, sending its saving gleams across the waters to hundreds of lives that were thereby guided to paths of safety, honor and happiness.

It is not possible for lips to frame an adequate expression of the affectionate gratitude, the loyal love and the profound sense of admiration and reverence which is in the breasts of all of us. Speaking for myself, and I feel that I may speak for all the alumni, I can simply say that we thank you, and we pray that our conduct may in some measure requite you with happiness and with peace for what you have done for us, and that through us the years of your life, which under God may yet be many, may be filled with a calm content and with that perfect peace which comes from a knowledge of work well done.

As for the Association of the Alumni, which is the last and youngest of this triumvirate of celebrants, I feel that it is an especial honor to represent it. As far as I know we may claim credit of being the First Alumnal Association of a Jewish Orphan Asylum, or for that matter of any denomination. It is not for the sake of vanity, but with a feeling of profound and reverent pride that I recall my humble part in the organization of it and the honor that I had in being its first president. As Thomas Jefferson, from out of the many things and great honors that he had achieved, chose three things only as his epitaph upon which his fame might rest, and among them the fact that he was the founder of the University of Virginia, so may I, without presuming to place myself in the class with Thomas Jefferson, yet patterning after him, say, that in whatever else I may have achieved, I find no greater pleasure than in my identification with the founding of this Association. Any child that goes forth out of this Cleveland Home and becomes and remains a member of the Alumnal Association, displays at once his sense of gratitude and appreciation, and an evidence of strength of character. There are unfortunately some who have tried to conceal the fact and others who do not care to have mentioned the fact of their training here. I care not what positions these may attain in their several communities, nor what honors or worldly success they may achieve, when they fail in the posession or expression of this sense of grateful appreciation. they are lacking in one of the first essentials of honor and of character. But those who are loyal members of this Association can feel with a thrill of pride that, rather than demeaning themselves, they are manifesting one of the finest attributes of human character and human life. May this Silver Jublilee Celebration be but the forerunner of others yet to come that shall increase in numbers and strength, in power, prestige and possession, till the day shall come when this Home shall be supported entirely and exclusively by its Alumni, and to be a member thereot will be a thing of greater pride than was to have been a Roman citizen in the days of Rome's highest imperial power."

At the close of the dinner, at which Rabbi Meyer Lovitch of class 1897 presided, the President, Louis S. Levi, and Trustees Jacob Furth and Adolph Freund were called upon to respond to toasts.

A few remarks of the Superintendent closed the memorable occasion.

Discrimination Against Citizens That Are Jews

It is an Outrage Upon Republican Government. It Could Easily Be Stopped in Hotels at Least

A man whose name need not be published—although he does not request that it be omitted—an able architect, a useful and honorable business man, sends to this newspaper proof that a certain institution known as the Fort William Henry Hotel at Lake George, N. Y., discriminates against citizens because they are Jews and refuses to give them accommodations.

We have called attention to conduct of this kind before on the part of hotels at Atlantic City and elsewhere.

In the case of this particular Lake George hotel we regret to print the hotel's name.

We find it desirable, as a rule, to forego mentioning the names of minor hotels and boarding houses that reject Jews, because advertising their improper, illegal and un-American conduct is exactly what they want—since it calls them to the favorable attention of a certain middle class, half-successful, very jealous, cheap set of American citizens who are responsible for the anti-Jewish sentiment.

We use this unimportant little hotel at Lake George simply as a text for a suggestion to the Legislatures of the different states.

The suggestion is that any hotel that shall be shown to have discriminated against a citizen because of his religion, or because of any other objection not recognized by the law or by the Constitution of the United States, shall forfeit its license and its right to do business and be subject to a civil suit for damages.

We have, and we presume that the gentleman who writes us has no especial desire to punish or hold up to contempt this particular, unimportant little Fort William Henry Hotel.

It simply represents somebody's pitiful effort to make money. The letters that it sends out insulting respectable citizens are sent by some unfortunate clerk who makes a living by writing the letters.

The customers of this hotel include many of the half-successful middle class, prejudiced, underbred individuals that share the prejudice against the Jewish people, but a beginning must be made somewhere, and it would not be a bad idea if the man who writes to us should begin with a lawsuit against this particular hotel which has convicted itself of discrimination that is illegal.

Owners of hotels, of private schools and others that insult Jewish people in their efforts to toady to stupid customers, ought to realize what this country and all of its enterprises owe to the energy and ability of the Jewish people.

The man who makes his hotel a success makes it a success very largely because of the part that the Jewish people, with their extraordinary ability, their capacity to build up industry and commerce, have played in the success of this nation.

Men of the Jewish race have done at least as much as any other nationality, as much as the adherents of any other religious faith, to increase the prosperity of this nation, to develop its resources to the full.

Members of Legislatures and the citizens generally, expressing themselves through laws, should make discrimination a penal offense, if that can be done legally, and in any case an offense subject to heavy financial damages, forfeiting the right to conduct a hotel and obtain a license.

Incidentally, Jewish citizens themselves should take up this matter and do it energetically. If they would bestir themselves as they should do, bringing about the right kind of legislation and making the necessary kind of test cases, they would soon impress upon the feeble minds that manage second-rate hotels and upon the middle-class failures that patronize such hotels that it is not safe to bid for second-rate patronage by insulting a large and respectable class of citizens.

Let the Jewish voters ask themselves what they think would happen if a great number of hotels should suddenly begin refusing to receive Catholics on the ground that they didn't like their religion. It is not difficult to imagine what kind of agitation that would cause or what kind of legislation it would cause.

This newspaper has given repeated publicity and repeated rebuke to those that are guilty of race and religious discrimination. Jewish citizens should take up the matter and put an end to it.

(Chicago Evening American.)

COMMENT

A GENTILE DEFENSE OF THE JEW.

A reply appears from the pen of a Christian clergyman to the charges made in certain quarters against the Jew of racial and moral deterioration, especially in the light of recent infamous criminal cases that have confronted the people of New York. The annals of crime show a considerable proportion of Jewish names, and the Jewish press have deplored this fact, but this writer takes a hopeful view and sees "no indication that these people are in a state of moral and racial degeneracy." He even "rejoices to know that no race can live under the black shadow of the world's contempt and calumny and not develop the worse feature of its character." The writer is the Rev. John Snyder, who avows in The Christian Register, the Unitarian weekly of Boston, that while he has no intention of "idealizing the Jew" he is determined at the same time to consider him without prejudice. Of all the Russian Jews in New York, he tells us, thousands, "carry the fresh memory of the shameful atrocities to which their race has been subjected" in Russia saying that "God Almighty fixes the price of every crime mankind commits," finds New York in such crimes as can be charged against the Jew to be "paying the price of Russia's infamy." What is more, we are informed, "the very virtues of despotism are turned to vices in the atmosphere of freedom," and the author asks:

"Is the east side insolent and socially aggressive? It is the natural reaction from social depression. Does he lie and cheat? Those are the readiest weapons of a slave's protection. Is he gluttonous for money and sometimes careless how he obtains it? For centuries he has been systematically robbed. Yes, but men say, now in this land all his rights are protected. He may sometimes be socially ostracized, but politically he has absolute privileges, and he ought to show his appreciation of the liberty he enjoys. True, but freedom opens the door to vice as well as virtue; and character, like confidence, is a plant of slow growth."

Proceeding the Christian writer points out that "he is no wise friend of the Jew who seeks to obscure his defects and shortcomings" and he himself would rather emphasize them as "the condemnation of his oppressors and detractors, and yet he admits the seriousness and magnitude of the Jewish problem in New York as "one requiring infinite wisdom and patience." Many of them are grossly materialistic in their theory and practice of life," and many of the more cultivated among them, "in rending away the cruder superstitions that encrusted their faith, have seen the higher spirit of that faith escape through the fissures." Nevertheless, we read, it is a mistake to try to remedy all this by social ostracism:

"The chief danger to be feared in the attempted solution of this problem will be founded in a policy of social segregation. Build an invisible Ghetto about their colony, make them feel that they are surrounded by enemies, and you help create a system of caste ethics immeasurably more dangerous than sporadic crime. To the undeveloped morals, which characterize, as yet, all classes and conditions of our American life, he adds an intellectual keenness and fertility which makes him the more dangerous rascal as it may make him the more valuable citizen. His children are making marvelous progress in the public schools; but if they are to grow up in an atmosphere and environment of social antagonism and distrust, their knowledge may be almost more dangerous than their ignorance."

We may as well abandon the idea, first as last, continues the writer, of making them Christians in "the theological sense of the word" as the race gave the world Christianity "in its purest and most spiritual form" and they are not likely to take it back "alloyed with the amalgam of Grecian speculation and Roman Imperialism." Finally, we read:

"The Jew has come to this land to stay. We ought to have the wisdom to thank God for it. We may well share the noble vision of Zangwill's noble dreamer, that into the 'melting-pot' of our secular American life that race will fuse with the nations. "The pride and the prejudices, the dreams and the sacrifices, the traditions and the superstitions, the fasts and the feasts, things noble and things sordid—they must all into the crucible!' "—Literary Digest.

AMERICAN JEWS IN RUSSIA.

In spite of Secretary Bryan's evasive statement, there is reason to believe that Presidnt Wilson has intimatd unwillingness to renew the commercial treaty with Russia unless that country concedes the right of American Jews to reenter Russia without restriction. In his statement of Tuesday Secretary Bryan neither affirmed nor denied the report from St. Ptersburg, leaving opportunity for the surmise that representations had been made to Russia.

Russia's treatment of Russian Jews may not be an American issue, except as it is civilization's issue. But the American citizen, whether he be Jew or Gentile, should have the assured rights of an American citizen. America recognizes no class. Why should America enter into an agreement with Russia, tacitly consenting to Russia's class distinction detrimental to a large number of Americans?

Russia wishes American Jews to keep out of Russia, or if they return to submit to onerous restrictions. America should not consent that any American citizen be denied full rights and privileges of all American citizens at home or abroad. Commercial treaties are negotiated for the benefit of all citizens. America should recognize no class restriction against any portion of her people.

President Wilson's advocacy of human rights at all times and places confirms the St. Petersburg dispatch that he proposes to secure American Jews their rights in Russia before another commercial treaty is signed.—Portland (Oreg.) Journal.

NOT A JEWISH QUESTION.

All the reasons Mme. Carriere gives as to why the Russian nobility has found it necessary to enact discriminative laws against the Jews, which she so freely admits are a "confession of weakness," are apart from the passtport question. American Jewish citizens, or at least those who intend remaining American citizens, are not concerned in the land-owning laws of Russia except as students of the world-wide movement of the brotherhood of man. The demand in this country for the abrogation of the Russian treaty did not arise by virtue of the fact that the Jews in Russia could not legally own land or live in certain cities unless willing to pay the Russian Government an annual tax of $510 for the special privileges granted. The abrogation of the treaty was the outgrowth of an insistent demand on the part of American Jewish citizens that they be accorded the same passport privileges in traveling through Russia that any other American citizen was granted.

The question at issue so far as the American people are concerned is one solely affecting the international relation between American citizens and the Russian Government, not one between Russian Jewish subjects and their Government.

If the condition expressed in Mme. Carriere's closing paragraph to the effect that American Jews are permitted to enter Russia, though they may stay only a limited time in St. Petersburg and other northern capitals, carries with it the implication that there is no section in the Russian Empire which an American Jewish citizen carrying an American passport cannot visit, there has evidently been a change of heart, inasmuch as this spirit did not exist prior to the abrogation of the treaty.—New York Times.

RUSSIA MUST ADMIT JEWS.

If the St. Petersburg news of the London Standard is to be accepted without qualification, the Washington Administration has notified Russia that no new treaty will be signed by the United States that does not specifically provide for the fair treatment of Jews who are American citizens, when they have occasion to enter the borders of the Russian Empire. In other words, to maintain treaty relations with this country, Russia must admit Jews. If she refuses, she is responsible for the consequences.

No formal statement of this note to Russia has been given out in Washington, but the alleged tenor of the communication will surprise no one. The United States can not permit any foreign power to discriminate on race or religious lines in granting American citizens what they are entitled to by treaty. Americans are Americans.

In this matter, also, there are involved some considerations of human rights distinct from the treatment of American Jews in Russia. For the past three years Jews in America have been protesting vigorously against the use of our immigration laws to send back to the Czar's domains men, commonly of Jewish stock, who have incurred the Government's anger as revolutionists or as sympathizers with the struggle for freedom. In this the men who think, the men who realize the importance of the right of asylum to political exiles, have been as energetic as the race agitators in their protests. They will be glad if our relations with Russia are put on such a basis that no department of our government will feel called upon to play sleuth for a despotism against patriots who have escaped from that despotism's clutches.

Incidentally it may be said that several American interests exporting goods to Russia will suffer from probable retaliation. Pocketbook diplomacy would dictate compromise. There is not much of pocketbook diplomacy about the Wilson Administration.—Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle.

COMPROMISE HARDLY POSSIBLE.

No logical escape from the impasse between Russia and the United States has yet been suggested, for in the nature of the case compromise is hardly possible. The United States cannot be expected to "save face" by restricting the right of its citizens to go to Russia in return for the withdrawal of invidious distinctions. On the other hand, Russia cannot be expected to make an exception in favor of Jews from the United States so long as she bars Jews from European countries, including her allies, France and England. Russia has a definite policy on the race question meant to insure the supremacy of the Slavs who now constitute about 100 million out of the 165 million people of the empire. With respect to the inferior races it is a very good policy on the whole; with respect to the Jews it is a savage and inhuman policy precisely because the Jews are not an inferior race. Russia may be foolish as well as unjust in wishing to get rid of them and in refusing entry to those outside, but it concerns us only as they happen to be American citizens, and it is hard to see how either side can yield without a total reversal of policy. Fortunately there is no reason why the two countries should not get on together indefinitely without a renewal of commercial treaty relations.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

PRESIDENT CANNOT COMPROMISE.

The report that the making of a new treaty with Russia hangs upon the question of awarding to American citizens that are Jews the same privileges that are awarded to other American citizens traveling there, is a matter of regret. President Wilson could not but reject a suggestion of a treaty that would discriminate against any class of citizens, as he is reported to have done. It is not a question upon which there can be any quibbling. Some men familiar with history may find reason for harshly criticising the conduct of representatives of certain races, but the basic principles of American institutions is the equality before the law of all citizens, irrespective of religious belief or of race extraction. President Taft took the proper course in this matter, and in the house of representatives he received efficient support from the then congressman but now Governor Sulzer. President Wilson must follow in the same way.

At the same time there is no reason for minimizing the great advantage that a commercial treaty with Russia would give to this country. There is no country in the world whose friendship is more valuable to us, as long as we retain our Far Eastern possessions, than is the friendship of Russia. If she moves a few thousand troops on her eastern border she can put a quick ending to any dream of the Japs concerning the Philippines and it never should be forgotten how great a friend Russia was to our country during the war of the Rebellion. It was believed by some that Russia would eventually yield on the question of treating Jews as other American citizens. The claim has been made that passports are a matter of police regulation simply, but this country can in no way be a party to any governmental discrimination, either direct or indirect, against any of her citizens who are traveling in other lands.—Terre Haute (Ind.) Star.

RUSSIA MUST RECEDE.

Russia would like to have a new treaty of trade and commerce with the United States, and that desire is reciprocated. But until Russia recedes from her position on the Jew question, no new treaty is likely to be negotiated. President Wilson is reported to have notified the Russian government that his administration would be willing to enter into a new treaty only upon condition that American citizens, including Jews, be "freely admitted" to Russia. No admittance for American Jews, no treaty, appears to be the Wilson ultimatum.—Norwich (Conn.) Record.

REBUKING THE RUSSIANS.

Russia has requested this country to renew the treaty of commerce, recently abrogated owing to her persistent violation of its provisions. President Wilson has declined to consider a renewal except on the absolute understanding that American Jews be allowed to enter Russia freely on the same terms accorded to citizens of other countries. If Russia agrees to this she can have another treaty.

The President is right. He will be applauded for his firm stand. Russia feels the pinch that followed the repeal of the old treaty. Her commerce has fallen off; she is paying the penalty for her barbarous treatment of the American Jews. She wants to enjoy the benefits of commercial relations, but a promise must be exacted from her that she shall treat all Americans alike, Jews included.

If Russia is not too hide-bound to meet this requirement the treaty will be renewed, but she must prove her sincerity. The record of more than half a century of insult and outrage rises before her and justifies the American policy. The Jew must be treated the same, if he carries an American passport.

Americans would welcome a treaty with Russia, for the commercial advantages are just as advantageous to us as to that country. The renewal of the treaty depends on the country that made its repeal necessary. If Russia can prove herself deserving there will be no hesitancy on the part of the United States.—Pittsburg (Pa.) Post.

INSULTING JEWS.

The allegation that the Jew makes the dollar bill his flag and that he will lend himself to criminal deeds to make money, is, of course, absolutely and unqualifiedly false.

Merely because the Jew comes to America from a far away country and usually makes a success of his business ventures here because he attends strictly to business, is no indication that he thinks more of money than a down East Yankee, an Irishman, a German or a member of any other race.

We must give the Jew credit for prying loose success where many other men have failed. Through the solemn heritage of generations of persecution, there has been bred in the Jew a fixity of purpose and a courage in the face of almost insuperable obstacles, that equip him with a rare business ability that makes for a high measure of success.

In addition to being a successful business man, the intelligent and educated Jew of today is endowed with many other excellent qualities that make good citizens. He is an idealist. He is a philanthropist. No man has a deeper love and reverence for home and family than the Jew.

In view of all these provable facts, it ill behooves us to go out of our way to insult the Jews. We feel certain that the city authorities of Fitchburg will not permit any such outrage.

THE BEST NEW YORKERS

Frank Moss, District Attorney Whitman's efficient lieutenant, does not side with those who never refer to the immigrant except with the use of the word "scum" or the word "horde." He told the Luzerne county (Pa.) association at its dinner in New York that the most helpful influence for good in New York City at present is from the district east of the Bowery. These people, he contends, are more susceptible to public morals than any other folks in the American metropolis.

This verdict, taken together with the fact that a half-dozen babies of East Side parents have been found to be physically perfect, as large a proportion out of all who competed as would be found on Fifth Avenue, should console those who fear that every ship that comes to New York harbor with its steerage filled is adding a new burden to American civilization.—Syracuse Post-Standard.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

INSTITUTION OF TACOMA LODGE.

President I. M. Golden and Secretary I. J. Aschheim of District Grand Lodge No. 4 on June 16th were accompanied by a large delegation to Tacoma, Wash., to institute Tacoma Lodge No. 741, which was the feature of the trip of the Grand Lodge officers to the Pacific Northwest. The organization of Tacoma lodge is due to the work of Herbert A. Schoenfeld, President of Rainier Lodge No. 627 of Seattle, through whose efforts interest was created among Tacoma Jewish representative men, a charter was secured and a preliminary organization effected prior to the arrival of the Grand Lodge officers. Previous to this time there had not been a B'nai B'rith lodge in Tacoma for about twenty years. Several attempts had been made by individuals and Grand Lodge officers but were unsuccessful. President Schoenfeld of Rainier Lodge determined to have Tacoma represented in the District with a good, strong sister lodge in order to do its share in the constructive and progressive work outlined by Rainier Lodge for the betterment and development of the Pacific Northwestern Jewish communities through a closer and more intimate relationship, thus inspiring a better Jewish social spirit. The officers-elect of Tacoma Lodge gave a dinner to the Grand Officers and the visiting delegation from Rainier Lodge after which the lodge was instituted by the Grand Officers assisted by members of the order from Seattle. The occasion of the institution of Tacoma lodge was an important event in Jewish circles in that splendid city signalizing an epoch in Jewish advancement which could not possibly be brought about through any other medium. The lodge starts with a charter membership of seventy-four, which is truly a remarkable showing, with the promise of an increase to one hundred within the next two months. The officers of the new lodge have been wisely chosen; they are a representative type of Jewish manhood, are enthusiastic in their work, and determined to maintain the splendid showing made.

After the institution of the lodge a grand ball was held in the ballroom of the Tacoma hotel which furnished a pleasant climax to an event destined to be long remembered in B'nai B'rith circles in the Pacific Northwest. The Grand Lodge officers departed for Portland enthusiastic in their praise of the wonderful work accomplished and with bright anticipations of the continued development of the splendid, substantial lodges in the Northwestern part of District No. 4.

KANSAS CITY LODGE NO. 184.

The members of Kansas City Lodge No. 184 of Kansas City, Mo., are justly proud of the activity of the lodge. During the past year 42 active men were added to its membership. The members are proud not only of the material increase in the numerical strength of the lodge, but more so because of the interest shown in the work by its members. Interest in the work is fostered by monthly cultural meetings, at which educational subjects are discussed, with the only restriction that all subjects must have some bearing on things Jewish.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Adullam Lodge No. 326 of Pittsfield, Mass., initiated a class of candidates at a meeting held on June 22. 1913. The degree team of Springfield Lodge of Springfield, Mass., assisted in the initiatory work. The President of the District, Rabbi Jos. Silverman, accompanied by the Vice-President, Brother Herman Asher and about 30 members of the Springfield and Holyoke lodges, visited the lodge on this occasion. In the evening a banquet was served at the Wendell Hotel, at which good cheer and fellowship was maintained throughout. Brother Leo Sander, president of Adullam Lodge, acted as toastmaster Mayor P J Moore opened with an address on "Toleration" and was followed by many of the visitors. The speech making was concluded by Rabbi Jos Silverman, President of the District Grand Lodge, who delivered an eloquent address on the origin of the Order, its growth, its workings all over the world, the duties of its members, and the great problems to be solved.

INSTITUTION OF B. B. LODGE AT TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

Tuscaloosa Lodge No. 740 was instituted in Tuscaloosa, Ala., Sunday, June 29. Past Grand President Leon Schwarz of Mobile and Louis J. Adler, the President of Uniontown (Ala.) lodge were the installing officers, representing the District Grand Lodge. The new lodge begins with a membership of about thirty, and selected the following as its first set of officers:

Monitor, L. Rothschild; President, I. Green; Vice-President, M. Bandas; Treasurer, A. Holezstein; Secretary, Isidore Sperling; Warden, Lee Black; Assistant Warden, Victor Friedman; Guardian, Chas. Temerson; Trustees, M. Gordon, L. Philipson, Max Berkowitz.

The lodge was instituted and installed in the morning, and at the evening ceremonies the Temple was filled with members and their families to hear the principles of the B'nai B'rith expounded by Messrs. Adler and Schwarz.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

The visit of the Grand Lodge officers, President I. M. Golden and Secretary I. J. Aschheim of District Grand Lodge No. 4, to B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421 of Salt Lake City was a memorable occasion. A special committee of the lodge was empowered to make the necessary arrangements for the comfort and pleasure of the visitors. The committee met them at the depot and escorted them to the hotel.

A reecption and dance was given at the B'nai B'rith building on Monday evening, June 2, 1913, in honor of the visiting officers. On Tuesday evening a class of six candidates, all university students, was initiated at a regular meeting of the lodge, the Grand Lodge officers officiating. After the initiation interesting talks were given by President Golden and Secretary Aschheim for the good of the Order.

The following day was spent in viewing points of interest about the city, and on Wednesday a committee entertained the visitors with an automobile ride and visit through the grounds of the Mormon Temple and an organ recital at the tabernacle. A luncheon, a visit about town and to the principal clubs, and a trip to "Salt Air," where the party all enjoyed a dip in the great salt lake, concluded the series of entertainments.

DANBURY, CONN.

About twenty-five of the officers and members of Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., accompanied its crack Degree Team to Danbury, June 15th, where they had been invited through District Deputy Charles H. Shapiro to initiate a class of candidates into Friendship Lodge.

The journey was made in several automobiles, which were kindly offered by its members for that purpose.

A large number of the members of Friendship Lodge were present on the occasion of this initiation and addresses were made by Brother Isaac Moss, President: Brother Maximilian Stein, Vice-President; Brother Henry Harris, who wrote a poem in honor of the occasion; and Brother Joseph G. Shapiro, Chairman of the Degree Team of Harmony Lodge, also by President Morris Meyers, Brother Pollak, Vice-President, Brother Nathan Spiro, Monitor, and Brother E. Stone, Treasurer of Friendship Lodge. An informal luncheon was served at the conclusion of the meeting.

The ladies of the members of Friendship Lodge very kindly assisted in entertaining the visiting brethren, who returned to Bridgeport in the evening, deeply appreciative of the hospitality of Friendship Lodge.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

On Monday evening, July 28th, Unity Lodge No. 273 of San Francisco entertained its members and their friends by a moving picture of the Panama Canal and the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, explained by Mr. Louis Levy, director of publicity for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. Mr. Levy took the audience through the canal into the great Fair as it will be in 1915. The public was invited.

MOBILE, ALA.

What is probably the youngest set of officers ever placed at the head of Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 of Mobile, Ala., was elected at the last semi-annual election and installation meeting on July 6, 1913.

The election drew a large portion of the membership to the meeting.

After the transaction of much important business, the retiring president, Mr. Isaac Lichtbach, made his final report, which, showing that the Lodge had made much progress during his administration, was received with cordial approbation by the members.

The new officers were installed by Past President Leon Schwarz, who impressively charged them with the honor and responsibility attached to office holding in the B'nai Brith. He was followed by the Presidents of the two Jewish Congregations—Mr. Henry Hess of the Reform and Mr. Meyer Jacoby of the Orthodox, both pledging their assistance to the new B'nai Brith officers.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.

There was a large attendance at the meeting of Lasker Lodge No. 370 of San Diego, Cal., Monday evening, July 7, 1913. Two applications for membership were presented. After disposal of the business a social session was enjoyed. Corn cob pipes were passed around and the best of tobacco smoked. Instrumental and vocal musical selections were rendered by Dr. Joseph Weinberger, Attorneys A. Rosenthal and M. Binnard, and by Nathan Baranow and M. Pudlin. Sumptuous refreshments were served and everybody had a good time.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Arrangements are being made for the annual reunion and outing to be held under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty of the local B'nai B'rith lodges, Sunday, September 14, at East Shore Park, in Contra Costa county. Various sub-committees have been completing the program and are providing entertainment for all those who attend.

There will be athletic events, games and other forms of amusement. A feature of the day will be a baseball game between a picked team representing the ten local lodges and a team from Oakland Lodge. A trophy cup, donated by Professor S. E. Welfield, gymnasium instructor of the local lodges, will be presented the winning team.

In the afternoon dancing will be enjoyed in the spacious pavilion on the picnic grounds.

OAKLAND, CAL.

One hundred members of Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal., were present at a "get-together" banquet held at Barnum's Restaurant on the evening of June 26th. The speakers were Milton Schwartz, toastmaster; Dr. M. Friedlander, B. Silverstein, A. Jonas, A. Simonds, Judge George Samuels. The subject of the evening was the need of a new home for the lodge. The members became so enthused that the sum of $2,000 was pledged outright and the further sum of $3,000 when the lot for the new home has been purchased. The building committee will begin immediately to look for a location.

PINE BLUFF, ARK.

As an evidence of the splendid work being done throughout District No. 7 and in support of the popular propaganda by the local lodges in their surrounding communities, Phoenix No. 279 of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, on July 29th, inaugurated a campaign under the leadership of President William Rosenzweig and Secretary L. Rutstein, assisted by other members of Phoenix Lodge, which resulted in the initiation of fourteen new members.

The towns visited at which candidates were initiated were as follows: Eudora, Ark., Dermott, Ark., Arkansas City, Ark., Lake Village, Ark., Stutgart, Ark., Altheimer, Ark.

Several new members were also initiated from Pine Bluff, the home of Phoenix Lodge.

MISSOURI LODGE EXCURSION.

Missouri Lodge No. 22 I. O. B. B., of St. Louis, held an excursion in honor of its newly elected officers and also in honor of the newly elected President of the District on Aug. 10, 1913. The steamer "Belle of the Bends" was chartered for the occasion and over 700 members and friends of the B'nai B'rith were present. The members of Ebn Ezra Lodge were specially invited and turned out in large numbers. The dance floor was the center of attraction, while the older members and their wives enjoyed the cool breeze of the Mississippi on the upper deck. The affair was a most enjoyable one and everybody expressed themselves as having had a most delightful time.

The membership committee was busy that evening and a large number of new members were acquired. The committee in charge of the affair were Louis D. Steiner, chairman; Isadore Glueck and Ben L. Shifrin.

The coming administration has announced it as its policy to have monthly social gatherings where the members and their ladies can meet, and the excursion was only one of the many enjoyable affairs to follow and for which preparations are already being made. A dance is in prospect for October and a fitting affair for November when B'nai B'rith Day will be celebrated.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The Joint Committee of the New Orleans Lodges held an important meeting in July at which measures for the ensuing fall's activities were discussed and primary arrangements made for their execution.

It was resolved to appoint a committee on propaganda work to work in conjunction with the General Committee of the Grand Lodge.

A Committee on intellectual culture was created whose duty it shall be to arrange for a literary program for joint sessions to be held monthly from October to May, and to take up such other work as may be deemed proper.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Showers of roses greeted Grand President I. M. Golden and Grand Secretary I. J. Aschheim of District No. 4, when they appeared at the joint meeting of Portland and Theo. Herzl Lodges of Portland, Ore., on Tuesday evening, June 17, 1913. The meeting was called to order by Dr. A. G. Bettman, president of Portland Lodge, who later turned it over to District Deputy Dr. J. Block, who introduced the speakers. Among those who addressed the large audience were the two visiting Grand Lodge officers, also Past Grand President Sig Sichel and Hon. D. Solis Cohen. President Golden in his address emphasized the need of strengthening the order by increasing its membership with the right kind of men, and said:

"More members are necessary. Numbers give power. Numbers, organized efficiently, produce public sentiment, public sentiment is the result of public conscience and public opinion is the result of the awakening of public conscience. Every institution depends on public opinion. It is the organized conscience of the people of the world. It is the force that lies at the very root of nations."

He then related some of the problems which are confronting the Jews on the Pacific Coast and some which will arise. He declared that the "B'nai B'rith" needs members to cope with these problems.

Secretary Aschheim was the first speaker and dealt with his experiences in the various cities. He spoke reminiscently of the times he had visited Portland and complimented the city on its growth, declaring that it is considered as an outpost of Judaism in the Northwest.

Mr. Cohen spoke eloquently of the necessity of extinguishing class differences among the Jews. Mr. Sichel declared his pleasure at the visit of the Grand Lodge officers and reassured them of Portland's strength as a "B'nai B'rith" center.

At the conclusion of the meeting, refreshments were served.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

ISAAC LODGE, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

The following program has been arranged for Isaac Lodge, No. 87:

Thursday, Sept. 18th, address by Bro. Edwin Weiner on "Zionism and Patriotism."

Thursday, Oct. 16th, address by Bro. Harry S. Wollheim. Subject to be announced later.

Thursday, Nov. 20th, address by Bro. Montefiore Bienenstok on "Israel Zangwill."

Thursday, Dec. 18th, address by Bro. Arthur Breslauer on "The Jew in the Modern Drama."

SEATTLE, WASH.

President I. M. Golden and Secretary I. J. Aschheim of District Grand Lodge No. 4 arrived in Seattle on Wednesday, June 11th, and were immediately taken in charge by a reception committee representing Rainier and Hildesheimer Lodges of that city. On the following evening a joint meeting of the two lodges was held, which was largely attended and at which a class of candidates was initiated, the Grand officers officiating.

On Friday evening President Golden delivered addresses before the two Seattle congregations, which were highly educative along B'nai B'rith lines, and will result in the material increase of the membership of the two lodges. After receptions, automobile trips, luncheons, and private entertainments the visitors left for Vancouver, B. C., to visit Samuel Lodge.

ANNIVERSARY OF HARMONY LODGE.

Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., celebrated its second anniversary of the institution of the lodge on June 26, 1913. Fully 200 people attended the affair at the club rooms of the lodge, which were decorated for the occasion. A concert preceded the dancing and at midnight refreshments were served in the lodge rooms. The lodge was organized with a charter membership of 30 and now has 110 members enrolled. The lodge owns its club rooms, which are handsomely furnished.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

The last regular meeting of the season was held by Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 on June 16, 1913, and although the temperature was something like 110 in the shade, a large attendance was present. An important suggestion was made by Brother Sol Kiser that the lodge arrange for a series of lectures on Jewish topics for the coming winter, and the matter was referred to a committee to work out the details. Important work is planned for the coming term and a strong effort will be made to increase both membership and attendance.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

Memphis Lodge No. 35 held its regular bi-monthly meeting Sunday morning, July 6, 1913. A rather large attendance was present, and the meeting proved an unusually interesting one.

President Emanuel Klein presided, and following the regular routine business of the lodge initiated candidates in a most impressive manner.

The installation of the newly elected officers was conducted by Past President Sam Schloss, one of the oldest members of the local lodge. An interesting fact connected with the installation was that Mr. Schloss installed into the office of vice-president, his grandson.

Following the installation ceremonies short addresses were made by Sam Schloss, President Emanual Klein, Vice-President Gilbert Schloss, and Clarence N. Frolich.

GAINESVILLE, TEX.

On Sunday, July 13, President Arthur L. Kramer of D. G. L. No. 7, accompanied by Bro. H. S. Scheline of the General Committee and Bro. Max Philipson of Dallas Lodge No. 197 visited Gainesville Lodge No. 518 and participated in an enthusiastic meeting of that Lodge.

New officers were elected and a plan of propaganda outlined. Addresses were made by all the visiting brethren and also by Bro. I. Zacharius of the local lodge.

Bro. Sam Kahn, who was elected Secretary of the Lodge, is one of the leading members of the Organization as well as one of the prominent and moving spirits of the Gainesville community.

Following the meeting, several new members were added to the Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

At a meeting of Worcester Lodge No. 600 of Worcester, Mass., held on July 22, 1913, 16 candidates were initiated. The prize degree team of the lodge performed the work in an inspiring manner. There were expressions of commendation not only by the old members, but also by the newly initiated candidates. The degree team upon completing its work did some marching as a finishing touch and during this march spelled the letters I. O. B. B.

Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., arranged a strawberry festival at its club rooms on June 25th. The special feature was the attendance of a large number of members and their ladies from Friendship Lodge of Danbury, Conn., who were specially invited to be the guests of the lodge.

On Sunday, June 8, 1913, Washington Lodge No. 19, of New York City, paid its annual visit to the Home for Aged and Infirm at Yonkers, N. Y. A large delegation of members and their families were present, and the inmates and guests were treated to an enjoyable entertainment. After the exercises refreshments were served. The lodge presented all of the inmates with suitable gifts, which they appreciated much.

On Monday, June 16th, the Intellectual Advancement Committee met at the home of its Chairman, I. Irving Lipsitch. It was decided that the District give a Ball at one of the large hotels in New York on some night during Chanuka. As usual, the activities of the lodges has been suspended during the Summer months.

Abraham Lodge held one of the most enthusiastic meetings of the year on Sunday, May 18th, at which time five candidates were initiated by the Degree team of the Lodge. There was a very interesting debate on the subject: "Resolved that a lawyer should defend a criminal whom he knows to be guilty." Brothers Henry Greenstein and Abraham Feuer upheld the affirmative, while Brothers Joshua Meltzer and Benjamin G. Shalet argued the negative. President Theodore E. Stieber acted as chairman, and the judges were Brothers Jacob B. Klein, Nathan Frankel and Julius Greenwald who decided in favor of the affirmative.

On Tuesday, June 3rd, an official visit of the officers of the District and the Intellectual Advancement Committee was paid to Maccabee Lodge. A number of candidates were initiated by the Degree team. Among those who addressed the meeting were Brothers Sol. Sulzberger, Treasurer of the district; Charles Hartman of the Executive Committee of the Order; I. Irving Lipsitch and Simon M. Roeder.

At the meeting of Worcester Lodge held July 22nd, the Degree team initiated 16 candidates. The members are looking forward to the banquet of the lodge to be held in September, at which time will be presented the banner awarded to lodge by the district in the Degree team contest.

The Intellectual Advancement Committee is arranging a series of lectures on Jewish topics to be delivered during the Fall.

In accordance with the custom practised for several years past, Cleveland Lodge No. 16, of Cleveland, Ohio, held services on July 16th, 1913, and placed a wreath on the grave of late Secretary of State, John Hay.

After a lingering illness, Brother Max J. Russack, one of the esteemed and prominent citizens of St. Louis, died on August 7th, 1913. Brother Russack was a prominent member of Missouri Lodge No. 22, of St. Louis. The members of the lodge attended the funeral in a body and Mr. Ben Shifrin, the president, spoke feelingly at the grave.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Duquesne Lodge No. 642, of Duquesne, Pa., held a special meeting on July 24th, at which the newly elected officers were installed by the Secretary of the District Grand Lodge, Brother Louis Sulzbacher.

On July 6th Duquesne Lodge held its first annual basket outing, which was attended by a large crowd and proved successful. The base ball team of the lodge played the Braddock Y. M. H. A. and defeated the visitors.

An open meeting of the B'nai B'rith lodges of Pittsburg and surrounding territory was held on August 13th, in the lodge rooms of Ibn Gabirol Lodge. The meeting was open to the public and was addressed by Mr. Geo. A. Levy, who spoke on the subject "Civic Righteousness."

Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672 of Pittsburg held the installation of its officers at a well attended meeting on July 13th, 1913. A smoker was held in conjunction with the installation of officers. An invitation was extended to all the members of the lodges in the county. Past Grand President Brother A. L. Solomon installed the officers and was assisted by Brother Adolph Edlis, a member of the General Committee, and Past President O. H. Rosenbaum and Isidore Reizenstein. Many short talks on the good and welfare of the Order were made by the visiting brothers.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

The annual picnic of Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503, I. O. B. B., of Seattle, Wash., was held Sunday, July 20th, and was pronounced a most gratifying success. Over one thousand people attended, most of them coming early to spend the entire day in the woods of beautiful Fortuna Park. Base ball games, dancing and boating were the day's sports, and a delightful outing was enjoyed by all.

Cremieux Lodge No. 325 of San Francisco has almost the largest membership of any lodge in the city. The lodge won a silver loving cup given for the largest increase in membership during last year and intends to repeat its former laudable efforts this year. The average attendance at meetings is large and to further encourage this and also for educational purposes the lodge has arranged for lectures on subjects of general interest for one meeting each month. The initiation team is to be reorganized and drilled so as to enable it to take part in competitive initiations with teams from other lodges of the District.

Messrs. I. M. Golden and I. J. Aschheim, President and Secretary respectively of District Grand Lodge No. 4, paid Nathan Falk Lodge No. 481, of Boise, Idaho, an official visit on June 6th, 1913. During the day the visitors enjoyed an auto ride through the city and vicinity, and in the evening they delivered addresses at Temple Beth Israel and were the honored guests at a well attended banquet given at the Owyhee Hotel.

The Pacific Northwest is making and breaking records in B'nai B'rith work. A new era is unfolding and the Order is receiving a stimulus through progressive agencies never before undertaken in that part of the country. The recent annual visit of the President and Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 4 to the lodges in the Northwest was made the occasion of B'nai B'rith demonstrations, which promise to develop into constructive work of inestimable value to the order, the district and the lodges of the Northwest.

Tacoma Lodge No. 741 of Tacoma, Wash., held a well attended meeting on Angust 7th, on which occasion 12 candidates were initiated.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Brother Sylvan E. Hess, of St. Paul, President of District Grand Lodge No. 6, accompanied by Past President Bro. Gus M. Greenebaum, paid an official visit to Northwestern Lodge No. 265, of Chicago, on August 4th, and addressed the lodge.

A general meeting of Ramah Lodge No. 33, of Chicago, was held on June 12, 1913. The special order of business was the reports of officers, initiation of candidates and election of officers. The lodge made special arrangements to celebrate the 80th birthday anniversary of Brother Henry Greenebaum, the first President of the District Grand Lodge and known as the father of the District. Brother Greenebaum was the founder and first president of the lodge, to which he has given many years of eminent service. The occasion was also honored by the presence of the President of the Order, Brother Adolf Kraus and all the officers of the District Grand Lodge residing in Chicago, and addresses were delivered by all of them.

A petition for a charter for a new lodge to be instituted at Calgary, Alberta, Canada has been presented to the General Committee of the District Grand Lodge.

Little Rock Lodge No. 158, of Little Rock, Ark., recently celebrated its 42nd anniversary of its institution, at which only one surviving charter member, Mr. Lazarus Ehrenreich, was present and made a delightful address. Other speakers were Chas. S. Stifft, whose subject was "The Possibilities of the Order"; Chas. B. Abeles, who spoke on "Personal Service," and Isadore Barron, who discussed "The Lodge Room a Common Meeting Place."

At a general meeting of Memphis Lodge No. 35, of Memphis, Tenn., the election of officers resulted in the reelection of Brother Emanuel Klein as president. Under his administration the lodge has prospered, many new members having been added and the work of the lodge materially extended. Three candidates were admitted to membership at the meeting, and addresses were delivered by Brothers Archibald A. Marx of New Orleans and S. L. Lee.

DISTRICT NO. 8.

During the term of 1912-1913 Franken Lodge No. 468 of Wuerzburg held twenty meetings which were all well attended. A number of interesting lectures were delivered in these meetings mostly upon Jewish topics, which proved highly instructive to the members. The membership increased from 93 to 103. In the course of the summer the lodge sent 15 children of Jewish families of Wuerzburg and vicinity to Eschan. The result of this vacation colony was highly satisfactory. The Lodge also helped to support a number of Jewish schools and small Jewish congregations.

Gabriel Riesser Lodge No. 478, of Thorn, celebrated its fourteenth anniversary on March 30th, 1913. The thirty meetings which the Lodge held during the last term were attended by nearly all the members. Four entertainment evenings which were arranged for the members and their ladies, were very successful. A fund was created for the aid of brethren in distress. One thousand four hundred and eighty Marks were expended in benevolent work. The Lodge received 2,570 Marks in donations from brethren to the different Lodge funds. The Lodge raised 7,000 marks for the suffering coreligionists in the Balkan peninsula. Nine new brethren were added to the membership.

The Soldiers' Home, which Lothringen Lodge No. 591 of Metz established three years ago with the aid of the District Grand Lodge, has developed a successful activity. The moral influence of the home upon the Jewish soldiers, who came to the Metz garrison from all parts of Germany, was very beneficial. It has helped to raise the Jewish standing with the military authorities.

The arrangements for gatherings of B'nai B'rith members in the different summer resorts of Germany were made permanent during the present season. Borussia Lodge No. 491, of Danzig, arranged gatherings during the season at Zoppot for every Saturday.

Rabbis Dr. Mannheimer and S. Zacharias, members of Kaiser Friedrich Lodge No. 484, of Bremen, have taken charge of the B'nai B'rith social gatherings in Norderney.

Members of Franken Lodge No. 468, of Wuerzburg, are supervising the gatherings at Kissingen.

A regular meeting of the Wilhelm and Auguste Victoria Institutions for the training of feeble minded children at Beelitz was held on Sunday, June 15th, 1913. Professor Philipson opened the meeting. Up to date the institution has admitted 88 pupils. The treasury contains over 61,000 Marks and this favorable financial condition has awakened the thought of building an addition to the institution. The teachers have done very effective and useful work.

A PECULIAR OCCURRENCE ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Written by one who meets with many oddities.

As the occupant of an official position in the District I was recently handed a elegram from the Secretary of Mineral odge No. 711 located in Mineralia, in he State of Maduro, in the granite mountain district. The telegram informed me that a Mr. Pear, a member of hat Lodge had been killed in an automobile accident the day before and that I should offer the family whatever assistance necessary, in their behalf.

Without losing any time I called upon he bereaved widow, who for calm self-possession in so trying a moment, was o me a marvel, and who accepted the condolence offered her in the most matter-of-fact manner. She was glad I called, told me what an ardent B'nai B'rith her husband had been all his life, and of the several Lodge stations he had filled, and the honors he had received from his Lodge. All that she told me with a great deal of gusto and satisfaction. She showed me a photograph of her husband and when I remarked that he had barely the features of a Jew, she wanted me clearly to understand that he was never taken for one.

Being informed that the body was at that moment in charge of an undertaker in the Capitol city of the state, and that a cremation would likely take place the second day after, I inquired whether it would be agreeable that the Lodge attend the funeral. It certainly would, she replied. I then asked her whether I should engage the services of the Communal Rabbi. Oh, no. She did not think that Mr. Pear would care for a Rabbi. Nothing further was said on that subject. I was informed that her husband's nephew was on the way to this city.

At my parting with the lady I left her in possession of my telephone number, enjoined her to call me up at any time she desired my services, and expressed the hope that her nephew would call on me. By the way of parenthesis I may say, that the lady has never deemed it necessary to call me up either for assistance or to express her thanks, nor did her nephew know enough of the proprieties of things to pay his respects to me for either one purpose or another.

On my return to the office I at once telegraphed to Mineral Lodge assuring them that the widow was not at all disconsolate and also, to the Lodge at the Capitol city, instructing them to prepare to attend the funeral in a body. Three days later I received the following letter from the President of the Capitol city Lodge:

"My dear Sir and Brother:

Pursuant to your telegram of the 28th, referring to the death of Mr. Pear, I called at the Gormley Undertaking parlors and was surprised to learn that Mrs. Pear phoned to Mr. Gormley, asking him to secure a Unitarian Minister to officiate, but there being none in the Capitol city at the present time, Mr. Gormley phoned back to her of his inability to comply with her wishes, so she advised him to do nothing further until she arrived today.

We both considered it a very strange incident, but agreed to wait until the family of the deceased arrived here. This morning about eleven o'clock, Dr. R........ who came with them, phoned, asking me to endeavor to get as many members of the B'nai B'rith as possible, to attend the funeral. I immediately by means of the phone and by personal canvass, secured a 'Minyan,' nearly all of whom appeared at the undertaking parlors in due time. Shortly after our reaching there, a gentleman of the ministerial type also appeared. I learned from Mr Pear, Jr., a nephew of the deceased, that his uncle, though being a member of the I. O. B. B. for about thirty-four years, had joined the Unitarian church about twenty years ago, and a short time ago decided to enlarge his religious sphere by joining the Christian Science hurch also, hence the reason for Mrs. Pear's desire to have a Unitarian Minister, but not being able to find one, made use of his last religious affiliation and engaged a Christian Science Minister

Our 'near Minyan,' though realizing our predicament, agreed to remain in deference to the wishes of Mr. Pear Jr.

Dr. Bonnell delivered a very eloquent eulogy on the Jew, Unitarian and Christian Scientist, read various excerpts from the book of Mrs Baker Eddy and after assuring us that the deceased was only taking a transfer to a more peaceful planet, discharged us from further duty Mr. Pear was cremated this afternoon.

It appeared very strange to those of [illegible]ent, how Mr. Pear could have be[illegible] to a B'nai B'rith lodge while be[illegible] member of and following the Uni[illegible] mode of worship for so many [illegible]d it seems to be an incident [illegible]ent importance to engage the attention of our Order and bring this matter to the notice of the proper district authorities, as the tolerance of such a practice is certainly out of keeping with the ritualistic teachings of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith.

Fraternally and Sincerely."

On receipt of this letter I forwarded a copy of it to the lodge and stated that I had no further comment to make, except that I joined the brother in his observation contained in the last paragraph of his letter, for the reason that, in my humble opinion, our first duty is to be "True to Ourselves."

It will be admitted, that, ordinarily, it would have been the duty of the Lodge to offer some rational explanation of the whole proceeding, but instead of doing so, I received from the Secretary a letter, couched in the most conventional language, thanking me for my trouble, and offering to compensate the office for any outlays had, stating merely, as far as the gist of the story was concerned, that Brother Pear had been a member in good standing in the Lodge since 1875.

This brings me to the end of the story and at a point where a few pertinent questions may be in order.

First. How can a man be a member of a Unitarian church and at the same time hold his membership in a B'nai B'rith Lodge?

Second. How can such a farce be kept up for twenty long years, the circumstances being well known to the members of the Lodge? Are we fish, are we flesh or are we hybrids?

Third. By what right did the Lodge hand me a piece of work, when common sense should have told them that the outcome of it would be thoroughly distasteful to me and offensive to my religious sensibility?

Fourth. Why should a callous-hearted woman take the right to outrage the feelings of ten men, good and true, in order to satisfy a mere whim which at best is only fantastical?

Fifth. What does the B'nai B'rith Order owe to any person, who, in spirit, has separated himself from the House of Israel and who, publicly worships in a place not dedicated to the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob?

Sixth. Has our Ritual become a comedy?

DR PARKHURST ON RACE PREJUDICE.

The intensity of their loyalty to Jehovah created on their part a corresponding intensity in their enmity toward those who were not believers in Jehovah.

They would neither ally themselves with Gentiles nor seek to have Gentiles ally themselves with them.

Jews' Religious Devotion Mistaken in Past for Proud Piety.

They were a separate people.

They isolated themselves as far as possible from Gentile contacts. What was really religious devotion to their holy faith was interpreted by Gentiles as being devout superciliousness, a sort of "holier-than-thou" piety. They were narrow in their religion, but they were devout.

If Christians were as true to the doctrines which they profess as the Jews were they would be looked upon in something the same way, and the words of our Lord would be found to be true, "Because ye are not of the world the world hateth you."

That I believe to be the origin of Gentile antipathy, and having once become established it has maintained itself by its own momentum.

Gentiles have gotten into the habit of thinking and speaking disrespectfully of Jews, and have not enough of the grace of God in their hearts or enough of the love spirit of the gospel to break loose from the habit.

It is difficult to get an idea into people's hearts, but ten times more difficult to get it out when once it is there.—Chicago Evening American.

ARE THE JEWS A WARLIKE RACE?

Jews were in the ranks in the Philippines, where they showed their bravery in many battles and skirmishes.

"British Jews contributed no less to the ranks in the war against the Boers. They enlisted in no fewer than twenty-five regiments (including the Highlanders and the Guards)."

Activity of Winnipeg Lodge

Jewish Orphanage for Winnipeg.

Since the establishment of a lodge in Winnipeg, it has been the aim of the officers and members, who have been working with the object in view of ultimately erecting a Jewish Orphan's Home in the City of Winnipeg, with the assistance of the Jewish People of Canada, and under the jurisdiction of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. in a city like Winnipeg, where there are over 15,000 Jews, it has been felt that an Orphan's Home was necessary and this would have now been a reality, had it not been for the fact that other Jewish Institutions were being built and in order that one should not interfere with the other, Winnipeg Lodge decided to postpone the building of an Orphan's Home until the time was ripe. The time has now arrived and several committees are now at work (Committees being composed of members and non-members of the Lodge) for the purpose of finding ways and means in connection with this institution. At a Mass meeting held in the Winnipeg Hebrew Free school, over 600 people being present, Winnipeg Lodge received the sympathy of the Jewish Citizens and the following resolution was unanimously passed: That all present at this meeting are in favor of pledging their financial and moral support to the "CANADIAN JEWISH ORPHAN'S HOME" and the following plan for management was adopted:

First. That ladies be eligible as directors.

Second. That the Provisional Board be composed of 40.

Third. That all B'nai B'rith Lodges in Canada, whose members are taxed for the support of this institution, shall jointly be entitled to elect a majority of the directors of this institution.

Fourth. That the permanent Board of Directors shall consist of 21 members, at least three of whom shall be ladies.

The Legislation Committee have already applied for a charter for the Canadian Jewish Orphan's Home, and the finance committee, composed of the best Jewish Citizens in Winnipeg, are at work raising funds for the maintenance of this institution. It is the object of the Lodge to first rent a suitable building for the purpose until such time that sufficient funds will be raised for the erecting of a large and permanent building. The future of the Canadian Jewish Orphan's Home looks very bright and Winnipeg Lodge is to be congratulated upon the step they have taken.

General Secretary for Winnipeg Lodge.

The work which is being done by Winnipeg Lodge is such that it has seen the advisability of appointing a General Secretary whose duties will be to devote his entire time to the work of the lodge, so that it's undertakings may prove a success. For this purpose, at a recent meeting, this lodge has increased it's dues from $6.00 to $9.00 per annum and has voted $1,000.00 and an extra allowance of $300.00 per annum for office space, same to be paid to the Secretary. It will be his duty to look after the Free Loan Committee the Free Employment Bureau, the collection of dues, will help all committees appointed by the lodge to perform their duties in a more systematic way and will perform all such other duties in connection with the lodge that he may be asked to look after from time to time. He will also have charge of the Propaganda work and it is expected that if the right man is secured, that the membership of this lodge will increase to 600 in the next year, which in itself will be a boom to the lodge. And now that an Orphan's Home has been established by Winnipeg Lodge, the secretary will surely have plenty of duties to attend to.

Winnipeg Lodge Secures Petition for Lodge in Calgary.

While on a business trip through the Canadian West, Brother L. Rice, the President of Winnipeg Lodge and Brother M. Gardner, have, through their personal efforts, secured an application for a new lodge in Calgary, Alberta. The petition has been sent to the Grand Lodge and it is hoped that by the time this news goes to press, that the Calgary Lodge will be a reality. The City of Calgary has over 2,000 Jews and has sufficient material to warrant the organization of an institution such as our Order. The men, whose names appear on the petition for the charter, are gentlemen who are highly esteemed not only among the Jewish citizens of Calgary, but by the other religious denominations with whom they come in contact. Should the charter be granted. Winnipeg Lodge feels that Calgary will have one of the best organized lodges in the District. This is the fifth lodge organized in Canada through the efforts of Winnipeg Lodge. The lodges in question have a membership of over 600 and are situated as follows: Winnipeg, Ft. William, Ont., Saskatoon, Sask, Edmonton, Alta. and Calgary, Alta.

Election of Officers.

At the general meeting held June 5th last, officers were elected for the ensuing term.

On June 19th, a social function was held, the officers elected being duly installed by Deputy Installing Officer Max Steinkopf in the presence of a very large gathering represented by the members, the Ladies' Auxiliary and their friends. After the installation addresses were delivered by Brother Rice, the new President, Max Steinkopf, Deputy Officer of the Grand Lodge; M. J. Finkelstein, the new Vice-President and D. Beckerman, the retiring President.

The new President then appointed his committees after which those present endulged in dancing until 11:30 P. M., an orchestra having been engaged for the occasion and refreshments were served under the supervision of Mrs. D. Shragge, the President of the Ladies' Auxiliary.

During the month of July a boat excursion was held to Riverside Park, about 15 miles from Winnipeg, over 200 being present.

there was also, consciously or unconsciously, the memory of the traditions of the cruel centuries which is the common Jewish heritage.

"So it is not surprising to find a Jew making a shrine of the flag which has meant emancipation. Nor is it surprising to find a Jew taking the lead in lowering the denominational barriers and bringing the children of one-time warring creeds into a joint service. But the fact that such a proposal can be advanced and responded to and become a thing done is surely a striking testimonial to the breadth of character which as a people we are developing."

It is proposed next year to hold a great Flag Day service of Jewish and Christian children, under the direction of Jewish and Christian ministers. The general approval with which this movement has met in this city indicates that it might meet with the same degree of favor elsewhere, and perhaps become national in its scope. It has also been suggested that our Order set apart a day in the month of June, as near the 14th as possible, for Flag Day services as being in keeping with one feature of our ritualistic work. The suggestion seems timely, and I report it so that it may be put before the Brethren of the Order for their approval.

KING OF ROUMANIA'S STAND FOR JEWISH RIGHTS.

Recently the Union of Native Jews in Roumania, at the head of which is Dr. Adolphe Stern of Bucharest, President of District Grand Lodge No. 9, I. O. B. B., presented a petition to the King, pleading that they might be placed upon a footing of equality with Gentiles. His Majesty appended the following note to the petition: "Recommended to the serious attention of the Minister of Industry and Commerce in order that the necessary measures may be taken with the view of giving satisfaction to this request, which appears to me to be just. A population so considerable, established here for hundreds of years, successive generations of whom have been born in the country, cannot subsist without the possibility being given to it of living by means of its work." This note was probably in part responsible for an important amendment which was introduced by the Minister of Commerce into the Bill for the protection of national industry, and was adopted by Parliament. The amendment reads as follows: "Workmen who do not enjoy foreign protection, be they native or foreign Jews, are not considered foreigners in respect of labor." This is the first time in thirty years that the qualification of Native is applied to the Jews of Roumania. The law thus modified abolishes the inequality of treatment from which Jewish workmen have hitherto suffered.

BENEVOLENCE BROTHERLY LOVE AND HARMONY

Vol. VI OCTOBER, 1913 No. 2
Entered as second-class matter September 16, 1912, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of August 24, 1912.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

For a number of years a tendency has manifested itself in American life toward the caricaturing and defaming of Jews on the stage, in moving pictures. The effect of this on the unthinking public has been to create an untrue and injurious impression of an entire people and to expose the Jew to undeserved contempt and ridicule. The caricatures center around some idiosyncracy of the few which, by the thoughtless public, is often taken as a pivotal characteristic of the entire people.

The evidence of prejudice and discrimination has been abundant, both in social and in business circles, as well as in public life. All fair-minded citizens must regret the growth of this un-American sentiment. The prejudice thus displayed by no means reflects the attitude of the thinking, intelligent majority of our citizens, but is limited to an ignorant, unreasoning and bigoted minority. For many years the Jewish and non-Jewish citizens have failed to meet this tendency by any means save quiet criticism. But the tide has been rising until it calls for organized effort to stem it.

Regrettable as it is, this condition has gone so far as to manifest itself recently in an attempt to influence courts of law where a Jew happened to be a party to the litigation. This symptom, standing by itself, while contemptible, would not constitute a menace, but forming as it does but one incident in a continuing chain of occasions of discrimination, demands organized and systematic effort on behalf of all right-thinking Americans to put a stop to this most pernicious and un-American tendency. Prejudice is the child of ignorance. It knows no bounds, respects no individual, and violates the most sacred tenets of our democracy.

With the hope that the co-operation of both Jewish and non-Jewish citizens will be received in this effort of fair play for all people, the ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF AMERICA has been formed under the auspices of the Order of B'nai B'rith.

OBJECT: The immediate object of the League is to stop, by appeals to reason and conscience, and if necessary, by appeals to law, the defamation of the Jewish people. Its ultimate purpose is to secure justice and fair treatment to all citizens alike and to put an end forever to unjust and unfair discrimination against and ridicule of any sect or body of citizens.

ORGANIZATION: Any reputable person, regardless of sex or creed, may become a member by signing a membership card. No membership fees nor dues shall be charged. A central office has been created in the City of Chicago, with a competent office force. All communications or complaints should be addressed to Mr. Sigmund Livingston, 722 First National Bank Bldg., Chicago, Illinois.

Stage defamation will be dealt with by enlisting the assistance and co-operation of the producers and managers of the theaters, so that investigation of proposed performances may be made before the staging of the same, thus correcting evils before any harm is done. If the co-operation of those in authority cannot be secured, then the patrons of the theater will be enlisted for active co-operation.

Newspaper and magazine defamation will be met by protest to the editor. by correcting all defamations through subsequent articles upon the same subject matter, thereby reaching the same reading public and correcting errors; and in case of willful abuse, by appealing to the patrons and advertisers for co-operation.

Defamation in textbooks which pervert the minds of children and tend to prejudice, will be met by attempts to eliminate them from the course of study.

No effort will be made by this organization to shield any malefactor. In founding this League, the Order of B'nai B'rith pledges its hearty support in the future, as it has done in the past, to the enforcement of law against all violators, Jew or non-Jew.

A committee of one hundred citizens, residents in the various cities throughout the United States, has been selected to perfect the organization and to carry out its objects.

(Signed) ADOLF KRAUS, President.

Expressions of Some of the American and Jewish Press on the Anti-Defamation League.

HOW THE JEW SHOULD BE JUDGED.

The following article, which appeared in the Public Ledger of Philadelphia, was written by Major J. C. Hemphill, the Washington staff correspondent of the Public Ledger. Major Hemphill is a Presbyterian, his father was a Presbyterian clergyman, and he is a devout man himself; a man of the highest social position, and one of the most distinguished newspaper men in America.

None can blame the Jewish people for the resentment they feel at the many indignities heaped upon them, and the civilized world, if, indeed, it were but half civilized, might well shudder at the persecutions of this unhappy race. It can be understood very well why the noble Order of B'nai B'rith, which has done so much in the cause of humanity, should have determined upon the organization of a league to protect these people from defamation, and all men who have the love of God in their hearts will sympathize with whatever dignified effort may be made in this direction. But, after all, it is the Jew of history and prophecy and achievement that counts, and not the Jew of the comic paper and a decadent stage; the Jew who has filled the earth with wisdom, the Jew of religion and literature and science and finance and philanthropy and art and culture and government and heroes, that counts in any honest appraisement of what he is and what he has accomplished. He stands alone among men for endurance under suffering and sacrifice, for persecutions that have bloodied all the pages of history, for loyalty to his faith when languishing in dungeon, broken on the rack, tortured by fire, cut asunder with the sword, dying in agony on the scaffold. This is the Jew, and not the cheap and repulsive creature of caricature and unthinking passion that counts in the judgment of the discriminating world.

In his "History of the Jews" Professor H. Graetz says: "The Jewish race during its dispersion of nearly two thousand years may be fitly compared to a polyp. Though it was often wounded and cut to pieces, the parts severed from the whole did not die, but began an independent existence, developed organically, and formed a new rootstock. Driven from their original Palestinian home, the scattered members of this peculiar national organism assembled on the banks of the Euphrates and Tigris and in the palm districts of Arabia. Doomed to ruin there, they emigrated to Spain with the Arabs, the most cultured people of the Middle Ages, and became the teachers of Europe, then plunged into barbarism. Expelled thence, weakened in heart and numbers, they proceeded eastwards, and, as again they found no resting place, they settled in the north, always following advancing civilization," and, "with every burning pile set ablaze for convicted or suspected persons," their numbers have increased and their glory has filled the earth. There are unworthy men among them, thousands of them, but they do not represent the race—the only real aristocratic race among the sons of men. Their family tree was rooted "in the beginning." The promise was made to Abraham by the Almighty: "I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee. And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant unto thee and to thy seed after thee * * * and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him." In reliance upon this promise and upon the assurance of the Royal Psalmist David that "the truth of the Lord endureth forever," the Jews have rested their case, hoping in the mercy of God.

They do not agree with their Christian neighbors; they have rejected the Christ of the Christians, but they look for a Messiah yet to come and they have suffered for their belief even unto death. They have, however, taught the sublimity of living and dying for what they believed to be right, and they have set an example to all the world of patience under suffering. Some of their neighbors think that they have either gone too far in adapting themselves to the so-called "advanced thought of the age," or not far enough; that they have sacrificed some of their own commandments and laws and customs without advantage to their system of religion, but through all the changes of time and place and conditions they have maintained the purity of their race and worked for the good of humanity. In all the realms of thought and service they have held high place and achieved large results and made great contributions to the sum of human happiness.

With his record in the humanities, what does it matter to the B'nai B'rith whether or not the Jew is defamed by the vulgar and misjudged by the righteous? Let him be judged, rather, by what he has done.

TRUTH AND FICTION.

We are glad to see that prominent Jews have organized a league which aims to put an end to the defamation of the Hebrew race in literature and on the stage, though we fear they will accomplish little. A race as intelligent, as broad-minded, as liberal as any on earth, is always represented as sordid and as having as a standard of honesty only the idea of keeping out of the penitentiary.

The Jew on the stage and in fiction is the mediaeval estimate of Shylock with only slight variations to suit circumstances; and the strangest part of it is that for over three hundred years the character has been totally misunderstood. Shylock is taken as the impersonation of grasping greed instead of as the impersonation of a just and implacable hatred. The man who would take the last crumb from the table of the widow and the orphan is called a Shylock, but Shylock didn't want money. He wanted to kill the man who had offered him indignities that any self-respecting man in Jacksonville today would have killed him for offering to him. So far as being grasping as to money matters, Shylock was willing to give up all the money this man owed him for the pleasure of killing him.

What was the offense that caused this hatred? When Antonio asked Shylock to lend him money, the latter replied:

Shall I bend low and in a bandsman's key,
With bated breath and whispering humbleness, say this?
Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last;
You spurned me such a day; another time
You called me dog; and for these courtesies
I'll lend you thus much moneys.

To this Antonio replied:

I am as like to call thee so again,
To spit on thee again, to spurn thee, too.

If Shylock had killed this hound when he should have killed him, he would have been torn limb from limb by a pack of hounds (called Christians) just like him. It is not surprising that he should have proposed to take the only chance at revenge he had without the certainty of being killed for resenting his wrongs.

Shakespeare and the men of his day thought Antonio a very honorable man, and Shylock a very dishonorable one, but it is strange that after three hundred years in which the world has been getting wiser and more liberal and more truly Christian men at plays still applaud Antonio and hiss Shylock.

Of course we accept the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," but if Antonio had spat on and kicked one of the best citizens of Jacksonville the funeral would have occurred next day, and if the case had ever come to trial the verdict reached without leaving the jury box would have been "justifiable homicide."

But Shylock was not a typical Jew—he was a typical man who took the position that nine hundred and ninety-nine men out of a thousand of any race would have taken.

The Jews are not alone being defamed on the stage and in literature. Was ever anything more ridiculous than the Southern man of fiction or the drama? There are men in New York who would speak of the foist Thoisday in the month, but the New Yorker on the stage and in fiction is not made to talk like Happy Hooligan. But whoever read of an elderly Southerner in fiction or saw the representation of one on the stage who didn't say "begad, suh," and the women of the South are represented as saying, "Ah reckon ah'l go."

But what's the use of Jews or Southerners either trying to put a stop to this? It can't be done. Dramatists and novelists must draw the Jew and the Southerner of fiction rather than of fact, or they can't sell their products. And no author or publisher weighs truth against salability. A Jewish writer depicts the Jew, and a Southern writer the Southerner just as others do, and as all must do to have their work accepted. And since the money is the thing with Jew and Gentile alike, the public will continue to get what it is willing to pay for whether it is true or false.—Times-Union, Jacksonville, Fla.

IT'S AS EASY TO BE KIND AS TO BE CRUEL.

Prominent Jews of Chicago, according to an Associated Press dispatch in The Herald the other evening, have organized the Anti-Defamation League of America, whose purpose it will be "to stop, by appeals to reason and conscience, and if necessary by appeals to law, the defamation of the Jewish people."

The mere fact that American citizens belonging to a great and numerous race have felt it necessary to form such an organization as this should make us all think.

And when we think, surely those of us who are kind and who care about the feelings of others will study to avoid needless and cruel offense.

On the side of caricature, particularly caricature of races and nationalities, American humor has been crude and boorish. And this is not, we firmly believe, a characteristic of American humor, which can be keen and still kind.

It has been through thoughtlessness, and not hate or malice, that we have set up stage and literary conventions of the Irishman, the Jew, the Negro, the Swede, the Yankee and the Englishman that are rank and cruel caricatures, every one.

Probably we meant our humor to be good humor, but when its objects resent it and take steps to stop it, it is evident that it is not good humor, but brutal and unkind.

No gentleman will give needless offense to others. Indeed, it is that and not rank or race or financial rating which stamps the gentleman; and it is the opposite that stamps the boor.

We like to think that the American public is a gentleman. If it is as we think, it is certain that the first appearance of hurt on the part of any caricatured race or nationality will be the signal to stop caricaturing, whether with pencil or pen or tongue.

And the formation of this organization of Jewish citizens is evidence enough that the thoughtless lampooning of the past has hurt.

That ought to be enough to stop it. It will be enough with those who are kind and have a heart for the hurts of others—for those who do unto others as they would that others should do unto them.—The Duluth Herald.

THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE.

Adolf Kraus, President of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, has authorized the formation of an Anti-Defamation League for the purpose of "stopping by appeals to reason and conscience, and if necessary, by appeals to law, the defamation of the Jewish people."

We wish the B'nai B'rith well in their undertaking, but we regret to say that we have not the slightest faith in their ability to secure any interest in the matter among the members. It may be of interest to Mr. Kraus to know that recently we wrote an editorial commenting on the fact that the presentation of such a play as "Perlmutter and Potash" would serve to intensify the prejudice the public already entertains against the Jew as to his "peculiarities." Since publishing that editorial we have received a score and more protests by Jews who have witnessed the play in New York, asserting that instead of creating prejudice, the kindly spirited Perlmutter and his equally soft-hearted partner Potash are likely to increase the respect of the non-Jewish community for such "high types" of Jewish business men. Will Mr. Kraus please tell us of what use is it to protest against such things when so many of our own people simply cannot understand what is good or what is bad for them? The Jews of the United States are supporting this play; and they are so utterly stupid that they cannot understand that they are being caricatured. Because a stage Irishman is good natured, does not raise the standard of Irishmen in the eyes of his fellow citizens. What our people don't seem able to get through their heads is that the Perlmutter and Potash types of Jews are the butt of ridicule, and that the average man and woman who do not know any better consider them as the representative type.

What is needed more than an Anti Defamation League is an Educational League for the purpose of informing some of our co-religionists what is the desirable and what is the undesirable in matters relating to their welfare.—Charles H. Joseph, in Jewish Criterion

THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE.

"The Anti-Defamation League" is the title of a new organization formed at Chicago under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith. The League is to be national in scope, and is designed to combat and correct the growing tendency to defame the Jews on the stage, in current literature, in textbooks and of late in moving pictures. The details are set forth in a circular letter issued by Adolf Kraus, President of I. O. B. B., which appears in another column of this issue. This matter has been agitated in a sporadic and therefore ineffectual manner, in various localities, over a period of many years, and it is encouraging to note a movement finally that is basic in conception and comprehensive and practicable in scope. That the movement will have the hearty support of the Jewish people and publications, goes without saying, and it will therefore devolve upon the "Committee of One Hundred Citizens" to work out a plan which can be intelligently and effectively supported by all concerned in ridding ourselves of these long-continued and, in spite of all reason and all work against them, rapidly increasing libels and prejudices. There is no question that public and press are ready to lend hearty co-operation, and all join in hailing the birth of what all fondly hope will prove the means to a most devoutly longed for end.—American Israelite.

CONVENTION OF Y. M. H. A.

The following call to a convention was sent to the various Young Men's Hebrew Associations and kindred organizations throughout the United States:

New York City, Sept, 8, 1913.

The Sub-Committee of Ten, which met for the purpose of making plans for a federation of the various Young Men's Hebrew Associations and kindred institutions in the United States, has instructed me to issue a call for a convention of delegates to be held at the Y. M. H. A building, at 92nd Street and Lexington Avenue, in the City of New York, on Sunday, November 2nd, beginning at ten a. m. promptly. An afternoon session may be necessary.

At this convention it is planned that a constitution governing the national body be adopted. There will be presented an outline of the proposed charter. which, it is believed, will be found to meet the needs of the contemplated national body.

It is proposed to present for election to the General Council of the Federation of the Young Men's Hebrew Associations, the names of fifteen persons and the names of five persons to compose a Board of Trustees.

Each Y. M. H. A., or similar institution which desires to participate in the benefits accruing from such federation is requested to send delegates empowered to act for the institution. Each association wishing to be represented, may send one delegate, plus an additional delegate for each five hundred in membership of good standing.

It is sincerely hoped that your association will send its allotted delegates to this convention. Kindly indicate on the enclosed card whether we may count upon you.

Your very truly,
FELIX M. WARBURG,
Secretary

JEWS AND TUBERCULOSIS.

Dr. Blumenthal, the well known bacterioligist of Moscow, recently delivered a very instructive lecture on tuberculosis among the Jews. Dr. Blumenthal points to the fact that although the latest statistics still show the smallest percenage of tuberculosis among the Jews, yet at the same time the absolute figure demonstrates a dangerous increase. This can only be explained by the fact that the former mode of life of the Jews which, in spite of political oppression which they had to suffer, held them to a certain extent immune against tuberculosis, must have lately undergone a change for the worse. Dr Blumenthal, therefore, recommends that social and hygienic measure should be adopted in time to protect the Jews of Russia against this threatening catastrophe.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

An Article From Chie Justice Clark Upon the Proposed Amendment to the State Constitution of North Carolina.

As to the proposed amendment that the "reading of the Bible in the public schools shall not be prohibited," the first objection is that it is disingenuous, and not frank, for it does not express the real intention, which is to require that the Bible shall be read in the public schools. The supporters of the measure were not bold enough to put the provision in its affirmative form. Under this amendment the teachers, or the local board, or even the State Board can, if they see proper, order the Bible to be read in the schools, even when a large number of the children have parents who are not Protestants, and the Legislature and courts will be disabled by this provision from interfering. By this method the Bible can be forced upon any community, however much it may object to its use in the schools. This amendment certainly is not needed in communities where there is no objection to the Bible being read in the schools.

No Legislature has ever prohibited the Bible being read in the schools, and it is not likely that any ever will. The matter so far has been amicably settled by observing the wishes of the parents and not forcing the reading of the Bible where it would be objected to. A recent correspondent of the News and Observer said that the Legislature in the future might pass an act forbidding the Bible to be read in the schools. If that time shall come, it will be because a majority of the people of that day shall so desire. Is the wisdom of this generation so vastly superior to that of those who shall come after us that we can better prescribe for the conditions that shall then exist than they can, and that our will, and not theirs, should control in a matter which will concern them and not us? Why should the dead hand of the past be thus laid on the future, and why should not the majority of the people of North Carolina be free to act in regard to this matter in the future as we have been free to do in all these years?

The object of a Constitution is not to legislate, but simply to lay down the framework of a government, prescribing how the legislative, executive, and judicial departments shall be formed; prescribing the qualifications for voting and holding office, and restricting the majority—that is, the Legislature—from infringing on the rights of the minority in certain fundamental matters, i. e., as to freedom of worship, liberty of the press, trial by jury, limitation on taxation, habeas corpus, and other matters as to which experience has shown that the minority should have protection—all of which are set out in our Bill of Rights, which is Chapter I of the present Constitution. But it has never been deemed a fundamental principle that the minority shall have an inalienable right to have the Bible read in the public schools, if the majority shall think otherwise. Indeed, the contrary principle is set out in our State Constitution, which provides: "All men have a natural and unalienable right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and no human authority should, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience."

This, of course, applies also to the religious education of their children. The United States Constitution has a similar provision.

Our Holy Bible is valuable to us because it is the text-book of our Protestant religion. But there are thousands of people who do not view it as we do. It states our religious views (so far as we can agree among ourselves), but not theirs. We have at last happily achieved "compulsory education," which is essential to the welfare of the Republic. We have long been gradually approaching it in this state. This amendment will destroy it. For surely nothing can be more unjust than to allow either the State Board or the local school board, or even a teacher, to require our Protestant Bible to be read in schools attended by the children of Catholic parents who believe our version is heresy, or by the children of Jews and others who disbelieve in the New Testament, when those children are forced by law to attend such schools.

Would it be right to collect taxes from non-Protestants to pay teachers to read a book in the presence of the children of taxpayers to whom that book is objectionable, especially when we remember that that book is of all books the religious book of the Protestant faith?

Moreover, this amendment will make the church affiliation of the members of the Supreme Court a matter of the utmost importance. When the illustrious Gaston sat on the Supreme Bench, his religious views could offend no one. I have sat on the Bench with Judge Douglas, and discovered no injurious effect on his legal views from his being a Catholic.

But this amendment will raise as the first legal question, "What is the Bible?" A Catholic judge will be compelled conscientiously to say that it is the "Douay" Bible, and if the majority of the court should happen to be Catholics, they must so hold. There is another edition of the Bible in which the words "immerse" and "immersion" are substituted in every place for "baptise" and "baptism." I sat for six years on the bench with two estimable judges who were members of the Baptist Church. Should the Bench chance to have three members of that faith, and the State Board or local board should be indicted for prohibiting the use of that version, would not such a court be compelled to hold them guilty of prohibiting the use of the Bible?

Without any excuse that the Bible has not been read in the schools wherever public sentiment has so desired, we are asked to forbid by constitutional amendment the people, acting through their Legislature, from enacting that the Bible should not be read in localities where parents may be conscientiously opposed to it. We will be putting religious questions into politics and making the church relations of the judges a most important consideration.

We should learn a lesson from history. John Calvin claimed freedom to worship God according to his own conscience; yet when his church got into power they burned Servetus. The Pilgrim Fathers fled to this country to escape religious persecution; yet no sooner did they establish a government than they punished the minority who differed from them. They drove Roger Williams out of Massachusetts because he was a Baptist, and they severely punished many others who did not concur in their religious views. Another Protestant church kept John Bunyan in Bedford jail—the immortal dreamer and the author of Pilgrim's Progress.

Those who have been through the museums of Europe have been horrified at the sight of the terrible instruments of torture that in the long distant past were used by the Catholics on Protestants and by Protestants on Catholics and other Protestants. We cannot forget the martyrs of Smithfield, whose souls, like Elijah's, went up to heaven in a chariot of fire, and we have seen the iron cross in the streets of Oxford which marks the spot where Archbishop Cranmer and Bishops Lattimer and Ridley were burned at the stake for religious opinions which a few months before they had taught as orthodox by authority of law, but which by the change of political parties on the accession of a new sovereign, had become the religion of the minority.

History is one long pleading for liberty, especially for religious liberty. Do we wish to make again instruction in religious views one of the functions of government? When the Jewish boy Mortara was forced to attend the schools of another faith it almost created a revolution. We are proposing to make it possible to do this by wholesale. For what profit? Are we not doing well enough under the Constitution as it is?

The Word of God does not need the aid of the civil arm. It has a more powerful support. When the Ark of God returned from the Philistines, Uzzah saw it tottering and put out his hand to support it. For his presumption he was struck dead.

On that night of unutterable woe when they came with swords and staves to seize the Son of Man, an apostle drew his sword and smote off the ear of Malchus, the servant of the High Priest. The Master said that His work was not to be sustained by force. He healed the ear and told Peter to put up his sword.

The most eloquent plea for religious liberty were the ever-memorable lines penned by John Milton, and so important is it to maintain our freedom from all connection between church and State that Thomas Jefferson, who left in his papers an inscription for his tomb, did not ask a place there for any of his many other titles to honor; he did not ask that it be recorded that he had been twice President of the United States; that he had been Governor of Virginia; Ambassador to France, and the author of famous works; but he chose what he deemed the highest of all his titles to the gratitude of posterity, and to this day there is inscribed on his modest tomb at Monticello the words, "Author of the Declaration of American Independence and of the Virginia statute for religious freedom."

Let us not take advantage of our Protestant majority in North Carolina to impose upon the children of the Catholics and of the Jews and of others who are in the minority, who are compelled by law to attend our public schools, the reading of the textbook of our own religious views. To do this will be to turn back the clock of centuries, and would make us the only American State which in this twentieth century has made intolerance a part of our Constitution.

In this particular, our Constitution, as it was framed in 1776, has so far remained unaltered. This has kept all questions as to a man's religious views out of politics. Why should we change this state of things?

A wisdom greater than that of man has said, "Render unto God the things that are God's and unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." Let religion be taught at the mother's knee and by the teachers of God, but put it not in the power of any school board, State or local, or of any teacher, to make the text-book of any religion a part of the school course, and by a constitutional provision prohibit the Legislature and the courts from prohibiting this in cases where the parents and taxpayers who support the school with their children and their means shall object to it because of their being of a different religious faith.

Let our great Protestant majority restrain ourselves and observe the divinely given rule of conduct, "Do unto others as you would that they do unto you." Let us remember, also, that other great saying of the Master, "What measure ye mete unto others, that shall be measured unto you again." There is retribution in history.

What has been so far said has been based solely upon considerations of right and justice, upon the teachings of history, and of the Master himself. But as a matter of prudence and of public policy is it wise to inject into our political controversies the bitterest and most unreasoning of all contentions, religious or sectarian differences? It will be well to keep yet our policy which has served us so well for nearly a century and a half, and let a sleeping dog lie.

What has the Democratic Party to gain by alienating the Catholic and Jewish and other non-Protestant voters? Their votes have been needed in the past and will be needed again.

The Catholics have their parochial schools, but they have not asked an allotment to them of a share in the public school fund, because we have done nothing to make the public schools legally objectionable to them. But pass this amendment, under which no teacher or board can be prohibited by any authority or under any circumstances, from making our Protestant Bible a text-book in any public school, and there will be at once a demand by Jews, Catholics and others for the allotment to them of an equal share of the school fund, as an inevitable result—a troublesome question, wherever it has been raised.

In the past, ever since the Constitution was adopted at Halifax in 1776, we have safely left the reading of the Bible in the public schools to the wisdom and sense of justice of the people. without tying their hands or abridging their power in this regard by a constitutional amendment. Let us still trust the people with their own government. Let us not forbid the Legislature or the courts to protect the minority if in any locality school boards or teachers should be tempted to impose their religious views upon non-Protestants.

KOL NIDRE

By Mr. H. Eliassof

The eve of Yom Kippur, the day of Atonement is known as "Kol Nidre" because the first prayer of the old synagogue ritual for the Yom Kippur eve begins with the words "Kol Nidre." This prayer Kol Nidre has long since been eliminated from the modern Jewish prayer book, but still the name clings and has remained till this day among the Jews. The orthodox Jews still look upon the prayer of "Kol Nidre" with a certain awe and veneration, which is hard to understand, because the prayer is in the Aramaic language. It treats of a strictly prosaic subject and lacks all the finer touches of supplication which a heart laden with sorrow and suffering pours out before the heavenly Father in the hour of trial and tribulation. The following translation of this prayer will convince the reader that there is not a particle of lofty sentiment in the entire prayer: "All vows (Kol Nidre), obligations, oaths and anathema, whether called 'Konam,' 'Konas' or by any other name, which we may vow, or swear, or pledge, or whereby we may be bound from this Day of Atonement until the next (whose happy coming we await), we do repent. May they be deemed absolved, forgiven, annulled and void, and made of no effect; they shall not bind us nor have power over us. The vows shall not be reckoned vows; the obligations shall not be obligatory; nor the oaths be oaths." This prayer is repeated three times.

It seems that the prayer "Kol Nidre" was originally written in pure Hebrew, but was later translated into Aramaic. In the prayer book of Rabbi Amra and in other places it is printed in its original Hebrew text. It stands to reason that "Kol Nidre" from its very first appearance in the synagogue ritual became the cause of bitter attacks upon the Jews The Karaites were among the first ones to raise a storm of protest against this prayer, the anti-Semites joined in the chorus and the Meshumodim used it as a weapon against the Jews, trying to prove by it that the Jew is not to be trusted at all, that all his promises and obligations are wiped out by him by this prayer on the eve of Yom Kippur. The raging storm of attack really frightened the great religious teachers and some of them, like Rabbi Jehudah Gaon, removed it from the ritual, others made many changes in the prayer, and Rabbi Amram even declared in his prayer book that this "Kol Nidre" is a foolish prayer, but he did not dare to remove it from the ritual. And so it remained and spread over Asia, Africa and Europe and is still to be found in the orthodox Jewish ritual for Yom Kippur eve nearly all over the world.

It is hard to assign a cause for this persistency. Some say that it is due to the fact that the mind of the orthodox Jew is against any change in the old ritual, others state that the beautiful, tender and touching melody of "Kol Nidre" has helped to preserve the prayer. The melody begins softly, the tone is full of prayerful emotion and swells to a mighty outburst of triumph so that it makes a profound impression upon the heart of the Jew which is fully attuned to prayer on the eve of the Day of Atonement.

At the Rabbinical Conference held at Brunswick in 1844 the prayer of "Kol Nidre" was entirely abolished. The decision of the conference was accepted by many congregations of western Europe and in all American Reform congregations. But they retained the melody and adapted it to some Psalms or German hymn like "O Tag des Herrn." Even the Reform Jew likes to hear and is deeply impressed by the solemn strains of the "Kol Nidre" melody.

WORK OF A JEWISH CHAPLAIN

The work of Rev. Dr. Abraham Blum of New York, and his wife, in connection with the duties of the former as Jewish chaplain in New York State, is worthy of note. This work was begun nearly ten years ago, prior to which time there was no Jewish chaplain in any of the institutions of the state.

There are 35,000 patients in the various state insane asylums in the state of New York, of which number 2,200 are Jewish.

During the period from June, 1912, to June, 1913, 796 visits were made by Dr. Blum and wife to the various insane asylums, state hospitals, and the city hospital at Blackwell's island. Besides this Dr. Blum is also the Jewish chaplain of the New York Police Department. There are over 600 Jewish men on the police force, one inspector, one captain, several lieutenants, and a number of sergeants. Due to the efforts of Dr. Blum all the Jews on the police force have been excused from duty on the Day of Atonement.

The Otisville Sanitarium for consumptives at Otisville, New York, is entirely in charge of Mrs. Blum, who visits it weekly, holding services, giving religious instruction and inspecting the hospital and infirmary.

It is noteworthy that the city hospital in Blackwell's Island has a well regulated "kosher" kitchen.

THE KEHILLAH

BY PROF. DR. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH.

From time to time we read melancholy news in the Jewish papers, informing us that in some little town in Alsace a Jewish school was closed for lack of pupils, that from a village of Wurtemberg, the rabbi was transferred to another place, or that in some town of the province of Posen, the synagogue was sold, for lack of worshippers, there being only one family left in town, as the last remnant of what was once a flourishing congregation. These news items are the symptoms of the going out of existence of the old Kehillah. A good deal of poetry, of genuine religious devotion, of domestic felicity, in other words, a good deal of old Judaism is in this way disappearing. This movement began sixty-five years ago, when the revolution of 1848 brought to the Jew freedom of residence, and freedom of occupation, and when, as a consequence of these the general introduction of secular education, did away with that spiritual life of Judaism, which had existed in Europe for nearly a thousand years.

A number of poets, some gifted, some mediocre, have tried to preserve to us the memory of this stage of Jewish life in the last period of its existence. In this way the ghetto novel was created, the most gifted representatives of which are Leopold Kompert and Aaron Bernstein. Even the American public had an opportunity of being shown the evening of this peculiar life in the stories of Martha Wolfenstein. It must not be implied from the foregoing that I consider Karl Emil Franzos and Israel Zangwill inferior writers. They represent a different class of literature. Zangwill shows us the disappearance of old-fashioned life, transplanted to a foreign soil, while the novel of the Kehillah shows us this life on its native soil, affected by the inroads made by different conditions. In Franzos' novels, again we see a presentation of unchanged actual conditions, rather than that of a transition. Another important source of information are the rather scarce memoirs of people who have lived right at the dividing line of the two ages. It is in this sense, that I wish to supply some information.

My memory does not go far enough back to allow me to present the change in the really critical period. I was born in 1859, when the changed political and cultural conditions had already wrought havoc with the traditions of centuries, but I still saw some of the remaining representatives of olden times, who battled furiously against the attacks of a new era, and I had the benefit of the stories told me by old men and women, some of whom reached back to the last two decades of the eighteenth century. In order to give to the reader a clear presentation, I have to make him acquainted with the geographical background, for history cannot be comprehended, unless it is presented as a connected record of events, defined by time and space.

The Austrian province of Moravia, where I was born, and where my ancestors, both on my father's and mother's side, had resided at least since the end of the seventeenth century, has a history of its own. In fact this may be said of every section of a country where Jews were settled. The Jews of middle and lower Franconia, lived under conditions different from those in Upper Bavaria. The Jews of Leghorn in particular, and of Tuscany, in general, lived under conditions different from those in the Venetian republic, and from those in the papal states. The Jews in Alsace and Lorraine were in a situation quite different from those of their co-religionists in Southern France. The Jews in the province of Posen or in West Prussia had entirely different antecedents from those of their co-religionists in the province of Brandenburg. The main reason for such a condition is that the situation of the Jews depended almost entirely on the good or ill will of the first local ruler whose attitude toward them became the established one.

Moravia was part of the former kingdom of Bohemia, but even in this relatively circumscribed area, there was a difference in the condition of the Jews. For the first time we hear Jews of Moravia spoken of in a custom law, dating from the earliest years of the tenth century. It says that the Jews, coming from these regions, referring to Moravia, shall not pay more than the legal toll for their slaves and other merchandise, when they reach the Danube River. It is not likely that this statement refers to Jews who were actual settlers in that country. They very likely were residents of France and Italy, who went to the Slavic countries to buy slaves, the name of which is derived from "Slav," and at the same time bartered with other goods, carrying the manufactured goods of the more advanced western countries, as arms, tapestry, and oriental products, especially the high priced spices, to these newly opened countries, and exporting some of their natural producs. In the twelfth century, however, we have certainly permanent Jewish settlements that increased in numbers by the many fugitives, who left their homes on the Rhine on account of the persecution of the Crusaders. In the thirteenth century we find laws, regulating the condition of the Jews. They are patterned after the regulations issued by German emperors, since the end of the eleventh century. The Jew is protected in his religious worship, he regulates his internal affairs autonomously, and is mostly represented as trader, and money lender. The latter occupation had already begun to be the main source of livelihood for the Jews all over Europe for two reasons. The attacks of the Crusaders made any possession of the Jew unsafe, and therefore it was advisable for him to invest his money in bonds, which could easily be carried away, in case of trouble, and in addition, could be deposited in a safe place, as in the castle of his Lord, or in the archives of a cathedral. An important factor was also the economic development of these new countries. With their progress the Jew, who was a pioneer of commerce, was forced out of mercantile life, when it became more profitable, and with it, more honorable. Business and political conditions made the Jew a city dweller. There he afforded the banking facilities for the local industry, and there the landed proprietor could most easily find him, if he needed money. Political reasons added to this condition, for the Jew was under the protection of the king and therefore lived in the cities over which the king had jurisdiction and where he maintained his court, and whatever meager police protection could be obtained in these days.

All these conditions changed in the course of the fifteenth century. Economic life had further developed. The cities had now evolved a banking system of their own. Their political prestige had also increased, they were autonomous, and the Jews were expelled as inconvenient competitors, and as a politically obnoxious class, because they gave the king an opportunity to meddle with the municipal administration. The general law under such condition is that people, driven from their homes by political and economic causes, do not go any farther than they have to. Their business connection with the nobles, who in those days of political disintegration, also had acquired a considerable autonomy on their own estates, came in good stead. The noble was willing to let the Jews settle on his estates, where land was practically without value, and thus the Jew had a home, and the landed proprietor drew a revenue from a piece of ground which was not large enough for the pasture of a goat. The political difficulties in finding a home, and the desire for association, based on religious, as well as on social reasons, attracted more Jews to the same place, and so the Kehillah was established.

My Kehillah is called Kanitz. It is a town of three thousand people, to be exact, according to the last census. 3,022, of whom in the good olden times 600 were Jews. By the present railroad, which was built some forty years ago, it is about fifteen miles distant from Bruenn, the capital of the province. Before the railroad was built, people calculated the distance by hours, for they usually walked it, carrying their packs, and even when they rode in a farmer's wagon, driven by one horse, it was hardly less than the four hours, which people calculated when walking. Like all old communities, Kanitz has no record as to the time when the Jewish settlement began. I consider it probable that the settlement dates back to the end of the fifteenth century. In 1454 the Jews were expelled from Bruenn. In addition to the general economic condition, which drove the Jews from cities in those days, the kingdom of Bohemia had a religious war. The Hussites became more and more a dangerous power, and clericalism, to use a modern term, needed the fanaticism of the population to help maintain its power. An analogous case is found in modern times. In 1871 the new German empire was founded. Its ruler was a Protestant. The Catholics found that their position suffered by this fact. They took a stand against liberalism, and started an anti-Jewish movement. of which the first sign is the clerical agitation, initiated by Rohling's "Der Talmudjude." In the fifteenth century an Italian monk, John Capistrano, came as a revivalist to Bohemia, and in damning the Hussites, which was his main object, he fired the population against the Jews. In Breslau, which then was a part of the kingdom of Bohemia, a ritual murder and host desecration story, was staged, and a number of Jews were burned at the stake, the others expelled. The people of Bruenn were more fortunate, they got off with expulsion. Naturally they had to seek new homes, and sought them in the neighborhood of their former home. It is probable that the Lord, who then had his estates in, and around Kanitz, allowed them to pitch their tents there, and so they had, first of all, a roof over themselves and families, and could go back to Bruenn, spending the day in the city trading, or lending money, and in the evening, would most likely leave the city to spend the night in an inn, outside of the walls, to return next morning, and so continue their business until Friday, when they would trod home with their packs on their backs, unless they were fortunate enough to meet a farmer driving his wagon in the same way, who would allow them to drive with him, as far as their way was in common. In this way the Kehillah practically existed up to April, 1848, when the provisional constitution granted to the Jews freedom of residence.

A mass meeting to protest against the oppressions of the Jews by the Rumanian Government and its direct violation of the Berlin treaty was held at Cooper Union, New York City, on Sept. 30, 1913.

It was held under the auspices of the American Rumanian-Jewish Emancipation Committee and was attended by more than 1,000 persons, who listened to a number of United States Senators talk in behalf of our Rumanian co-religionists. Speaker Champ Clark, who was supposed to have acted as chairman of the evening, was unable to attend.

The meeting was opened by Bainbridge Colby, who acted as a chairman and who explained the mission of the gathering. He said that it was not the intention of the United States to appear officious, but simply to protest in the name of civilization against the inhuman treatment of the Jews in Rumania.

He was followed by Dr. Morris Isenberg, who protested against the discrimination of the Rumanian Government. He deplored the fact that in the twentieth century the Jew is still judged by the Shylocks and Judases, but not by the prophets and Jesus.

Imploring God that he may hasten the time when the people will not have to appeal to such individuals as King Charles I, Senator Clapp, after complimenting Walter E. Chandler representative from New York, said that he was sure the United States would find some way of aiding the Rumanian Jews. That the Jew, through the many centuries of oppression, has survived his persecutors, while their nemesis has always perished, were the contentions of Senator Clapp. He cited the Spain of today as paying for the sins of its ancient persecutions of the Jews, and he said that Rumania may meet the same fate if it keeps up its inhuman deeds.

During the meeting there was read a letter from the King of Roumania to the late Sir Moses Montefiore.

King Charles's letter to Sir Moses followed a conference on the subject of the condition of Jews in Roumania between the then prince and the baronet. At this conference King Charles made a verbal promise to Sir Moses Montefiore that the Jews would be fully recognized as citizens and accorded every protection by the government, which was positively prepared to go so far as to pass new laws, if necessary, to bring about Jewish equality with the Roumanians. Not satisfied with this verbal assurance, Sir Moses Montefiore later wrote King Charles asking that he put his promise in writing. It is King Charles's reply to this letter—now brought to light after a quarter of a century, in which the promise of King Charles was given.

The King's Letter.

Mister Baronet.—I have received your letter of Aug. 27, last, and I have read it with a lively interest. As I had the occasion to tell you verbally, the wishes which you voice toward your co-religionists are nearly accomplished

The Israelites are the object of my solicitude and of that of my government and I am glad that you have come to Roumania to convince yourself that the religious persecution of which those of bad intention have made so much agitation does not exist. If it has happened that some Israelites have been troubled these are only isolated cases for which my government does not assume the responsibility. I always shall use all my influence to have the religious freedom of the Jews respected, and I shall take pains to see laws shall be enacted which protect the Israelites as well as the other Roumanians as to their personality and to their properties.

Please receive, Mr. Baronet, the assurance of my very distinguished consideration. CHARLES.

Controceni, August, 1887. Prince's Palace.

A resolution requesting President Wilson to employ this country's treaty relations in conjunction with other nations in relieving Jews from oppression in Rumania, where it was declared, people of that race are being legislated against was adopted.

A resolution protesting against the Rumanian atrocities was presented by Judge Warren W. Foster. The resolution was later amended so as to protest also against the persecutions of the Russian and Polish Jews. It was passed in this form, and will be mailed to King Charles of Rumania.

A conference to relieve the conditions of the Rumanian Jews will be held in Berlin next January. The conference is to consist of prominent men from all over the world, and it is hoped that the delegates will be able to force the Rumanian Government to change its severe laws against the Jews.

The reratification of the Treaty of 1878 and the abolishing of the inhuman laws with which the Jews of Rumania are burdened will be the chief object of the conference. The aid of the Jews and the progressive nations of the world has been solicited.

REVIVING A GREAT LANGUAGE

A Hebrew daily paper has been launched in New York, the first Hebrew daily publication in the United States. It has started auspiciously, and bids fair to be a financial success.

There are many Yiddish newspapers and periodicals in this country. Yiddish is the common tongue of the Jews of Eastern and Southeastern Europe. By many it is mistaken for Hebrew, as it is written with the familiar Hebrew characters. It is, however, much nearer German. It is built on a German foundation, and has appropriated words not only from the Hebrew but also from several modern European languages. It is not a literary language, though it possesses a considerable literature.

It is the aim of a number of Jewish scholars to restore the classic Hebrew as the speech of the Jews. This is the language of the Old Testament, and one of the noblest of all tongues. At present it is known to comparatively few, though it is constantly in use in orthodox synagogs.

A parallel may perhaps be drawn with the endeavors of classicists of Greece of today who are indefatigable in their efforts to bring about the use of pure Attic in everyday speech. They have not come near success, but they have brought about somewhat of a compromise. The common tongue of the Greeks is now a much more elegant speech than that which was in universal use at the time of the winning of Greek independence.

Hebrew today is almost as dead as is ancient Greek. It is very difficult to revive a dead language; it has, in fact never been done. But the fact that the New York Hebrew daily starts with a considerable subscription list and is hailed with enthusiasm in some quarters seems to indicate that the achievement may not be impossible—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

BRING IDEALISM TO AMERICA.

"May we venture the hope that the great inflow of Jews to this country will reinforce that idealism which was planted here by the Puritans, who founded their faith traditions, law and government so closely upon the lines of the old dispensation?"—Bishop Laurence (Boston).

An Open Letter to the Tsar of Russia

Sire,—When you ascended the throne of the Russia Empire the expectations of your people ran high. They looked forward to a more humane reign than that which had just ended. They were yearning for reforms, for a sympathetic bond between the palace and the huts of the hungry and the homes of the oppressed. You were regarded as a young man of liberal tendencies, of advanced views. After your father's reactionary reign the Russian people longed for relief. But, alas, what an awakening was theirs!

Little by little the vision of a better day faded. Your people began to despair. Your supposed idealism failed to manifest itself in any of your acts. The evil genius of Pobiedonostzeff, of the Holy Synod, reigned supreme while he lived, and still rules Russia from his grave. A long list of charlatans and mad monks and illiterate fortune-tellers, beginning with Philippe, the barber of Marseilles, and ending with the Monk Iliador and Rasputin, have been in the ascendancy and have exerted a baneful influence at your court. Those who have counselled reform and have advocated liberal tendencies have become discredited and have been driven away.

The condition of the long-suffering nationalities of your Empire instead of ameliorating has become ever more tragic. Though you have special cause to be lenient with your Polish subjects, Poland has been bent under added burdens. Finland has become an autonomous government without autonomy, and it is gradually becoming converted into a Russian province. The Baptists and the Roman Catholics have suffered oppression. The Jews have experienced during your reign persecutions far more cruel than those which prevailed during the Middle Ages. New restrictious and new policies of hatred have been devised and directed against them. They have been driven from pillar to post. When the ghastly Kishineff massacres raged the world was shocked. The civilized nations protested. It is no longer a secret that these massacres were staged, planned, organized and executed by the aid of your Government. Your former Director of the Secret Police Department of the Russian Empire, M. Alexander Lopukhin, who investigated the cause of the massacres, reported to the late Premier Stolypin that the anti-Jewish proclamations inciting the populace against the Jews were printed on presses owned by the Police Department and were distributed by members of the Police Department.

Then you were drawn into a war with Japan by Admiral Alexieff and others of your advisers—men who sought the personal gain of power and wealth, and who led Russia headlong to ruin. The army and navy proved so demoralized by graft and debauchery, that in her struggle Russia revealed herself as a colossus upon feet of clay. Humiliated on land and sea, it was only by the ingenious statesmanship of Count Witte at Portsmouth that Russia was saved from utter disgrace.

On October 17 (Russian style), 1905, you signed the manifesto granting a constitution to Russia. You signed that document under pressure. You were frightened by the sweeping wave of revolution that was rising over the Russian land. You were informed that only such a measure could save your throne. By adopting it your throne has, for a time, been saved. On the day after the manifesto was issued, a counter-revolution was organized. Massacres broke out in hundreds of towns in various parts of Russia at the same hour and upon the same signal. Jews and intellectuals were attacked, plundered and killed. The gallows was revived in Russia. Men, women and children were hanged for offences punishable in civilized countries by a few months' imprisonment only. The prisons became overcrowded. The best of the Russian people were thrown into dungeons, or exiled to forsaken and pest-ridden regions to die there of starvation.

The story of the first and second Dumas is well known to the whole world. Every aspiration for liberty and justice that found vent in those national assemblies was withered in the bud. Every manifestation of independence was penalized. The voice of the people was silenced. The causes of the dispersion of the Russian Parliaments, and of the falling of the ceiling where the Duma assembled upon the seats of the opposition deputies, the imprisonment of the signers of the Viborg manifesto, the murder of the distinguished Jewish Duma deputies, Professor Herzenstein and M. Yollos by the Black Hundred organization, with the aid of Dr. Dubrovin, who is still one of your favorites—all these are no longer secrets to the outside world.

The restrictions directed against the Jews of Russia assumed shocking forms. Jewish soldiers who fought bravely in the Russo-Japanese war were driven from Moscow upon their return from the battlefield as soon as they could leave the hospital. They had no rights of domicile there. The Governor-General of Moscow, Hershelman, ordered the expulsion of a twelve-month-old Jewish boy, stating in his official order "the boy may be dangerous to the constituted régime of the Russian Empire."

Your father, Alexander III., once said to Count Sergius Witte:

"Is it true that you are so fond of the Jews?"

Count Witte replied:

"Permit me to answer you by another question. Suppose that you gather all the Jews of Russia, place them in ships on the Black Sea and then sink the ship. You would not do that, would you? The Jews must live among us, with us. Therefore we must give them the opportunity to live as we do. In my opinion, the only way of solving the Jewish question is to give the Jews equal rights."

Alexander III. was silent for awhile, and then remarked:

"Perhaps you are right."

You have gone much further than your father in your anti-Jewish policies. If you do not know, you should know that the Jews have contributed much to the development of Russia. Rubinstein may be said to have founded the Russian school of music. Antokolsky has made Russian sculpture to rank high. Levitan, a Jewish landscape painter, has taught the Russian people how to admire the landscapes of their own country. Prof. Elie Metchnikoff, head of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, the greatest living biologist, who exiled himself from Russia, ascribes his love for science to the influence of his Jewish mother. He has declared that Russia has lost through the persecution of the Jews some of the greatest scientists. The literature, art, and music of Russia have been popularized and made accessible in many lands outside of Russia by Jews.

Many of the Jews whom you have cruelly oppressed, have come over to America. They have adapted themselves here to the American conditions. They are making remarkable progress in every field of human activity. They have added to the wealth of the nation by their manufactures, their skill in innumerable trades which they practice here, but were forbidden to practice in their native land. They have widened the spheres of commerce. They have become patriotic anl law-abiding citizens. They and their adopted land have profited marvelously by the avidity with which they have availed themselves of the educational opportunities extended to them. Russia has lost and is suppressing forces which, if utilized, would develop her tremendous resources beyond the power of belief. How the Jews are regarded in this country may be surmised from the impressive manner in which Congress expressed its protest against the dishonor by Russia of American passports when borne by Jews. The violation of the treaty of 1832 by Russia by her discrimination against Jews was regarded an affront to the American people. The unanimous voice of America should have convinced you that the Jews have made good as American citizens.

Your advisers are misleading you with regard to the Jews in Russia. That is the most charitable view to take. To divert your attention from their own incompetency, they are pointing to the Jews as the cause of all the troubles that exist in Russia. To dievrt the attention of the Russian people from their real enemies, the officials are inciting the bestial passions of the mob against the Jews.

The best Jews of Russia are either in exile, in prison, or have been stifled into stupefaction. Though you prevent the best of them from serving Russia, you are employing the worst to serve you. You have engaged Jewish outcasts as spies and provocateurs. You have chosen as your agents the Azeffs and the Bogrovs, the assassins of your uncle, the Grand Duke Sergius, of Von Plehve, and of the late Premier Stolypin.

Your advisers have misled you, and you are now drifting to your ruin and plunging Russia into anarchy. You have become known as the "Pardoning Tsar," but you have limited your pardons to those who have participated in the massacres of the Jews. You are now striking a new blow at the Jews of your Empire by depriving them of the last opportunity to secure an education, and are attempting to carry out the diabolical plans of your reactionary advisers. Your laws are being so cunningly administered that the Jewish prostitute enjoys extensive rights, while the Jewish student girl has none. The yellow passport of prostitution gives a Jewish girl the right to live in your capital. The Jewish girl with the highest aspirations, who seeks an education in St. Petersburg, is driven out by the police.

And now, to add the crown of infamy, your Minister of Justice has staged a "ritual murder" case. Russia is here moving backward. Your own great-grandfather, Alexander I., by an official decree, prohibited ritual murder accusations against the Jews. But that was a hundred years ago. Papal bulls have been issued against them. The entire civilized world has declared their falsity. The pogrom policy can no longer be pursued effectively. The civilized nations have but recently protested against it in thunder-tones. Hence your advisers have revived an ancient and exploded falsehood to discredit the Jews, to stir the passions of the unthinking mob against them.

A Christian boy was murdered in Kieff. A Jew, Mendel Beilis, was found in the neighborhood and arrested, and has been imprisoned now for more than two years awaiting trial. He is charged with having killed the boy to secure his blood for ritual purposes. For more than two years the manufacture of the most absurd evidence against him has been in progress. The head of the Kieff Detective Bureau, M. Mistchuk, who reported that he could find no incriminating evidence and that he was convinced it was not a case of ritual murder, has been cast into prison for weakening the case of the Government against the Jew. All sorts of difficulties are being placed in the way of the defence. Beilis is denied the privilege of calling witnesses. It seems as though Russia is determined to strike at all the Jews through this infamous proceeding. She has closed her ears to the verdict of science. The impressive protest of the International Medical Congress, which has just concluded its session in London, passes unobserved.

This is not the letter of one who hates Russia, but of one who admires the Russia that has produced a great literature, that has given birth to great men and women, that is struggling for emancipation, that possesses marvelous possibilities in her industries and natural resources. It is the expression of one who, though he loves the land, shudders at these manifestations of mediæval bigotry and cruelty for which you are responsible in the eyes of the world and before God's throne.

How can you, the man who suggested the establishment of universal peace at the Hague, tolerate in the land in which you hold absolute sway, such refinement of barbarity and brutality, and yet venture to face the rulers of civilized powers as their equal? How can you permit the revival of long-exploded myths and superstitions? How, in short, do you expect to meet your Maker with such a burden upon your soul? Open your eyes! Observe the fruits that freedom bears under other skies! Drive from your land the dark spirits of intolerance and despotism which have made of it a charnel-house and a prison! Then a new light will dawn upon your vast domain and you can yet bring to its millions happiness and prosperity.—Reprinted from the Independent (New York).

DISRAELI HOUSE MARKED.

Through the courtesy of the Duke of Westminster a commemorative tablet to Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, has been placed on No. 25, Dark lane. The inscription runs:

"Here lived Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield, from 1839 to 1873."

It has been affixed to the wall on the left of the entrance to the house, which is in Upper Grosvenor street, and is of elegant design, in gray metal work, with an ornamental border.

THE BOYCOTT OF THE POLES AGAINST THE JEWS.

The boycott which the Poles of Warsaw declared against the Jews right after the last elections, in which the Jews defeated the anti-Semitic candidate, still continues with great bitterness. The worst of it is that it has spread to the country towns and villages and many Jewish small dealers are on the verge of ruin. Attempts are even now being made to carry the boycott into Austrian Poland, and if this should succeed it would undoubtedly prove a great economic calamity for the Jews of both countries.

A very interesting story was recently told in one of the papers how a Rabbi of one of the smaller Polish towns stopped the boycott of the peasants against the Jews. The story runs as follows:

In one of the smaller towns near Warsaw the regular market day was on Wednesday. On that day the farmers came to town with their products, which they sold to the Jews, and they bought from the Jews all they needed in supplies. One Wednesday the farmers came to market as usual, sold their products to the Jews, but refused to buy anything from them. The Jews were greatly alarmed and ran to the Rabbi for advice what to do. The Rabbi told them that next Wednesday they should not open their stores at all, but should all go to the synagogue and there await the turn of events. Market day came and the farmers were surprised to find all the Jewish stores closed and not a single Jew in the market place. They waited for some time, but no Jew came to buy anything from them. Then they went to the priest and asked him what holiday the Jews were celebrating that day. The priest called up the Rabbi and wanted to know what festival the Jews were having that day, and the Rabbi answered that the Jews were celebrating the same holiday which the farmers celebrated the previous Wednesday. The priest took the hint and advised the farmers to make peace with the Jews, and they did. Whether the story is true or not, it is well told and it illustrates fully how interdependent business makes men. It is to be hoped that the Poles will soon see the folly of the boycott and that peace will soon again reign in city and village.

CRIMINALITY IN NEW YORK.

The eighteenth annual report of the State Commission of Prisons of New York for the year 1912 is an interesting document and is replete with the usual information concerning the penal and correctional institutions of the State. Henry Solomon, favorably known through his close interest in the Montefiore Home, is the president of the Commission. It may interest our readers to have presented to them the following statistics relating to the Jewish criminal population of the State. Of 3,433 persons admitted to State prisons in the past year 314 were Jews. Similarly, 251 Jews out of a total of 1,737 were admitted to the reformatories in this period. To penitentiaries the admissions totaled 11,344; 373 of these were Jews It should be noted that, under this head, 296 Jews were admitted to the city penitentiary on Blackwell's Island out of a total of 2,782. In various jails and lockups throughout the State the Jews numbered 483 out of a grand total of 32,824 Finally, in the various district prisons and houses of detention of Greater New York there were 17,023 Jews and Jewesses out of 103,059 admitted prisoners Thus it is apparent that Jewish criminality in New York is much below the average of the Jewish proportion of the population of the State.

IN FAVOR OF THE JEWS.

The Congress of the United Organization of Russian Commerce, which was recently held in St. Petersburg, made a strong protest to the government against its anti-Semitic policy. The congress has shown that the government's policy of Jewish persecution is injurious to the best interests of the country.

This is not the first time that the Russian commercial world has come out in favor of the Jews. Every important gathering of Russian merchants held in the past few years recorded its protest against the persecution of the Jews. which is deterimental to the commercial interests of the country. The stand taken by the Russian merchants on this question at the recent congress, has already influenced the government not to permit the anti-Semites in the Duma to pass a law to nationalize the grain trade, by which it was intended to exclude the Jews from this business.

THE SITUATION IN RUMANIA

BY RABBI JULIAN MORGENSTERN, PH. D.

During the past summer history has been making itself in the Balkans in wondrous and unforeseen manner. After the seemingly complete triumph of the Balkan allies over improvident and unfortunate Turkey, and above all after the ascendancy of Bulgaria, came the strife over the division of the spoils, the dissolution of the alliance, civil war and the humiliation of Bulgaria, chiefly through the threat of Rumanian invasion. And as a result Turkey has regained a valuable part of her lost territory, a by no means lamentable fact in view of the atrocities of the Balkan allies in the conquered provinces, and Rumania has gained the coveted province of Silistria as the reward of her intervention in behalf of Servia and Greece. And the question which is now agitating not only the Jews, but even to a certain extent the great nations of the world, is what is to become of the Jews of the ceded province, and also what is to be done with the Jewish soldiers and their families, who bravely served as conscripts in the Rumanian army and rendered services, as efficient and patriotic as those of the most privileged Rumanian citizen, even though the rights of citizenship have been repeatedly denied them, and they have been systematically subjected by the Rumanian government to the most ruthless persecutions? What is to become of the Rumanian Jews?

Previous to the conclusion of the Russo-Turkish war in 1878 Rumania had enjoyed only the rank of a principality. In 1866 Charles of Hohenzollern was called to the throne. He immediately declared himself in favor of granting full rights of citizenship to all inhabitants of the country. A draft of a constitution was prepared, Article 6 of which declared that "religion is no obstacle to citizenship;" but "with regard to the Jews a special law will have to be framed in order to regulate their admission to naturalization and also to civil rights." So objectionable was this to the masses that a great uprising occurred in which the great synagogue at Bucharest was burned and many Jews were beaten, maimed, and robbed. Accordingly Article 6 was withdrawn and the following substituted, "only such aliens as are of the Christian faith may obtain citizenship." Thereafter and until the close of the Russo-Turkish war in 1878 the Jews of Rumania were subject to such persecutions and outrages that the powers of Europe felt justified in interfering and warning the Rumanian government against the repetition of these barbarities. And finally, when the Treaty of Berlin brought the Russo-Turkish war to an end, and the province of Dobrudja was ceded to Rumania in compensation for the loss of Bessarabia, taken by Russia, the powers stipulated in Article 44 of the treaty that the Jews of Rumania must receive full rights of citizenship. Accordingly the objectionable article of the constitution was abrogated and the following substituted, "the naturalization of aliens not under foreign protection shall in every individual case be decided by Parliament." This was but begging the question as could be readily seen. Yet no objection was raised by the powers, and Rumania became a kingdom, with Charles as king. In order to make a show of compliance with the terms of the Treaty of Berlin 883 Jews, who had participated in the war against Turkey, were admitted to citizenship by parliamentary vote. In the following twenty-five years but eighty-five more Jews were given the rights of citizenship. Thus the actual terms of the treaty were flaunted in the faces of the powers, who, however, engrossed in other matters, and probably too with other interests to consult, overlooked the entire matter. Nay more, for Rumania has steadily pursued a policy of Jewish repression and refined persecution, which, while not so frequently depriving the Jews of actual life, has nevertheless deprived them of all means of livelihood and reduced them to the most abject poverty, a poverty so complete and miserable in fact that the majority have not the means with which to emigrate. Yet, whereas after 1866 the powers had seen fit to protest, now that the Treaty of Berlin gave them the actual right of interference, not a single power of Europe, that had signed the treaty felt called upon to raise its voice or take the slightest cognizance of these persecutions. Finally in 1902, John Hay, then Secretary of State under President Roosevelt, addressed a note on behalf of the government of the United States to the powers signatory to the Treaty of Berlin, calling their attention to the Rumanian persecutions of the Jews in direct violation of the terms of the treaty. This action aroused intense opposition in the Rumanian press. Nevertheless it did bring a slight, but very slight, amelioration in Jewish conditions in Rumania. In spite of this, however, the powers have persisted in their silence, and Rumania has been permitted to continue its previous policy.

Meanwhile in Bulgaria the lot of the Jews, while by no means ideal, was infinitely better than in Rumania. Now, however, that Silistria, until now a Bulgarian province, has been ceded to Rumania, the question arises, what is to be the status of the Jews of this province? Furthermore the presence of so many thousand Jews in the Rumania army, and the undeniable merit of their service, has reopened the entire question of the position and rights of the Rumanian Jews. And perhaps something of advantage to the Jews will result now. Europe seems to be awakening at last. Already last June M. Clemenceau, former premier of France, and a man whose opinion carries great weight throughout Europe, published in his journal a stirring review of the position of the Jews of Rumania. In this he did not mince words, but boldly denounced the Rumanian government for its barbarities and flagrant violation of the terms of the Treaty of Berlin. Likewise in England Sir Edward Gray, British Minister of Foreign Affairs, reported to the Jewish Board of Deputies that he had been informed by the Rumanian government, through its minister to Great Britain, that it would grant equal political rights to the Jews of Silistria. The exact meaning of this is, of course, uncertain, nor are Rumanian promises to be too greatly relied on. In this country Mr. Bryan has sent an official communication to the Balkan states asking them in the course of their negotiations for peace to provide some means and suitable guarantee of civil and religious rights for the people of the newly acquired provinces. To this the Balkan states, under the leadership of M. Majoresco, Premier of Rumania, and President of the Balkan conference, replied that such action would be altogether superfluous, since such liberty is already guaranteed by the laws of all countries concerned. It was, of course, a diplomatic begging of the question, tantamount to a declaration that the desired action would not be taken. But probably the hands of our government are thereby officially tied.

Meanwhile the Jews of Rumania themselves, under the presidency of Dr. Adolphe Stern, their foremost representative, a man foremost in all Jewish activities, including those of the B'nai B'rith, have formed a Union of Native Jews of Rumania with the purpose of securing the rights of Rumanian citizenship for themselves. They have appealed to their American brethren for financial assistance to carry on their work. And it is to be hoped that their appeal will meet with the hearty response it deserves. They have already presented a petition for the improvement of their status to the King, and according to reports the King has endorsed this petition. Of course, that means but little in itself. Too much credence must not be placed in Rumanian promises and endorsements. Yet it does seem that recent events have given the Rumanian Jewish question a prominence which it has not enjoyed since the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin were so openly and flagrantly violated by Rumania. International sentiment seems to be crystallizing on this subject, and international sentiment is a mighty force in modern politics, that can well move nations and change policies. There is at least more room for hope than in many years. And meanwhile it would not be amiss for the Jews of America, through their proper organizations, the B'nai B'rith perhaps to inaugurate a nation-wide campaign to enlighten the American public on the Rumanian Jewish question and stir up American sentiment. Actions by state legislatures might have great weight in many directions. Certainly no worthy and influential aid should be neglected.

JUBILEE OF JEWISH EMANCIPATION.

Special thanksgiving services were held in all the more important Jewish communities of Switzerland recently to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the decision of that government granting full equality to the Jews.

THE I. O. B. B. DURING THE LAST DECADE

With the election of the lamented Leo N. Levi as President of the I. O. B. B., the Order emerged from its beaten path of charity and philanthropy, enlarged its sphere of activity and became engaged in so-called world work. In addition to its original purpose of elevating the masses to a higher plane and uniting them for a clearer realization of the sublime truths of Judaism, the Order has assumed the duty of safeguarding the rights of the Jews in all parts of the world. Alas, the career of Leo N. Levi was soon cut short, but the pathway which he cut out for the Order remained as a legacy to his successors. As a result of their efforts the barnacles of selfishness, personal benefits and advantages were eradicated to make place for a higher altruism, that of serving mankind. From this, however, it is not to be inferred that the wonted activity of the Order in the channels of benevolence was permitted to die out, nay, on the contrary, divested of selfish motives it became more enhanced, as evidenced by the creation of a number of institutions here and abroad. In naming a few of these it will serve to indicate the diversity of purposes and the multiplicity of avenues for the Order's benevolent activity.

B'nai B'rith Free Employment Bureau, Chicago, Ill.

Home for Jewish Orphans, Los Angeles, Cal.

Institute for Feeble-minded Children, Beelitz, Germany.

Jaffa Home for Orphans, Berlin, Germany.

Publication of Jewish literature for the youth, Berlin, Germany.

Institute for Girls, Jassy, Roumania.

Toynbee Hall, Vienna, Austria.

Care of Russian Pogrom Orphans, Berlin, Germany.

Establishment of Free Employment Bureaus in the larger cities of Germany.

As to the larger sphere of the Order's activity the following may be mentioned:

The Order took up the persecution of the Jews in Roumania and prevailed upon the American government to intercede, resulting in the Hay note to the signatory powers to the Berlin treaty calling upon them to enforce its stipulations as to equal rights for all inhabitants of Roumania, irrespective of creed or race.

It secured the intervention of the American Government in support of the protest against the Kishineff massacre.

It took the initiative in the issuance of the call for subscriptions in aid of the Russian pogrom victims.

It caused to be made known to the Russian government, through Count Witte, the sentiments of the American people concerning the persecution of the Jews.

It caused, through the intervention of the State Department, the removal of a Turkish official who persecuted Jewish inhabitants in his province.

It has fought for the retention of the "open door" policy as far as immigration is concerned, and opposed the passage of unjust immigration laws.

It was instrumental in a large degree in creating public opinion against discrimination of Jews by the Russian government, resulting in the abrogation of the Russian treaty.

It succeeded in causing the highest tribunal in Roumania to declare the "More Judaico" oath as illegal.

It brought to the attention of the American government that discrimination against the Jew is practiced in the United States army with the result that snubbery in the army was rebuked and the guilty officer reprimanded.

It caused the intervention of the American and foreign governments during the recent attacks against Jews in Saloniki

It was the first in the field to raise financial aid to the sufferers of the San Francisco earthquake, for the victims of the Galveston tidal wave, Constantinople conflagration, the Turkish earthquake and the Balkan war sufferers.

It was active in the efforts for securing equal rights for all the inhabitants of the Balkan States.

It made provision, during the great wave of immigration from Russia and Roumania, for the reception and alleviation of the refugees and the dispersal of them throughout the country.

It has awakened public conscience aroused official activity, secured important legislation and contributed large sums in the prosecution against the "White Slave Traffic."

We believe that there is need for an organization like the B'nai B'rith to emphasize the common interests, the common history, the common hope and peril of the Jewish people. And while our progress has at times been interrupted and our path bestrewn with obstacles. and while many of our efforts have not been crowned with success and some of our hopes remain unrealized, yet what we did accomplish inspires us to renewed efforts for the ultimate accomplishment of the Order's lofty aims.

THE SULTAN AND THE HAHAM BASHI.

The Sultan of Turkey gave the Haham Bashi an extremely affable reception, prior to his departure for Europe. After inviting the Haham to be seated by his side, the Sovereign inquired as to the object of the visit to Europe, and then said: "I hope that all my subjects, without distinction of religion, may be satisfied with the spirit of justice and good will mainfested by my Government. Through the divine grace the general situation of the country has been improved recently, and I doubt not that the Jews share my joy." The Haham Bashi made a dutiful reply, in the course of which he said that he would deem it his duty to assure his coreligionists abroad that the Jews in the Ottoman Empire considered themselves fortunate in living under the paternal protection of the Sultan and of the equitable administration of the Imperial Government. His Imperial Majesty warmly thanked Haham Nahoum Effendi for the sentiments of fidelity of the Ottoman Jews and for the sympathy shown by foreign Jews for Turkey.

HIGH OFFICE FOR A JEW.

Mr. David Sassoon, the Deputy from Bagdad, was appointed to the position of Associate Minister of Commerce in Turkey. Mr. Sassoon is regarded as one of the ablest members of the Turkish Chamber of Deputies and it is expected that his appointment will help to improve Turkish commerce.

NOTED ENGLISH RABBI IN NEW YORK.

Rev. Dr. Moses Hyamson, one of the noted rabbis of England, arrived in New York City to take charge of Congregation Orach Chaim. The New York congregation doubled its subscriptions to make certain the coming of the British rabbi, and it was announced that the election was for life, an unusual procedure and a well deserved compliment.

RESTORATION OF THE OLD SYNAGOGUE AT CRACOW.

The historically interesting old synagogue at Cracow has for several years past been undergoing restoration. Towards the heavy cost of the work considerable contributions have been given by the Galician Diet as well as by the Cracow Savings Bank and the Cracow Jewish community. But as the sums thus provided were inadequate to complete the restoration, the work was suspended about a year and a half ago. On the application of the Restoration Committee, the Austrian Government expressed its willingness to grant a subvention on condition that the plans for the restoration completed so far should be altered to meet the demands of the Central Committee for the Preservation of Historical Monuments in Vienna. After prolonged negotiations, an arrangement has been come to with the result that the Austrian Government has seen its way to vote a grant of fifteen thousand crowns, thereby assuring the preservation of this famous Jewish historical building.

The post of Chief Burgomaster of Buda-Pesth, having become vacant through the recent death of the Jew. Dr. Heltai, the Government approached another coreligionist, Dr. Moritz Mezei. with a view to his accepting the position Dr. Mezei, who is an ex-member of the Chamber of Deputies, has, owing to advanced age and delicate health, been obliged to decline the honor.

HONOR FOR JEWISH POET.

It is reported that the Emperor of Austria will confer the Order of St Stephen (one of the greatest honors the Sovereign can bestow) on Herr Joseph Kiss, the famous Hungarian Jewish poet, when he celebrates his seventieth birthday.

NEWS FROM LONDON

BY OUR CORRESPONDENT DR. M. EPSTEIN

London, Sept. 18, 1913.

The religious New Year synchronizes in this country with the beginning of communal activity after the summer recess. There is therefore little to chronicle of internal and home affairs, for the communal wheels are at rest. This year, particularly, local events are overshadowed by great world questions in which all men alike are interested. For nearly a year war, with all its horrors, has been rampant in the Balkans. Peace is now in sight, and the new boundaries of Turkey have been practically settled. Never since 1878 has the interest of the civilized world centered more on this hot-bed of anarchy than at the present moment. The states who were but recently allies receive their meed of attention, of course; they will soon require loans. But it is to Turkey that all men's eyes are turned, and beyond Turkey to the near East. The "fascinating East" it has been called. Fascinating it certainly is to the traveller privileged to see its curious lights and shadows, its clear skies, its sandy wastes and its dusky faces. But it is no less fascinating to the student of political events and possibilities. What will now happen to the Sultan's realm? Driven almost entirely from Europe, despoiled of possessions he has held for nearly five centuries, the Turk will now concentrate on his dominions in Asia. What will he achieve?

Time alone will answer the question, which possibly may have more interest for Jews than for anyone else. Let it not be forgotten that Palestine is under Turkish rule; the destiny of Palestine, therefore, is of consequence to the Jewish people. It is curious to observe that until quite recently non-Jews knew more about the Holy Land than those whose ancestors lived there. A change, it is true, is gradually coming about, and it must be admitted that the Zionist movement has done much to revive the interest of Jews in Erez Yisroel. In England this has been one of the most promising features of our intellectual life. Mention the word Zionism and most people fled; but for Palestine even the detached Jew lent a sympathetic ear. Hence the very successful Palestine Bazaar of last year; hence, too, the excellent Palestine Drawing Room Meetings. Hostesses gladly lent their houses for a talk about Palestine or some aspect of life there, and people came readily to learn. The movement has shown much promise, and an attempt will be made this coming winter to form a society charged with fostering an interest in Palestine. Only good can come of such a movement; it will spread knowledge and deepen the Jewish consciousness. The London Lodge will look on its efforts with great hope.

Many of those who have devoted themselves to this movement are brethren of the Order, and it ought not to remain unrecorded that the influence of the Order and the Lodge manifests itself indirectly in this fashion. At the Lodge a man learns that certain ideals should have stress laid upon them. Consciously or not, those ideals go with him in all his activities—be it as member of a local synagogue committee, or of a charitable society or of the new Palestine Movement. Whatever the particular channel may be, the net result is a quickening of the Jewish spirit, and for this the Order may surely take credit.

In a larger way, also, Palestine has recently become the land of interest. All nations are attempting to obtain there privileges of one sort or another. The Germans would like something; the English, some people prophecy, will one day obtain much, but in the meantime the French have actually been given extensive concessions for railway building. The railways of Syria are not numerous. There is a standard gauge line from Aleppo through Hassa and Homs, and at Rayak this line is joined by the narrow gauge line from Beirut. To build a new line from Rayak on the north to Lydda (on the way to Jerusalem) in the south is the concession which the French have obtained. As yet there can be no details as to the exact course of the line, but its southern section to Lydda will probably pass through the Jordan valley, a district both beautiful and fruitful, and capable of great agricultural development. The new railway will open up possibilities for vast economic activities, and it certainly is good news that the plan is about to be carried out.

But there is a fly in the ointment: the concessions have not been obtained by Jews. It will be joyful news indeed when we learn, if ever we do, that Jews are to undertake some large scheme in Palestine. Of course the Jewish colonists will profit by the establishment of the new line. But the railway is a permanency; it means foreign influence over a long space of years, and the existence of foreign influence excludes Jewish influence. Nevertheless, we must be grateful for small mercies. By whomsoever established, the line will bring economic prosperity to the land that is desolate. There are fanatics indeed who cry, "A line built by a Jewish organization, or no line at all!" Fortunately the innate common sense of most Jews will surely reject such a view. Surely most people will say the best thing would have been a "Jewish" railway. But failing that, the next best thing is a railway—French or German, or what you will.

One point in all this is clear. Once again we see the truth of the old adage that "Money answereth all things." Why did the French obtain the railway concession? Because they are in a position to grant Turkey a loan. The moral is obvious, and more stress might have been laid upon it at the recent Zionist Congress in Vienna. Whether Zionism appeals to him or not, no Jew can possibly feel quite unmoved as he thinks of this assembly of Jews from all over the world coming together to discuss large Jewish questions. It is the largeness that is so refreshing. In the Anglo-Jewish community we have "village pump politics," and petty personal differences in abundance. They seem to grow from year to year. They bear witness to our poverty of great leaders with large minds and large ideas. It is so with us; we wonder if you in America fare any better. We sincerely hope so. After all, the American problems are bound to be larger than ours, and the Jews in the land of unlimited possibilities present a picture of vast energy, quick-moving activity and results that we in England would fain achieve. Yet although there is not the same interest here in the doings of the Zionist Congress as there is in those of American Jewry, nevertheless the number of people who care to hear about the Zionist activities has gradually grown of late. The Congress this year was, outwardly, much like that of previous years. The addresses dealt with much the same problems; there was the same unruly conduct; and pretty much the same differences of opinion. But the Congress must not be condemned because of these things. There was some inwardness, too, and it made, on the whole, for a better understanding between the two wings of the movement.

Only one question was new—the establishment of a Jewish University at Jerusalem. Strange how this idea strikes the imagination of all Jews! Already a sum of money has been forthcoming for this object, though for the moment it has been merely mooted. The Congress welcomed the proposition and a committee will be appointed to deal with it. No university was ever built in a day. A Jewish university will take many long years to come into being. But it is much that the question has been raised. It brings it within the bounds of possibility. Of one thing we may be sure, the idea of the university in Jerusalem will appeal to all Jews, no matter how much they differ in other respects, and quite regardless of their attitude to Zionism. If then the university becomes a bond uniting Jews together, the Vienna Congress of 1913 may win such renown for itself in the annals of Jewish history, as even its most sanguine members never dared to dream of. The last Jewish university was at Jabneh; that was about eighteen and a half centuries ago. When will the Jewsih university at Jerusalem be established? Whenever it be, it is not too much to say that it may count on the good will of the I. O. B. B.

But all that is for the future; it is for the young men to dream dreams and see visions. And the old men? They have their memories. Among these the struggle for Jewish emancipation must of necessity stand out. The story is fascinating, whether it refers to Germany, France, England or Switzerland. It is just fifty years since the Jews in the last-named country were granted full political liberty, and last month celebrations of the event took place in all the larger Swiss communities. As elsewhere, the victory did not come without a struggle, and the story in Switzerland is characterized by parallels from modern times. They say there is nothing new under the sun. Today the United States, by means of the Commercial Treaty, is bringing pressure to bear on Russia to treat Jews a little more justly. Fifty years ago France threatened to use the same weapon against Switzerland for the same end, and was supported by the United States and Holland. Fifty years ago it was successful, and though Shechita is still forbidden in Switzerland, nevertheless Jews enjoy full political rights there, taking their place in politics and literature in justice and in the army.

Two ideas suggest themselves to the mind as one thinks of celebrations such as these. It seems so elementary a principle of human right that all the citizens in any state shall enjoy equal treatment. Yet the Jews have had that right only for half a century, and even so, do not enjoy it everywhere, despite Rousseau, Montesquieu and the French Revolution. And to think of what the Jews have given the world! Yet so appreciative are we that we organize special services at which we express our gratitude for the work of the pioneers in the fight. In reality those to hold the services should be the people who made the grant fifty years ago. The services would give them an opportunity of expressing their gratitude that fifty years ago they were sufficiently advanced to recognize a fact of elementary justice. But then Jews are still grateful for small mercies. Whether they will always adopt this attitude is not by any means certain. The generation which is arising have been trained in the school of democracy, and bear upon them the marks of democracy, good and bad. Among the former is undoubtedly the demand for justice of treatment. The Swiss Emancipation commemoration services do show that the world has progressed in the last half century.

But what of the Jews themselves? It is as yet too early to draw conclusions as to the real and lasting effects of emancipation. Fifty years in the life of a people is but a short space. We need much more to see the good of emancipation in all its completeness. At first there was, as it were, a rush out of the ghetto gates in all directions. The emancipated Jews were dazzled by the light of freedom, and their new environment worked curious results. To begin with, there was a widespread tendency to apostasy. But that has gradually ceased, and in Germany today one is able to see the reaction in a marked degree. A new "emancipated tradition" (if we may call it so) has arisen, and tradition is a mighty force in life. It is true there are mixed marriages still. In Germany they appear to increase in a most horrifying degree; they are beginning to be observed in England despite the fact that we have no statistics. One meets them everywhere. In Scandinavian lands the Jews appear to have become decimated by the process. Pessimists may shake their heads; but Jews have always been optimists. Despite the increase of mixed marriages, Jewish life is healthy, even in Scandinavian lands. You never can tell what time may bring forth. Fifty years of emancipation is not sufficient for final tendencies to manifest themselves. Of course, no subject is so easy of generalization; but the belief in Israel's future is a reality. Anyway the Order cultivates it.

An interesting publication has been recently issued by the Home Secretary. It contains the results of a census of the religious persecutions of the inmates of His Majesty's prisons in England and Wales. The total number was 18,225. Of these 13,891 stated on reception that they belonged to the Church of England, though on personal inquiry among them later, it was discovered that only 12,957 were Angelicans. The Jews, as stated by prisoners on reception, numbered 133; as ascertained by personal inquiry, they totalled 169. This works out at 0.9 of the whole. It is not a pleasant fact. The people who in gratitude say Ata vechartanu should have none among them inmates of houses of correction. But we must draw comfort from the smallness of the percentage. It might have been bigger.

Our theatrical season is now in full swing, and among the attractions is a play at His Majesty's Theater entitled Joseph and His Brethren. Biblical stories on the stage are not unknown to students of literature, but in modern times they have been uncommon. Sir Herbert Tree is therefore embarking on something new in presenting the play to the public. Let it be said at once that controversy was bound to arise, and arise it did. Some people fear lest reverence for the Bible stories be weakened by stage representation. Others hold the contrary opinion. About the play itself there seems to be agreement, it is an elaboration of the simple Bible story, with a dash of modern ideas in it, and the language does not compare with the musical and classical Bible narrative. Wherein, then, does the virtue of it all lie? In the spectacular aspect. As in most of his productions, Sir Herbert Tree has been successful in catching and reproducing the spirit of the thing. Here you may see a lovely picture of Joseph and his sheep, of the patriarch amid his family, of Egyptian life and movement. There is an attempt to give the poetry of it all. And herein lies its value. Jews and non-Jews alike will profit by the spectacle, and to Jews these scenes from their early history (whether they are regarded as true or legendary is beside the mark) as they are enacted on an English stage in the year of grace, 1913, should stir up the consciousness of their ancient and honorable lineage. Greek plays we have had in abundance; we have witnessed Roman plays, and such as dealt with Germanic antiquity. Here for the first time we are able to watch a play dealing with Jewish origins.

Our readers will no doubt have been informed in the general press of the death of Professor Vambery, the Orientalist of Budapest. Of his scholarship there is no need to say much here; it was unqiue and it was extensive. Of his reception in London in the sixties and his influence on English foreign policy in the near East the daily papers doubtless have dealt with all appropriateness. They will probably also have mentioned his royal friendships, with Queen Victoria, with King Edward, and with King George, who sent a telegram of sympathy to Vambery's son. All this we know. But the reflexion on Vambery's life is that it was typical of Jewish energy, of a way the Jew has of overcoming difficulties, of Jewish grit and determination, and of the Jew's love of knowledge. Vambery was an example of all this who was much in the public eye; the London Times devoted a whole column to his obituary notice. But how many similar cases are there of lesser men who show the same qualities in their lives! London knows them; doubtless New York knows them, too, and Philadelphia and San Francisco. They are the stuff of which desirable citizens are made. And when one wanders through the streets of Whitechapel with all their grimness and dirt, and looks upon the children at their play, the thought of Vambery is exceedingly comforting. They, too, have the power of resistance within them, and the love of knowledge. It is for us only to direct it aright, and in this work, by laying stress on Jewish ideals, the London Lodge is working apace.

One word more about Vambery. It is an interesting comment on English ways and more especially on Edward VII. In his book, "The Story of My Struggles," (1864), Vambery wrote of the late King:

"During all the time he was Prince of Wales he never missed an opportunity of showing his appreciation of my literary labors. * * * Having noticed during his visit to Budapest that the Hungarian aristocracy did not pay the same honor to the man of letters as was done in London, he gave an evening party and appeared in the drawing-room arm in arm with the present writer, whom he introduced to the assembled guests as "My friend, Professor Vambery."

DEFAMING THE JEW.

What the Order is striving to effect with the Anti-Defamation League, which it is planning to create under its auspices, President Kraus's communication is explicit enough to have made it clear to the press and the public alike. In the course of ordinary affairs, the Jew is capable of enjoying a jest at his own expense quite as complacently as any other citizen. We also understand that caricatures are necessarily overdrawn and overdone. As we leave those places of amusement where a stage Jew has evoked merriment, we are confident that it's all a joke and that the Jew in life is by no means so bad or avaricious or vulgar. Each one of us, moreover, flatters himself that it is the other Jew that is meant. But there are some points that must not be overlooked. In the first instance, there is an element of sober seriousness, of a desire to hurt with malice prepense, that enters into the "play" and turns the jest into an avowed insult. No man of honor, no people of a reputation like the Jewish, will pocket an insult. The impersonating actor or the clever caricaturist or the brilliant essayist or novelist may or may not know what they are doing, there is the hidden motive to pander to prejudice and to rouse the dormant instincts of racial hatred. Laughter is one thing and gloating with malicious joy quite another.

In the second place, no matter how innocent the intent, the consequences are often enormous beyond the dream of the original instigators. A French savant or a German philosopher may coin a phrase or evolve a formula in their quiet study; they will be shocked when we tell them that the excesses of the mobs, the bloody pogroms, the gruesome libels which make a travesty of justice, are all traceable to a clever word escaped in an unguarded moment The wit may only be selfish, bent upon pleasing a momentary whim, but the masses that translate the jest into practice are brutal. Dare to calumniate; there will always remain a particle that sticks. When once calumny [illegible] to fasten itself on, it will require double and treble the effort to re[illegible] to make it nugatory.

[illegible] too late to eradicate preju[illegible] they have taken root. Some prejudice will always linger no matter how hard we work to stamp it out. Much of it is imbedded in instinct. But a good part of it rests on ignorance. A minority will always be a ready victim because, forsooth, it is in so many respects dissimilar. Our Catholic fellow-citizens are in this country pretty much in the same predicament as we Jews are. They do not calmly sit by in idleness. Their resentment of gratuitous insult takes the form of conscious effort and systematic activity. They meet calumny by vigorous denial, ignorance by enlightenment. They have their Truth Societies for the spreading of information calculated to set their doctrines and actions in the right light. They meet vicious arguments by cogent reasoning; to the spurious philosophies of the day they oppose a merciless logic; they combat blind misrepresentation with the weapon of common sense. On the social side they may have less to contend with; surely, on the intellectual and religious side our case is far easier to defend. But defend ourselves and our position we must.

From times immemorial we have been subject to calumny born of hatred. The poor peddler beyond the Tiber was an object of ridicule to the satirist no less than he is today in New York to the penny-a-liner of a degraded press. The Jewish people was maligned by the historians of imperial Rome as it is in our own time caricatured by the writers of fame in Germany. Did we in the past sit by idly? Was not Philo lured from a life of contemplation and study to head an embassy before the Roman court? Did not Josephus spend his best days in presenting to the world, the reading world, a picture of his people worthy of its great achievements? And nearer our own day, Gabriel Riesser appealed to reason and intelligence above the ignoble noise of the "hep, hep" cries of the populace, and Martin Schreiner crowned a scholarly activity terminated alas by loss of reason over the misfortunes of his people, with that masterly refutation of the onslaughts of the philosophical school of anti-Semites and his eloquent appeal to martyrdom on behalf of truth and self-respect. If the activity engendered by the Order will serve to do nothing else but strengthen the self-respect of the Jew himself, it will have accomplished much.

But more will be accomplished. Truth must be victorious. Ignorance cannot withstand the rays of enlightenment. There are enough right-minded people about us who will second our efforts once they realize the consequences which cannot but be a blot upon the fair name of the land of the free. Ours must be initiative; others will follow suit. A beginning must be made. The virulent poison in the cesspools of prejudice can be removed only when we cleanse the source of its impunities. Let the "innocent" defamation of the Jew cease and the massacres and libels will be a thing of the past. The appeal must go forth to all self-respecting Jews and to all citizens in this country who are lovers of fair play to stop calumny and vituperation, misrepresentation and falsification of the truth. We are not self-righteous to ignore our weaknesses and errors. But we have a right to demand that the Jew be judged individually and not collectively, and above all that we be given an opportunity to defend ourselves when our fair name is tarnished wilfully and shamelessly. Correction we will cheerfully accept; but there must be no more of defamation, of conscious or thoughtless misrepresentation, of gross exaggeration. Let the truth about us be known and nothing but the truth. The rest will take care of itself.

WILL THE CZAR LISTEN?

Where public opinion truly represents the voice of the people and is not artificially engineered from above, an appeal to an individual, and be he the powerful ruler on the throne, would be useless as it is uncalled for. But in Holy Russia it is well known how the voice of the people is stifled by ministerial secret communications and by a venal press, how the fortunes of a class of citizens are made or marred by the ukase of the autocrat. Hence it is that the Open Letter to the Czar of Russia which has appeared in the Independent must be commended by all who know Russian affairs. The epistle constitutes a powerful indictment. Cautious and courteous in tone, it lays bare manfully and truthfully the public career of the present scion of the Romanovs. It reminds him of hollow phrases on behalf of peace among nations, of insincere promises of liberty of conscience and of constitutional government. It points out how the fate of the Russian Jew has gone from bad to worse, thanks to the intrigues and machinations fostered by the Czar's own advisers and the court clique by which he is surrounded. It makes known to him the opinion of the enlightened world concerning the enormous libel against the Jewish religion which his own minister of justice has seen fit to foster and encourage. The appeal goes forth to him to put a stop to this diabolical accusation. But will the Czar listen?

A more hard-hearted and obdurate Pharaoh never sat upon a royal throne. Opinion differs as to the capacity of the present Russian ruler. Some ascribe to him initiative born of high intelligence, and some again proclaim him an imbecile. A bigot he certainly is, nurtured in prejudice. Moreover, he is persuaded that the counter-revolution will stamp out the liberal stirrings in the people. He gave his word for enfranchising the people when so to speak the nozzle of a gun was held to his face. But he is convinced that the revolution was an abortive movement. He takes back with his right hand what he gave with his left. The Duma is but the phantom of a parliament. It is truly a talking body. Elections are manipulated in the interest of the government. The will of the Czar is paramount. He fears the recrudescense of revolutionary activity. And so he is bent upon stifling it betimes. The Jews, his advisers tell him, are revolutionaries. It would be marvelous if it were otherwise. Yet it is not so. Jews have participated in rebellion. Is it not expected that they identify themselves with the political and social movements of their country? They certainly ought to be free to ally themselves with this or the other party according to their convictions. Where the Jews are not exposed to constant harassment and persecution, they normally find themselves in the main parties of a country according to their individual preferences. If it should not be so in Russia, the fault is the government's. At any rate, for political reasons of a questionable kind, to insure the stability of autocracy in the face of the aroused opposition in the ranks of the Russians themselves, an artificial reaction is created and subventioned by the minions of the throne. For the sake of a questionable prerogative, which must sooner or later crumble to pieces, the Jewish youth is denied the facilities of education, because perchance Jewish schoolboys foolishly are enmeshed in the toils of revolution. Their own comrades of Russian extraction would despise them if they refused to join them in the warfare against an outworn regime which is a scandal and a shame. We Jews would wish that it were otherwise, that the love of their own and the regard for the dangers to the Jewish people would impel the Jewish youth of Russia to refrain from enlisting in the cause of rebellion. But the hold which the Jewish religion formerly had upon the rising generation has been weakened and is constantly being undermined by the government. For it is a self-contradictory government, ready to snap at any device for strengthening itself, and yet again and again undoing its own work by foolish and vacillating policies.

But the crime against the Jewish youth bids fair to be outdone by the dastardly slander against the Jewish religion which the Czar, were he so minded, could quash by the stroke of a pen. It is a notorious fact that the court which meets at Kiev is under secret orders of the central government, that the backbone of the propaganda for the vilification of the Jewish people receives its strength from direct governmental inspiration. The motive is self evident. To crush the Jew, the stroke is leveled against that which he holds in dearest veneration. What if the unfortunate Beilis for lack of evidence goes free. The court is ready to sustain the charge against the Jewish people It is to be suspended over the heads of Russian Jewry like a Damocles sword Let but a Russian lad disappear, and immediately the cry will be raised, Ritual murder. To cow the Jew into abject fear, that is the policy of a wicked throne.

The Czar, we fear, will not listen. Perhaps that some day he will be made to listen, when the measure of his iniquities is full to the brim, when another war of unholy conquest will shatter the foundations of his empire, when the hand of God will rest heavy upon the people he has so ignominiously betrayed. Until then, it is just as well that the appeal should go forth. The Czar witll not listen. But the civilized world will. Let the hypocrite barbarian be unmasked Let righteous indignation take hold of all those who are not lost to a sense of shame in Russia itself. We are confident that, were it not for the nefarious activity of the court, the Russian people, free to express their opinions, would call a halt to internecine warfare, would enlist the healthful activity of the Jew industrially, socially, politically, for the welfare of Russia itself. The Jew is ready to do his share in upbuilding the great empire which now for the most part is shut against him. If pacification is the order of the day in that unfortunate country, let true peace prevail, let a class of citizens who are everywhere for peace and its blessings be enfranchised that they may help in the permanent establishment of a righteous and helpful government. The Czar will not listen, but Russia will some day. Meanwhile, the Western world will listen That is some gain.

DR. S. WOLFENSTEIN.

After thirty-five years of service to child-welfare, Dr. Samuel Wolfenstein has resigned his position as Superintendent of the Jewish Orphan Asylum of Cleveland, Ohio. This incident, while noteworthy in itself, is of special import to us, the asylum being a B'nai B'rith institution. Dr. Wolfenstein, by his loving care to the orphans and splendid management of the Home, has placed it in the forefront of eleemosynary institutions and thereby added lustre to the record of the B'nai B'rith Order. And though he will no longer be actively engaged in the asylum's work, we hope that his beneficent influence will be felt and that the Home will continue to receive the benefit of his experience and wisdom.

As for Dr. Wolfenstein, our earnest hope is that he may enjoy for many many years to come rest and ease, a well deserved reward for his labors of a lifetime.

BEN B'RITH HONORED.

Mr. Henry Morgenthau, recently appointed by President Wilson as Minister to Turkey, is a member of Jordan Lodge No. 15, I. O. B. B. of New York City

CONGRATULATIONS.

The B'nai B'rith News, on behalf of the members of the Order, congratulates Dr. Berthold Timendorfer, President of District Grand Lodge No. 8, Germany, upon the occasion of his 60th birthday anniversary and wishes him many more years of happiness and service.

We also extend greetings and congratulations to Dr. Hugo Kuznitzky, First Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 8, and his wife on the occasion of their silver wedding anniversary.

NAT STRAUSS.

Sept. 10, 1913, was the anniversary of the birth of Brother Nat Strauss of New Orleans, Grand Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 7. On that day he completed his 79th year and expected to pass the day quietly in the bosom of his family. His friends, however, provided otherwise and arranged a luncheon in his honor, which he was obliged to attend, and in which a large number of his friends participated. In the evening callers began to drop in, delegations from the Orphan Home, Touro Infirmary, joint committee of the B'nai B'rith Lodges, and many individuals, who called to offer their felicitations and present him with flowers. Brother Strauss responded in fitting terms to the numerous expressions of friendship and affection that were voiced.

The B'nai B'rith News, on behalf of the entire fraternity, among whom Brother Strauss counts his friends and admirers by legion, congratulates Brother Strauss upon his having reached such a ripe age in the full enjoyment of his health, and expresses the hope that he may be spared for many, many years to come.

HOLLAND AND ITS JEWS.

Recently fresh illustrations of the consideration of Holland and its royal house for the Jewish people have been made public. In the course of an audience which the Queen of Holland gave to Mr. L. A. Wagenaar, President of the Council of the Jewish community of Amsterdam, Her Majesty promised that she would do her best to be faithful to the traditions of the House of Orange with respect to the good understanding between the dynasty and its Jewish subjects.

The Queen of Holland has appointed Prof. D. J. Pitta of Amsterdam, an active worker in the Jewish community, to be a member of the Council of State, and conferred knighthood on the President of the Jewish community of Nijmegen. It is also announced that the provisional states of Friesland have elected the president of the diamond workers union, Mr. H. Polak, a co-religionist, to the First Chamber of the States General.

BIBLE BARRED FROM PORTLAND SCHOOLS.

The proposed resolutions by the Portland Ministerial Association of reading the Bible in public schools of Portland, Ore., was defeated at a meeting of the School Board on Sept. 23, 1913.

The local B'nai B'rith Lodges took official cognizance of the matter and appointed committees to present a protest. The committees, composed of Rabbi J. Bloch, Rabbi J. B. Wise, Dr. A. G. Betman, David N. Mosessohn, Dr. A. Tilzer and Dr. G. Rubenstein, met and selected Dr. Wise as their spokesman before the School Board. Dr. Wise also represented Temple Beth Israel.

At a meeting of the Board statements were presented by Dr. Wise, David N. Mosessohn and others.

An attempt was made to delay action by the Board. This was prevented by a member of the Board, who insisted on an immediate vote. This resulted in an unanimous rejection of the demands of the Ministerial Association.

JEWS TO ERECT GAYNOR MONUMENT.

At a meeting in a Brownsville synagogue in New York held on Sept. 28th memorial services were held in honor of the late Mayor Gaynor. At the close of the services addresses were made by Rabbi Nathan Krass of Brooklyn, and others, eulogizing Mayor Gaynor for the great services he rendered to humanity. At the close of the memorial services a subscription was started to erect a monument to Mr. Gaynor in the Brownsville public playground.

LAYING OF CORNER STONE FOR LEO N. LEVI MEMORIAL HOSPITAL.

The ceremonies attending the laying of the corner stone of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital will be held in the afternoon of November 2, 1913, at Hot Springs, Ark. This will be the first national Jewish hospital for the treatment of rheumatism, and blood diseases, and will be of great benefit to various relief societies throughout the country which are often encumbered with expensive cases that can be benefited, and in many instances cured, with very little expense at Hot Springs.

The federal government has agreed to furnish free of cost the use of the springs for the hospital, and baths will be given in the building. Provision will be made for 50 beds, and as the usual course of treatment requires but three weeks and the season is continuous, approximately a thousand cases can be taken care of each year.

In previous years the small local Jewish community cared for such unfortunates as drifted to Hot Springs in search of relief. About six years ago District Grand Lodge No. 7 took official cognizance of the situation and appointed a committee to take care of the poor unfortunates. Subsequently it was resolved by District Grand Lodge No. 7 that the necessity for the erection and maintenance of a hospital had arrived and recommended its early consideration. Thereupon an appeal was made for a maintenance fund for the proposed hospital, which resulted in liberal contributions from all over the country.

The Institution has been incorporated and in honor of the late President of the order, Leo N. Levi, has been given the name of "The Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital." The building with its equipment will cost $100,000, and nearly all of this amount has been raised and ample provisions have been made for maintenance expenses after the building is dedicated and opened for business.

It is expected that a large number of members of the Order and co-religionists will assemble at the ceremonies attending the laying of the corner stone, and the various District Grand Lodges as well as the Executive Committee will be represented by special delegates. This hospital projected by the Order and which will be maintained by the Order will be non-sectarian in character, open to the poor and needy of all classes.

SECURE NEW TREATY WITH CZAR.

It is reported from Washington that treaty relations between the United States and Russia are to be re-established, if preliminary negotations which have been inaugurated should prove successful. The Russian authorities have been sounded with a view of ascertaining the terms on which a new treaty may be mutually agreed upon. It has been made clear, however, by the administration, as it was by the preceding administration, that there must be no discrimination by Russia in the treatment of American citizens because of their race or religion.

ANTI-JEWISH AGITATION.

The Jews in Kiev are living through a period of extreme unrest. The anniversary of the tragic death of Stolypin is approaching and the reactionary press is making this the occasion for anti-Semitic agitation. A number of outbreaks are expected in Kiev and vicinity. Even bloodshed is anticipated.

Some of the leading newspapers are reprinting detailed accounts of the assassination, emphasizing the fact that Bugrov, who killed Stolyin, was of Jewish descent. There is little friendly feeling among the different religions in Kiev, and this incident is only pouring oil on the flames.

PROCLAMATION BY THE KING OF SERVIA.

All Right of New Subjects Guaranteed.

The King of Servia has issued a proclamation in which he guarantees to his new subjects in the annexed territories the security of their persons and property, liberty for the exercise of their religion, and equality before the law and the public authorities.

ROUMANIAN PRAISE FOR JEWS.

The Roumanian Conservative organ, the Seara, has published an article condemning the blood libel and denying the accusation that Jews do not like physical labor. It also praised the conduct of the Jewish doctors during the cholera epidemic. A similarly favorable tone has lately been noticeable in many Roumanian papers.

CARDINAL REPUDIATES BLOOD LIBEL.

The Chief Rabbi of London has received from Cardinal Bourne, the Archbishop of Westminster, the following communication in reply to a request for a statement regarding the ritual murder accusation:

Archbishop's House, Westminster, S. W., September 25, 1913.—The Very Rev. the Chief Rabbi, Sir: I regret to learn that accusations of ritual murder are being renewed in Russia. As you say, the Catholic Church has, so far as I am aware, always recognized that such accusations had no foundation whatever in the religion, belief or practices of the Jewish people.

I trust that this fact will soon be universally recognized, and that if crime be committed it will not be attributed to motives which do not really exist.

Believe me, Yours faithfully,
FRANCIS, CARDINAL BOURNE.

JEWS IN THE BALKANS.

Important International Action.

The Jewish Chronicle of London publishes the following:

"We understand that energetic action of an international character is being taken in the highest quarters with the view to securing absolute political equality for all religious minorities in the Balkan States. It is obvious that this will include Jewish subjects of the various states.

"We are at the same time informed authoritively that the rights of the Jews of Rumania will not be overlooked, and that it is expected that the Rumanian Government will embrace this diplomatic opportunity for ending the Jewish question within her dominions, which has been a source of trouble to her for so many years past.

"The Rumanian Government will, according to the information supplied to us, be now enabled to give practical proof of the deep obligation towards her Jewish subjects who mobilised in the war, to which recently, from time to time, such full expression has been so freely given."

THE CHIEF RABBI OF JERUSALEM RESIGNS.

Rabbi Moshe Franco has resigned the office of Chief Rabbi of Jerusalem. The Council of the community has expressed to the Haham Bashi of Turkey the wish that the vacant post should be confided to Rabbi Isaac Shaki, Director of the Chancellery of the Chief Rabbinate in Constantinople, who was recently on a mission to the Holy City.

SPAIN AND THE JEWS.

Another interesting illustration of the desire of Spain to renew her relationship with Jews is forthcoming. It is stated that at the Spanish Conference on Commercial Geography, which is to be held in November, an attempt will be made to secure the support of the Spanish Jews in the East with the object of fostering the interests of Spanish commerce. Efforts will be made by the Government to obtain the participation of Jews in the conference.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

In the Legislature of North Carolina a constitutional amendment has been submitted, which provides that the "reading of the bible in the public schools shall not be prohibited." In connection herewith we publish in this issue an admirable letter written by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina.

Hon. Simon Wolf, ex-president of the Order and its representative in Washington, has taken hold of the matter through the lodges of District No. 5, and a large number of prominent influential members attended, at his request, the sessions at Raleigh the latter part of September to protest to the legislature against the propriety of submitting the proposed amendment to the people. The result of the campaign was that the bible amendment was defeated by a vote of 18 to 4 in the House and unanimously in the Senate after a vigorous fight. This result was largely brought about by the splendid representation of the committees of the B'nai B'rith and the U. A. H. C., which were strongly seconded by various heads of colleges.

Recently Rev. Dr. David Marx of Atlanta succeeded in having stopped the reading of the bible in the public schools of that city.

PROTEST AGAINST CARICATURING RACIAL OR RELIGIOUS ELEMENT IN MOVING PICTURE SHOWS.

Prominent Jewish residents of Cleveland, together with B'nai B'rith officials urged the Ohio State Board of Moving Picture Censors to oppose films in which any nation, race or religion is held up to derision or ridicule or in which vicious or criminal traits are portrayed as racial characteristics. The following communication was sent to Mr. J. A. Maddox, chairman of the State Board:

Cleveland, Sept. 25.

Hon. J. A. Maddox, Chairman, Ohio State Board of Moving Picture Censors, Hotel Statler, City.

Dear Sir:—The enactment of the law providing for a state censorship of moving pictures and the consequent appointment of your board have been matters of great interest to all thoughtful men and women. Those who have studied the moving picture problem in the past, who have realized the vital part that the moving picture has come to play in the lives of men and women throughout the country and its powerful hold on the imaginations of the children, are filled with hope. The educational possibilities of the moving picture are almost limitless. Its emotional appeal can be made use of in the teaching of broad ethical principles. It is an admirable vehicle for instruction in science and in art. Its universal popularity makes it an instrument of widest usefulness.

The undersigned committee, recognizing the valuable function of the moving picture and realizing the part that your board will play in its future development not only in the state of Ohio but throughout the country as well, take the liberty of calling to your attention a problem which seems to them of particular importance. Films have been shown in the past and are still being exhibited in various motion picture houses in Ohio as well as in other parts of the country, caricaturing and ridiculing one or the other of the national, racial or religious elements, constituting an important factor of our American republic. The stage Irishman, the stage Italian, the stage Jew are, only too often, malicious exaggerations of misconceptions based on prejudice. America recognizes no class, race or religious distinctions, and it seems to them unfortunate that an instrument so powerful for good as the moving picture should be utilized in spreading misunderstandings.

They respectfully suggest, therefore that your board take a stand against films in which any nation, race or religion is held up to derision or ridicule or in which vicious or criminal traits are portrayed as radical characteristics, and that the board make it known that the public exhibition of such films will be prohibited in the state of Ohio.

"Our Enemies Being Judges"

Written for the B'nai B'rith News

BY
MARGOLIS

In the City of Kiev our enemies are sitting as judges, a hostile court, filled with venomous hatred of the Jew, inflamed by race prejudice, stirred up by religious fanaticism. The charge is no novelty. It means at the bottom a denunciation of Judaism. But the disparagement itself is as old as the hills. It was in the world before Christianity was born. It was bequeathed to it by the paganism which preceded it. It rests ultimately upon ignorance. Those who know are few. The bulk of mankind prefers to acquiesce in preconceived notions for which there is no basis in fact. It is so much easier to indulge in fancy than to study and to examine. It is sufficient that our neighbor is not like us. We are ready to watch him with suspicion and we pounce upon any pretext to insinuate the worst.

In the old world the Jew was an anomaly. He could be defeated, conquered, done to death. But with his last breath he confessed the Unity of the Spiritual God. A Spiritual God, a God that could not be portrayed or imaged—that was a a monstrosity to the pagan mind. When the Temple was invaded by the defiant conqueror and the innermost sanctuary revealed an empty chamber, it connoted to the foreign observer a situation of utter godlessness. The Jewish people was without a God, so ran the verdict. And to supply the want, our enemies of olden times fastened upon the Jew all sorts of fatuous fables. He was said to worship an ass's head! A godless religion—that was in the main the manner in which Judaism, the religion of the One God, was misconceived and denounced by our enemies. And that charge is not dead yet. It has been revived again and again. The nineteenth century saw a revival of it. European culture was pagan at the bottom. Christianity had transformed it but slightly. It was a veneer beneath which was the unregenerate visage of heathendom. And when the early antecedents of the European peoples were laid bare and Greek was linked to Hindu and Parsee, a recrudescent paganism longed for the gods of Greece and for the deities of the Norse saga. Here, it was triumphantly said, was idealism, was religion of Hellenic and Teutonic make. Away with Jehovah, the foreign importation. Away with the materialism of the Semite, whose horizon was narrow, whose vision was conterminous with the bleak desert, whose God was a monopolist, a jealous autocrat. A God without a consort, without a family, to whom no unsavory legend could attach itself, he was the product of a mind devoid of Olympian flights of imagination. He was really no God at all, and Judaism meant a minimum of religion. So taught Renan. The Jewish Scriptures were pronounced by Goldwin Smith the millstone around the neck of Christianity. Schleiermacher had cut the link that connected Christianity with Judaism, the New Testament with the Old. His disciples today continue to work. While discountenancing the old dogmas, they recast them in another form. They deny and reaffirm in one breath the Divinity of the Founder. His advent in the Jewish surroundings is designated a marvel, a miracle. For though of them he was so unlike them. He was no Jew at all even racially, some go to the length of affirming. As if that latest fetish race was what made a man. As if environment, education counted for naught. It is a theory pure and simple, with bad logic to support it. But it serves the purpose. The motive is clear and unmistakable. For the truth is that spiritually the West is the bondman of the East. All that is of real worth in the faith of Europe comes from despised Judea. The debt is irksome. It is humiliating to acknowledge it. Hence the repudiation. As if debts of the spirit could be canceled at will. Our enemies when they are brought to their senses must themselves acknowledge that from the Jew came salvation to the world, that the God of Israel is Lord, and that Judaism is the spiritual master of the world.

There was a second charge, equally false, equally born of misconception. Jewish ethics, its code of morality, was pronounced inferior. Because the Jew, conscious of the great heritage for himself and mankind, of necessity was forced into an attitude of aloofness from the world which might contaminate him and thus render nugatory his service to humanity, he was upbraided as an enemy of mankind. It was averred that he had a different code of morals for himself and a lower standard of morality for the stranger, the alien, the non-Jew. And so through the ages rings the accusation that a Jew may with impunity defraud and slay a non-Jew. The charge is trumped up in our own hearing by an ignorant priest who plays the "expert" at Kiev. The world cannot simply understand the Jewish attitude. No matter what the detractors of Judaism may say to the contrary, no matter how many sayings may at random be taken out of their context and twisted to suit the bias of the accuser, Jewish law is firm in upholding the sanctity of human life. "Thou shalt not murder" was thundered forth on Sinai. Nay, from a Jewish point of view, the command antedates the giving of the Law. It was given to Noah and his seed, to the whole of the human race. Jewish ethics is universal in application. The laws of righteousness are for all men. Just because the Jew was given a purer religion and a higher morality, was he bidden to separate himself from the world. Not that he should hate mankind, but rather, in the words of the Jewish sage, love mankind and bring them nigh unto the Law. Because forsooth Israel became conscious at an early period of his God-given powers, he was perforce compelled to dissociate himself and his children from the impurities of the Canaanites and the abominations of the Egyptians, from the lust of the Greek masquerading under beauty, from the seductions of the European world forgetful of the Founder's reaffirmation of Jewish morality. Yes, the Jew abhorred "mixture." He would not commit self-annihilation in the embrace of the sirens that beckoned to him beguiling him into surrender. The Jew stands out as the one true Protestant. He protests against the many gods in the name of the One God. He would not be a polytheist in antiquity nor a pluralist in modern times. To him truth is one and final. He cannot acquiesce in many truths, in the doctrine that what is expedient is true. He protests against imagining the deity. He would not humanize God nor deify man. He protests against a morality which proclaims that might is right. He holds fast to the vision of the better day when warfare will cease, the war of nation against nation and of man against man. He protests against the enslavement of man in any and all forms. He protests in the name of his prophets against inequalities in the social order. He is the apostle of the good tidings to the downtrodden and meek and bruised. He protests against the gospel of the Superman, a newfangled species of paganism. He protests against the pessimism of all times. He firmly believes in the goodness of the Creator and in the nobility of man. He protests against the shackling of conscience. He will not surrender though the whole world be in arms. Neither persecution nor cajolery will swerve him from his course.

Of course, the world hates the protesting witness. Hence the calumnies and chicaneries and at best the misconceptions and misunderstandings. But he will be understood and honored in the end of days. He will not forget his past. He will not turn his eye away from the gaze into the future. He is inured to malice and machination. He loves and courts martyrdom. His literature is an open book. He has no secrets to conceal. He can brave the taunts of his detractors. He has impregnated the world with a love of justice which no momentary aberration can permanently rule out of court. There are the fair-minded and the true followers of their Master. Our enemies being judges, they will some day be forced to acknowledge that our Rock is not like theirs, that the truth is with us and that the cause for which we were placed into the world must triumph in the end.

JEWS NOT TO BE DEPORTED ON HOLIDAYS.

The United States Department of Labor, Bureau of Immigration, has informed Hon. Simon Wolf that in accordance with his request instructions have been given the officers in charge of the principal ports of entry, having in view the avoidance as far as possible of the deportation of aliens of the Jewish faith on the day observed by such people as a holiday.

LASALLE, THE JEW.

Fifty years have elapsed since the "Allgemeine Deutsche Arbeiterverein" was established. The social-democratic press is paying homage in word and picture to the memory of the aspiring genius who—a born revolutionist—rushed through his time like a mighty tempest leaving inextinguishable traces in social and political life. For several decades this man of the great genius has slept the eternal sleep in the Jewish Cemetery in Greslau. As indifferent as people may be to the sociol-political opinions of Lassalle and to the ideas which he defended with such passionate pathos, and brilliant rhetoric, nobody among us can deny that the man who was felled by the bullet of Count Herzfeld was one of the most gifted persons which the Jewish people has produced in the diaspora, and one of the most brilliant minds which the political world has ever seen.

Ferdinand Lassalle descended from a Breslau family which in the sense of that time was considered "liberal." The old Heymann Lassalle was opposed to the group of men who stood around the orthodox Dr. Tiktin. He was an adherent of Abraham Geiger, who was a friend of his house. A good Jewish spirit dwelt within the old Heymann Lassalle. The mental development of Ferdinand started so astonishingly early that there could have been no thought of precocity. Out of the diary of the fourteen-year-old boy speaks the ripeness and the superiority of a man of twenty-five. True, he shows some want of good breeding, such as the unrestricted addiction to billiard and card playing, which was mainly the fault of too much indulgence in his training. On reading his diary one gains the impression that his was an extraordinarily passionate and wilful nature. But at the same time it shows that in many respects he was a complete and important personality full of implicit honesty and impulsive sympathy. Very much in the character of young Lassalle was typically Jewish; his passionate love for his parents was Jewish, his knowledge of things beyond his years was Jewish, and his strangely developed self-consciousness, too, was Jewish. Jewish was, perhaps, also his early developed mercantile talent, which helped the fifteen-year-old boy in the money troubles in which he often found himself on account of his irresistible passion for gambling. His temper was Jewish. To few persons was it granted to be able to love and to hate in the Old Testament way as to Ferdinand Lassalle. The lack of discipline, which was the result of his wilfulness and self-assurance, which manifested themselves when he attended the gymnasium, were, in a bad sense, also Jewish. But Jewish in the noblest sense was the warm heart which he had, at least in the years of his youth, for his Jewish people, and which speaks from many an interesting place in the diary of the gymnasiast and pupil of the commercial school. Young Lassalle was often a warm defender and propagandist of Judaism before young men of his own age. He once wrote to a Jew who called himself an atheist, "You only want to give yourself airs and therefore you call yourself an atheist." The other was astonished at it and he earned the following note in Ferdinand's diary: "The donkey; as tho' one cannot eat trefah and still be a Jew." Lassalle continues: "I told this to him and I really believe that I am one of the best Jews there are without observing the ceremonial laws. I would, like that Jew in Bulwer's 'Leila,' risk my life to save the Jews from their present oppressive position. I would not even fear the scaffold if I could make them again a respected people. O, when I follow my childish dreams it is always my favorite idea to stand at the head of the Jews with weapons in hand to make them independent." This remark was not merely the result of accidental suggestion or a momentary frame of mind, for all the thoughts of young Lassalle moved in this direction. In 1840, when a burning wrath arose in him over the bloody deeds in Damascus and the deplorable inactivity and weakness of the Jewry at that time, he wrote the following flaming words in his diary: "Oh it is dreadful to read, terrible to hear without having one's hair stand on edge and without having all feelings turn into rage. A people that submits to this is horrible, it should either revenge itself or suffer the treatment. . . . Even the Christians are wondering at our sluggish blood, that we do not rise and rather prefer to die on the battlefield than under torture. . . . Would there ever have been a more justified revolution if the Jews of that city would rise and set the city on fire on all sides, explode the powder tower and perish together with their tormentors? Cowardly people, you do not deserve a better fate. . . ." And two months later after reading "Nathan the Wise," he writes: "It can be surmised what I felt when I saw the defense of my people so well done by such a master mind I could have read it hundreds of times.'

Young Lassalle was an inspired, impulsive and instinctive national Jew, who felt every blow which fell upon one of the Mosaic religion in the City of Damascus as violence inflicted upon his own body and who indulged in glowing ambitious plans for the future of his people. Lassalle, the man, had other ideals. His activity belonged to the fourth estate and not to Jewry. Yes, it is even related that he once spoke disparagingly of the Jews and the journalists—"to both of whom I unfortunately belong"—What does this signify? Lassalle the man remained the fiery spirit which he was as a boy. But was not his spirit, even if his Jewish idealism should have remained the same for a long time forced to become slowly extinguished in the suffocating atmosphere of the German Judaism of that time where not one refreshing breath of air was permitted to enter and in which even the fame of a Moses Hess died unheeded? The German Judaism of that time to which a Heine and a Boerne had turned their backs was not so constituted as to offer new nourishment to such a boundless idealism and such a pride of ancestry And so came the natural reaction and so the words against the Jews and journalists may have fallen in typical Jewish self-derision.

Heine, Boerne, Lassalle! The three fundamentally so un-Jewish natures whose restless spirits did not permit them to die in the midst of their own people. It is true Lassalle remained a Jew to the end of his life, but his thoughts and his feelings in the brilliant period of his life no longer belonged to his people which in that period of undignified assimilation could only repulse the proud fiery spirit the more it came in touch with it. Heine. Boerne, Lassalle! O, that your lives had to fall in that time of desolate stagnation in Judaism, so that you were not permitted to hear the beating of the wings of a new time. A generation later and you would have been the first to rush with joyful hearts to the banners of the young Judaism.

JEWISH SCHOLARSHIP.

The dedication this afternoon of a Jewish school in Seattle will be an event of educational and cultural importance It will mark the beginning of what is likely to be a broad and ever-growing movement for a clearer identification of Jewish scholarship than has hitherto been possible, in the United States at least.

In the dim haze that shuts off the land of scholarship from the everyday world the Jew, as such, is lost in the intellectual crowd, not because he is few in numbers, but because nationalities are considered of no importance save for biographical purposes. The consequence is that the man in the street has little conception of the place held in the world of thought by the Jew. To him the Jew is a successful merchant. He sees Jewish names over the doors of mercantile establishments; he reads Jewish names in the theatrical and other commercial fields, and he connotes the Jew invariably with money.

But in philosophy, science, literature and the arts the Jew holds a place which, numbers considered, is excelled by no other. And it is only in accord with the natural sequence of world events that this should be so. Our civilization is to a large extent Jewish. A few hill tribes of Asia made an imprint on Europe that the attrition of a thousand other race influences has not served to rub out. The little sect that did homage to Jehovah has spread over the entire civilized globe, with its concepts of right and wrong and its philosophy of life.

That the rich traditions of such a race, its culture and its philosophy should be kept distinctively alive in Jewish schools is most appropriate. The Jewish scholar like Bergson is apt to become international in thought, as is every other scholar, but he is none the less an asset and an inspiration to the race, even if he talks in a cosmopolitan tongue.

To this end the Talmud Torah will attain, and its success is as certain as its worth.—Washington Intelligencer.

The Governor of Galicia has given orders to the police to prevent adult males from emigrating to the United States. These orders are due to increasing emigration.

The Pressburg Ghetto

Not many of our readers, even those who have seen the city of Pressburg, know the Schlossgasse (which was lately burned down), the name under which the old Jewish quarter is hiding.

Only very few may have seen it in its glory—if I may use this expression—when it still possessed the character of roomy and strict social exclusiveness. Only a few experts in history, specialists in this line, possess more or less knowledge of the history of this destroyed piece of world which is a total stranger to the present generation. This Pressburg Ghetto has lately found its historian and describer.

Sigmund Mayer has depicted this Ghetto interestingly as an introduction to his autobiography, the contents of which we will attempt to reproduce here briefly.

In the middle ages, up to the sixteenth century, the Jews lived in the inner city, in Huttener street, running along the bastion, which is called today Hummel street, after the well-known compositor of that name, who was a native of Pressburg. They had then behind them a period of several centuries of suffering just like their co-religionists all over Europe. From the rise and downfall of the Roman empire to the thirteenth century the Jews were the only dealers in merchandise in the middle west and south of Europe. The new home and national merchants, who then arose everywhere, turned at once against the old hereditary competitor and crowded him out, sometimes by force and sometimes by laws, which were worse than the force. This conflict was the principal reason for all those Jewish persecutions which played a part in Europe for more than three centuries, to which the religious motives were here and there the inducements, but formed the decorative cover only.

The main object of these rivals of the Jews was to drive out the former merchants from the cities to the villages, to push them flat where they naturally could find no field for the conduct of their business. In every city a different incident had to serve as a pretext for it. In Pressburg it was the battle of Mohacs, 1525. The Hungarian army was wiped out, the masses of Turkish soldiers poured down over the greater part of Hungary like a raging stream spreading fear before them. Everybody fled. A few house owners of the Ghetto did the same. This caused the city council to bring charges against all the Jews of the Ghetto before the Queen-widow Maria and to ask of the Queen authority to expel the Jews and to confiscate their houses for the benefit of the city. In 1527 the Queen complied with the wish of the citizens on condition that the proceeds should be applied to the repairing of the bastions and the towers of the fort. The Jews were really driven out and their houses sold.

The example of Pressburg found imitation also in Oedenburg. The same drama was also enacted there. And these two cities only did that which happened at that time in nearly all German cities—the Jews were driven out from every place.

A very remarkable psychological illustration of that which took place in this regard 500 years ago is furnished by certain events which are now transpiring in Galicia. There commerce is today mostly in the hands of the Jews, but since the Galician cities have begun to formulate a citizenship the systematic endeavor rules in society to drive out the Jews from business by establishing Christian organizations like the Kolka Rallince, etc.

This process was also executed in Pressburg at that time as it was all over Germany. The Jews were deprived of their commercial importance; commerce was taken from them by force and they crowded into money transactions exclusively. With their expulsion they naturally lost even that. They sunk to the lowest depths and became peddlers and the smallest shop keepers. But in Germany in many cases the Jews settled after a short time in some village before the walls of the city which they had to leave, from where they entered the city during the day timidly and in fear in order to carry on their business.

This happened also in our Pressburg in a peculiar manner. Close to the side of the city wall commenced the territory of Prince Palffy's estate, which rose to the height of Schlossburg. The Prince granted the Jews admission and protection; there they settled and built a row of wooden houses of which very few can be found among those now burned down, for they had nearly all fallen a prey before to a great conflagration and their places were taken by those which were recently destroyed.

In the eighteenth century, probably during the first half of it, the walls of the fortifications around the city were demolished and the city ditch was filled up. The Jews built a second row of houses upon a tract opposite the Ghetto row, the last of it being built in the twenties of the nineteenth century, (the second side of the Jewish quarter originated in this manner). Thus the new row of houses no longer stood upon Ghetto ground but upon that belonging to the city, upon which, according to law, the Jews had no right to live; but in order to realize more quickly and better on these parcels of land, the city council gave the right to the Jews not only to breath in these houses but also to carry on their traffic.

Until the year 1848 the Jewish quarter showed the remarkable anomaly that one side of the same stood under the sovereignty of Prince Palffy and the other under that of the city. The consequence of this was, for example, that all Jewish artisans were only permitted to live on the Palffy side, as on the side belonging to the city it was strictly compulsory for all craftsmen to belong to the workingmen's guild.

At the time of the resettlement of the Jews the city of Pressburg had fallen from a favorable economic position into an unfavorable one; it was situated nearest the toll line, which was created in the Hungarian war time, and near the place open for the invasion into Hungary. It therefore had a heavy transit trade from and to the hereditary lands, the import of Austrian goods and the export of Hungarian raw products. In consequence of the constant Turkish wars and the continued insurrections under the Rakocy and Taekoely commerce, which is always in need of security, was at a very low ebb in all Hungary and that of Pressburg was completely ruined. As a substitute the Jews established a new commerce. They not only provided the city's population with the products of the Bohemian, Moravian and Silesian meaner districts and the newly created textile industry of Vienna but they also created a wholesale trade, gaining as customers the retail merchants, store keepers and peddlers of a vast territory extending in the north to the hill cities, in the south nearly to the gates of Pest, which at that time was not so highly important, and across the Danube to Oedenburg. Pressburg again became a commercial center which was not without consequence for the Australian manufacturing places.

The local social conditions in the Jewish quarter stood in great contrast to this commercial importance.

This Ghetto, a model for all, consisted of one long street with a few narrow lanes which climbed up the slopes of the hill. Every evening it was locked up on both sides with heayv iron cross-bars by the police and nobody could leave it during the night without the gates were opened by the watchmen.

In these narrow streets, which the laws did not permit to be widened, about four thousand people were penned, in bad insanitary houses. In this crowded place they had to live and die. In this quarter, where it could be said with the poet: "The sky lowers itself dark and heavy upon my head," there was only work and sorrow. There no one knew even temporary interruptions of the sad existence by cheerfulness and happiness, which alone make a life full of care and work endurable. In this quarter nobody laughed, not even the children. This atmosphere was mainly and naturally created by the conditions of this Ghetto. The imposibility of extending the Ghetto streets on the one hand and the increase of population on the other made the renting conditions unbearable, so that in the middle of the eighteenth century all the members of the community in their despair signed a bond which was called "chasoka," obligating themselves that no Jew within the community should be permitted to take posession of a dwelling or a business location which the previous tenant had vacated on account of an increase in rent.

But the conditions were stronger than this paper protection, which soon lost its force, and the anxiety of the Ghettto inhabitant who had to ask himself where he and his relatives should lay down their heads, or carry on his business to gain a livelihood, filled him with increasing cares which planted themselves upon his brow and exercised the worst influence upon his mind.

The situation within the Jewish quarters in all these free cities (on the flat land the Jews dwelt among the peasants) became insufferable, and roused the attention of all well thinking persons, especially of Franz Deak, at that time leader of the liberal party. He proposed that for irrefutable sanitary and social reasons the Jews should be permitted to live outside of the Ghetto, while their business should continue to be confined within the Ghetto. But even this tame reformation roused a violent opposition. In the session of the diet where the question was to be decided A Bishop arose and said: On general principles we can make no concession to the Jews, because the first will necessarily call for further concessions until the Jews will demand to be citizens of the country while they still continue in their prayers to wait for the Messiah who shall lead them back to Palestine."

Deak replied: "I believe we all, including the Bishop, can be well satisfied if the Jews remain honest citizens and good Hungarians only until the Messiah really comes and leads them to Palestine."

The house laughed and decided for the opening.

JEWISH ORPHAN ASYLUM, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Dr. Wolfenstein for Thirty-Six Years Superintendent Retires—Members of Staff Tender Resignations—Proceedings of First Quarterly Meeting, Forty-Sixth Year.

The first quarterly meeting of the forty-sixth year of the Jewish Orphan Asylum was held at the institution in Cleveland, Ohio, on Sunday, October 5.

President Louis S. Levi, in opening the meeting, extended welcome to the new Trustee from District No. 6, Mr. W. B. Woolner, also to Mr. Louis S. Loeb, a newly elected Director. The Secretary read the minutes of the previous meeting which were accepted as read. He also read the proceedings of the monthly and special meetings held by the Local Board since the last July meeting of the Board and the same were likewise adopted.

The Superintendent read his quarterly report, included in which he tendered to the Board his resignation as Superintendent and Recording Secretary, the same to take effect November 1st. Upon motion, the report was received, action thereon postponed to a later time of this meeting.

The quarterly reports of the Finance Officers were then read and accepted, likewise the quarterly reports of the Standing Committees. Upon motion, the President was authorized to draw vouchers on the General Fund for account of Supplies, $27,977.14, and for account of Buildings and Grounds, $2,480.34. A communication was then read from the Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., informing the Board of action of the Grand Lodge convention held last July, in reference to amendments of laws, submitted to them, also about the election of W. B. Woolner as Trustee for the ensuing term of four years.

A communication was read from Director A. L. Blumenberg of Kalamazoo, Mich., tendering to the Board his resignation caused by ill health. Upon motion, the resignation was accepted with regret, and in accordance with a resolution passed at a previous meeting the President appointed Director M. A. Marks, Milton R. Hart, and L. E. Oppenheim, as a committee to nominate a Director to be elected at the next meeting of the Board to fill the vacancy.

The resolution of Trustee Philip Stein in regard to the date of the next Anniversary, offered at the last meeting, was upon his request, laid over for action to the next quarterly meeting.

Upon the request of the President, the Finance Committee was authorized to be the custodian of all bonds and papers which by law are entrusted to the care of the President, he making his request on account of not being a resident of Cleveland, as likewise provided in the laws of the Institution.

The Secretary submitted to the Board a list of thirty-six applications, which had been filed since last meeting up to October 1st. He stated that within the last three days additional twelve applications had been received by him. It was then moved that the rules be suspended for the time and these twelve applications added to the list, whereupon the applications were acted upon.

At 2:00 p. m. the meeting reconvened and proceeded to consider the resignation of Dr. Wolfenstein as Superintendent and Recording Secretary, which had been received at the morning session and on which action had been deferred. The President appointed Mr Milton R. Hart as temporary Recording Secretary.

A verbal report was submitted presenting the resignations of Mr. Simon Peiser as Assistant Superintendent, Miss Amelia Buchmann as Financial Secretary, and Miss Laura Wolfenstein, as Matron.

It was moved and seconded that Dr Wolfenstein's resignation as Superintendent and Recording Secretary, to take effect November 1st, 1913, be accepted with great regret. Addresses were made by Trustees and Directors present expressing the great loss which this Institution will sustain by reason of the severance of official relations between it and the Doctor and the high appreciation in which the Doctor was held, not only for his work in establishing the Orphan Asylum on its present high eminence, but for his work for humanity in general. And the hope was expressed that, although the Doctor's resignation as an official in the Institution might be accepted, the Institution will still continue for many years to come to have the benefit of the Doctor's invaluable advice in its conduct and management and the new administration would, so far as possible, follow in the footsteps of the Doctor's administration and thus maintain the Intsitution in the commanding position which it now occupies. Thereupon, the motion to accept the Doctor's resignation was presented and unanimously carried, and a committee of three, consisting of the President, Vice-President and Chairman of the Local Board, was appointed to escort the Doctor back to the meeting, at which the Doctor was received with loud and prolonged applause, all the members rising to their feet and otherwise expressing their loyalty to the Doctor and their appreciation for his long and valuable services to the Institution.

The Local Board was instructed to have made a life-sized portrait, in oil, of Dr. Wolfenstein and to place the same in the Meeting Room of the Orphan Asylum. Dr. Wolfenstein will be elected an honorary member at the next annual meeting for distinguished services to this Institution.

It was unanimously resolved that whereas the Doctor had made great sacrifices, both physically and pecuniarilly, for the Institution, he be granted a suitable pension during the balance of his natural life.

On motion of various Trustees and Directors, it was moved, seconded and unanimously carried that the resignations, respectively, of Mr. Simon Peiser as Assistant Superintendent, Miss Amelia Buchmann as Financial Secretary, and Miss Laura Wolfenstein as Matron, to go into effect November 1, 1913, be accepted and upon motion of various Trustees and Directors the following elections were held, to take effect November 1, 1913:

For Superintendent, Mr. Simon Peiser.

For Matron, Miss Amelia Buchmann.

For Recording and Financial Secretary, Miss Jennie Weinberg.

The Chair appointed Messrs. A. Wiener, William Stix, Jacob Furth, Martin A. Marks and Judge Philip Stein as a committee, of which the President shall be an ex-officio member, which shall, at the next meeting of the Board present to the Doctor a resolution, suitably engrossed, expressing the great loss which the Orphan Asylum sustained by reason of his resignation.

On motion duly made and seconded the thanks of the meeeting were tendered to the Local Board for its services in expediting the business of this meeting.

No further business appearing, the meeting adjourned.

ANOTHER RITUAL MURDER CHARGE.

The real Russians of Poltava recently hit upon the idea of accusing the local Jewish Burial Society of working for secret ritual purposes, and proceedings were instituted against the organization. Fortunately, all the accused were acquitted.

B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home For Friendless Children Of District No. 3

The B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3 located within a few miles of the City of Erie, Pa., even in its present circumscribed condition, is fulfilling in the largest measure the purposes for which it was founded. District No. 3 comprises the four states of New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and the Institution, in the completed state it will soon present, will be the realization of more or less active effort towards the fulfillment. Year after year, and at each succeeding convention of the Grand Lodge of District No. 3, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, suggestions and recommendations for the foundation of a permanent charity were forthcoming, but invariably to remain a left over topic for the following convention.

At the Atlantic City Convention of 1908 sentiment in favor of the undertaking had crystalized to a degree that it evoked a report from the Committee on Charities recommending a protectory as a permanent charity for the District. Hon. Isador Sobel of Erie, a comparative stranger in the Order, having been a member but one year, and representing his lodge at the Convention, opposed the protectory suggestion, proposing instead an orphanage and home for friendless children. Mr. Sobel made the most of the opportunity that report presented, and he energetically took up and carried to an actual and active beginning a project that for so many years had been a mere expression of sentiment and ending invariably in fruitless discussion.

Mr. Sobel proposed, in place of a protectory, as the Committee had recommended, an orphanage and home for friendless children, and he was tireless in the support of his proposition. The Committee on Charities, Hon. Seligman J. Strauss, Hon. Josiah Cohen, Jacob Singer, O. H. Rosenbaum, Isador Sobel, together with Messrs. M. S. Meyerhoff, Marcus Feuchtwanger, Abe Weil, Jonas Fuld and Louis Sulzbacher, finally reported the Sobel substitution to the Pittsburgh Convention of 1910. At that Convention Mr. Sobel was elected President of the Grand Lodge, and the project which he had indefatigably championed had the further support his new honors could give it. And as evidence of confidence in his ability to carry to a successful realization the establishment of a charity of the nature he advocated, the sum of $7,100 was then and there subscribed, either by the delegates individually, or for their different Lodges. President Sobel was also empowered to appoint a committee of five to select the site for the Institution. Wilkes-Barre, McKeesport, Atlantic City, Paterson and other cities in the four states of the District actively bid with Erie for the location. When the Site Committee, Mr. A. J. Sunstein, Jacob Singer, Esq., Mr. Louis Gerstley, Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger and Mr. David Holzner came to Erie they were received by a local committee of the Jewish citizens with an offer to supply free of all cost to the B'nai B'rith the site for the orphanage, with other inducements that decided the committee in favor of Erie, subject to condition, however, that a building or buildings should not be erected until a maintenance fund of $10,000 had been guaranteed. That guarantee was readily forthcoming and wholly through the efforts of President Sobel, who had the satisfaction to report to the Atlantic City Convention of 1912 that with the increase of the per capita tax, the fund was assured. The orphanage was assured to Erie, and at the present time there are over 950 subscribers to the guarantee fund, with 200 subscribers outside the order of the B'nai B'rith.

When the temporary Home, now maintained at Avonia, eleven miles west of Erie, was dedicated on July 4, 1912, the Jewish people of Erie presented as a perpetual holding for the permanent institution 95 acres of land near to where the temporary Home is situated.

The Orphanage, for the time being, is quartered in a spacious brick dwelling house delightfully situated and provides a home for twenty-one children, representing admissions from Wilkes-Barre, Pittsburgh, Sharon, Altoona and Philadelphia, Pa., Jersey City and Atlantic City, N. J. and Wheeling, W. Va. Miss Nettie Eichenbaum is the matron, with Miss Eva Levy as assistant. Miss [illegible] has had a practical as well as theoretical training for the work, being graduated from Pratt School, New York City, in the studies of physiology [illegible] her practical experience [illegible] acquired as matron and assistant in several similar institutions. The Orphanage is conducted strictly Kosher and all that pertains to the physical and mental well-being of the children in every detail of their every-day life is maintained under the intelligent direction and care of the matron. The children attend the district school of Fairview Township, situated a short distance from the Orphanage, and their aptitude and intelligence is evidenced in the stated reports of the teachers, one of the children standing first in the school at the end of the term. The children, those of them of the age and strength, are taught farming at specified hours, and manual as well as mental training will be afforded them when the occasion arises. One great advantage of Erie over the other locations for such an institution is the varied manufacturing interests embraced in the industrial life of the city, at least 150 distinct trades or vocations being represented in manufacturing pursuits, and opportunity to learn any one of these will always be open to the boy or girl from the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3.

The farm of 95 acres given by the Jews of Erie is one of the best situated and most productive in Erie County. It is located a short distance west of the pretty village of Fairview commanding a delightful view of Lake Erie and in a section bountifully supplied by nature with a charm of landscape that is unsurpassed along the lower lake regions. Sixteen hundred feet of the Farm fronts the Ridge Road, the state highway and the main artery of travel for automobiles between Buffalo and Chicago. The road is paralleled by the Conneaut & Erie Traction line, a link in the trolley connection between Buffalo and Cleveland. The Orphanage, on the new site, will have every convenience of access, and it will offer one of the sights of interests to the auto tourists continually passing over that road from east to west It is also most convenient to four lines of railroads, the New York Central, the New York, Chicago and St. Louis, the Pennsylvania and the Bessemer & Lake Erie.

The farm is in a high state of cultivation, 85 acres of it, ten of beautiful woodland to be preserved in its present state for purpose of entertainment and recreation for the children of the Orphanage. An experienced farmer is in charge, the farm stock being of the best grades, and in two years it will be producing butter, milk, fruits and general farm products more than sufficient for the needs of the Institution.

The title to the farm is vested in District Grand Lodge No. 3, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. The General Laws of the Institution provide for a Board of Directors and a Board of Governors, the Directors representing the Grand Lodge as the holding corporators of the property. District Grand Lodge No. 3, elected the following members to constitute the Board of Directors: Isaac Baker, Theodore Landsberg, Morris Schaffner, Isador Sobel, Isador Simon, Erie, Pa.; Marcus Feuchtwanger, New Castle; M. S. Meyerhoff, Jacob Singer, Philadelphia; Dr. B. S. Pollak, Jersey City; Judge S. J. Strauss, Wilkes-Barre; A. J. Sunstein, Pittsburgh. A charter of incorporation was obtained in the courts of Erie County, the Board of Directors being the holding corporation, with the following officers: President, Morris Schaffner, Erie; Vice-President, Marcus Feuchtwanger, New Castle; Secretary, Theodore Landsberg, Erie; Treasurer, Isador Simon, Erie. This Board as a holding corporation, received and holds title to all the property and funds of the Orphanage, as well as all endowments, etc., and to manage or invest the same.

The Board of Governors is the active authority in control of the institution, regulating and directing its management, passing upon the admission of charges, engaging employees, see to the management of the farm, and in all ways to direct the affairs of the institution so that it will in every least particular fully serve the purpose to which it is dedicated. The officers of the Board of Governors are: President, Isador Sobel, Erie; Vice President, Max Rothschild, Pittsburgh; Secretary, Mrs. E. P. Marks, Erie; Treasurer, Isador Simon, Erie. The Board of Governors numbers 52, twelve members of the Board being from the City of Erie, and these twelve Governors constitute the Local Board, as it may be termed, conducting the business of the Home in the intervals of the quarterly meetings of the General Board.

The selections for the Local Board have been most fortunate, and to their loyal efforts and unflagging interest is largely due the splendid results thus far achieved in the founding of the Orphanage, with the certain prospect of its becoming one of the leading and best provided for institution of its kind maintained by a fraternity in the whole country. The officers of the Local Board are as follows: Chairman, Isador Sobel; Secretary; Mrs. E. P. Marks. The Local Board consisting of Isaac Baker, Mrs. A. F. Cohen, Rabbi M. C. Currick, Mrs. Lyman Felheim, Theodore Landsberg, Mrs. L. D. Levy, Mortimer Ostheimer, Mrs. J. Schaffner, Morris Schaffner, Isador Simon, Isador Sobel and Mrs. B. A. Zacks. Those composing the Board of Governors in addition to the above named are as follows: Harry Bacharach, Atlantic City; Charles Kline, Allentown; Isaiah Scheeline, Altoona; Mrs. Louis Sulzbacher, Braddock; Joseph E. Bernstein, I. Klinghoffer, Joseph Perlmutter, Dr. B. S. Pollak, Jersey City; E. M. Cohen, Lancaster; Joseph N. Ruben, McKeesport; David Holzner, Frederick Jay, Newark; Marcus Feuchtwanger, New Castle; David Bortin, Louis Gerstley, M. S. Meyerhoff, Jacob Singer, Philadelphia; Rabbi Aaron Ashinsky, Dr. J. Leonard Levy, Robert Lewin, Abe L. Rauh, Sol. Rosenbloom, Max Rothschild, A. J. Sunstein, Pittsburgh; Jacob Gellert, Pottsville, Sig Schwerine, Reading; Bernard Heinz, Leon Levy, Frederick L. Wormser, Scranton; Henry M. Cohen, Sharon; Isaac Goldberg, Trenton; Joseph J. Hurwitz, Hon. S. J. Strauss, Wilkes-Barre; Rabbi Abram Brill, Wheeling.

In addition to the Local Board of Governors to look after the needs of the Home there are the following auxiliary committee of Erie ladies and gentlemen who give unstintingly of their time and effort in the discharge of the duties devolving upon them:

Building and Grounds: Morris Schaffner, Chairman; Isaac Baker, Rev. M. C. Currick, Theodore Landsberg, Mrs. J. Schaffner.

Education and Library: Rev. M. C. Currick, Chairman; Mrs. Lyman Felheim, Theodore Landsberg, Mortimer Ostheimer, Mrs. B. A. Zacks.

Indentures and Discharges: Isador Simon, Chairman; Mrs. A. F. Cohen, Rev. M. C. Currick, Theodore Landsberg, Mrs. B. A. Zacks.

Finance: Isaac Baker, Chairman; Mrs. L. D. Levi, Mortimer Ostheimer, Mrs. J. Schaffner, Morris Schaffner.

Supplies: Mortimer Ostheimer, Chairman; Mrs. Lyman Felheim, Mrs. L. D. Levi, Mrs. J. Schaffner, Isador Simon.

Since the dedication of the present Home, the corporators have received two bequests for the institution, one from Jacob Levy of Erie of $500 and a bequest of $250 from Cass Sunstein of Pittsburgh.

The institution to be established on the Ridge Road Farm comprehends the cottage group system, with an administration building on the higher central ground. The plan is for a four cottage unit, with central kitchen, each unit to provide for 30 inmates, with a mother or matron. The Orphanage, as thus arranged, will occupy the high south level of the farm frontage on the Ridge Road, which offers, as explained before, an easy and ready approach by trolley and other modes of transportation, and will make the Home one of the sights of a tour taken by thousands from all parts of the United States and Canada every year in the favorable seasons.

Plans drawn by Harry Jacobs of New York City, for the administration and other buildings have been submitted to the Building Committee—A. J. Sunstein, Pittsburgh, Chairman; Dr. B. S. Pollak, Jersey City; Theodore Landsberg, Morris Schaffner, Isadore Simon and Isador Sobel, Erie. These plans, however, involved a greater expenditure than the committee felt warranted in assuming, and other plans are being prepared by Mr. Jacobs which are calculated to provide for as great a degree of completeness and desirability at a less cost.

Until further arrangements are completed, the children will attend the school at Fairview village, but a school to provide for an elementary course of education will be an early addition to the Home, and with the lessons in farming and the opportunities for learning any of the trades or vocations which the diversified manufacturing interests of the convenient City of Erie will offer, B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3 will send forth those children who will have been its beneficiaries capable, competent and self-reliant young men and women to win their own way in the world.

RESTRICTING IMMIGRATION

Senator Dillingham of Vermont is still troubled about the attractiveness of the United States to the people of Europe, and he renews his effort to exclude foreigners, but this time he depends on a percentage test instead of an illiteracy test. The new bill provides with certain exceptions, that no more than 10 per cent of the number already in this country shall be admitted of any foreign nationality in any one fiscal year

Why should we worry about the number of Europeans who seek homes in the United States? We have already shut out everyone who is prudent enough to have a job engaged before he comes. We look him over carefully to see that he brings in no disease, contagious or otherwise, and has no criminal record. We search his pockets to make sure that he has enough in them to take care of him for a while. Are not these restrictions enough?

Bishop Brent of the Philippines has just landed in New York from the third cabin of the Caronia, which he selected in preference to the first cabin because he wished to get nearer the people. He says of his fellow-travelers: "If the people I met in the steerage of the Caronia are typical of those who have been coming here recently the country has reason to feel proud of them. I never saw a cleaner and more intelligent lot of men and women."

Perhaps they were better than the average. Most of them were from Northern Europe, and the great influx of immigrants now is from Southern Europe. But twenty-five years ago there was great contempt here for the Italians. and no one will deny to-day that they are extremely thrifty and industrious and that their children are thoroughly American. Fifty years ago there was great contempt for the Irish. But the Irish have long occupied not only too large but too distinguished a place in our business, professions, industries and literature to be spoken of disrespectfully now. Twenty-five years from now the country will realize that the immigrants from Southeastern Europe and the Levant constitute a valuable element in our nationality, as to which Paul Helleu, French artist, says, speaking of the women: "Never have I seen so many pretty heads as in New York, which is doubtless due to the mixture of races from which they have sprung."

Nor is there anything in the numbers of immigrants to excite us to exclusion policies. In proportion to the population of the country the newocmers are hardly as large a percentage as they were fifty or sixty years ago. The persons of foreign birth in this country in 1860 were 13.2 per cent of the total. In 1900 they were 13.7. The largest percentage in any intermediate census year was 14.8, in 1890.

There is much less excuse for excitement about immigration now than there was sixty years ago.—Philadelphia Record.

THE MOSAIC AND MODERN LAW

A collection of facts have been gathered by a writer in Harper's Weekly going to prove that the sanitary laws of Moses were not only on a line with the modern rules of hygiene, but in some cases in advance of them. The Jew thousands of years before Christ, settling in a semi-tropical country, was forbidden to eat pork or shell-fish, and milk was designated as a source of contagion In the Talmud a method of slaughtering animals was prescribed which is acknowledged today in our markets as the most sanitary. Five thousand years before Koch gave to the world the results of his researches in bacteriology the Mosaic law pointed out the danger to man from tuberculosis in cattle, but did not forbid infected poultry as food. It was only a few years ago that German specialists discovered that fowl tuberculosis was harmless to man. The Mosaic law also enforced the isolation of patients with contagious diseases and the burial of the dead outside all cities These hints the Gentile world did not fully accept until a century or two ago The wise lawgiver prescribed not only fasting at certain periods of the year but the removal of whole families in summer out to camps, where for a time they could live close to nature. Many of the laws of Moses were prescriptions intended for the health of both mind and body.

LARGE INCREASE OF JEWISH POPULATION.

As a result of the Balkan war and the annexation of former Turkish territory the Jewish population of Greece has increased from 5,000 to 120,000.

COMMENT

THIS INDIVIDUAL WOULD EXCLUDE RUSSIAN JEWS FROM AMERICA.

If He Would Copy the Russian Jews in Certain Ways, He Might Worry Less About Their Competition.

George W. Warren writes to suggest that the Chicago American instead of advocating the exclusion of the Japanese and Chinese from the United States, should advocate the exclusion of Russian Jews.

Mr. Warren writes of the Jews from Russia in an insulting and impertinent way. We shall not give him the satisfaction of seeing all of his letter in print. He says: "Give me the Japanese and Chinese far in preference to your Jews. I have been a steady reader of your paper for years, so let us see if you pay any attention to this epistle in your columns. Very respectfully,
"GEORGE W. WARREN."

We do pay attention to your letter, Mr. Warren. Many like you would rather compete with Chinese and Japanese than with JEWS from Russia, or elsewhere.

They would also rather compete with Japanese and Chinese than with ANY class of intelligent and ambitious men.

We beg to tell Mr. Warren that if he would imitate successful Jews instead of criticising them he would improve and probably have less call to worry about competition in business and in brains.

If Mr. Warren will go to any of our public schools, ask the teachers which are the children of Russian Jews and find where those children stand in their classes, he will learn something that he doesn't know and something that will improve his dull brain.

If he will look around in the business world, in the scientific world, in the world of literature and in the various professions and learn what the Jews from Russia and elsewhere are doing, he will be ashamed to think that he, a failure, should presume to advocate exclusion from this country of the men who bring from Russia power, concentration, self-control, industry, sobriety, knowledge, courage and patriotism.

If the Chinese and Japanese were permitted to come here, Mr. Warren, as he says, would probably be happier than he is in the face of the competition of keen and intelligent Jewish men and women.

If he lived among Chinese, they would be digging ditches and Mr. Warren could get a job standing on the bank watching them and doing nothing himself. Presumably that would please him.

Whereas, with Russian Jews and shrewd, hard working, intelligent and welcome immigration from other lands, poor Mr. Warren, who represents the average ne'er-do-well, not very successful little American, has to keep jumping and worrying.

He may not know it, by the way, but that's a good thing for him. ANY activity is better than none.—Chicago American.

A SERIOUS PROBLEM.

Russian diplomacy is confronted with a serious problem by the intimation from Washington that a renewal of treaty relations between the two countries is possible only on the basis of the withdrawal by Russia of the administrative measures which make it practically impossible for Jews of American citizenship—in fact, Jews of any foreign citizenship—to enter the empire. It is apparent that the foreign office at St. Petersburg is as anxious to renew the abrogated treaty of commerce as is the administration at Washington. Nevertheless, it is admitted at Washington, Russian statesmanship has not indicated as yet any intention to recede from the uncompromising position which brought about the nominal rupture at the end of last year. On the other hand, all the preliminary discussions of the existing crisis appear to emphasize Secretary Bryan's conviction that negotiations cannot be carried out successfully except on the condition of a material modification of the attitude of the Russian government on the basic issue—the free admission of Jews of American citizenship.—Christian Register, Boston.

RUSSIA, ROUMANIA AND JEWISH CITIZENS.

It is rather a cheering thing to see a Russian newspaper (the "Russkoe Slovo," of Moscow) taking up the American side of the controversy in the matter of the denunciation by our government of the commercial treaty with Russia. The "Russkoe Slovo" reminds its compatriots that every state has the right and duty to defend the full rights of its citizens, and that the demand that all its citizens shall have equal treatment in foreign countries, regardless of their religious faith, is not peculiar to the United States. The representatives of European countries have protested against similar restrictions, and it is quite likely that some one of these countries will take action similar to that of America. This being the case, the Moscow paper warns its compatriots against any boycotting or other extreme course with regard to American products offered for import into Russia, and declares further that the American protest ought to serve as an indication of the necessity of abolishing restrictions within the empire imposed upon particular nationalities or faiths.

This reminder is good and significant as far as it goes, but it leaves the official situation just where it was. American citizens of Jewish faith are still excluded from Russia.

It may be noted in this connection that the Roumanian government seems to be qualifying its recent somewhat more liberal attitude with regard to the citizenship privileges of Jews in that country. Roumania had given the assurance that all citizens of the former Bulgarian territory which it has annexed as the result of the Balkan peace conference, would, without distinction of race or religion, become citizens of Roumania. This assurance was accepted with gratification by the American Jewish community. The Roumanian government had also nominally conferred full citizenship rights on Jews who served in the Roumanian army in the campaign against Bulgaria.

But the government has now decided that several thousand Jewish volunteers in the recent campaign were "illegally mustered in," and that they cannot therefore be enfranchised. This limits the enfranchisement to about 15,000 Jewish regulars.

It is quite apparent that Roumania does not propose anything like a general enfranchisement of Jews, and that its position is still one of practical defiance of the treaty of Berlin, to which the Roumanian kingdom owes its life.—New York Mail and Express.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CZAR.

The Independent for Sept. 11 prints an "Open Letter to the Czar of Russia." It is unsigned and the writer says that it is the expression of one who, though he loves the land, shudders at the manifestations of mediaeval bigotry and cruelty for which the Czar is responsible "in the eyes of the world and before God's throne." The letter is evidently called forth by the Jewish "ritual murder" case of Kiev.

By way of preliminary the letter touches upon the expectations of the Russian people when the Czar ascended the throne; their disappointment and despair when the promise was not fulfilled; the discrediting of those who have counseled reform; the Kishineff massacres of the Jews, "staged, planned and executed by the aid of your government"; the disastrous war with Japan with the army and navy demoralized by "graft and debauchery"; the massacring, imprisoning and exiling of men, women and children following the manifesto granting a constitution; the history of ill-fated first and second dumas; the violation of the treaty of 1832 with America, etc., etc.

The writer declares that the Czar has gone much further than his father in his anti-Jewish policies and then says:

"And now, to add the crown of infamy, your Minister of Justice has staged a 'ritual murder' case. Russia is here moving backward. Your own great grandfather, Alexander I., by an official decree prohibited ritual murder accusations against the Jews. But that was a hundred years ago. Papal bulls have been issued against them. The entire civilized world has declared their falsity. The pogrom policy can no longer be pursued effectively. The civilized nations have but recently protested against it in thunder-tones. Hence your advisers have revived an ancient and exploded falsehood to discredit the Jews, to stir the passions of the unthinking mob against them.

This "ritual murder" case is thus outlined:

"A Christian boy was murdered in Kiev. A Jew, Mendel Beilis, was found in the neighborhood and arrested, and has been imprisoned now for more than two years, awaiting trial. He is charged with having killed the boy to secure his blood for ritual purposes. For more than two years the manufacture of the most absurd evidence against him has been in progress. The head of the Kiev detective bureau, M. Minschuk, who reported that he could find no incriminating evidence and that he was convinced it was not a case of ritual murder, has been cast into prison for weakening the case of the government against the Jew. All sorts of difficulties are being placed in the way of the defense. Beilis is denied the privilege of calling witnesses. It seems as if Russia is determined to strike at all the Jews through this infamous proceeding. She has closed her ears to the verdict of science. The impressive protest of the International Medical Congress, which has just concluded its session in London, passes unobserved."

The letter ends with this appeal to the Czar:

"How can you, the man who suggested the establishment of universal peace at The Hague, tolerate in the land in which you hold absolute sway such refinement of barbarity and brutality and yet venture to face the rulers of civilized powers as their equal? How can you permit the revival of long-exploded myths and superstitions? How, in short, do you expect to meet your Maker with such a burden upon your soul? Open your eyes! Observe the fruits that freedom bears! under other skies! Drive from your land the dark spirits of intolerance and despotism which have made of it a charnel-house and a prison! Then a new light will dawn upon your vast domain and you can yet bring to its millions happiness and prosperity."

This letter is a tremendous indictment of the Czar and his policies. But its very truth emphasizes the hopelessness of the appeal for reform.—The Inter Ocean, Chicago.

THE JEW'S LOYALTY TO THE HOME IS A SOCIAL ASSET.

"Conduct is three-fourths of life." The Jew furnished the spiritual and ethical ideas that professedly inspire the conduct of most men in modern life and of the progressive nations of civilization. It is just and wise for those who do not have part in Judaism to take stock, occasionally, of their debt to the Jew.

In Roman times many men became attached to his faith on account of the purity of his life and the simplicity of his domestic ideals. The family and the life of the home have always been held in honor by the Jew, and have been a glory to his history. Christianity found its first foreign homes in the Jewish colonies of Roman cities, and there founded a righteousness which, Lecky says, was unsurpassed for 200 years, if ever equaled in history, unless the Puritans and Pilgrims be an exception.

The modern Jew in America, save perhaps in the exceptional case of debased and degenerate victims of European oppression, has shown splendid qualities of his Maccabean ancestors. The stories of Mary Antin about the Russian Jewish refugees to this country and their readiness to respond to fair play and to assimilate in this melting pot of the nations prove the desirability of the Jewish element in our population. The Jew may be materialistic, but American devotees of the dollar may not criticize his materialism. How many Americans share Zangwill's inspiring and splendid vision of our future citizenship that is destined to issue from an American amalgam of the world's best races?

The Jew's devotion to the home and family is an invaluable asset to this country in these days of the breakdown of the American home. It supplies a needed and wholesome corrective to disintegrating and demoralizing forces. This country owes not a little to the devoted service of patriotic Jews in 1776 and 1861. They have come to this land to stay. For the infusion of their fine and strong qualities into our national character we should have the wisdom to be thankful.—Spokesman-Review, Spokane.

IS IT IGNORANCE?

In their tributes to the memory of Frederick Ozanam, the sainted founder of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, none of our contemporaries mention the fact that he was of Jewish lineage. Is it ignorance? Or are they afraid to speak well of the Jews? As for us we are always glad to give his due to the Jew.—Covington (Ky.) Christian Year.

A LESSON FROM THE JEWS.

"The action of the Secretary of State," says America, in requesting that a clause safeguarding the civil and religious liberty of the people affected be inserted in the Balkan peace treaty, is of special interest to Catholics. There are wide sections in those regions where Catholics are discriminated against because of their religion, but it was not the existence of Catholic disabilities that stirred the State Department to action. There are scarcely 150,000 Jews among the six millions of Roumania's population, but there are over two millions in the United States, and these have had the interest and the influence to find powerful mouthpieces in Congress. It matters not what precisely the civil disabilities of the Roumanian Jews consist in, but whatever they be their brethren are to be commended for taking every legitimate means possible to have them remedied Their success a short time ago in preventing the renewal of a long standing and important treaty with a friendly Power, because in return visits to Russia their freedom of travel was restricted, is a striking instance of their activity in protecting their interests and of the power they can exercise.—Pittsburgh Catholic.

THE UNITED STATES AND ROUMANIAN JEWS.

The Turkish Press comments very favorably on the reported intervention of the United States at the Peace Conference at Bucharest, and expresses its indignation at the fact that the Balkan delegates did not give their support to these representations. The Tanine, the official organ of the Government, writes as follows in a leading article: "Why is Roumania indignant at the step taken by America? It is because it has not a clear conscience and has become notorious by its cruel treatment of the Jews. It is not the first time that America has raised her voice in favor of the Jews of Roumania and Russia. There was a time when this threatening voice caused Roumania to tremble. But since the American cruisers cannot go to Bucharest, this purely humanitarian step must naturally be deprived of all influence. Nevertheless, it will not be without result. The voice of the United States will arouse European public opinion and open the eyes of the people."

The Future Competitors.

One could wish that our luckier youth of American birth could see the wistful eagerness of these immigrants who, after long years of repression find themselves in a land where the opportunity to learn and develop is open to them. They recognize that, if they are to hold their own in the competition of the business world that the coming years will see, they must apply themselves to study with increased energy. For the races of Eastern Europe, with their passionate idealism, their talent and their love for work, are going to set the pace. They are learning all that can be taught them, not in English only, but in craftsmanship, in business, in science, and they will prove competitors worthy of the steel Saxon, Celt, or Scandinavian.—Rochester (N. Y.) Post-Express.

FIGHTING RACE PREJUDICE.

A law prohibiting all discrimination by hotels, restaurants, and theaters against any person because of his race, color, or religious belief became operative in New York State the other day. The law was called into existence because of the action of the proprietors of a number of establishments which have put out advertisements branding certain classes of people as "undesirables" and stating that they did not cater to them.

It is regrettable that it should be necessary for any state to pass a law for the enforcement of one of the fundamental principles of democracy. Fortunately for the traditions of freedom in this country, this law is not as ominous as might seem on the surface.

Race discrimination is foreign to the great mass of intelligent Americans. The race prejudice fostered by the proprietors of certain hotels and restaurants is fostered for business reasons only. It is done to please a comparatively small class. While there are signs of increase in discrimination against the negro in the north here and there, these do not indicate a tendency. Race prejudice cannot gain headway against the stream of intelligence or overcome the fusion of our common life.—Chicago Tribune.

A B'nai B'rith Opportunity

By the Editor of The Modern View

By the Editor of The Modern View.

Missouri Lodge, consisting of 580 Jewish men of the Order B'nai B'rith, is seeking some special outlet of usefulness to the local community. It expresses eagerness to render service.

The particular form that this desire to be of social service shall assume, is being now debated.

The fact that the Lodge is anxious to be useful, is in itself a most refreshing and encouraging acknowledgment of modern day demands, which require every institution that expects any public support or recognition, to prove themselves, in some form or another, worthy of communal favor.

In St. Louis the benevolent work of charity and philanthropy is under the care and direction of organized charitable bodies, reform and orthodox, especially equipped and subscribed to for the labors of providing for the destitute, the old, the sick, the homeless and delinquent.

The B'nai B'rith can (and does) in a monetary way, extend some aid in this good work, but naturally applies the bulk of its income to the support of its own national benevolent establishments, the Cleveland Asylum or the Denver Hospital. It is not content to rest on its past laurels, but aims to be more useful locally.

In glancing over the local field for things to do, we find one very necessary uncompleted work, which institutions like Missouri Lodge and Ebn Ezra Lodge could undertake with great credit to themselves and much advantage to our whole community.

Provision is made in this city for almost every need except that of our Jewish youth.

In last week's issue of another journal, there is published an editorial utterance, containing a despairing public cry of failure in the efforts to regenerate the institution under its present head.

Now comes the splendid shining opportunity of the B'nai B'rith,—namely to recognize the need of conservation of the Jewish young men of this city under proper, wholesome and approved surroundings that will promote the Jewish spirit as well as the intellectual, moral, physical and general development of the best potential qualities of our young men and women.

The Lodges of this District make no provision for young men. The age of admission is 21. None under is accepted.

Nowhere in the city is there any creditable Jewish place, where the Jewish youth of say between the ages of 15 and 21 can find employment of his higher tastes or enjoyment of proper kind, free from obnoxious elements, under Jewish auspices.

The Jewish youth of 15 to 21 is too old for the Sunday School,—too young for the synagogue or lodge. Where shall he go? What shall he do that will keep him as a precious asset to the Jewish people of tomorrow, for the Jewish cause that cries for him, and for the Jewish maiden that he later shall espouse?

The B'nai B'rith can do no greater, finer, nobler work of local value than to be the first to initiate a movement, that shall officially look into this need of providing a fit and permanent, good Jewish center for Jewish young men.

The idea is not that the B'nai B'rith shall supplant the Y. M. H. A. or usurp its functions, but to foster and advance them, and enable it to properly fulfill its function. By its strength, counsel and paternal, active co-operation, the B'nai B'rith can make the Y. M. H. A. a most useful and productive element and benefit to the community.

If the project is too big for the B'nai B'rith alone, it should enlist the aid of other organizations, the synagogues and clubs.

Such work will redound to the community's profit as well as to good of the B'nai B'rith, for it will naturally provide a gradual mine of future members and a recruiting field of propaganda for the Order, that nothing else could possibly produce, and where such propaganda most resultfully would count.

There is no reason why some leading Jewish womens' organization such as The Miriam Lodge could not lead off in a similar movement for our young Jewish girls—or, combining the two movements for Jewish young men and Jewish young women, work with the B'nai B'rith in bringing about definitely the proper provision for conserving our valuable Jewish youth and maidenhood for the great good of Judaism and of Jewish life.

The re-establishment of The Young Men's Hebrew Association must no more now be left the task or duty of one or two lone individuals. The scope of work is for the whole community.

We insist that it is a communal work of big proportions, which should be shouldered, not by one or two young men, but by institutions that would call themselves communal bodies and that expect a recognition as such from the people.

Of such bodies the B'nai B'rith in St. Louis is regarded as a peer. It has power. Power implies duty. This is its nearest duty.

In leading a movement for the wholesale, thorough re-establishment of a well formed Y. M. H. A., governed not by individuals, but by organizations like Missouri Lodge and Ebn Ezra Lodge, Temples and Synagogues,—an opportunity presents itself that ought to fill the far-seeing members of Missouri Lodge and Ebn Ezra Lodge with much delight and glad enthusiasm. It is a noble chance.

Aside from the altruistic service the B'nai B'rith would render in directing the Young Men's Hebrew Association how to well perform its work, it would be only a return obligation—for many conspicuous leaders in Missouri Lodge acknowledge that they are products of the old Y. M. H. A. and that Missouri Lodge justly prospered through the Y. M. H. A.'s existence. Noblesse Oblige!

It offers a field of fruitful, favorable B'nai B'rith effort and endeavor for the season now beginning.

Will the B'nai B'rith be wise enough and quick enough and big enough to grasp this splendid, golden opportunity?

The Jews In Russia

The Independent prints an open letter to the Czar of Russia calling attention to the treatment accorded Jews in that country. The article is timely in view of the coming trial, October 8, at Kieff, of a poor Jew, Mendel Beilis, on a charge of having committed a "ritual murder" two years ago.

A Christian boy was murdered and his body mutilated. Beilis was found in the neighborhood and arrested. He has been imprisoned ever since awaiting trial on a charge of having murdered the boy to secure his blood for ritual purposes. The manufacture of evidence against Beilis has continued. The head of the Kiev detective bureau has been thrown into prison for reporting that he could find no incriminating evidence against the accused man and for expressing the opinion that it was not a ritual murder. The trial is to be secret; Beilis is denied the privilege of calling witnesses, all sorts of difficulties have been placed in the way of the defense.

Is Russia going backward? The Beilis prosecution seems to prove it. One hundred years ago Alexander I., by an official decree, prohibited ritual murder accusations against the Jews. Papal [illegible] have been issued against them. The entire civilized world has declared their falsity. And yet the present Czar is countenancing an inhuman propaganda for discrediting the Jews.

Beilis will not be on trial at Keiff next month; Nicholas II. will be the man in the dock. This monarch who signed the manifesto granting a constitution to Russia, but only to save his throne, the ruler who appeared before civilized nations as sponsor for the Hague tribunal, must answer to civilization whether he shall be condemned. It is not the case of Beilis alone; the accusation brought against that unlucky individual goes to the very essence of the Jewish religion.

Russia's treatment of the Jews has been that country's shame. Massacres and persecutions began the day after Nicholas signed his manifesto for a constitution. Russia, claiming to be a Christian nation, has done its utmost to degrade a people because of their religion.

In view of the developments connected with the Beilis case, there is little wonder that America refuses to renew a commercial treaty with Russia unless American Jews returning to that country are accorded full rights as American citizens.—Portland, Ore., Journal

SAPHIR AND THE ANTI-SEMITES.

Saphir, who with the sharp arrows of his wit and his caustic satire inflicted incurable wounds upon the follies, perversions and prejudices of his time, and whose enemies did not know how to down him in any other way than by calling him "Jew," has given this as characteristic of an Anti-Semite.

"A kind heaven has granted to every creature its weapon, to every little plant its capacity and to every man his peculiar trait by which he can make himself amiable and esteemed. From the mite to the mammoth, from the hyssop that creeps on the wall to the mighty cedar, from the cretin to Socrates, there is no being in the whole creation which is entirely bereft of charm, entirely uninteresting and completely undeserving of being noticed. For instance, let us look at that Mr. X. He is insipid, absurd, rude, arrogant. He is so insignificant that death will once have great trouble to find him and at the resurrection he will surely remain lying without being noticed by a kind Providence. But even to this man, this personified null, God's mercy has given a trait by which he can make himself compassionate, for he is an—Anti-Semite.

A man devoid of character cannot obtain a character in a cheap way. In society it is asked: Who is this shadow of a man? Is he a scholar? No! Is he a poet? No! A Doctor? No! An advocate? No! Well, what then, is he? O, he is an Anti-Semite! Suddenly he has a character.

Good Mr. X. can stand everything, great incivilities, tender spats, he himself even looks for all kinds of quarrels and fights in every place at every opportunity, in short, the most degrading thing is pleasant to his tender soul, only against Jews his nerves are irritable. All his wit, all his courage, all his ideas, all his eloquence, all his soft smiles turn around the Jews and if the Jews were once to play him the damnable trick of completely dying out, he would be the most beaten, woebegone and miserable creature of all the five parts of the world. He would cease to be something, he would have to wander about silently.

If the good man is in a place where there are no Jews, then he turns around and remarks: "God be praised there are no Jews here," and he smiles blissfully for now he knows what he is to speak about. The ladies who are so unfortunate as to have to listen to him know now that his mouth is overflowing with words about Jews.

If he is in a place where there are Jews, then he is indeed happy. Now he can start to speak at once without getting the stomachache, for his endless insipidity he is not even clever enough to speak of the weather or of the cholera and the poor Jews, or better the rich Jews must now stand the brunt. First he says: O, it would be nice here if only there were not so many Jews here." After this mind-exertion he rests upon the laurels of his eloquence, then he turns in his superabundant amiability to another lady and sends her free of postage the remark: "Jews are everywhere." Then he bows, exhausted by this profusion of wit and positive knowledge, he shuts up like a clasp-knife, revives after a few minutes and forwards post-paid to a third unfortunate lady the words: "O that Jews are to be found everywhere." After he has wondered over the fullness of his own geniality he turns to the fourth pitiable object of his interesting attention with the brilliant idea: "Must Jews be everywhere?"

Our Anti-Semite is the drollest and most ridiculous example of his kind on earth and if we discover in course of time that he is perfecting himself in his science then we will enrich Buffon's natural history with a lithographic picture of this splendid specimen of Jew haters.

THE JEWS OF THE BALKAN LANDS.

The war which has been raging for a half year on the Balkan peninsula is having a sorrowful influence upon the Jewish population of the warring countries. With the exception of a small minority the great mass of Jews in Bulgaria as well as in Turkey live from hand to mouth, follow their little business and work at their usual trades. Since the beginning of the hostilities business has been crippled and tens of thousands of families are given over to the utmost distress. The mobilization has taken away all the men of serviceable age. The Bulgarian Jews alone have furnished to the national army a contingent of nearly 5,000 soldiers, nearly all of whom were fathers of families or supporters of their families. The entrance of hostile troops into Turkish towns has created inexplicable panic, in consequence of which a great number of refugees fled to the larger cities where they considered themselves more secure. Adrianople was forced right at the beginning of the war to admit hundreds of Jewish refugees from Kirkilisse, Mustapha, Pasha and Tahorlan. They naturally did not anticipate that they would have to remain locked there for months and bear the privations of a long siege. In some places the entire Jewish population had left their homes. Of the 800 Jews of the City of Islip 700 had to ask the aid of their coreligionists of Salonika and remained a burden upon them for months. The Jewish community of Constantinople was required to take care of a constantly increasing number of refugees, so that the time came when it had to give shelter and food to 3,000 persons who arrived there entirely without means. Gradually only it will be possible to return these poor people to their homes.

As trouble cannot be avoided in agitated times, the passing through of the troops was the occasion for deplorable excesses. After the Bulgarians occupied Stranitza several bands pillaged the Jewish homes and stores; in Castoria the depredations began after the entrance of the Greeks; in Monastir the arrival of the Servians was the signal for theft and incendiarism. Previous to that time the Turks made numerous requisitions without reimbursing those of whom they took things. These are only a few details of the many sad incidents caused by the war.

The full extent of the material injury suffered by the Jews cannot be determined yet and it would be premature to look now for ways and means to render effective and lasting aid to the sufferers in the rebuilding of their homes. The proposition has already been made to establish loan funds which shall make it easier for the small merchant and mechanic to resume their activity. A much more difficult problem will soon have to be faced by Jewish philanthropy and this is the aid of the widows and orphans. Up to the present no survey could be made of the loss of life of the poor Jews and the families of the soldiers are living in the most cruel uncertainty, for they are not informed by the authorities of the deaths or sickness of their relatives. Unfortunately it is to be feared that when the truth becomes known a terrible disaster will have to be reckoned with.

For months past and still today Jewish charity must limit itself to the alleviation of the momentary distress. From the beginning all the aid organizations have done their duty. Also on this sad occasion the Jewry of the entire world has shown its benevolent sentiment. The "Union of Jewish Societies" which met in Brussels, whose aim is to centralize the activity of Jewish organizations, has made possible a systematic and efficacious distribution of the aid work. To this Union belong the Alliance Israelite Universalle, the Jewish Alliance of Vienna, the Anglo-Jewish Association and the Poor Commission of the Jewish Community of London, the American Jewish Committee of New York, the B'nai B'rith Order, the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden, the Frankfort Aid Committee for the Balkan Jews and the Jewish Colonization Association. At the beginning of its activity the Union had a capital of one million francs which sum was collected by the different societies. A great part of this sum was expended in the amelioration of the constantly growing distress.

COURAGE.

By Herbert Kauffman.

'Tis not because of muscled meat
We place men in the master's seat,
We do not reckon toughened thew,
Nor breed, nor creed, nor bulk, nor hue
The force with which the anvil rings,
Nor care how hard the hammer swings:
The might in brawn, the strength in bone,
Can never serve success, alone;
Think you 'twas Spartan steel and skill
That saved Greece from the Persian will?
Think you Horatius won the day
And held the bridge through nimble play
Of sword? Or when all Europe lay
Cringing beneath Napoleon's sway,
'Twas better guns and cannon balls
That swept the field and crumbled walls?
All that was splendid in every age
Was written by valor on history's page
Giants in pigmy guise
Prophets with groping eyes;
What matter sight or size
When men build to the skies?
What matters numbers, years.
If we disdain our fears?

What Our Lodges Are Doing

B'NAI B'RITH TO HONOR VICTOR ABRAHAM.

On the evening of October 19th, there will be an open meeting of Cincinnati Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B., for the members, and families and friends at the Rockdale Temple Sabbath School rooms, to meet all the officers and general committee of District Grand Lodge No. 2. This meeting will be held in recognition of the twenty years' service of Mr. Victor Abraham as Grand Secretary of the District. At the last meeting of the Grand Lodge, held in Kansas City last summer, it was voted to present Mr. Abraham with a suitable gift to commemorate the occasion, and it is to be presented on this occasion. There will be speeches by Harry Simon, President; Rabbi Jos. S. Kornfeld, First Vice-President; S. J. Kornhauser, Second Vice-President of the District, and A. Lewenthal of Cleveland, Past President. In addition to this there will be several musical numbers by professional talent, and light refreshments.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

In the vestry room of the Temple the first meeting of the season was held by Jacksonville Lodge No. 375 on Sept. 24, 1913. Although the lodge is less than a year old it has made wonderful progress under the guidance of its efficient President, Marcus Sterne. The lodge meets twice monthly. The first meeting in each month is devoted to business matters and the second meeting is of a social and intellectual nature. At the meeting above mentioned Mr. J. L. Mack delivered the principal address on the aims and purposes of the Order. In speaking of the Order's principles he said:

"The principles of our Order promulgate one pure, living, lasting sentiment: 'The Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man.' These dual relations are inseparable; we cannot accept the one and reject the other; in the full enjoyment of either we are perfected in both. We are taught to put our trust in God. Benevolence (or charity, as we might term it) is love and without it our most earnest professions would be mere empty delusions. It should always be our most earnest endeavor to inculcate upon the minds of our brethren these tenets of our Order and to inspire their hearts with pure devotion to the principles laid down for our guidance. If we do what the Order of B'nai B'rith asks us to do; if we do what we promise to do when we affiliate with the Order, we will truly assist in hastening the time

'When man to man united
And every wrong thing righted.
The whole world shall be lighted
As Eden was of old.'"

SPECIAL SESSION OF DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO. 4.

A specitl session of District Grand Lodge No. 4, was held at San Francisco on Sunday morning, Sept. 21, 1913, in the B'nai B'rith Building. The session was called in accordance with a resolution adopted at the regular convention last February for the purpose of settling the question of endowments. The delegates gave the subject earnest consideration. Two propositions were presented by the committee that was commissioned to make a study of the question and bring in recommendations. Both involved the raising of the monthly dues and the liquidation of their policies by the sale of the B'nai B'rith property in Eddy street. It was finally resolved to adopt a plan to liquidate the endowment by dividing the entire 20,000 shares of the B'nai B'rith Hall Association stock among the endowment members in proportion to the amount of insurance carried by the insured and the amount paid in by each. Those not accepting this offer will be subject to the plan submitted by the actuary, which provides for a material increase in the rates to be paid.

MISSOURI LODGE CO-OPERATES WITH THE Y. M. H. A. OF ST. LOUIS.

At a recent meeting of Missouri Lodge No. 22, of St. Louis, Mo., a special committee of five was appointed to confer with the directors of the Y. M. H. A. to ascertain in what manner the lodge can aid in placing the association on a better and more stable footing.

INSTITUTION OF FRATERNITY LODGE, NEW LONDON, CONN.

Fraternity Lodge No. 743 was instituted on Monday evening, September 22, 1913, at New London, Conn., with a charter membership of 42. The exercises were under the auspices of the officers of District Grand Lodge No. 1. Following the formal institution of the lodge the members and guests assembled at the Hotel Mohican, where an elaborate banquet was served. Dr. E. A. Henkle, President of the Lodge, was toastmaster. Addresses were delivered Rev. Dr. Jos. Silverman, President of the District Grand Lodge; ex-President Jos. H. Ullman; Major H. A. Hull, states attorney; Rev. J. R. Danford; Hon. T. Bodenwine, ex-State Secretary for Connecticut; District Deputy, C. H. Shapiro; Grand Secretary, Reginald E. Zunder. Regrets were presented from many invited guests including the Mayor of the City. Most of the addresses dealt with the aims and purposes of the Order, while those of the non-Jewish guests spoke of the Jew and his achievements in this country.

ARARAT LODGE, HARTFORD, CONN.

Ararat Lodge No. 13, of Hartford, Conn., dedicated its new home on Sunday evening, Sept. 21, 1913, with appropriate exercises.

Members and friends filled the auditorium and among the speakers were Mayor L. R. Cheney of that city, men prominent in B'nai B'rith in New York, Springfield and elsewhere, and members of the local lodge. Morris Older acted as chairman of the meeting and the speakers and special guests were seated with him on the platform. Opening prayer was offered by the Rev. Harry W. Ettelson.

Chairman Older, in introducing Mr. I. R. Blumenthal, chairman of the building committee, paid well deserved tribute to the man who aided so generously by active work and financial assistance in giving the lodge its new home. Mr. Blumenthal then addressed the gathering, presenting the key to the hall to the president of the lodge, Mr. Leo Herzfeld, who made graceful acknowledgment for the various gifts presented to the lodge in furnishing its hall. He thanked the members and all others who co-operated in making the building the complete success it is.

Mayor Cheney in his remarks complimented the lodge in having acquired the new home and expressed his pleasure in taking part in the dedicatory exercises. Addresses were also delivered by Past Grand President Jos. H. Ullman, First Vice -President of the Grand Lodge, Mr. Herman Asher, and Rev. Dr. M. Thorner of Bridgeport.

An enjoyable musical program was rendered and at the conclusion refreshments were served.

BRADDOCK, PA.

Braddock Lodge No. 516 celebrated it's Twelfth anniversary on September 21st, at the Y. M. H. A. Hall, with an assemblage of nearly 500 persons; there were visitors from Pittsburg, McKeesport, Homestead, Duquesne, East Pittsburg and Turtle Creek. The musical renditions were very good and due appreciation was manifested. The speakers discussed live B'nai B'rith subjects in such a forceful and convincing manner as should bring under our banner all the good Jews who were present and heard what the Order is doing, and striving to do. Braddock Lodge is never satisfied to rest on past achievements, but is always moving forward, and looking for work.

WINNIPEG FREE EMPLOYMENT BUREAU.

Under the auspices of Winnipeg Lodge No. 650, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, a free employment bureau has been established, located at Room 6, Dominion Bank Bldg., telephone Garry 3178. The members of the lodge and the Jewish public of Winnipeg in general are requested to inform the superintendent of the bureau, Brother H. E. Wilder, of any vacancies that they may have, or in case they know of a position of any kind that is available for the many applicants.

District No. 1.

At a meeting of Holyoke Lodge No. 728, of Holyoke, Mass., held on Sept. 24, 1913, three candidates were initiated by the degree team of the lodge. Holyoke Lodge is growing quite rapidly and is receiving much fraternal attention and moral support at the hands of Springfield Lodge.

District No. 2.

Pursuant to resolution adopted by the last annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 2, a committee of which Brother Karl M. Vetsberg is chairman, was appointed to co-operate with sister Districts and the Executive Committee of the Order in the matter of suppression of white slave traffic.

A regular meeting of the General Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 2 will be held on Oct. 19, 1913.

Gan Eden Lodge No. 110, of Terre Haute, Ind., recently held its first meeting of the season. The Lodge has a membership of 115. Special committees were appointed to arrange for the celebration of B'nai B'rith Day during October.

The "Menorah," a Jewish periodical published under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith Lodge at Indianapolis, Ind., which has heretofore appeared monthly, will hereafter be issued weekly.

A meeting of B'nai B'rith workers of Missouri Lodge No. 22, of St. Louis, Mo., was held on Sept. 17, 1913, and plans for the practical work of Missouri Lodge were proposed and discussed. Mr. Ben Shifrin, the new president of the lodge, is anxious to make his administration as useful as possible to the Order and the community and should have the earnest and unselfish help of all the members.

District No. 3.

Under the auspices of Fairmount Lodge No. 726 of Fairmount, W. Va., divine services during holy days were held at the K. P. Hall.

Braddock Lodge No. 516, of Braddock, Pa., celebrated its 12th anniversary on Sunday evening, Sept. 21st. Prominent speakers and talented artists aided in making the affair interesting and enjoyable.

Har Sinai Lodge No. 8, of Philadelphia, held its first meeting on Sept. 4th, at which arrangements were made for features of the coming meetings which are to be of an intellectual and educational character.

District No. 4.

At a meeting of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 of Portland, Ore., held on Sept. 23rd, Dr. Z .Levin, of Los Angeles, spoke on the "Immigration of Jewish people to the Pacific Coast after the opening of the Panama Canal."

The B'nai B'rith Lodges of San Francisco, under the auspices of the Committee of Fifty, held a reunion and outing on Sunday, Sept. 14, 1913, at the East Shore Park. A baseball game between San Francisco and Oakland was held, followed by a dance.

A special session of District Grand Lodge No. 4 was held on Sunday Sept. 21, 1913, at the B'nai B'rith Building for the purpose of considering all questions concerning the endowment.

Columbia Auxiliary No. 1 of San Francisco held a very successful whist party on Monday, Sept. 8, 1913.

Unity Social Club, auxiliary of Unity Lodge No. 273, of San Francisco, arranged a boat excurison, which was held on Aug. 31st, and proved to be one of the most enjoyable affairs of this kind given during the season.

Ophir Auxiliary No. 3, of the I. O. B. B., held its first ball on Sunday evening, Sept. 21, 1913, which proved a great success.

Tacoma Lodge No. 741, of Tacoma, Wash., held its first meeting of the season on Sept. 25, 1913, which was well attended. A committee was appointed to arrange for permanent club rooms and reading room for its members.

A committee representing the B'nai B'rith Building Association of Portland, Ore., is visiting members of the Order seeking subscriptions to a maintenance fund for the proposed building. The committee is meeting with success in its efforts.

District No. 6.

Lake Cities Lodge No. 696, of Ft. William, Ont., held a well attended meeting on Sunday, Sept. 7, 1913, at which a class of four candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge.

The first meeting of the season of Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72 of Chicago was held on Thursday, Sept. 15th, on which occasion the installation of officers and initiation of a class of candidates was held. The special feature of the meeting was an address by the President of the Order, Bro. Adolf Kraus, on the subject "Emergency Relief Fund."

King David Lodge No. 641 of Madison, Wis., held its first meeting since the summer vacation on Sunday evening, Sept. 21, 1913, with a good attendance. Arrangements were made for a program for the coming meetings which promise to be successful.

Council Bluffs Lodge No. 668 of Council Bluffs, Iowa, held a well attended meeting on the evening of October 8th. Rev. Buxton, a prominent preacher, delivered an address on "The Lost Tribe of Israel."

Lincoln City Lodge No. 377, of Lincoln, Neb., will celebrate its 25th anniversary on Oct. 21, 1913. The celebration will consist of a banquet, addresses and a program of entertainments.

A joint meeting of Ramah Lodge No 33 and Oriental-Hillel Lodge No. 72, of Chicago, was held on Thursday, Oct. 9, 1913. A class of nine candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge, and at the close of the degree work the candidates were addressed by Bro. Julius H. Meyer. His remarks were well received and evoked much applause. The special feature of the meeting was the address by Past Grand President, Bro. Sig Livingston, on the subject, "Anti-Defamation League."

The first social event given under the auspices of the Saskatoon Lodge No. 739, of Saskatoon, Sask., Canada, took place on Sept. 30th, when more than 100 guests were entertained by the lodge at a whist drive. Mr. Chas. Tankel, the president of the lodge, in welcoming the guests pointed out the origin and purpose of the Order. The affair was under the personal supervision of Mr. Samuel Pyes and it was due to his efforts that the same was such a great success. Dancing was indulged in until midnight and at the close of the entertainment refreshments were served.

District No. 7 .

The B'nai B'rith night school, under the auspices of Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 of Mobile, Ala., has been re-opened for this season and school is held on the evenings of Tuesday and Thursday of each week.

At the last meeting of Moritz Lodge No. 715, I. O. B. B., with a large attendance present, plans were discussed for a Hanuka celebration to take place in December, 1913. It was decided that a special committee be appointed at the next regular meeting in October to perfect plans for the affair.

District No. 8.

Dr. Kuznitzky, Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 8, celebrated on Aug. 26th his silver wedding anniversary at Kainzenbad, where he sojourned with his family. The General Committee of the District Grand Lodge presented him with a Tabula Gratulatoria beautifully executed in silver and accompanied with a letter of congratulation.

On the occasion of the 60th birthday anniversary of the President of District Grand Lodge No. 8, Dr. Berthold Timendorfer, the General Committee on behalf of the entire German District presented him with a congratulatory address.

During the recent summer season arrangements were made for social gatherings of members of the Order and their families at the various bathing resorts in Germany and Austria. On many of these occasions addresses and lectures were delivered by visiting members and subscriptions were made for the benefit of the local poor.

The building committee of the institution for feeble-minded children at Beelitz, held a meeting on Aug. 17th at which the question of enlarging the institution by the erection of new buildings was considered. It was finally resolved to appoint a sub-committee to make a thorough study of the question and submit full report as to cost of the proposed building and budget for its maintenance.

ABIDING POWER OF PREJUDICE.

Recently the Chicago Journal had a letter asking it to advocate the admission of Chinese and Japanese to this country, but the exclusion of Russian Jews. The Journal replied with a scathing rebuke.

Probably it is not strange that much of the old-time prejudice remains against the Jews as it is based in religion, the most lasting of all prejudices. It is probably not strange that this crops out, on occasion, even in this country.

Neither is it strange that this should be supplemented by a business prejudice, considering the tremendous grip the Jewish people have secured upon the country's financial and business organization. But they have earned this; have worked and sacrificed to get it and have won by sheer force and ability.

Anyone who wants to understand the Jews, and especially those of Russia, should read the Mary Antrim articles in the Atlantic. They tell the intimate story of the never ending persecution of the race in that country, and of the dreary but hopeful labor of getting a start in this country.

Mary Antrim herself is an example of what America gains. Another series of articles in a New York publication gave the personal histories of individual Jews who have come here with nothing but their bare hands and have won their way to near the top.

Outside of religious prejudices, which certainly do not belong to this century, in this land of religious freedom, and of business rivalries which still less have a place in a country that owes its progress to this factor, why should any American object to the incoming of the Russian Jews?

They are not disturbers of the peace and are not a burden on the industry of others. No other race can show as small a percentage in jails, penitentiaries and poorhouses. No one finds Jews advocating uprisings, law breaking, law defiance, berating the government, crowding the divorce courts or filling the bread lines.

Originally tillers of the soil, they were forced from the land and compelled to become traders. Centuries of persecution has failed to break them, to degrade them or make them degenerate.. Schooled by oppression, they willingly begin their climb to success on a round so near the ground that others refuse it or do not see it. They begin in ways so small in income and earnings that others refuse to take them.

Patiently, and patience is their one most marked characteristic, with infinite thrift and care of little things; keen, intelligent, even when unschooled, they grow from penury to affluence by slow accretions. Living as they have to in order to pay as they go and leave even a minute surplus, when this surplus grows, the country has no better "spenders."

Never letting a dollar lay idle, the country has no better investors. Ambitious, the country has no better students than their children in the schools. Patriotic, their money is always ready for the support of the country. Public-spirited and generous, they are liberal subscribers even to anti-Jewish objects.

Volumes could be written of their good qualities as citizens, as neighbors and in their family life and mutual relations. A pamphlet would hold all that may truthfully be said against them. Why, then, exclude the Jews, Russian or otherwise? Why perpetuate prejudices that are un-Christian and inhuman?—Duluth Tribune.

WHY NO JEWISH SUFFRAGETTES.

The rite of confirmation which was performed on June 11 in the reform synagogues was spoken of by one of the rabbis as a victory for women. Until 1810 women had no standing in the Jewish community. They sat apart at religious services, as they still do in orthodox synagogues, and while ten men of any age above thirteen formed a quorum for the purpose of performing religious ceremonies, no number of women of any age was sufficient for that purpose. Confirmation of girls, which was introduced in that year, gave to women a standing of equality. "There was no fight on the part of women," said the rabbi, "for this recognition. The husbands and fathers waged the bloodless war, and those who were most concerned looked calmly on, convinced that when the time was ripe they would come into their own. There is a present day lesson in the dignified silence of the Jewish women and in their willingness to wait."—New York Tribune.

NUMBERING AND RECKONING IN

(Extract From a Lecture Delivered by Dr. F. Ettlinger at Frankfurt, O'M.)

The progression of numbers develops itself with rising culture. It happens in the history of the nations as is the case with children, who in the beginning can only count up to 10 and all things above that appear to them as "much," but later on, this conception of "much" always moves farther away. The study of comparative philology, for instance, proves that before their scattering the Indo-Germans could count up to 100 but not to 1,000.

The word "eleph" probably was originally no number but a conception of a mass. This is surely the case, according to its etymology and its use in the Torah, with the word "revovo." It brings a time to our knowledge in which people did not yet count to 10,000, a time in which such high numbers still appeared as "much." At the time when the Torah was written they must have advanced farther, for in it three figures above 600,000 occur. On the other hand the conception of 1,000,000 was not yet in use, for a special word for it is missing in the Hebrew language.

The conceptions, "million, billion, trillion," etc., have developed in recent times only. The possibilities of expressing plainly high numbers is today unlimited, but the mind cannot conceive very high numbers.

Next to the integral numbers the Torah knows also fractions, but only ½, ⅓, ¼ and decimal fractions. It appears from different passages of the Torah that fractions with high denominations were not used. They helped themselves with circumscriptions.

As with all Semites the numerical arrangement is the purely decimal system. The reason for the inclination of all nations to divide the progression of numbers into parts often is to be found in the fact that in the state of primitive culture people counted on their fingers. The Hebrew designations of numbers are built more positively upon the decimal system than those of the German or the French.

Concerning the four basic modes of arithmetic, addition found itself in astonishingly high develoment, as the numbering of the tribes of Israel shows, especially when we consider that at that time not only the Arabic-India system of figures of today was unknown but the Hebrew letters were then also not used as figures.

Multiplication very probably was only a written addition.

Next to the religious value of the Torah, which must always be accentuated first, its cultural worth must not be lost sight of. The modes of counting and the ways of reckoning which we employ today thoughtlessly and look upon as things which are self-understood, represent the cultural work of thousands of years.

THE B'NAI B'RITH TAKES ACTION.

In a statement issued by Adolf Kraus, president of the Independent Order of the B'nai B'rith, he traces the action taken by the Executive Committee of the Order in endeavoring to secure a guarantee of protection to the Jews in the conquered Balkan territory. He made an energetic and earnest appeal, particularly to Roumania, to secure some amelioration of the unfortunate conditions under which our coreligionists live in that country. It would seem to the casual observer that only in heathen (?) Turkey does tolerance of others' religious beliefs prevail. In such Christian countries as Russia and Roumania, we find hatred, and denial of the rights of those who differ from the prevailing religious beliefs. Thus far nothing definite has been accomplished by the appeals to the Roumanians; only vague and shadowy promises that mean nothing have been given in answer to protests. But credit must be given to the B'nai B'rith for the unusually prompt atcion that was taken to conserve the welfare of our coreligionists.—Jewish Criterion.

JEWS FREED FROM MILITARY SERVICE.

The entire Mussulman and non-Mussulman population of all the towns in Thrace and in the Vilayet of Adrianople, which will remain Turkish, have been freed from military service and the payment of taxes for a number of years to come. The measure will somewhat lighten the unhappy economic situation of the Jews and encourage them in their efforts to make up the losses which they suffered on account of the war.

GETTING NEW MEMBERS.

There is no question about the importance in securing an increase in membership, and the question how to secure new members should be uppermost in the minds of those who are responsible for the growth of the lodge. But the man who expects to make a success in getting new members must be well posted on the merits of the order he represents. There are no uniform methods or rules that can be suggested which will lead to the attainment of the desired result. The individual is the factor that counts most. Neither genius or scheming will serve as a substitute for persistent systematic effort along right lines. In the search of new members it is self-evident that one of the necessary qualities of the seeker is an optimistic cheerful spirit. Men are not inclined to do business with pessimists out of sympathy for them. The member who has the welfare of the Order at heart is always on the alert for an opportunity to speak a good word for it, and through the influence of friendship and business acquaintance he is in position to induce others to enroll as co-workers in our cause. It is individual effort that counts and the ones and twos that bring us steadily and surely to the desired result.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY GRANTED PERUVIANS.

Lima, Peru, Oct. 4.—Peru in future is to enjoy religious tolerance for all sects. Heretofore the exercise of any religion other than the Roman Catholic has been prohibited.

The chamber of deputies on Oct. 4 adopted by 66 votes to 4 an amendment to article four of the constitution dealing with this subject. The amendment had been approved by the senate.

In spite of the constitutional prohibition, the government some time ago permitted the building of a number of Protestant churches and mission schools.

WANT BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.

Ohio Methodists Would Emulate Pennsylvania School Law.

The Methodists of Ohio have launched a campaign for state laws requiring the reading of at least ten verses of the Bible to the pupils in the public schools every morning. Other organizations of the state will be asked to endorse the movement.

JEWS ON BORDER IN TROUBLE.

Acute friction has arisen on the Jewish question between Germany, Austria and Russia. The Russian government has sought to expel numbers of Jews living near the frontier who have no civic papers and who, therefore, are not Russian subjects.

Neither Germany nor Austria will accept the Jews and as quickly as the Russians thrust the unhappy people into the border countries, Germany and Austria hustle them back.

GERMAN LAWYERS WOULD BAR JEWS.

On account of the overcrowding of the profession of law in Germany many barristers are advocating the passing of a law which will make more difficult the attainment of the profession by Jews. This is despite the fact that Jewish lawyers are among the most able and prominent.

THE PERSECUTION OF THE YEMEN JEWS.

Further reports of the cruelties of the Imam towards the Yemen Jews have come to hand. The anti-Semites continue to denounce Jews to the Imam for alleged trading in intoxicating drinks, and the Imam administers prompt punishment without investigating the charges.

JEWISH POSTAL CLERKS GIVEN HOLIDAY.

At the request of Representative A. J. Sabath of Chicago, the Postmaster General issued orders to all postmasters to permit Jewish postal employes special leaves of absence on Rosh Hashona and Yom Kippur.

B'NAI B'RITH PURCHASE PROPERTY.

The B'nai B'rith Building Association of Portland, Ore., have authorized an offer of $40,000 for the purchase of the southeast 80x80 feet, located at Thirteenth and Yamhill streets.

The glory of life is to love, not to be loved; to give, not to get; to serve, not to be served.—H. Black.

STORY OF RABBI AMNON.

(Translated from the German by A. Wenduin)

Rabbi Amnon of Mainz was prominent among his contemporaries. He was wealthy, refined and splendidly educated, and therefore quite a favorite of court. The nobility, whom he often met tried to persuade him to change his religion, but he always changed the topic of conversation and spoke about something else. One day they broached the subject of conversion, and they were more persistent than usual, the prince himself pressed him hard for a decision. He begged to be allowed three day's time in which to think the matter over. This he did more to get away from further argument than because of any intention to change his religion.

On his way home he thought the matter over and regretted that he had asked for time, from which one could conclude that he was wavering and not convinced of the truth of his religion, and that he might possibly change it for another—his conscience worried him. He came home very sad indeed, he neither ate nor drank, his friends tried to console him. but he insisted that he would descend to hell because of his lack of faith as shown in his answer to the prince. On the third day Rabbi Amnon was asked to appear, but he did not go; he was invited a second time, in a very respectful and friendly manner, but again he failed to comply. The prince then commanded that he be brought into his presence; and he was brought forcibly "Amnon! why have you not kept word, and come here at the time agreed upon?" the prince inquired of him. Rabbi Amnon gave the following answer: "I shall pronounce sentence upon myself: My tongue, because it has lied, shall be cut out." His object was, of course, to show his repentance and sanctify the Holy name.)

But the prince was not satisfied with this mode of punishment, and replied: "Not your tongue, but your feet shall be crippled, because they did not bring you here at the appointed time, neither shall I spare the rest of your body." The prince then commanded that his thumbs and his big toes be cut off. He was then placed in a coffin and carried to his home.

Rabbi Amnon therefore remained true to his faith and gladly suffered these tortures because of a single word that could be used to the discreet of his religion. When New Year came, Rabbi Amnon requested that he be carried to the synagogue and placed next to the Cantor. This was done. When the Cantor had reached a certain portion of the morning service, Rabbi Amnon requested him to stop, so that he could publicly glorify God's name and he recited this most impressive portion of the New Year's service known as the "Unsanne Tokef." He expressed therein the justice of God's judgments, and that the events of the coming year are ordained on the New Year. According to the legend he then disappeared in a most mysterious manner. After three days he appeared in a vision to Rabbi Kalonimus. the son of Rabbi M'Shulom, whom he taught the Payut that he had recited, and commanded him to send copies of it to all Jewish communities, that it may be remembered and prove a blessing to the Jewish people.

MORE BOKHARA JEWS EXPELLED.

Four hundred Bokhara Jews have again been expelled from Russian Central Asia. The exiles have sent a deputation to St. Petersburg seeking to have the order cancelled.

The Viceroy of Caucasus has issued an explanation that Jews who reside here on the strength of M. Stolypin's circular are not allowed to trade or move from one town to another. Offenders will be exiled to the Pale.

Eighty-two Jewish families have been exiled from Posad, Maritinskaya, and many Jews are being expelled from Lisiransk.

Dr. Ehrenpries, the Chief Rabbi of Bulgaria, has visited several of the principal capitals of Europe in the interests of the status of the Jews in the Balkans. He was received in audience by the King of Italy, and has also interviewed M. Clemenceau. Since his arrival in England Dr Ehrenpries has had interviews with Sir Arthur Nicolson at the Foreign Office and with a number of leading members of the Jewish community, including Lord Rothschild, the Chief Rabbi and Mr. Leopold de Rothschild.

The Kief Ritual Murder Trial

New York Times.

Were it not that the only imaginable reason for bringing the accusation of "ritual murder" against the man Beilis is to incite ignorant fanaticism to further persecution of the Jews in Russia, and for the fact that his conviction of the crime charged would have this effect, what is now going on in Kiev could be dismissed as a sorry farce.

Of course Russia itself, not Beilis, is the real defendant, for only in that country, and in parts of a few others, does there still linger among the utterly benighted even a suspicion that the accusation against the unfortunate brickmaker is true. Since more than a suspicion, however, does survive there in a part of the population large enough to be dangerous, efforts to convince the Russian Government that it cannot condemn Beilis without inviting the indignation of the civilized world are justified, and one can understand why renewed and wider circulation is not being given to the formal protests against such trials that over a year ago were drawn up and extensively signed in England, France, Germany, and Russia itself.

It is in the signatures which these documents received that their chief importance lies. Not only is every name that of a non-Jew, but the long lists read like a roster for each country of its men of eminence in the professions, arts, sciences, and industries. So numerous, indeed, are the names internationally famous that to select a few of them for repetition here would be to omit many more of equal weight. All of the worthier walks in life are represented by its notabilities, and if any are missing they could only be discovered by a laborious search through the biographical dictionaries. Of ecclesiastics, educators, scientists, artists, statesmen in and out of office, legislators, leaders in manufacture and trade—none seems to be missing. They constitute the light and authority of Europe, and each of the protests is to the same effect—that there is not even excuse for holding that ritual murder is or ever was a part of Judaism, and declaring abominable the giving of official countenance to the stupid and vicious myth.

The Russian protest is even more vigorously worded than the others, and heading its signatures are the names of six Councilors of State and many memzers of the Duma. Yet the trial goes on, and when the Czar was in Kiev, before any arrest had been made, he asked, "Have you got the Jew that murdered the lad?"

New York Press.

Senator J. Hamilton Lewis of Illinois has introduced in the Senate a resolution which, stripped of a number of wherases, reads as follows:

"Resolved, By the Senate of the United States, that the Senate of the United States looks with disfavor upon the prosecution of the Beiliss case, and that the proper officers of the Government be directed to use the good offices of the Government of the United States with the Government of Russia to the end that the unjust ritual charge against the Jewish people at large and Mendel Beiliss in particular, be withdrawn and the Jewish people receive the vindication justice requires."

It is Senator Lewis' avowed notion that the United States is directly interested in the Beiliss case because, he says, "the constant and relentless persecution of the Jews in Russia is bringing to our shores thousands of Russian Jewish refugees, who must be taken care of."

Rather a peculiar peg on which to hang his arraignment, especially when it is considered that Russian Hebrews coming here do not have to be "taken care of," but are able to take care of themselves. America doesn't object to the Russian acts for any such reason. She objects, not to the immigrants' landing here, but to the injustice and persecution over there.

Russia's legal persecution of the Jews is falling of the weight of its own perjury and prejudice. In the first place, there is no ground for belief there is any Jewish rite in which the shedding or use of human blood is practiced. History refutes it. On the other hand, it is certainly true that in Russia, the country where this charge is brought and by whom the charge is brought, the shedding of blood in the name of religion, the horrible butcheries of innocent people, the unspeakable tortures and outrage of women and children have not been practiced by Jews, but upon Jews by Cossacks, Tartars and other Russian subjects. It is also true that these wholesale massacres were pleasing to the Russian Government and often were incited, if not directly ordered, by the Russian officials.

New York Mail.

It is not the Jews, nor Judaism, that is on trial at Kieff, where the "ritual murder" accusation against Beiliss is under examination, but a section of Christianity.

The world waits to see whether a great nation which calls itself Orthodox, assuming thus to represent the directest tradition of Christianity, can believe so monstrous a thing as the charge involved in this case, which is that Judaism employs human sacrifices in its rites!

For the Russian police and judiciary to attempt, as they have done, to support such a charge, is to persecute a whole race. For the prosecution carries with it a degree of credence in the charge on the part of the authorities, and that credence eggs on the most ignorant and bigoted classes to make attacks on the Jews. Pogroms will be founded on this accusation, and upon the specious and vicious reasoning which the government has put forward in an attempt to sustain the charge. It will keep alive indefinitely the fires of persecution. Many thousands of poor people will suffer in body and estate as the result of this baseless accusation. Even though Beiliss be acquitted, the harm wrought by the charge will be infinite.

It all belongs to the dark ages—this ritual murder charge, and the cruel prejudice which makes it possible. It is a disgrace to the epoch to which we belong.

New York Sun.

As the trial of Beilis, the Jew accused at Kief of a "ritual murder," proceeds it becomes increasingly evident that the prosecution's contentions are not credited in the minds of enlightened and intelligent Russians, whatever their religious faith may be. Among the ignorant belief in the practices attributed to the prisoner holds sway; the familiar instruments of race hatred and prejudice have been skillfully used to fan suspicion and incite passion.

Against this must be reckoned the efforts of respectable and reasonable Russians to expose the unthruthfulness of the legend that is on trial in this case, efforts that, it is hoped, may modify the attitude of the authorities and even lead them to drop the allegation of a religious motive for the crime. Should this be effected it must have a marked influence on popular thought and would serve admirably in the serious campaign of education on this subject so greatly needed, particularly in Russia.

The solemn declarations of the rabbis throughout Europe exposing the baselessness of the religious charge have been reenforced by the outgivings of Christian ministers of the highest standing. Among them Archbishop Sergius had declared the popular fallacy to be a "malignant legend."

Such words at this time cannot be without weight, and indicate that progress is making toward the enlightenment of those who still give credence to an abominable libel on the Jewish race and religion.

New York Post.

The indictment as presented in open court at Kief makes interesting reading; especially to lawyers, we imagine. Instead of trying to show that there had been a murder, that the accused Beilis was the murderer, and that his motives were religious, the document sets out to demonstrate the existence of a blood ritual among the Jews. In support of its contention it can rally the authority of a professor of mental pathology at Kief University and a Catholic priest. The indictment admits that two other experts to whom the question was referred declared against the existence of such a ritual. So weak is the Government's own case by confession, it can hardly be necessary to enter here into a detailed resume of the overwhelming mass of testimony that has been gathered in the course of centuries to disprove the existence of any basis for this hideous crime.

New York Times.

Three facts of much significance are to be noted as to the trial of Beilis at Kiev for "ritual murder." One is that the original reported intention to hold the trial behind closed doors has been abandoned. The text of the indictment has been published and the court has rejected the motion of the prosecution to forbid the publication of stenographic reports of the testimony. The second is that in the indictment the opinions of two of the three experts cited as to ritual murder are completely opposed to the possibility of the commission of such a crime from the motives charged. The most definite and emphatic of these opinions is that of Prof. Troitsky, Professor of Hebrew languages and Bibical archaeology at the Kiev Clerical Academy. The third fact is that a popular anti-Semitic journal of Kiev, The Keivlianin has published an article somewhat confused, as received here, but containing earnest denunciation of "the infamous superstition" that murder is committed by Jews for ritual purpose and severely criticising the work of the prosecutor. The most poignant portion of the article is the following: "Beilis may be insignificant. Nevertheless you have no right to imprison him unless you are convinced of his guilt. You have treated him like a rabbit on the table of a vivisectionist. The time perhaps will come when Chaplinsky (the Public Prosecutor of the Kiev court) will be replaced by some one anxious to produce the outrages against the Jews. What would you say if the choice fell on you for such a sacrifice?" "This is an indication of a charge in sentiment in Russia, with which the 'Black Hundred' and the reactionaries who have had the ear of the Czar may have to reckon."

Chicago Inter Ocean.

At the great meetings held in Chicago Sunday to protest against the monstrous charge of "ritual murder" made in the Beilis case at Kieff the Rev. Emil G. Hirsch made a telling point which is really the nub of the entire matter. * * * It is not the poor Jew, Beilis, who is really on trial. It is Russia that is before the bar of the world's civilization, and enlightened men are wondering what sort of a government this can be which sets its seal of approval upon such a charge. Russia is convicting itself of barbarism.

Chicago Daily Tribune.

In the twentieth century the trial at Kiev is like a total eclipse at midday. This recrudescence of one of the darkest and most cruel superstitions of one of the darkest and most cruel of ages sends a shock through the civilized world. That such an event can be taking place anywhere in Europe, that it can take place anywhere within the confines of what we call Christendom, must fill all peoples with horror and indignation.

There should be no division between Jew and Gentile in the presence of such a memace from darkness. And there is none. The best men and women of America, Jew and Gentile, are raising their protest against it. Surely that protest will be heard. No nation, no government in this day can afford to ignore the united voice of the world's conscience and the world's intelligence—the voice of civilization.

The race hatred, religious bigotry, and and gloomy superstition which makes a trial for "ritual murder" possible are like prehistoric monsters outliving the age of darkness. Mankind has fought them too long to let them breed now at the end of their days. The trial at Kiev is a challenge of the dearest bought victory of progress. If that challenge were not taken up now, the effects of our indifference would be felt in every country for a generation.

A realization of this must come to the Russian Government. And it is the high duty of European and American peoples to bring this realization by a protest which cannot be ignored by any nation which hopes to keep a place in the honor of the modern world.

Chicago Evening American.

Only in Russia, where the vilest government and the vilest superstition exist side by side, aiding each other, could such a trial as that of Mendel Beilis be possible in our day.

Day by day shall we call attention to this horrible and shameful crime of the Russian Government—until the whole civilized world shall be acquainted with the fact and some efficient protest made.

Already public opinion expresses itself.

Mass meetings and protests have been planned in Chicago, New York and elsewhere.

Soon the Russian Government will learn from its agents in this country that the butchery of the innocent man, Beilis, and the degraded cruelty of superstition and hatred will earn for Russia the one thing that she fears, contempt and hatred of the civilized world.

Russia, the land of active ruling brutality and of dead conscience, is the only place on earth, out of Africa, that in this century could be guilty of the crime that is planned by the Czar, in "the Holy City" of Kiev.

The effort to convict an unfortunate, innocent man of a vile murder, and to fasten upon the entire Jewish race in Russia and upon the Jewish religion the stain of barbarism is cunningly planned by the Russian police.

The most brutal among the Russians can thus be kept quiet and contented by encouraging their brutality.

The degraded, superstitious, ignorant mass ruled by the Czar can best be kept in mental and spiritual subjection by gratifying the hatred, the cruelty that go with superstition and ignorance.

And Russia, in the effort to convict a Jew of "ritual murder," is continuing her policy of using hatred of the Jews as a means of keeping the vilest dregs of the population happy in the shedding of blood.

It is not necessary to tell any intelligent man or woman how baseless and infamous is the charge made against the deeply religious, law abiding Jews, whose first and strongest religious teaching is hatred of bloodshed and horror of contact with blood.

The charge that the Russian police now make against an inoffensive and entirely innocent man at Kiev is as old as superstition, cruelty and malice.

Go back a thousand years, and then another thousand, and you will find men accusing each other of the crime now charged against this poor, defenseless Russian.

Over and over, throughout the ages, the falseness of the charge has been proved. And over and over it has been made and innocent men and women sacrificed in scores.

Such cases are frequent in history—but happily they are not frequent in this day of education and conscience.

Alone Russia presents the horrible, degraded spectacle of a great national government, from the head on the throne to the miserable criminal in the police office, conspiring to increase hatred of a defenseless people, to promote murder and wholesale massacre, by a charge fiendish in its brutal falsehood and powerful in its appeal to the imagination and hatred of superstition, bigotry and ignorance.

Over and over the infamous charge has been disproved and denied.

More than one of the emperors in the early days forbade the bringing of this charge against the Jews—well knowing that it was brought always in malice and frequently as a basis of plunder added to murder.

Pope Innocent IV., in response to an appeal made by the Jews of Germany and of France, issued a bull "decreeing that the Jews should not be persecuted because of this false accusation."

But still the falsehood lives. And it finds expression today in Russia, through the power of a Czar half crazed with fear, through the cunning of a police force, diligently catering to his hatred and terror, through the vile drunken mouths of the dregs of the population, sunk in superstition and love of bloodshed.

Civilization itself, and not merely one unfortunate man, is on trial in that court of Kiev.

If the Russian police are permitted to carry through their plan they will not only murder one innocent man, but cause many murders, many massacres and add to the deplorable, miserable condition of an entire race.

Civilization and human conscience should find power to impress even the Czar and his police and to prevent this outrage.

Chicago Record-Herald.

From platforms, from the pulpit, from labor and other bodies impressive protests have gone forth against the ritual murder trial at Kieff. Sunday's mass-meetings in this city adopted effective and powerful resolutions against the tragic farce that is being played under the direction of a fanatical and stupid bureaucracy. The resolutions show a grasp of the whole situation and not one word in them can be regarded as a reflection on the court and jury that are trying the case. The protest is against the barbarous and malicious "theory" of the prosecution—the theory of ritualistic or blood murder. The denunciation is properly leveled against the bigots, fools or madmen who are audacious enough to uphold this base and brutal superstition in the greater court of civilized opinion.

The charge of murder must be established by legal evidence. So far, in the words of a British correspondent, there is not enough evidence to fill the head of a pin. No evidence is forthcoming. None is expected even by the anti-Semitic press of Russia. The accused is expected to walk out a free and vindicated man.

But what of the effect of the blood murder theory on the ignorant and superstitious? What of the opportunities afforded to organizers of massacre? The civilized world does well to hold the mirror up to nature, to show the Russian government, and especially the incompetent prosecution, what it thinks of its methods and theories in the absurd Kieff trial.

Chicago Evening Post.

That Miss Jane Addams, Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Judge E. O. Brown, Dr. Graham Taylor, Professor George H. Mead and others should signify their readiness to give support to a meeting of protest in the so-called "blood sacrifice" case in Russia [illegible] example of that broad Christianity [illegible] what the spirit of the times so [illegible] weeks.

For this meeting has a broad and firm foundation upon the duties of Christianity and of Americanism.

Its purpose, in so far as it has taken shape, would be the affirmation of this community's faith in the millions of its Jewish American citizens.

The trial of the Jewish watchman, Mendel Beilis, by the Russian government at Kieff needs no rhetoric to make plain its purpose. The cool opinion of the wisest observers in England is that the Russian bureaucracy is deliberately trying to avert another protest from the people by inciting more anti-Semitic riots. This it would do by "proving" in its courts that the Jews are in fact guilty of the ancient slander of "blood sacrifice."

For the sake of the 6,000,000 Jews in Russia who would be exposed to massacre by the success of this plot, Americans should protest in the name of civilization.

But they should do it, too, for their own sake as Americans.

For the judicial sanctioning of this mediaeval lie would hurt America in the spot where America can least afford to be hurt. It would weaken the structure of our democracy. It would deepen a cruel prejudice which today makes a serious line of cleavage in our democratic unity.

Chicago Daily News.

If this were the eleventh or twelfth century instead of the twentieth of the christian era, the trial of the poor Jewish workman, Mendel Beilis, in Kiev, Russia, on the charge of having murdered a Christian boy as part of a religious rite, would not be so preposterous, since it would be in keeping with other ignorant superstitions of the time. Vile charges of this sort brought against Jews in the past were thoroughly disproved, just as they were disproved in former centuries when they were brought against Christians under pagan emperors of Rome. It is not surprising, therefore, that the trial at Kiev is regarded by many as a mere device to prepare the way for another massacre of Jews by the ignorant and covetous enemies of those hard working and frugal people.

It is disgraceful to Russia that such a trial as that of Beilis is possible there in this enlightened day. The charge of "ritual murder" has been a peril to persecuted Jews in certain backward nations of eastern Europe quite as long as civilization should tolerate it. The proof seems overwhelming that at no time has the ritual of the Jewish religion either required or permitted the shedding of human blood for a sacrifice.

Philadelphia Inquirer.

Universal attention has been attracted during the week to the court proceedings in the Russian city of Kieff where one Mendel Beilis is under trial for the murder of the boy Andrew Yushinsky. What invests this case with such general and extradorinary interest is the amazing theory which the prosecution has undertaken to establish. Beilis is a Hebrew, while the boy was a Christian, and the contention is that the latter was the victim of a "ritual murder." That such a charge should at this late day be seriously made almost passes belief. The legend that Christian blood was employed in certain forms of the Hebrew ceremonial had its origin in the days of darkness, ignorance and superstition, when any slander against the Hebrew people was unquestionably received.

Although it need hardly be said that there never was the slightest evidence to support it, cases in which it has been alleged have occurred at long intervals from time to time in European history, but it had been thought that the ancient lie was too thoroughly exploded to admit of its revival now. Yet here is a trial going on in an important Russian city, of which it is the acknowledged inspiration, and should Beilis be convicted no one who has followed the testimony presented by the prosecution will doubt that the prejudices and superstitions and fanaticisms, the racial hatreds, the benighted ignorances, the religious fanaticisms to which the prosecution has appealed, will have determined the verdict. The evidence by which it has been sought to connect Beilis with the crime has been of the flimsiest character. Indeed, to every impartial mind the innocence of the man must have been established out of the mouths of the adverse witnesses who have contradicted each other repeatedly, and could one be assured of justice there would be no room for uncertainty as to the result.

In spite of everything Beilis may be condemned as a consequence of the evil passions which have been aroused and of the unscrupulous tactics which have been adopted, but, if so, such a condemnation will be less of him than of the conditions which made it possible. In a large sense it is not so much he who is on trial as the civilization and the judical institutions of the Russian people, and a verdict of guilty will provoke an outburst of world-wide execration directed against them. A significant and encouraging feature of the situation is the spontaneous and fervent indignation which these monstrous proceedings have provoked. Everywhere it has been the occasion for amazement that their occurrence should at this late day have been possible, and righteously emphatic repudiations of the ancient slander once more revived have come from the most widely separated and divergent sources. Jews and Christians, Protestants and Catholics, historians and theologians, jurists and laymen, have joined in its denunciation, and if that court room in Kieff could be reached by the prevalent comment even the most prejudiced jury could hardly fail of being impressed.

There is no other avowedly Christian and civilized country in which a trial for "ritual murder" could take place, and should the outcome be what many fear, Russia will be freshly discredited.

Philadelphia Press.

Two and a half years ago in the city of Kief, Russia, the body of a boy, mutilated by forty-seven stab wounds, was found in a brick factory. Some time later an old Hebrew named Mendel Beilis, was arrested, charged with the crime. After twenty-four months' imprisonment he was brought to trial at Kief. That trial, now in progress, is agitating public excitement in Russia and invoking criticism and comment from all parts of the civilized world.

The question involved is a far more serious one than the guilt or innocence of Beilis. The public prosecutor, with the approval of the Minister of Justice at St. Petersburg, has revived an ancient and barbarous superstition. He charges Beilis not only with murder, but with "ritual murder." The accusation officially formulated is that Beilis murdered a Christian child in the performance of a Hebrew religious rite.

The use of the charge "ritual crime" as a pretext for religious persecution is a familiar one. It was invoked by the Romans against the early Christians, by the Christians in turn during the Middle Ages, and by the Chinese against the Christian missionaries. In Russia its use against the Hebrews has never been abated; but this is perhaps the first time it ever has been given the open sanction of the official Government. There seems little room for doubt that it is now being employed as a political measure, an expedient for diverting the attention of the ignorant and superstitious Russian peasantry from other public questions.

Fortunately for humanity and for the long-suffering Jews of Russia, the atrocious plan of the authorities seems destined to meet with defeat. A strong public opinion is arising against the manifest injustice of the proceedings. Abuse of the law of procedure at the trial and the flimsy evidence adduced for the prosecution has impelled even the anti-Semitic faction to protest. A leading Kief newspaper, official organ of the Black Hundred, notorious enemy of the Jews, published a withering arraignment of the public prosecutor, the indictment against Beilis and the Court itself. High dignitaries of the Catholic church outside of Russia have protested against this outrage in the name of religion. One hundred rabbis have sent a declaration to the Russian authorities denying that the Jewish religion uses blood for ritual purposes.

The danger of this shameful affair lies in its possible effect upon the fanaticism and race hatred so prevalent in Russia. Enlightened opinion has long ago acquitted the Jewish religion of the libelous accusation that is made against it. But it is all too probable that the conviction of Beilis of "ritual murder" would be followed by new outbreaks of bloody massacre and mob violence.

Washington (D. C.) Post.

Protests of American Jewish organizations against the manner in which the trial of Mendel Beilis, for the alleged murder of Andrew Yushinsky, is now being conducted at Kieff, Russia, may seem inexplicable to those who do not understand what lies beneath the surface. The American Jews are not appealing merely for protection of a member of the Jewish faith. If Mendel Beilis is guilty, they do not wish him to be acquitted. They are not only willing, but anxious, that justice should prevail.

There has been introduced into this trial, however, an element which has no place in a court of justice. The prosecution, in its effort to convict Beilis, has attempted to indict the Jewish race all over the world, and has malignantly introduced a charge that makes the whole trial a farce. This charge is that the Jews practiced "ritual murder" on Christians.

To bolster up such nonsense the prosecution has brought forward as witnesses an Archimandrite who is of Jewish descent and who carried two documents relating to allegal "ritual murders" in the eighteenth century. Superstitious professional beggars, who make their living soliciting alms, have also testified vaguely that they knew of cases where Jews attacked Christians because of their religion.

That such testimony would be permitted in a court of law in a civilized country seems almost beyond belief. It is incredible that the Russian government would permit the trial to proceed along such lines. No sane person, even though unfamiliar with Jewish beliefs and customs, would give a moment's consideration to such wild and harebrained charges.

Beilis may be guilty or not guilty. He should be tried fairly and on whatever evidence there may be to connect him with the murder of Yushinsky. The attempt to show that people of the Jewish faith practice "ritual murders" or use the blood of Christians for such rituals is an insult to the intelligence of the whole civilized world, and will react upon the country which tolerates such judicial methods.

The prosecution in this case is appealing to ignorance and is making a mockery of justice. It has been shown that Beilis was at work on the day of the tragedy, but an attempt is being made to support the weak structure of the legitimate testimony by introducing the maunderings of weak-minded persons and malicious bigots.

St. Louis Democrat.

While the trial of Mendel Beilis, a Jewish factory worker, for the alleged "ritual murder" of Andrew Yushinsky, a child whose body was found three years ago at Kiev, Russia, may drag along for another fortnight, sufficient progress has been made to show that the infamous "Black Hundred" has been unable to muster enough perjured testimony to even point to the defendant's guilt. While the revival of the medieval "ritual murder" myth has shocked enlightened countries, it is gratifying to note that the newspapers of Russia have been exposing the flimsy character of the evidence introduced by the prosecution, thus defying the government, which has been levying heavy fines and suppressing entire editions of numerous papers. The demonstrations of protest by the artisans of the country are another healthy sign. It shows that the final effort of anachronistic absolutism to divert the public mind from political conditions by fanning the fires of hatred of the most ignorant and superstitious part of the population against the Jews is failing in its purpose.

Every theory of the prosecution has been destroyed by irrefutable testimony. That the blood of the child was used in the ceremony of laying the foundation of the old age home is disproved by the fact that this ceremony took place several days before the murder. The entire history of the case shows that there was never any sincerity in the prosecution. The policemen who followed the clew that might have led to the apprehension of the actual murderer were removed. The examining judge refused to hold Beilis at the time of his arrest. Higher powers intervened. Lectures were given in the city on "ritual murder" to inflame the popular passions. This is in keeping with an infamous policy long pursued in Russia.

In some other countries of Europe it was followed centuries ago, but the motive generally was extortion. Philip August of France in 1180 mulcted the Jews of 15,000 marks silver and voided all debts due Jews 80 per cent. In 1334 Casimir the Great of Poland, while he could not stem the tide of ignorance, required that there must be testimony of three Jews and three Christians to convict a person charged with "ritual murder." The belief that Jews killed Christian children to use their blood in celebration of the Passover was still fostered by the unprincipled, but Casimir's requirements made prosecutions futile. But it did not prevent hundreds of Jews from being murdered by private individuals. When pestilence stalked in the unsanitary cities of Europe in the dark ages, the Jews were charged with poisoning the wells! In some of the countries the belief still prevails that Jews practice witchcraft, and individuals suffer at the hands of individuals. But these cruel superstitions are now confined chiefly to the Pogromists of Russia. The protests of enlightened Russians against the so-called trial bring cheer. They indicate that there is still some hope for the people whom the late Bishop Fowler picturesquely styled "the baptized heathen."

Boston Advertiser.

After the conclusion of the tragically absurb "ritual murder" trial at Kiev, what? The St. Petersburg correspondent of the London Times is pessimistically sure that whatever the outcome of the trial, the grim Black Hundred will initiate and pursue a programme, or wholesale slaughter of Jews whenever possible. More optimistic is the belief of Rabbi Harris of New York, that "it may turn out, in the publicity of this trial, that the slander has been uttered once too often and the reaction is setting in against its further utterance."

The two points of view are not so different as at first appears. In the grim menace of a programme is seen the desperation of the anti-Jewish element in Russia, which recognizes the blow which world-wide publicity is aiming at the age-old and ghastly superstition of the "ritual murder," and seeks, by a great inflammation of ignorant Russian prejudice, to wipe out in blood the good effect of this trial's publicity and discussion. The reactionary effort will fail. Russian prejudice dares too much when it staged this trial in the light of the modern world.

Pittsburgh Post.

The news from Russia indicates the culivation of a sentiment against the Jews which is likely to culminate at any moment in a renewal of outrages. Of course the Russian authorities will disclaim responsibility for the growth of feeling, but whether there is reason for this excuse it is plain that no official effort is being made to restrain the riotous element. Government indifference is an encouragement to these persecutors of the Jews, and if there should be an outbreak resulting in massacre civilization would know where to place the blame.

There is provocation for the protest that is to be voiced throughout the United States and Canada, and in condemning the Russian barbarism men and women of every faith should unite. Russia's attitude toward the Jews is a crime against civilization. For that reason the protests should be world-wide.

Russia may treat other nations with contempt on this matter, but the time will come when the atrocious treatment of Jews will react. The effect of the loss of the treaty of commerce with the United States is felt at St. Petersburg, and is a part of the penalty paid for the persecution of American Jews. That action was long delayed, but it came with crushing force.

Pittsburg Gazette.

A great deal of attention has been attracted to the "ritual murder" trial which has been in progress for some time in the Russian city of Kieff. Public meetings have been held in several places in this country and protests forwarded from them to Secretary Bryan for presentation to the Russian government. That matter has been the subject of resolution in the Protestant Episcopal General Convention, the Russian archbishops, to whom the resolution is addressed, being reminded that charges similar to those upon which the man at Kieff is being tried were made in ancient times against Christians. The protests grow out of the fact, not that an individual is on trial in a Russian city on the charge of murder of a child, but that in his person the Jews of Russia are accused in a proceeding in which the government is prosecutor of habitually murdering Christian children to make use of their blood in some horrible ceremony. The ridiculousness of such a charge is so apparent that even in Kieff there is enlightened protest. Intelligent people there and elsewhere in Russia know that the charges are fictions of a malicious superstition.

Unfortunately there is a mass of densely ignorant people in Russia ready at all times to impute all or any wickedness to persons of another faith either as individuals or in the mass. Prejudice against Jews is strong there and the greater the ignorance the greater the prejudice. There is more ignorance than enlightment in Russia, and dense ignorance even in high places. The evidence of it is that such an accusation as the one against Mendel Beilis could be sanctioned by the government. It is startling in these times and the news of it a shock in this and other countries. It is a long time since persons were burned on American soil as witches. We have advanced since then. Russians, however, live in the old superstitious darkness. And they have a government which fosters intead of discouraging superstition.

Protests from the civilization beyond the boundaries of the czar's empire if persisted in may do much to let in the light or force it in. If Russia can be impressed that it is Russia that is on trial at Kieff, and not Beilis and the Jews, much will have been gained. It is Russia that is on trial—on trial at the bar of civilization.

Pittsburgh Telegraph.

Not the Jewish world alone, but the whole civilized world, views with horror the attempt of the Russian authorities at Kiev to convict the Jewish people of making the sacrifice of human life a a part of their ritual. The individual case of Mendel Beiliss, who is on trial for the murder of a Christian boy, would be of no great significance were it not that this case is made the basis of the condemnation of a whole race, the history of which through thousands of years gives the lie to the indictment lodged against it. The Kiev affair is the outgrowth of ignorant bigotry and intolerance. Hating the Jews on racial and religious grounds, the Russian authorities seek pretext after pretext to harass and oppress them and in that which they are now utilizing comes the fearful culmination. Outside of Russia the imputation of "ritual murder" to the Jews is not even a debatable question. The world of enlightenment and progress knows such a charge to be baseless and absurd and it views with corresponding contempt the efforts made in Russia to substantiate it with testimony that is false on its face.

Cleveland Leader.

There has been no other murder trial in recent times comparable in wide interest with the case of Mendel Beiliss, a poor and ignorant man, in the Russian city of Kiev. Those who are most familiar with the facts can hardly exaggerate their significance. Notwithstanding all that has been published about the trial its meaning is not understood by many persons in the United States.

This poor working man is not accused and prosecuted in the ordinary way, as an individual charged with a crime personal to himself. He is said by the police and the officials of Kiev to have slain a Christian boy to obtain Christian blood for use in rituals of the Jewish religion. Beiliss is made the representative of his people. He is on trial in Kiev but they are accused before the world.

It is this monstrous attack upon the Jewish race and the Jewish religion which has roused the righteous indignation of the Jews of all lands. It is this vital phase of the Beiliss case which has stirred the sympathy of all lovers of fair play, all who detest religious intolerance and persecution.

Russia, standing behind the public authorities at Kiev, a large city which has many thousand Jewish residents, is indicted by the friends of freedom and justice everywhere as a brutal exponent of medieval prejudices and practices, in this twentieth century. The case against Beiliss is absurdly weak, but if it were possible to prove that he killed the boy found slain in a lonely spot in the ghetto of Kiev, that would not make less infamous the attempt of the Czar's officials to show that the purpose of the crime was to get Christian blood for religious rites.

Such a charge, in Russia, means an incentive to mob outrages. It is arousing brutal and ignorant men to fury by appealing to their religious bigotry and their race prejudice. In no other great country could such a trial take place. It brands Russia today as still blackened by the passions and superstitions of the Dark Ages.

Cincinnati Star.

The trial of Mendel Beilis, charged with murdering a Christian boy in connection with the celebration of the Jewish Passover, reveals Russia still standing in the darkness that caused our own forefathers to sacrifice women for witchcraft. The most reprehensible part of the affair is that the czar and his advisers should have taken an active interest in Beilis's prosecution. The most creditable part is that the people of Russia have refused to respond to the government's trumped-up charge by indulging in the massacres which it was designed to inspire.

The eyes of the world are on the trial at Kieff. The case of the Russian government has fallen to the ground, not a vestige of proof having been offered that the murder was in any manner connected with the observance of Jewish rites. The prosecutor has received public reproof from higher authorities for not having offered a stronger case against the accused Jew. A government detective, who reported that the murder was in no way connected with religious observances and that there was nothing to indicate that Beilis committed the act, has been dismissed from the service. Even Russians of anti-Semitic views have protested against sacrificing the accused man to racial prejudice.

The present case promises to be as much a travesty and a failure as the famous ritual murder trial in Hungary thirty-one years ago, when, after a trial of six weeks, the public prosecutor was forced to admit the innocence of the defendants. The world has progressed too far to condone judicial murder for religion's sake—even in Russia.

Kansas City (Mo.) Star.

It is well understood, of course, that the Russian authorities who are prosecuting the 'ritual murder" case at Kief, are merely trying to arouse the ignorant peasants to another anti-Jewish outbreak. This sort of thing has been repeatedly done in Russia and the case now under trial has been so bungled that even a strongly anti-Semitic local Russian newspaper denounced the authorities the other day for mismanaging the business.

The accusation that Jewish ritual required the use of blood of a Christian child was a product of the ignorance and superstition of the Middle Ages, which still survives in mediæval countries. The first case of the sort came up in England in 1144. From there it spread to other countries and the charge became the excuse for the most cruel and wanton persecution.

Frequently it was used for purposes of revenge. For instance, in 1529 a Count Wolf of Bazin, Hungary, charged that a 9-year-old boy had been bled to death in a ritual murder. Thirty Jews were tortured and made to confess their guilt and then were burned. Later the child was found alive in Vienna and it was discovered that Count Wolf had taken this means of getting rid of several creditors.

The history of these trials for centuries is a painful commentary on human credulity and prejudice. None of the cases which have been studied involved any evidence that would be received in a modern court. The body of a dead child, for instance, would be found to work miracles of healing. From this it would be inferred that the child had been the victim of a ritual murder. In fact the whole history is similar to that of witchcraft.

Besides, the most thorough investigation has failed to disclose even any eccentric Jewish sect of mediaeval times, that resorted to human sacrifice. The ritualistic literature is exceedingly detailed, and if any evidence had existed undoubtedly it would have come to light.

The accusation passed into disrepute along with witchcraft and kindred superstitions in civilized communities. But along the Russian border, in Bohemia and Hungary, as well as in Russia, it has survived and occasional cases of persecution under the guise of charges of ritual murder still arise.

Detroit Journal.

The pall of the dark ages that hangs over Russia throws its shadow on the courtroom in Kief.

Before a full court of four judges, with a jury of peasants and laborers, a Jew named Mendel Beilis is on trial for an impossible murder. Superstitious Russian peasants believe that Jews use the blood of a Christian child in some religious rites. So when the body of a boy was found, gashed with knives and showing death by torture, the ignorant cried out that Jews had murdered him.

The chief of detectives investigated and declared that the lad had been murdered by robbers. The report was ignored by the prosecuting authorities. They followed the cry of the people and arrested the Jew nearest at hand. The chief of detectives has since been removed from his post. All the power of the throne has not been exerted to stop this bloody mummery. The strength of the church has not been turned to protect the Jew from a charge as wild as a charge of witchcraft.

It seems impossible that even in Russia Beilis can be convicted and punished. Even anti-Semitic newspapers are resisting the trial and the students of the Kief academy are "on strike" as a protest. The very fact that such a trial is in progress, however, shows how far behind civilization Russia really lags, how her rulers love darkness rather than light.

Other countries have known the charge of "ritual murder," called sometimes the "blood accusation." It is a vivid proof of the march of time to note that the delusion originated in England in the twelfth century but it spread to all lands. In these benighted mediaeval ages the charge was often made that the Jews used the blood of Christian children.

There was a wild difference in the reason given. Some said it was for medicine, some for sacrifice, some for admixture in the Passover bread. This in spite of the fact that the Mosaic law forbids the Jews at any time to use even the blood of animals. The different nations had different ideas at different times on what the purpose of "ritual murder" was. They agreed only in persecution and outrage.

The belief lingered on in the dark corners of Christendom even to the nineteenth century. There was an outbreak of it in Syria in 1840, in 1882 in Corfu. A case was reported in Prussia in 1891; in Bohemia in 1899. Since that date it has survived in Russia alone, and there the horrible falsehood has been the cause of many outrages such as the Kishenev massacre.

Now the great lie that has caused so much bloodshed and shame in Christian countries seeks another victim in Kief. If Beilis is acquitted or released, his present distress may bring great good to Russia and the world. For the trial has aroused the sympathy of his own people and of the enlightened nations. The eyes of the world turn to Kief as the scene of a decisive battle of Light against Darkness.

It is a small thing that one Beilis is on trial for murder. It is a great thing that Witchcraft and Superstition are on trial for their lives in their last stronghold. It is a great thing that Religious Persecution is before the bar of humanity, even in a city that has seen so much religious oppression as Kief.

Indianapolis News.

The protests which are being uttered throughout the United States against the "ritual murder" trial at Kiev draw attention once more to the astounding pliability of the Russian judiciary. The trial at Kiev promises to become one of worldwide notoriety. From this country, England, Germany, France, Italy—from religious and civil bodies of all kinds and persuasion—come murmurs of disapproval. On March 25, 1911, a Russian schoolboy named Andrew Yushinsky, a communicant of the Russian state church, played truant in order to visit a playmate who lived in one of the suburbs of Kiev. No trace was found of him for several days, and then his body was discovered on a lonely stretch of road. Death had followed the infliction of forty-seven stab wounds.

Almost immediately a cry of "ritual murder" was raised, and became so insistent that at the Kazan cathedral in St. Petersburg a mass was actually sung for the repose of the lad's soul. Then came the arrests. A Jewish clerk, Mendel Beilis, who lived near the scene of the murder, was held. The "ritual murder" charge was predicated on the superstition, which still prevails in Russia, that the Hebrews require Christian blood for mixture in the cakes used in the passover. The belief once was general in Europe—but that was in the middle ages. In the time of the Plantagenets there were Hebrew massacres in England, for the English of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries were willing to listen to tales of "ritual murder." But hundreds of years have passed since then, and with the years have come broader intelligence.

Nevertheless the trial at Kiev proceeds. A Roman Catholic priest from Turkestan, a Russian resident of Kiev, a collection of gossipers who have heard grave tales of "ritual murders" constitute the state's witnesses. It is all a tragic farce and the suprising part of it is that it should continue even in such a country of intellectual lights and shadows as the Russian empire. One needs only to trace history to see the tragedy of the ritual accusation. Numerous popes of the Roman Catholic church have issued bulls denouncing the belief, the khalif of Islam has denonuced it. And, of course, the Christian churches of Europe and the United States know that it is only a hideous superstition. And still the trial at Kiev goes on.

New Orleans Picayune.

A criminal accusation at Kieff, Russia, takes the people of this twentieth century of the world's civilization and enlightenment back to the "Dark Ages" 1,000 years ago, when ignorance and superstition prevailed everywhere.

The incident which suggests these observations is the case of a Jew in the Russian province mentioned, who is charged with the murder of a Christian boy, whose blood had to be poured out as a feature of some Jewish religious rite.

Nobody can believe that any such practice is in any way connected with the Jewish religion, and if any murder was committed, as charged, it was the act of an insane and ignorant fanatic, just as such murders are from time to time perpetrated by insane fanatics of other religions. It appears that the Russian Government has taken the matter up and is making it an argument to encourage general persecution of the Jews, who are more numerous in that country than in any other.

Salt Lake City News.

It is always a delicate matter for one country to take notice of the private affairs of another country, but Congress could properly, if necessary, ask the government to make diplomatic representations in St. Petersburg concerning the prosecution of Beilis for "ritual murder." For the accusation of this poor Jew is directed against his race. It is a charge founded on bigotry. The civilized world has an interest in the triumph of enlightenment over ignorance, justice over injustice. And for that reason the action proposed by Congressman Sabath is justified, if necessary. But we can hardly believe that it will be necessary, for the prosecution has utterly failed and Beilis will, in all probability, be acquitted.

There was no evidence against him to begin with. The "ritual murder" theory was advanced by anti-Semites, just as anti-"Mormons" here used to cry "Danites." Then the authorities set about to find a Jew whom they could accuse. Beilis happened to live near where the dead body was found. So he was arrested, and then detectives were employed to find evidence.

A woman who had a grudge against Beilis came forward in July, 1911, and declared that a woman of ill-fame had told her that she had seen a group of boys, among them Yuschinsky, playing in the courtyard of the factory. There came a Jew with a black beard and seized Yuschinsky and carried him to the oven. This story, of course, bears a striking similarity to an episode related by a witch in Grimm's "Fairy Tales," and the woman alleged to have repeated it came forward and declared the whole story an absolute invention.

The "ritual murder" theory was bolstered up by a description of the crime, widely circulated, but copied from an old book, by a priest, professing to contain an account of "the use of blood by Jews for ritual purposes." The author, Lutostausky, several years after the publication of that infamous book, acknowledged that he erred. Then, it is said, he approached some wealthy Jews and asked them to pay him for retracting his former statements. They declined to have anything to do with him, whereupon he turned to the Russian government and with money furnished him by influential Russians he commenced the publication of his version of the Talmud. In his works appear, it is said, false quotations from the Talmud and perverted interpretations of Jewish customs and rituals. And this is said to be the origin of the "ritual murder" myth.

Hartford (Conn.) Post.

Just now a trial is in progress in Russia—to be explicit, in the city of Kiev in which the government's attempt is to prove that a Jew murdered a Christian boy to obtain his blood for ritual purposes. The accused Jew has all along protested his innocence, but that avails nothing unless it is to incur greater punishment and brutality for him.

While the man sits through his ordeal in the city of Kiev his wife and small son huddle in a little hut in the woods on a hill, the wife praying in agonized supplication to the Almighty to preserve the life and give back the liberty of the unfortunate man.

This poor Jew is permitted counsel but he is not permitted to consult with him, therefore, he might almost as well be without legal defense. In fact, the lawyer seems to have been allowed the man only to protect the Russian government against the charge of persecuting a Jew.

Civilization stands aghast at the methods by which this trial is being conducted, and yet, it is probable, that not one Christian country will raise its voice in protest. It is apparent that it is the intent to convict the Jew, for there is little doubt that his doom has been foreordained by the representatives of the czar. There is no evidence that the Jew, Beilis, committed the murder of which he is charged. The boy was found with his head punctured in several places. The czar's Black Hundreds immediately raised the hew and cry, "The Jew did it! Beilis is guilty!" working the people of the district up to a frenzy, the purpose of which is to precipitate another massacre upon the conviction of the unhappy man. People do not believe Beilis is guilty. The world believes that Russia is simply carrying out another of her atrocities against the life and liberty of a Jewish subject.

Accusations similar to that made against Beilis are not new in Russia. They have already led to more than one massacre by the bigotted peasantry. Agents of the czar are assiduous in their work of spreading just the kind of stories among the peasantry that will stir up their bigotry and precipitate them like an avalanche on the all but defenseless Jews. If there is not another massacre soon, it will be because an awakening has come that permits those depended upon to make the attack to see the hideous scheme in all of its blackness and its terrible wickedness.

Des Moines Capital.

How much longer must Russian oppression of the Jew continue before the crime will be halted by a worldwide demand for an awakened public sentiment?

There was a largely attended mass-meeting in Chicago Sunday afternoon to protest against the Russian government's acceptance of the "blood ritual murder" theory in the trial of Mendel Beilis.

Clergymen, lawyers, business men—all classes were represented in the speechmaking. Resolutions were adopted. A protest will be sent to the Russian government.

Will it do any good? Does Russia care anything for outside opinion? Is there a nation on earth that is less responsive to those human and justice loving sensibilities which are supposed to actuate the enlightened mind and heart?

In Russia oppression seems to feed upon oppression. For centuries the Jew has been the target for an unreasoning and bigoted hatred. He has had a tragic struggle for existence. Just as one begins to hope that the melancholy chapter is reaching its termination new atrocities occur to show that darkness rather than light still pervades that portion of the earth.

We hope that the Chicago voice will not sound against deaf ears, but the situation is anything but reassuring.

Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

The Russian government will probably not like it, but there was a fine touch of human brotherhood in the action of the Episcopalian house of deputies, sitting in New York, when it adopted, at the request of American Jews, a resolution condemning the ritual murder trial at Kief. * * * The spectacle of one Christian body calling upon another to correct an error that is causing Jews distress and persecution, even to the loss of life, is interesting. There should be no necessity for such a rebuke, but the fact that the protest has come when the need for it appeared is right and hopeful.

It is well-nigh inconceivable that a great nation of this day and generation could so hate the people of another religion that it would deliberately manufacture evidence against them for the purpose of inciting a massacre. And yet, that is the charge that is laid against the czar and his government. The czar, it is said, has returned from a pilgrimage to the shrines of the Romanoff dynasty, with a mind made up to a "holy policy," to an insistence that Russia is a religion, as well as an empire. One step in the execution of this policy is the disciplining of the Jews. There has been search for a reason, and it has been found in the charge that a certain Jew of Kiev slew a Christian child to get the blood necessary to a certain ritual. The trial of the alleged offender is now on and, though only the flimsiest evidence has been educed in support of the charge, there is excitement among the masses who are led to believe that this is only one of the many cases of the kind and that no children of Christian birth are safe where the ritualistic practices are observed. The violence that is expected to follow the spread of this belief is the real thing sought, according to correspondents of reputable English papers, for it will be a part of the discipline which it is desired to administer as a part of the "holy policy."

If there is anywhere a more hideous case of misgovernment than this, as revealed by Russia's accusers, there is no record of it. Further, if the explanation offered is a true one, it is perfectly apparent that the United States will not soon negotiate with Russia a treaty to take the place of that which was abrogated two years ago because of Russia's refusal to recognize American passports when borne by American Jews.

Dayton (O.) Herald.

One of the Herald's friends has twice written to us to give some public expression touching the now famous Beilis case, the report of which in the news columns of the paper inclined him to the belief that credence has been given to the preposterous charge laid at the door of the Russian Jew.

In America it is difficult for us to understand the attitude of the Russian people toward the Hebrew race; it is an attitude which belongs to the Dark Ages, now dead throughout the earth, except in such lands as the land of the Muscovite and the Turk.

The progress of civilization is slow, but nowhere slower than in the land of the czar. Blood, force, repression, tyranny—these are the expressions of Russian life.

Said the great conqueror: "Scratch a Russian and you will find a Tartar." The Tartar always was and still is a savage. Cruelty is in the Russian blood. The history of the Muscovite is red with the streams that followed the knife of the assassin and the knout of the executioner. Tragedy has brooded for centuries above this complex and mighty empire. It poses as a Christian nation, but the Muzhik fears the czar more than he fears God. There is no liberty of speech, thought or action in that northern land. Crime and wantonness have stained the corridors and walls of its palaces. Its mighty prisons, with quaint and savage irony named after the two greatest among the Apostles, frown as menacing today as when their cruel walls were reared. Peter, Catherine, Alexis, Ivan—these indeed offered many and many a human sacrifice. The autocratic bureaucracy of the present government demands its constant tithe of living victims. Siberia yawns, and men and women disappear.

In the great white northern land a poor Hebrew laborer has been arrested, charged wih the crime of "ritual" murder. He is accused of having slain a Christian (Russian) boy for the purpose of offering a "blood sacrifice." In any other land the accusation would meet with the incredulity which it deserves. But not so in Russia. It is a serious matter for Mendel Beilis, for the chances are that he is condemned before his case is heard. Religion and race intolerance are cruel. For centuries the Jew has been hated in Russia. Multitudes of these people have been slaughtered by the savage servitors of the czar. The slightest pretext serves as an excuse for wholesale massacre. Murder, rapine, ruin have followed the Jew in Russia, not centuries past, but last year, yesterday, in this enlightened age.

The ignorance and bigotry of the Russian are proverbial. He masquerades as a follower of the faith of peace and love, but the dagger and the knout are hidden beneath his robe.

There was a time when all the world, or at least a great part of it, resorted to human sacrifices. There has been no time in its history when the Hebrew religion sanctioned such hideous practices. In the dim past they opposed God to Chemosh, Moloch, Baal. For centuries this race has been more scrupulous of life and blood than the Christians themselves.

The charge of this poor Hebrew engaged in "ritual" murder is an inspired charge. There is no such thing as "ritual" murder in the faith of Israel, the faith which has given to the world the concept of the one God. The charge is a figment of ignorant imagination and racial hatred. There is no evidence. But the man may suffer. It will not do to rely upon Russian justice.

The Herald's friend need feel no serious concern. The early Christians were charged, often, with the same crime. The charge was a lie then as it is a lie now. Religious hatred may condemn the man, may cast his helpless family on the cold charity of unsympathizing people; but he will not be the first man who has been martyred.

We think, probably, the news publicity given this case may have averted a designed terrible massacre such as those which have disgraced Russia so many times during the past twenty years. Let us hope so. In the meantime why shouldn't all those who, like Beilis live continually under the hair-hung sword come to a land where liberty, hope and happiness abound?

Topeka Daily Capital.

Darkest Russia's Government has had little standing in the world; it is a government of cruelty and falsehood, a government that is cursed. But this barbarous government must fall still lower in the scale of dishonor by reason of the unanimous verdict of the International Medical Congress on its accusation against the Jews of "ritual murder" in the famous Yuschinsky case. Yuschinsky was a non-Jewish boy found murdered two years ago in the town of Kieff. It was some time later that reactionary deputy in the Duma, by name Markov, suggested to the government the prosecution of a Jewish merchant, Mendel Beilis, for his death, and thereby revive throughout the world the ancient myth of Jewish ritual murder. Such a charge was brought. A Russian government detective of high rank was assigned to look up the evidence, but this detective, Minschuk, disappointed the ruling powers by reporting that no evidence could be produced, the fact being that the whole story was a fake of the most glaring order. For turning honest Minschuk was himself thrown into jail. In the end, the contempt of the civilized world may dissuade the Russian authorities from carrying the case against Beilis to the appointed limit, a verdict of guilty of ritual murder. It is deeply desired by the Russian authorities and the Czar, however, to put the game through, for the moral effect upon the ignorant and superstitious Russian peasantry and the moral authority of the corrupt Greek Church over them, as well as for the continued terrorizing of the Jews. European specialists, English, German, even Russian, and French attracted to this case have reported on it, and invariably against the Russian Government. Now the International Medical Congress in London, after listening to full accounts of the evidence in the case, was sufficiently interested to take a vote, the result being a unanimous verdict that the attempt of the Czar to revive hatred of the Jewish people by this story of ritual murder of a Russian boy is without any basis of fact. This was a little out of the way of doctors, assembled in London from all quarters of the world for conference and consideration of medical questions, but it will clinch world-wide opinion on the question Russia has attempted to raise.

Youngstown (O.) Telegram.

The most remarkable thing about the trial of Mendel Beilis in Russia on a charge of ritual murder, who is being charged with slaying a Russian boy to obtain Christian blood, is that there is a place on earth where such a mixture of superstition and malice could exist. No such refinement of cruelty is known in the dark recesses of the Congo or among uncivilized tribes in any clime. It remained for half-civilized Russia to win the contempt of the world by reviving the torture and superstition of the middle ages.

But there's a reason:

Russia is being operated for the benefit of a few and they, in order to protect themselves and prevent the ignorant population turning on them, are continually arousing hatred against the Jews, for, with a single exception, Russia with her 8,660,395 square miles of territory, is the most ignorant of all nations. Seventy per cent of her population is illiterate, and the money spent each year for educational purposes is just about sufficient for the officials, and, of course, the officials get it.

Russia may be said to be the largest spot on the face of the globe where good citizenship is needed but not welcomed.

It is customary to persecute some class most of the time. The Roman Catholics as well as the Jews have suffered from the cruelty and ignorance common to that empire.

The Jews in Russia are all orthodox, and one of their strongest religious teachings is to avoid the shedding of blood. Even the chickens used for food must be killed by an official of the church, after which the fowl is taken home and soaked in cold water, for one hour, and salt for half an hour, to remove the remaining blood.

Common sense should teach the folly of launching a blood accusation against such people.

Houston Chronicle.

To give its millions of half-starved, ignorant people something to think about besides their own poverty and wrongs; to distract their attention from privation and oppression by inspired hatred; to create an artificial patriotism by arousing over a fancied outrage, the Russian government is trying Mendel Beiliss at the holy city of Kiev.

The Russian government is not particularly interested in Mendel Beiliss, nor in the crime charged against him, which indeed was never committed; but the Russian government is particularly interested in proving his guilt and establishing the crime as an actual fact, even though it be necessary to perjure the characters and blast the souls of half a hundred coerced witnesses.

Mendel Beiliss is a Jew. He is charged with having slain a young boy to obtain human blood for a ritualistic observance. Of course, the charge like others of its kind, has no foundation in fact, but should he be convicted the Jewish faith in Russia will have been made accessory to his crime, and the bitterness of Russian ignorance will have been aroused against it as never before.

The Russian government is not supported by the love and devotion of its people; but by their permissive tolerance, which it perpetuates through oppressive and distracting measures. On the one hand it rules them with a spy system superior to that ever before devised by any nation, while on the other it keeps their attention to objects of racial and religious antagonism by arousing ignorant superstition at every possible opportunity.

The persecution of the Jews—their martyrdom, their torture, their massacre, their butchery, their humiliation, their insult, their subjection, their mistreatment, their degradation—all these have contributed as much to the maintenance and survival of Russian despotism as the magnificent system of police, which, like a giant's spider web, sweeps out from St. Petersburg to enmesh the whole empire in its resistless toils.

Mendel Beiliss is an individual, but he stands for a race. The crime with which he is charged is murder, but in the minds of the ignorant it stands for the Jewish ritual. If he is convicted the demons of intolerance and fanaticism will have been once more turned loose in Russia, and the fear-stricken monarch can again breathe freely, secure in the knowledge that while the hundred millions of hungry, ignorant, superstitious people are hunting and persecuting the Jews they will at least leave him in peace.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the Russian government is exerting its utmost strength to prove the crime and convict the man. The life of a monarchy and the survival of the Romanoffs may depend upon the outcome. No wonder the power of the empire has been invoked. No wonder the machinery of the great spy system has been set in motion.

Mendel Beiliss' conviction is likely to launch against his race and his religion the terrors of unreasoning fanaticism. The crime with which he is charged is inconceivable. It has no part nor sanction in the Jewish ritual. It is the product of fancy rather than fact, and has never been hinted at except for purposes of persecution. Russia is merely using an imagined ritualistic murder as a pretext for committing actual legalized murder.

Wausau (Wis.) Record.

Russia's zeal in the prosecution of the Jews, and the desire to increase public prejudice against the Semitic race, has overreached itself in the prosecution of a young man for what is known as "ritual murder."

The trial is a farce and the accusation a travesty; but the occasion has been seized by noted Hebrews in Russia and out, to dispel once for all, the cruelly fanatical delusion that the Jews are addicted to human sacrifices in some of their religious rites.

The charge has been made that, since animal sacrifices have ceased, human beings, gentile of course, have been substituted. The murders are said to be committed in a peculiar way. The victim is gagged, so that he may be dumb in his death struggle. He is stabbed twelve times. The thirteenth and last stab is given him. His blood is used in the paschal feast, and his body is burnt.

All this is so utterly ridiculous—so opposite to the spirit of the Jewish faith and so much at variance with Jewish character—that it is received with credence only by the most ignorant. Yet it is the kind of libel with which the high authorities of Russia inflame the people.

The present prosecution of Beilis, on that charge, is evidently intended to arouse the people to hostile activity; but the manifest innocence of the defendant, the overwhelming character of the testimony offered, or ready to be offered, in his behalf, the complete vindication of the Jewish church from the whole senseless charge by Rabbis and historians of the most unquestionable authority, can not fail to direct public attention anew to Jewish persecutions by the Russians. More important, it will serve to fix the responsibility for these persecutions, not on the ignorant populace, but on the high authorities of the empire.

Russia's treatment of the Jews thus ceases to stand out as a mere demonstration of ignorant fanaticism and appears, what it has always been, the deliberate, murderous act of the Russian government.

Canton (O.) News.

Canton is to join in the country-wide, nay, the world-wide, protest against the infamous Beilis ritual murder trial at Kieff, Russia. A mass meeting will be held next Monday night in the Socialist hall to protest against the trial. The Canton ministerial federation Monday endorsed this meeting. Many Canton ministers plan to address their congregations on the topic of the most unjustifiable reversion to the barbarity of the Dark Ages which the trial embodies.

The storm of disapproval of Russia's despicable trickery has swept over every civilized nation like a flashing flame sweeps along a train of powder. Americans cherish the memory of the "shot heard round the world." Men of the Jewish race the world over will be able in future years to cherish the memory of the trial heard round the world. The lying testimony given against Beilis will reverberate in every city of every nation. The stern and unjust rulings of the judge will stain the cheek of the blindfolded goddess in the sight of all people.

The trial at Kieff is not a trial of Mendel Beilis, the Jew, thus raised from obscurity to world-wide prominence. It is a trial of Russia at the bar of the nations of the earth, and Russia will probably drop her persecution. If she does not it would be well that the soldiers which the powers of this day have in so-called uncivilized places—in the Philippines, in Africa, in India, for example—should be turned against Russia, thus revealed as the most unChristian and uncivilized of lands.

Emperors and popes have exposed this infamous slander against a race which shrinks from bloodshed as no other race does, and books without end have been written tracing the lie through history, showing its absolute lack of all foundation and explaining its use to be always just the use which Russia is now making of it—the persecution and plunder of the Jewish people. The same charge was brought against the early Christian martyrs. It is a charge to make the blood boil, and it is making the blood of the whole world boil. If Russia proceeds with her murder of Beilis she will do so only because she feels no deed is black enough to blacken her repute and increase her ostracism.

Springfield (O.) News.

Russians are engaged in their old pastime—persecution of the Jews. This time it is the horrible suffering caused by the prosecution of Mendel Beilis, a Jewish man who has been accused of having murdered a Russian youth, at Kief, two years ago.

Beilis is accused of what is termed a "ritual murder," the preposterous charge being that the lad was killed for use in a Jewish sacrificial rite. In the first place there is no ground for belief that there is any Jewish rite in which the shedding of human blood is practiced. Nor is there any evidence advanced anywhere that would show this—nothing but the bare statement of the prosecution that it is so. On the other hand, there is the signed declaration of 500 rabbis that blood is not used and that such an accusation is monstrous.

The murder of the Russian boy was thoroughly investigated by M. Minschuk, the chief of detectives in Kief, and he reported that there was not a shred of evidence to connect Beilis with the crime. There is every reason to believe that the boy was murdered by a band of criminals whom he had betrayed.

Detective Minschuk's finding was not popular. The vicious Russians had started out with the purpose of manufacturing a case against poor Beilis, doubtless with a view of inciting massacres of the Jews when the courts should find him guilty. Minschuk was accordingly arrested and thrown into prison on a charge of having presented false evidence to hinder the prosecution and with a view of protecting the Jews. He was acquitted in the first trial, but was later found guilty and sentenced to prison for a year.

The hearing is now going on. Reports say that one of the Kief newspapers has created an immense sensation by coming out in denunciation of the court, charging that the indictment is flimsy, that the judges are determined in advance to convict Beilis, and that the miserable victim of racial hatred is being tortured like a rabbit on the vivisection table.

It is encouraging that there are Russians who lift their voices against the unspeakable crimes which the authorities are determined to commit against the Russian Jews. The courage of Detective Minschuk, the independence of the first court that tried him, and now the utterance of a newspaper against persecution—these show that there are glimmerings of civilization, even in Russia.

But so far there is no indication that the artful and wicked officials have been balked. There must be a restraining hand from St. Petersburg before justice can be done. Alas, though the Czar is heralded as a Christian ruler, and though Russia is accounted a civilized and Christian country, there is not enough courage in high places to prevent the perpetration of crimes which belong to the darkest ages.

If the results are as expected—conviction of Beilis and rioting and massacres of hapless Jews—it will be somewhat the business of the rest of the world. Every decent man whose blood will boil at the recital of the wrongs the Hebrews have suffered at the hands of black-hearted Russians, will be righteously impelled to petition the government at Washington to frame an earnest protest to the Czar to see that justice be done.

Cadillac (Mich.) News.

The case now on trial in Russia may easily come to be of momentous importance, not only in the history of that country but of the Jewish race as well. At Kieff, the ancient religious capital, a young Jewish workingman, named Mendel Beilis, is charged with the murder of a Christian boy of 12 in connection with the celebration of the rites of the Passover. It is the old blood accusation which has brought a great burden of woe upon the Jew, the charge that he uses the blood of a Christian child in the ceremonial of his great religious festival.

The boy was found dead and mutilated more than two years ago. Meantime the accused has been in prison awaiting trial. The indictment does not undertake to show that there had been murder. It rather tries to prove that the blood ritual is in use among the Jews. The ignorant multitudes in Russia give credence blindly to such charges. Political and racial hatreds were expected to precipitate massacres and strengthen the policy of oppression.

But the case has been so blunderingly conducted that a powerful anti-Jewish newspaper itself has torn the indictment to shreds. Nowhere is there any token of the cunning manipulations of the ruling Russian autocracy. Ignorance and prejudice thus far have gone on making mistakes in what was intended to produce an outbreak against a hated people.

The whole story of the blood ritual is an abominable falsehood. Christian ministers and Jewish rabbis again and again have denounced the legend. Intelligent Russians do not believe it. But the Russian peasant cherishes it, and for that reason the breaking down of this case may serve a valuable purpose in helping the ignorant peasantry to realize how baseless the charge is. In this country and all over the world the Jews are following this case with closest attention.

Dubuque Herald.

When they were themselves to blame for great wrongs, the rulers of Rome put the blame for them on the Christians.

When the wrath of Romans aroused by destruction of their city had to be appeased, Nero put blame on the Christians and the latter were sacrificed in the arena to make a holiday.

When the temporal and spiritual powers could not otherwise account for the marvelous genius of Joan d' Arc, they said she was bewitched and burned her at the stake.

Throughout all the world's history the cunning and the unscrupulous have fooled the ignorant the while they plundered them, and used superstition and lies to make the exploited believe that another hand than their own was the exploiter's hand.

The governing class in Russia, from Czar and nobles down to the most ignorant peasant of the Greek church, have pointed to the Jews as authors of all the ills of Russia.

Have the crops failed? The Jews are to blame. Has a child died of some strange malady? She was bewitched by the Jews. Was a child killed and its murderer unknown? The Jews must have killed it, for it is a part of their creed that Christian children shall be sacrificed. Are the peasants poor? The Jews have all the money.

For this, for that, for every evil thing the Jews have been held responsible. And in their blind vengeance the Christians, spurred on by governmental agents, have slaughtered the Jews, making not a Roman, but a Russian holiday even more bloody than the Romans'.

Since the beginning of Russia, the ruling power has dragged the Jews as a herring across the trail and the plunder—bent Christians have left the right scent and gone off on the wrong one.

So today at Kiev, Russia has on trial Mendel Beiliss, a Jew, charged with the deliberate sacrifice—"ritualistic murder" it is called—of a Christian child as an incident to a Jewish religious ceremony. Kiev is the cynosure of the eyes of the world, which look with horror and wonderment at this spectacle in this century of world enlightenment, this deliberate baiting of a Jew to foster in the benighted peasants' mind hatred of the race and the belief that all the ills from which Christian Russians suffer are the work of the Jews.

This is not the first time the charge of "ritualistic murder" has been made against the Jews. It is an old story in Russia, a much older story in Greece, far to the south.

And yet, anachronistic as it is to those whose minds are informed and tolerant, the charge against Beiliss is no less a challenge to the world's enlightenment than charges made today against certain creeds and religious orders, that they have rifles stacked away, that their membership has taken bloody oath to slay members of another order, and that they await only the word to set out upon a course of rapine and murder.

Absurd as the charge is, it finds acceptance, illustrating that even we of this day are victims of superstition, bigotry and ignorance.

Pasadena (Cal.) News.

Should Secretary Bryan be instructed by resolution emanating from Congress to protest to Russia on behalf of the American people against the Beilis trial at Kiev for alleged "ritual murder," it will be a protest against the folly of superstition quite as much as against the injustice sought to be done to a member of the Hebrew race. Already, however, there has been a marked change in the attitude of the Russian authorities, yielding to the enlightened public opinion and the flimsy nature of the prosecution has materially weakened the case of the crown.

Originally, it was planned to hold the trial behind closed doors, but this has had to be abandoned. The New York Times notes that the text of the indictment has been published and the court has rejected the motion of the prosecution to forbid the publication of stenographic reports of the testimony. Moreover, in the indictment the opinions of two of the three experts cited as to ritual murder are completely opposed to the possibility of the commission of such a crime from the motives charged. The most definite and emphatic of these opinions is that of Prof. Troitsky, professor of Hebrew languages and Biblical achaelogy at the Kiev Clerical Academy. Still another factor in favor of the accused is the denunciation by a popuular anti-Semitic journal of Kiev of "the infamous superstition" that murder is committed by Jews for ritual purposes, and severely criticizing the attitude of the public prosecutor.

Ten years ago no anti-Semitic journal in Russia could be found honest enough to give voice to so truthful an observation. But the Kiev publication goes further and warns the prosecutor that he has no right to imprison Beilis unless he is convinced of his guilt. It is significant of a broader viewpoint respecting the long-harassed Jewish population in Russia than noted heretofore and may be the precursor of better treatment for that much abused race, which has required the high-handed trial of Beilis to focus. We hope the promised resolution in Congress will be presented and approved and the protest promptly forwarded by Secretary Bryan.

Grand Forks (N. D.) Times.

World wide attention is being directed to the case now in progress at Kiev, Russia, involving the charge of ritual murder. For many centuries the belief has persisted in the minds of ignorant and superstitious people that Jews, at the time of the Passover, were in the habit of killing a Christian youth and mingling his blood with the Passover bread. Perhaps it is not strange that such a belief should have prevailed in the dark ages, when religious fanatics were in the habit of charging each other with the most terrible crimes, but that there should be such a belief today in any country called civilized passes understanding. It is a fact, however, that this belief still exists in certain sections of Russia, and instead of trying to dissipate it by proper methods of enlightenment, many Russian officials appear to be engaged in a conspiracy to encourage it in order to fan the hatred of the orthodox populace toward the Jews.

In 1911, in the Kiev district, the body of a Christian boy was found in a clay pit, hacked with wounds. An investigation was started, and almost immediately the cry of ritual murder was started, and a Jewish resident was arrested on suspicion of having committed the murder. All the facts which have been ascertained point quite clearly to the probability that the boy was killed by members of a gang of thieves who thought that the lad had spied them, and had told, or intended to tell, of facts which would make trouble for them. Two police officers who were placed in charge of the case have been removed because they reported facts tending to show that the boy met his death in this manner. One of them was imprisoned because he did not report that the case was one of ritual murder, and the imprisoned Jew the guilty person. A third official seems to have been more regardful of the wishes of his superiors, and he has reported in accordance with their desires. The Jewish "suspect," a poor man, awaits trial under these preposterous circumstances.

The charge of ritual murder has led to more than one outbreak of the peasantry against the Jews, and everything that had come to light indicates a purpose on the part of official Russia to press this case to such a conclusion that the lot of the Jews will be intolerable. It is difficult to understand how such things can be in a country which calls itself Christian. Still, we have only to look back a few centuries to find men in our own New England who were far above the present Russian peasantry in intelligence persecuting inoffensive people for witchcraft. Sometimes the world seems to move very slowly.

Davenport Times.

The trial at Kieff, Russia, of a poor Jewish workman, Mendel Beilis, on the charge of having murdered a Christian lad as a part of a religious rite, is as absurd as was the hangings for witchcraft in the early days in America. The difference is that the foolish Americans were sincere in their belief in witches, while the persons back of the prosecution in Russia are pushing the charge as a part of a political plot to arouse the prejudices of the average Russian against the Jews and to prevent the rescinding of the order that every Jew must remain within a certain pale of settlement.

For very shame the czar ought to put an end to such a disgraceful performance. He is presumed to be the ruler of a civilized country, and at least a nominally Christian country, and yet the trial at Kieff is so much like what might be expected among people of a thousand years ago and so contrary to the teachings both of the Jews and of Christian people that it ought to make him feel the need of summary action to put an end to the whole thing. But it may be that however autocratic his government is in theory he finds it good policy to let officials carry out a plot to maintain a popular prejudice against the Jews. The Jews of Russia are a frugal and industrious people and by their ability to get along well, even when handicapped by oppression arouse the jealousy of peasants and petty tradesmen who are not so keen to work and to save.

No competent student of the history of the Jewish people has ever disovered anywhere any foundation for the absurd theory that has from time to time been advanced that the Jewish religion ever required or permitted the shedding of human blood as a sacrifice.

Prejudice and politics are responsible for the prosecution of Mendel Beilis at Davenport Democrat.

France had its Dreyfus case, and Russia has its Beilis trial—if anything, a little more infamous.

The attention of the world is fixed on the proceedings at Kiev, where Mendel Beilis has been thrust from obscurity into the public gaze as the result of charges that, some two years ago, he murdered Andrey Yuschinsky, a lad of Christian parentage, to use his blood in alleged ceremonies of the Jewish religion—the so-called "ritual murder," over which it is attempted periodically to stir up anti-Jewish feeling in Russia particularly.

Of course no one in intelligent or well-informed circles longer gives any attention to these "ritual murder" stories, but if it had not been for the public clamor that is now arising, even in Russia, Beilis might have been sacrificed and credulous Russians greatly excited by his conviction of the terrible charge filed against him. It now looks as if the case will be thrown out of court, as an impartial review of the testimony has shown that "it hasn't a leg to stand on."

Kalamazoo Press.

Kiev, where the Jew Mendel Beiliss is on trial for the alleged murder of a Christian boy for ritual purposes, is a Russian town a long way off from western centers of civilization. Yet the trial might be in progress in Berlin or Paris to judge by the expression of outraged German and French public sentiment; it might be in New York or Boston from the intensity of interest awakened in it in this country.

So small has the world grown and so closely have its common sympathies for the oppressed or persecuted of every nation been knit together! It no longer requires all the powers of a Voltaire to awaken the public conscience to a flagrant case of injustice. There is no longer much need of a Zola's denunciations. Even a humble victim of governmental oppression like the clerk on trial at Kiev has only to have the facts in the case become public to secure a full hearing in the world's court of opinion.

The protests from France, Germany and Great Britain, from our own country and from Russian councillors of state and other dignitaries, against the indicated abuse of justice to obtain a conviction in the case are eloquent of international feeling against any use of governmental power savoring of oppression. Only in Russia could credence be now given to an exploded popular superstition founded on traditional hatred of the Jew, and only in Russia could the courts be influenced by anti-Semitic sentiment to the extent of making a defendant's life depend on a preposterous legend.

Clinton (Ia.) Advertiser.

A criminal accusation at Kieff, Russia, takes the people of this twentieth century of the world's civilization and enlightenment back to the "Dark Ages" 1,000 years ago when ignorance and superstition prevailed everywhere.

The incident which suggests these observations is the case of a Jew in the Russian province mentioned, who is charged with the murder of a Christian boy, whose blood had to be poured out, as a feature of some Jewish religious rite.

Nobody can believe that any such practice is in any way connected with the Jewish religion, and if any murder was committed, as charged, it was the act of an insane and ignorant fanatic just as such murders are from time to time perpetrated by insane fanatics of other religions. It appears that the Russion Government has taken the matter up and is making it an argument to encourage general persecution of the Jews who are more numerous in that country than in any other.

Huron (S. D.) Huronite.

Yesterday there was begun at Kiev, in southern Russia, a trial that is deliberately aimed at the Jewish population of that section through governmental appeals to an existing deep prejudice against them.

It was two years ago last April that the body of Andrie Yuschinsky, a 12-year-old boy of a Christian family was found in a brick yard and Mendel Beilis was arrested, charged with murdering him. The body bore 47 wounds, inflicted with a blunt instrument.

Throughout the proceedings against Beilis, the prosecution has endeavored to establish proof that the boy was slain in accordance with an alleged Jewish rite so that his blood might be used in making passover bread.

For centuries the ignorant people of southern Russia have believed that the rite is practiced by the Jews and the authorities are endeavoring to confirm the belief through the murder of the boy Yuschinsky.

The chief of police of Kiev was instructed to proceed with his investigations upon that theory, but the best he could do was to trace the murder to a gang of thieves who committed the deed under fear that their victim would betray them to the authorities.

Whereupon, the chief of police was dismissed from office and tried and convicted and sentenced to prison, and a more subservient tool took his place. He arrested Beilis, a Jew, who was foreman in the brickyard, charging the murder upon him and alleging that it was a "ritual murder," in compliance with a provision of the Talmud, and he is now on trial.

Religious and scientific men of all of Europe have interested themselves in the case and have protested against the trial. The international congress of medicine, in session in London, joined the weight of its influence to the general protest.

But the government of Russia has been deaf to all the appeals and the farce is proceeding and Beilis will be convicted and superstition will be strengthened.

The Christian Year.

Russia is again engineering the "ritual murder" theory and tries to fasten it on the Jews. Such an act is most un-Christian and most dastardly. There is not the slightest historical truth in the accusation that the Jews have ever used Christian blood in the offering of their sacrifices. The whole charge is a monstrous fable concocted in hell, and we are happy to say, condemned by no less than four Popes, Innocent IX., Gregory X., Martin V., and Clement XIV.

Daily Graphic, London, Eng.

It is often said that Russia is still deep in her Middle Ages, but it wants a drama like that which began to unfold itself yesterday in the Criminal Court of Kieff to show us how true it is. Were it a trial for witchcraft it could not cause more pain and astonishment to the western world. The case has been pending for two years, and although it has already evoked indignant public protests from distinguished statesmen, divines, jurists, scientists, university professors, and other men of light and leading throughout Europe, few of us were disposed to take it over tragically. For what has happened is this: An old wives' tale which goes back to the dawn of history, and which is not unconnected with the superstitions of Black Magic and bogey stories like "Fee-Fi-Fo-Fum," has been revived by the bigots and fanatics of Russian reaction to serve as a weapon against the Jewish people, and it has actually received the imprimatur of the Imperial Russian Government. The object is to make not only Beilis but the whole Jewish people and Judaism itself responsible for the crime, inasmuch as the charge of ritual murder is only the ancient superstition which Josephus had to refute in his treatise "Contra Apion" that the Jews need and use Gentile blood in certain of their religious ceremonies. That the superstition should linger among the ignorant and still half-pagan peasantry of Eastern Europe is not altogether surprising, but that it should be fathered by a civilized government, and more particularly a Christian government, is well-nigh incredible.

Daily Citizen, London, Eng.

Anti-Jewish feeling and superstitious ignorance are solely responsible for the absurd ritual murder trial now proceeding at Kieff. Thousands of ignorant people are being persuaded that among the Jews there are secret sects which practise ritual murder. These dreadful charges were brought against the Jews in this country during the Middle Ages. They were believed to offer up the blood of young Christians as sacrificial offerings. The belief belongs to much the same category as the belief in witchcraft. That some of the most illiterate of the Russian peasantry should credit these monstrous slanders is perhaps not to be wondered at, but that they should form the basis of a State trial throws a strange light on Russian civilization and enlightenment. We deplore the trial, not only because of the wrong done to an innocent man (a man already terribly punished, though guiltless, as we believe, of any crime), but also because of the enormous harm that will reslult in so many directions. This trial gives a set-back to human freedom and toleration between the races.

Winnipeg (Can.) Telegram

Christians, peoples of all creeds and no creed, will join in sympathy with the protests of the Winnipeg Hebrews who have sought to vindicate the good name of their race against the ghastly charges of participation in "ritual murder" It is an amazing thing that, in this enlightened age, a great world power like Russia, whose sovereign is alike the head of the church which rules the consciences of a majority of its people, and the head of the state, should still cling to the superstitions of the middle ages with respect to a race that has done so much to enrich the world of science, of literature, of medicine, of music, and of art, to quote but a partial list of the many departments of daily life that have been bettered by contact with the Hebrew. It passes all understanding that in the twentieth century great Russia could lend its courts solemnly to the trial of a ghastly charge against a member of the Hebrew race of participating in "ritual murder"—the killing of a Christian that his blood might be used in the celebration of the Passover It needs only to state the nature of the crime to call its own disproof. The charge of "ritual murder" reflects against the whole Hebrew race. It is not unnatural, therefore, that the representatives of this great people in Winnipeg should assemble in protest, or that Christian ministers should share the platform with them and join their voices in remonstrance against the vile charge.

Express, Dublin, Ireland.

Superstitions die very hard in Russia, and one of the most inveterate of them all is the "ritual murder" bogey. Times without number have we heard of cases where Jews are alleged to have murdered Christian children for the purpose of obtaining blood to be used in Jewish sacrificial rites; and over and over again have these vile charges, the offspring of an anti-Semitic feeling of which we in these countries can have no conception, been vigorously denied and completely refuted. To us it would appear fairly obvious on the face of it that an oppressed race, as the Jews are in Russia, with every Christian hand turned against them, would be the least likely to provoke an enmity that only seeks a pretext for open violence. But the charge is an old one, and it shows little sign of dying even in these ages which we are accustomed to call enlightened. We must admit, in fairness, that we in the United Kingdom cannot plume ourselves on complete freedom from superstition. In parts of Ireland, in particular, where education other than the most elementary kind has not penetrated, the blackest superstition is rife. But the distinction lies in this, that in the cases of these so-called "ritual murders" the abominable superstition is not merely found among the ignorant peasantry, where it would not surprise us to find it, but actually in the councils of the Government and in the law courts of one of the Great Powers of Europe. In a land where the freedom of the press is not a remarkable characteristic, it is most suggestive to find a paper like the Kievlanin tearing the indictment to rags and assailing the public prosecutor in all the moods and tenses.

Globe, London, England.

It is a scandal to Russian civilization, and a disgrace to Russian justice, that the Jewish race should now be on its trial at Kiev on the horrible and utterly baseless charge of ritual murder. The whole civilized world outside of Russia knows that if the case against Beiliss were proved up to the hilt, the crime would have nothing at all to do with alleged "ritual murder," for the simple reason that there is no such thing. The charge is an abominable attempt to create a furious prejudice against an orderly and peaceful people: it is false to the knowledge of those who bring it, and is almost inconceivably wicked and cruel. The attempt has aroused the indignation even of Russian journals which are avowedly anti-Semitic, and one of the most painful things in the whole of this sorry business is the suppression by the authorities of a newspaper which has ventured to protest against this outrage on humanity. We can imagine ignorant Russian peasants, permeated with age-long prejudice, showing anger against anyone who ventured to defend the Jews: but we can no more imagine educated officials sharing their opinions than we can suppose any sane person to believe The Globe affected by racial feeling because it objects to Sir Rufus Isaacs being made Lord Chief Justice.

Protest Meetings and Appeals Against Ritual Murder Trial.

MR. ADOLF KRAUS, PRESIDENT OF THE ORDER, CALLS UPON WORLD'S CHRISTIAN NATIONS TO STOP RITUAL MURDER TRIAL.

On Oct. 15, 1913, Mr. Kraus was interviewed by the Chicago Examiner concerning the Beilis case. His interview was published as follows:

"In the early days whenever the heathens wanted to massacre Christians, they charged them with ritual murder. In after years, the Christians made the same accusation against the Jews whenever they sought for an excuse to massacre them.

Different Popes have issued bulls against the accusation of ritual murder. Alexander the First, the grandfather of the present Czar, expressed his disapproval of the accusation. The Jewish religion prohibits the use of blood for food in any form. No intelligent person, even in Russia, believes that Jews use human blood for any purpose, yet Mendel Beilis, a poor laborer in Kiev, was arrested about two years ago, charged with ritual murder. He has been kept in jail by the authorities for such a length of time for some purpose, possibly to start a pogrom at the proper time. If the man killed a child he could have been tried long ago for murder.

Ritual murder simply means an accusation against all the Jews of the world that they use the blood of Christian children at Passover to mix with their bread.

At the Congress lately held in London by the doctors of the world that accusation was unanimously denounced. In my opinion the accusation needs no defense by the Jews. There are now in the City of New York about 1,000,000 Jews; in the City of Chicago over 300,000. If the accusation be true, namely:—that they killed Christian children for their blood, they must have killed a great many Christian children in the last decade, and yet no one has ever heard of a single case.

It is suggested that a mass meeting be held by the Jews of this city. I am not in favor of it. What would be the use of it? As far as American people are concerned, no such mass meeting is needed; as far as the anti-Semites of Russia are concerned, any protest that the Jews can make would be of no avail.

The Jews can point to their history for thousands of years as refutation of the charge. They need not defend themselves on the charge of ritual murder; but it does seem to me that the Christian world owes it to itself to defend its honor, its love of justice, its belief in the Sermon on the Mount, by holding mass meetings and by protesting against the barbaric, inhuman injustice which a portion of the Christian people are trying to perpetrate in the City of Kiev against innocent people.

The press of the world is, as a rule, in the hands of fair men.

The injustice of this accusation has even penetrated the bosom of one of the editors of an anti-Semitic paper at Kiev. He protested in strong terms editorially against the injustice which is intended to be dealt out to a people. His paper was suppressed, but the voice of the people outside of Russia cannot be suppressed. Let them speak."

The idea that it was for the Christains to protest was favorably taken up by the Christian clergy of Chicago. and since then by leading Christians all over the country.

ASK UNITED STATES TO JOIN BEILIS PROTEST.

Chicago Mass Meetings Seek Government Influence in Ritual Murder Case.—Governor Dunne and Senator Lewis Send Messages.

Two downtown theaters were inadequate to house the outpouring of indignant people who assembled to lend their presence to the denunciation of what was declared to be a prejudicial attempt on the part of the Greek Church of Russia and the powers that rule the Czar to incite the wrath of Nicholas' ignorant subjects against the Jews of his domain.

The mass meeting was originally called for Cohan's Grand Opera House for 2 p. m. on Oct. 19th, and an overflow meeting was held at the nearby Garrick Theater, also filled to its capacity.

In both theaters, as well as by the masses on the street, resolutions were adopted calling on the state department at Washington to notify the Czar's government through the Russian ambassador, of Chicago's protest against making the laborer Beilis a victim of Russian hatred for his race.

Some speakers went so far to urge that Russia be ostracized by other nations until it indicates a willingness to join with the enlightened people of the world in a spirit of universal brotherhood.

Text of the Protest.

This is the resolution. however, that met with the commendation of all who participated:

"Whereas, Mendel Beilis, a Jewish laborer, is now being tried at Kiev, Russia, for the alleged murder of a Christion boy, Andre Yushinski, in March, 1911; and,

"Whereas, the prosecution has accused the said Beilis of having murdered the boy in order to obtain his blood for use for ritualistic purposes, usually termed the 'blood ritual'; and,

"Whereas, this alleged use of blood is absolutely abhorrent to the doctrine, spirit and practice of the Jewish religion and has been so proven by non-Jewish theologians, scientists, publicists, and historians; and,

"Whereas, over 700 rabbis, the heads of the Jewish church, located all over the world have just taken public oath and solemnly asserted that there was nothing in the doctrine or practice of the Jewish church to warrant any allegation that the use of human or even animal blood was permitted for any purpose, religious or secular; and,

"Whereas, the 6,000,000 Jews living in Russia are exposed to public shame and contumely by having spread far and wide the accusation that they practice so barbaric a rite as the 'blood ritual' is alleged to be, and over 2,000,000 American citizens of the Jewish faith are distressed and mortified by this attack made on the morality and practice of their faith; and,

Fears Further Outbreak.

"Whereas, even the conservative public press of Russia has assailed the charge of ritual murder as barbarous, absurd, superstitious and malicious, and accuses the court of acting arbitrarily, and holds the higher authorities responsible for the elimination of all evidence favorable to the accused, and the liberal press of Russia fears that the populace may be incited to fresh pogroms as a result of the excitement induced by the superstitious and bigoted charge made against the defendant; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, citizens of Chicago, in mass meeting assembled, do hereby express our indignation and voice our protest against the use of so barbaric an accusation and so medieval an insult, which can result only in exposing an industrious and law-abiding race to the universal scorn and in some parts of the world to certain violence of person and destruction of property; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Secretary of State of the United States to be presented by him, through the proper channels, to the court of Russia."

The stage at the Grand Opera House was occupied by many of Chicago's leading citizens of all nationalities and creeds when the curtain was raised shortly after 2 o'clock. Judge Edward O. Brown of the Illinois Appellate Court presided. Back of him, seated in rows, were 100 men and women whose names are familiar in the religious, legal, educational, and scientific world.

Addresses were delivered by Assistant Corporation Counsel K. D. Mathias, representing Mayor Harrison, who was prevented from attending; by Miss Jane Addams, and Rev. Father O'Callaghan, by Dr. Booker T. Washington, Rev. Archibald J. Carey, Dr. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Horace T. Bridges, Prof. Geo. F. Foster of the University of Chicago, Judge John P. McGoorty, and the speaking was concluded by Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, rabbi of Sinai Temple.

Several of the speakers after the close of the meeting at the opera house repaired to the Garrick Theater to address the overflow meeting assembled in that place.

MASS MEETING AT WASHINGTON, D. C., PROTESTS AGAINST BLOOD RITUAL CHARGES.

Representative Jews of Washington, D. C., assembled at the Eighth Street Temple on the evening of Oct. 15th, and adopted resolutions of protest against the ritual murder charge in Russia.

Congressman Fess of Ohio, Hon. Simon Wolf, ex-President of the Order B'nai B'rith, and Rabbi Dr. Wm. Rosenau of Baltimore, were the speakers, and the meeting was presided over by Rabbi Dr. Abram Simon of Washington.

Speaks as a Christian.

Simeon D. Fess, representative from Ohio and president of Antioch College of that state, came to the defense of the Jewish religion, and delivered a masterful address of protestation against the alleged ritual murder attributed to Beilis.

Representative Fess took particular pains to state his position in denouncing the attacks that have been made on the Jews, both of this country and Rus and said that he spoke not as a member of Congress, neither as a president of an educational institution, but as a Christian citizen of the United States, who fully realized the great injustice that has been done the Jewish people, whom he characterized as the most persecuted people on earth.

Representative Fess criticized the attitude of some Christians in persecuting the Jews, and said that he could not count for the great suffering that has been caused in the name of holy religion.

"In this great day when to speak across the ocean is practically as simple as to speak across the hallway of a house, it is inconceivable that any nation should tolerate the persecution of Jew or gentile or any one. I am sure that tonight the protestations that are being sent up here by your people will echo to good advantage, and that justice will be meted out. I feel that in this case not only is Judasim, but Christianity, on trial."

In referring to a remark that had been made by a speaker who preceded him, the rabbi of Baltimore, the Rev. Dr. William Rosenau, who told of a crowd of children that had attacked and ridiculed some Jewish people in an Ohio city, Representative Fess said that paternal, maternal, and domestic educational facilities have been totally neglected in some classes of American people, and that home instruction should be given on the proper treatment of fellow beings.

"There is one place in which our American civilization is weak," he said, "and that is in the schools, where we have too much of the smart-Aleck business."

In concluding, Representative Fess brought his auditors to their feet when he praised the Jewish people in glowing terms, and said that in Congress he sat next to one of the best men and one of the brainiest men in the country, and this man, he said, "is a Jew."

Ridicules Blood Sacrifice.

Rabbi Rosenau, in his address, outlined the great work that had been done by the Jewish people ever since the world began, and told of how utterly ridiculous the charges being put forth against the Jew are. He said that no thinking man, be he Christian or atheist, would charge that the Jews use the blood of Christian children in their ritual connnected with the Passover. "There is nothing in any book, prayerbook, or liturgy of the Jewish religion which can be found calling for such a sacrifice," he said. "The idea of any Jew being branded as a murderer in his ritualistic performance is preposterous."

Calls it "Infamous Lie."

Simon Wolf, who was the next speaker, said that not only the Jews, but the Christians, have been falsely accused about their religious beliefs, and that when people try to show that the Jews use Christian blood in their Passover services they are but rehashing an old, old story.

"The whole thing is an infamous lie," said Mr. Wolf, "concocted in the spirit of fanaticism and hatred. It is not Beilis, the Jew, whom they have on trial; it is Judaism and all the Jews who are on trial."

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"1. The Hebrew community of Washington, D. C., through the voice of this mass meeting, contends that there is no rite in the Jewish religion exacting the use of human blood in its exercise, and that, on the contrary, it teaches the propagation of peace and love between man and his fellow men.

"2. That since the earliest days of the Jewish people there has never existed any sect whatsoever, and there does not even exist a secret sect, that uses Christian blood in any ritual.

"3. That this mass meeting protests to the world, in the name of justice, civilization, and religious tolerance, against the infamous accusation that Mendel Beilis could have murdered Andrew Yushinsky in Kiev for the purpose of using his blood for the Passover ritual.

"4. That these resolutions be sent to the public prosecutor at Kiev, Russia."

PROTEST BY BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, COOK COUNTY, ILLINOIS.

Resolutions protesting against the "ritual murder" trial were adopted by the Board of Cook County Commissioners. Copies of the resolutions were forwarded to the Secretary of State and the Russian ambassador at Washington.

The resolutions read as follows:

"Whereas, In spite of the progress and civilization of the present day, at this time there appears in Russia a deliberate attempt to go back to the barbarous days by a revival of a calumny against the Jews, in claiming what has been disproved and is openly condemned by all fair-minded people, that the Jews use the blood of Christians in their celebration of the Passover.

"Whereas, The powerful government of Russia by its unrighteous action of countenancing a revival of the calumny known throughout the world as the 'blood lie' is endeavoring to create an excuse for its mob to torture the Jews, to rob them and to keep alive the brutal hatred among those of the people of Russia who are ignorant.

Charges Plot to Murder.

"Whereas, At this very time the forces that are endeavoring to create the excuse for the renewal of rioting and hostile demonstration against the Jewish people in Russia are planning to murder Mendel Beilis, a Jew, by judicial murder in order to revive and keep alive the 'blood lie.'

"Whereas, As American citizens and as public officials we know how infamous a libel and how vicious a lie against the Jewish people is the claim that they use the blood of the Christians or of any other human beings in their celebration of the Passover, and we realize the special importance of the trial of Mendel Beilis at Kiev, Russia, at the present time as an excuse to revive the charge of ritual murder and to justify massacres of Jewish people.

Duty to Protest.

"Whereas, It is our duty to at all times, in all places and in every way possible to protest against inhumanity, barbarity, injustice, persecution and oppression as free men who appreciate the blessings of our grand country; therefore be it

"Resolved, That this Board of County Commissioners in regular meeting assembled hereby express its formal protest and condemnation against the accusation of ritual murder brought against Mendel Beilis at Kiev, Russia.

"Resolved, That this board in its action voices the sentiment of the people of Cook County and that the abhorrence of the members of this board against the conduct of the Russian government in planning to murder a man by a judicial murder to stir up prejudice, hatred and greater oppression is the true feeling of all American citizens.

"Resolved, That this board joins with all Americans in the protest against the unrighteous action of the Russian Government and directs that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Secretary of State and to the ambassador of Russia at Washington, in the hope that the Russian Government, hearing of the real attitude of the American people and all right-minded people, may desist in its revival of barbarity and persecution.

"Resolved, That the clerk of this board be and he is hereby directed to take charge of the sending out of these resolutions."

DETROIT CITIZENS PROTEST.

At a mass meeting held in Detroit on Nov. 2, 1913, which was attended by over 5,000 citizens, resolutions were adopted asking the State Department and Congress to protest to the Russian government against the ritual murder charge. The meeting was addressed by Congressman F. E. Doremus, the Rev. E. R. Shippen of the First Unitarian Church, and Judge Murphy, each of whom denounced the Russian government in strong terms.

KIEV.

Whether by design or accident, the opening days of the trial of Mendel Beilis fell in the week ushering in the Great Fast. The ten penitential days bordered at either end by solemn convocation, which as no other occasion unites all Israel, find the Jewish soul aquiver with emotion. It is a period of penance and prayer, of self-searching, of bringing to the lip that of which the heart is full. Though we err and go astray in the year's course with its humdrum activities and business pursuits, though we be split up into so many atoms, each revolving in its own orbit of self-interest, once a year self is submerged, war and strife are silenced, and the woe and weal of our common brotherhood become paramount. At no time is the response of the individual to the needs of the community readier: the hand that would otherwise tighten is opened, the most obdurate heart relents, and the sympathetic chords of our being are touched. It would have been indeed surpassing strange if at such a season and in such a mood our heart had not gone out in prayer and in warm appeal to be strong and courageous to our unfortunate brother and to his noble advocates facing the peasant jury that sat in judgment over the teachings and practices of Judaism in the Holy City of Kiev.

"Be Thou with the mouths of the advocates of Thy people Israel and of Thy Law." Thus prayed Russian Jewry on the two Days of Judgment at the behest of their spiritual leaders. It is destined to become a historic prayer, the outcry of harassed Israel, of the outraged Jew. We pin our faith as of yore upon the Judge of mankind, who respecteth no person and taketh no bribe. We believe that He has Israel in His care, but we know that unless we were pure and innocent we could count on no favoritism. The dread of the Divine Judgment would preclude our appeal to Him if our hands were stained in blood. "Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it, neither is there in our entire holy literature aught that justifies the calumny of our traducers." Yes, our prayer goes out to the Searcher of hearts, to our Great Advocate in heaven. But we know that He works through human agencies, through the noble men who are not of our people in whom the light of reason has not been dimmed by prejudice and who, not for the love of us, but because of their love for truth, stand ready to vindicate the fair name of the Jew and Judaism. Heaven be thanked, though the Black Hundreds and their minions in high and low places rise up against us, there is still enough of fair play and honesty in the world to take up the cause of a martyred people. In this hour of trouble and of rebuke and of contumely we are grateful indeed to all those whose voice has been heard in protest against what, if we were minded to laugh, must be designated as a farce which the Czar's Minister of Justice was enacting in Kiev. To the Legislatures of our various states and to the Congress of the United States, in which fair-minded men of affairs have uttered their sense of abhorrence, to the Episcopalian clergy and laity in convention assembled, who have spoken words of sympathy with their Jewish brethren and in bold and fearless language called upon the Orthodox Church of Russia to repudiate the calumny; to the Cardinal Primate of England, who, following the illustrious example of the enlightened heads of his church, declared in positive terms against the vile slander; to the learned academies and the scholars of Europe, to all of them we extend our warmest thanks.

The sinister remark has fallen from the pen of a venomous publicist in Russia: Why all this commotion if the Jew is conscious of no guilt? Had we been silent, the self-same virulent press would have proclaimed our silence as an evidence of guilt. No, we shall defend ourselves to the utmost. We know the charge to be an old one. But we know the disastrous consequences if we stand by idly. Already ominous announcements are heard of planned massacres. We shall not escape them one way or the other. We know too well from past experience what a terrible calamity is the blood accusation which unscrupulous politicians see fit to perpetuate for the destruction of our people. The truth of the matter is that the masses are at all times prone to believe anything and everything which is rooted in prejudice. It is not the fault of the Jew that the Jewish problem troubles the Czar and his "faithful" supporters. The Jewish problem would vanish if the Jew were given his inalienable rights. So the Jew is disliked. He is a thorn in the Muscovite flesh. Therefore the Czar is not squeamish about methods. By means fair and foul he would cow the Jew if he cannot make him disappear from the face of the earth. But woe to the throne that must be supported by unrighteousness. The weapons of the autocracy will recoil upon it. For when respect for the law and for truth are diminished, anarchy must ensue. "God standeth in the congregation of the mighty; He judgeth among the judges." Beware, we call to unholy Russia, of the judgment of God. It may crush the Jew; but in the end it will be preparing its own doom. When once the measure of her iniquity is full, the punishment will come surely and swiftly. She will have herself to blame, for that she has denied the fundamentals of national stability, the respect for law and truth.

APOSTASY.

From Odessa comes the word that one hundred Jewish students have abjured Judaism in order to be admitted to the University. Similar reports reached us some weeks ago from Kiev. The newspapers published a spirited appeal to the Jewish youth of Russia from the pen of the great Jewish historian Dubnow. The appeal has called forth a remark from the hostile press that the Jews object to apostasy upon national rather than upon religious grounds.

It is timely to remind our cavillers of the opinion of a German Churchman, which a year or so ago was given in print on the subject of conversions in Germany. The Church knows full well that barring exceptional cases Jewish converts to Christianity are actuated by insincere and ignoble motives. Of conviction there is not the slightest trace. There is a lie on the lips of the convert. His presence in the community of believers cannot but be a menace. The clergyman who shuts his eyes to the hypocrisy of Jewish catechumens is a participant in the crime, a crime against the truth and against the best interests of religion. We know the trend of politics in Europe and we fear no contradiction if we state that the connivance of the clergy is rooted in considerations which have not the remotest connection with religion. For a religion cannot be bartered away. But it is speciously argued that Christianity is an element of the national culture and that through the doors of the Church entrance is gained to the full national life. Accordingly, the ready admission of Jews who knock at the Church's doors is based on nationalistic considerations.

To be more specific: the tendencies of modern military states like Germany and France are in the line of national uniformity. They manifest themselves in a variety of ways. There is no room for little nationalities. The Poles and the Danes and the Alsatians in Germany must be Germanized. War is waged against the foreign languages. There is no room for foreign culture. And so the Church is forced into the attitude of a leveller of differences between nationality and nationality. Of course, the Church of Rome will not yield. Its basic principle is internationalism. It recognizes but one supreme organization. It tolerates the state where it cannot dominate it. With the Jews the method is to make Judaism a civil or a social hindrance. To break up the mass of Jewry, temptations are thrown out to beguile and to cajole the individual Jew into forswearing the faith of his fathers. The purpose is not to make Christians, but to make Germans. Religion will take care of itself. The children born into the new religion will readily acquire the faith. Meanwhile the state is made stable and the German nationality firm. If then the willing acceptance of converts is based on nationalistic principles, why then the outcry of Jewish warfare against apostasy taking the form of an appeal to racial fidelity?

The truth of the matter is that the last step has long been prepared. Conversion en masse is always the result of persecution of one kind or another. But only the weakest members succumb, the lukewarm and indifferent who in times of tranquility have no cause to separate themselves from the community; but once there is a conflict with convenience, social advancement, or civil preferment, they are ripe for desertion. With the majority of converts the final act is but a short step. They have long since been out of touch with their early faith. Where Jewish households have neglected the Jewish upbringing of their children, where Jewish religious practices have been under the ban and a pagan atmosphere pervades the family, what wonder that at the sign of the least obstacle a religion is thrown overboard which meant so little and with which no practical acquaintance was maintained. Not the children, but the parents are to blame, the parents who forgot the faith that was theirs in childhood, the parents who are more solicitous for the economic advancement of their offspring than for their ideal training, the parents who are too shamefaced themselves to go over to the enemy's camp, but have no scruples when their children turn their backs upon their people. The apostate child used to be mourned for as if he were dead. Now he remains under the paternal roof and enjoys the paternal care as if nothing had happened.

The Church is welcome enough to such sons and daughters. Her gain is as insignificant as is our loss. We have as yet lost only a few time-servers, Jews who inwardly have been anything but Jews. It is our sacred duty to endeavor to keep our own. But when they are gone, we shall not weep for them. We shall keep those of warm heart and of stubborn fibre. For the few that turn their backs upon us, we have the thousands whose cohesion grows firmer. Character is the more important thing and is becoming to Israel.

It goes without saying that the apostate becomes a hater of the Jew. An apostate Jew has stood sponsor for the blood libel. So they did in times gone by. But we triumphed. We stand for truth and honest conviction. We shall not go down by force of threats or perchance by the allurement of worldly prospects. A minority we are, but a minority that has truth and right and God on its side. And so we shall combat falsehood in any of its forms, steadfast to the end of the days, no matter how many are the misguided that desert the camp for the fleshpots of Egypt.

CONGRATULATIONS.

Hon. Simon Wolf, of Washington, D. C., celebrated his seventy-seventh birthday anniversary at his home on Oct. 28, 1913. The B'nai B'rith News on behalf of the members of the Order extends congratulations and greetings and wishes Brother Wolf many more years of happiness and usefulness.

Messrs. Louis Sulzbacher of Braddock, Pa., Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 3, and Adolph Greenhut, mayor of Pensacola, Fla., were appointed members of the Anti-Defamation League. Owing to a mistake of the printer their names do not appear on the published list.

SIR RUFUS ISAACS APPOINTED LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND.

Sir Rufus Isaacs has been appointed Lord Chief Justice as successor to Baron Alverstone. Mr. Isaacs is the first Jew to be thus honored as Chief Justice of England. He is the second highest law officer of Great Britain, ranking after the Lord High Chancellor. The salary of the Lord Chief Justice is $40,000 a year.

The ceremonies of induction were held on Oct. 21st in the Lord Chief Justice's Court, which was crowded to its fullest capacity by leading members of the bench and bar. After the oath of office was administered to Sir Isaacs Lord Chancellor Haldane paid a striking tribute to his admirable traits of character and learning. He said: "It is not often that one is found who has such a mastery of law and such keenness in dealing with facts as Sir Rufus Isaacs. We of the bench and bar know him as a man of the highest attainments, whose desire has been to do right between man and man. We know him to be a man of the highest honor, and that his greatest desire is to seek out the truth."

ROME OFFICIALS TO RESIGN.

Mayor Nathan and Aldermen Decide to Quit Because of Defeat in Election.

Mayor Nathan and the aldermen of Rome decided to resign from office. This action was due to the defeat on Nov. 2 in the second ballot of the general elections of the two candidates in Rome supported by the municipal "bloc."

JEWS AND THE RUSSIAN ARMY.

The Russian Right and Nationalists have prepared a new Bill providing for the exclusion of Jews from the army and the institution of a military tax for our coreligionists.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE PRINCIPLES.

The Anti-Defamation League of America, founded under the auspices of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. is the result of a demand by the Jewish people for concerted action against the constant and ever increasing effort to traduce the good name of the Jew. It aims by organized effort to bring about the abatement of the defamation of the Jew, and ultimately to put an end to unfair discrimination against all citizens. To carry out these purposes, it asks for the earnest support and co-operation of all broad-minded men and women, regardless of creed. In now outlining its activities, it is conscious of a grave responsibility, and it submits its plan of work with a due regard for the seriousness of its undertaking. As occasion may require, situations not herein provided for, will be met by appropriate measures. For the present the league contemplates the following activities:

Educational.

1. Public and university libraries will be furnished with lists of books on Jewish subjects, which, in the opinion of the league tend to show the facts regarding Jewish ethics, customs, history, religion and philosophy.

Where it is found that the endowment of institutions, either private or public, does not permit the procurement of a fairly comprehensive number of books on these subjects, it will be the aim of the league to supply them. Investigations show that a majority of the public libraries of the country do not even possess a Jewish history wirtten by a Jewish historian.

Investigation will be made of the bibliography on Jewish subjects in libraries. Wherever it is found that books which maliciously and scurrilously traduce the character of the Jew are kept for general circulation—especially in public stackrooms—the proper authorities will be urged to withdraw such books from general circulation, or, at least, to place a restriction on their use.

2. The services of prominent lecturers and publicists, regardless of religious affiliation, will be enlisted for the purpose of delivering lectures on Jewish subjects at universities, public schools and at appropriate gatherings.

The league will provide also for the dissemination of literature designed to give the public a true understanding of the Jew and Judaism.

3. The league recognizes the fact that the mind of the growing child must be safeguarded against even a suggestion of prejudice; therefore, where in our educational system, either public or private, text books are used which tend to pervert the mind of the child and create prejudice, a determined campaign will be waged to eliminate all such books from the curriculum.

Vigilance Work.

1. The services of clipping bureaus have been secured to keep the league advised as to matters of interest affecting the Jewish people. Information regarding defamation and discrimination should be promptly sent to the Executive Committee of the league.

2. The league will secure corresponding representatives in every state, who will submit to the central office in Chicago all matters pertaining to those subjects which come within the scope of the league.

3. We should find our strongest allies in newspapers, periodicals and magazines, the great mediums for expression and exchange of thought. We therefore heartily endorse and commend the action of certain newspapers in adopting the policy of eliminating mention of the religious denomination of malefactors. We shall bend every energy toward making this policy universal.

4. Where articles appear which present the Jew in a false and unworthy light, we will endeavor to secure correction either by retraction, or by an answer in the next or early issue of the same publication, thereby reaching the same reading public.

5. The league will attempt to secure the co-operation of the press in eliminating from foreign and domestic news items, all matters which give an untrue impression of the Jew.

Theaters and Moving Pictures.

Investigation will be made of all plays which deal with the Jew. If, after careful study, it is apparent that a play gives an untrue or unfair portrayal of the Jew, the league will endeavor to prevent its production in its offensive form, or if already staged, to secure the elimination of the objectionable matter. Similar measures will be taken in connection with moving picture films.

Legislation.

1. With a view of preventing the presentation, in moving picture theaters. of films which are malicious and scurrilous caricatures, or are objectionable in other respects, the league will endeavor to secure, in the various states of the Union, the enactment of statutes similar to the one recently passed in the State of Ohio, providing for the appointment of a Board of State Censors. Where the passage of such a statute cannot be attained, similar relief will be sought from the various municipalities by securing the enactment of appropriate ordinances.

2. The league will endeavor to secure the passage of laws, where the same is practicable, making it unlawful for any hostelry, directly or indirectly, to publish, circulate, issue, display, post or mail any written or printed communication, notice or advertisement, to the effect that any of the accommodations of such places shall be refused. withheld, or denied to any person on account of his creed. The league advocates this measure because the action which it is sought to make illegal creates prejudice, and not from any desire to compel the reception of Jews in such hostelries.

The league is not unmindful that upon the Jew himself rests a great burden. We must keep our own house in order so that our complaints may have their greatest justification and effect.

In publishing this platform, the league deals only with essentials. We wish to emphasize the fact that in this work good sense and wise tolerance must guide our action. A little excessive pride. or a lack of perspective may seriously hamper our efforts.

We are not complaining of every characterization of the Jew upon the stage, in the moving picture films, or in the public press; we simply ask that where the characterization is untrue, it be made honest, natural, just and truly representative of the actual social status of the Jew.

We hope that all persons, when once convinced of the beneficence of this work will join with us therein, and that a spirit of sympathy and fellow-feeling will commend our purposes to the cooperation of all citizens.

The league hereby requests all persons aggrieved by anything falling within the above purview to submit their grievances to the central office at Chicago, as individual action may engender more harm than good, and as effective results can be best obtained through the machinery of the league.

COL. HENRY CUTLER HONORED.

In recognition of his efforts in developing the regiment and of the excellent service he accomplished for it during the Put-in-Bay celebration, Colonel Harry Cutler, of Providence, R. I., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, I. O. B. B., commander of the First Light Infantry, was presented with a solid gold infantry badge by the members of the regiment. Major A. R. Williams made the presentation speech and Colonel Cutler responded feelingly. The regiment was assembled manifestly for review and Colonel Cutler was drawn to the hall on this pretext. Many friends of the regiment and ex-officers assembled to witness the presentation. The badge is set with a spread eagle in diamonds, designating the rank of Colonel Cutler. The medal bears the inscription, "Presented by the officers and members of the First Light Infantry, September 29, 1913." Colonel Cutler is the only Jew who has ever been elected to the command of a militia regiment in the United States.

PROF. HERTZBERG-FRANKEL DEAD.

At the Congress of Historians held in Vienna, Prof. Hertzberg-Frankel, who represented the University of Czernowitz, passed away suddenly. He attended the Eleventh Zionist congress and seemed to be in the best of health. Prof. Frankel was born in Brody. Galicia. His father, Leon Hertzberg-Frankel, was a well-known German writer. He was the author of many excellent stories of Jewish life in Galicia. His grandfather was one of the instructors sent by Kaiser Joseph to Galicia to educate his subjects there. The deceased studied at the University of Vienna. He was called as extraordinary professor to the University of Czernowitz in 1893, and two years later was selected as ordinary professor. In 1906 he was selected as rector of the university, a position never before occupied by a Jew. He was interested in all public questions as well as in Jewish affairs.

RULES RELATING TO ADMISSION OF FAMILIES.

U. S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Immigration, Washington.

August 18, 1913.

To Commissioners of Immigration and Inspectors in Charge:

There quite frequently come to the Bureau's notice cases in which the well members of a family (often comprising a complete family) have been landed and permitted to proceed to their destination within the country while a physically defective or diseased member is held for special inquiry, finally rejected, and the case appealed to the Department. In practically every case of this character the Department is virtually forced to render a decision which will finally result in the landing of the ineligible member. Such families, having arrived as a unit, should, unless good reasons exist to the contrary (which should be reported when the appeal record of the detained member or members is transmitted), be held as a unit pending disposition of the case of the afflicted member or members.

You will please promulgate instructions at your port in accord with the foregoing.

Sgd. A. Caminetti,
Commissioner-General.

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING.

The seventh annual meeting of the American Jewish Committee will be held in New York City on Sunday, Nov. 9, 1913, at the Hotel Astor.

The morning session will be called to order at 10:30 o'clock and the afternoon session at 2:30 o'clock. Luncheon will be provided for those in attendance.

Successors to the following officers will be chosen: President Louis Marshall, Vice-Presidents Julian W. Mack, Jacob H. Hollander; Treasurer Isaac W. Bernheim.

Successors to the following members of the Executive Committee are to be chosen to serve for three years from Jan. 1, 1914: Harry Cutler, Jacob H. Hollander, Louis Marshall, Isador Sobel.

Successors to the following members are also to be chosen:

District 1—Otto Marx, Birmingham; Nathan Cohn, Nashville.

District 4—Elias Michael, St. Louis. (deceased).

District 7—A. G. Becker. M. E. Greenebaum and Julian W. Mack, Chicago.

District 8—Edward M. Baker, Cleveland.

District 4—Cyrus Adler and Mayer Sulzberger, Philadelphia.

District 13—Abram J. Katz, Rochester, and two vacancies.

Member-at-Large (elected for one year only), Nathan Bijur.

Members to represent the following states, in which there are vacancies, are also to be chosen: District of Columbia, Florida, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, Wyoming.

AUTHOR IS BARRED BY RUSSIA.

George Brandes, Son of Jewish Parents, Not Allowed to Lecture.

George Brandes, the well known author, promised recently to lecture at the University of Helsingfors, in Finland, and before the Russian Art and Science Society in St. Petersburg. He applied for a passport from the Russian consul-general and the Russian legation in Copenhagen, but without success. Then the Danish minister of foreign affairs applied directly to the cabinet in St. Petersburg, but was met with an absolute refusal, and the author was forced to abandon his proposed lectures.

The only explanation given for the action of the Russian authorities is that the parents of Mr. Brandes were Jews. He himself belongs to no religious denomination.

STOPS ANTI-JEWISH BOYCOTT.

Governor General Skalan, of Warsaw, has forbidden the boycott organization of the Polish Nationalists to continue its activity against the Jews. This ukase will mean much for the Jews in that section of the country, as the agitation carried on heretofore has almost ruined the majority of the Jewish merchants.

The boycott has been going on for the last six months. During all that time the Nationalists kept constantly urging and warning the Poles not to purchase anything from a Jewish merchant. The matter had gone so far that the entire province began to feel the effect of the discrimination, and the Governor was asked to intercede.

ANNUAL MEETING OF NATIONAL FARM SCHOOL.

A large gathering of men and women attended the Succoth pilgrimage and annual meeting of the National Farm School on the morning of Oct. 19th on the Farm School grounds. After the invocation by Rabbi Chas. J. Freund, of Harrisburg, Dr. Krauskopf introduced Judge Leon Sanders, of New York, as the presiding officer.

Judge Sanders in his short address paid well merited tribute to Dr. Krauskopf for the great results achieved by the Farm School.

The principal address was delivered by Dr. Krauskopf on the subject "A Light Amid the Encircling Gloom," and at the conclusion of his address it was resolved that a copy of it be forwarded to the Agricultural Department of the National Government and to the Governors of the various states. The morning session was concluded with an address by Prof. Carl Kelsey of the University of Pennsylvania. A recess for lunch was then taken and at its conclusion an inspection of the gardens and fields was made, the students escorting the visitors about the hot houses, the orchards and other sections of the big farm.

The afternoon session was opened with an address by Rabbi Chas. J. Freund, who described the Jewish colony at Clarion, Utah. He was followed by Mr. Wm. H. Berry, who spoke of the farming possibilities of the Far West. The annual reports of the director and the agricultural department followed, whereupon the prizes were awarded to the successful contestants. The election of officers brought the meeting to a close.

NEW JEWISH BODY ORGANIZED,

Delegates from young men's Hebrew associations and other Hebrew organizations in all parts of the country met in New York on Nov. 2, 1913, and organized the Council of Young Men's Hebrew and Kindred Associations, a national body that is to meet triennially. It was announced that an assured income amounting to $62,500, to cover five years, had been pledged.

Two corporate bodies will control the organization. A board of five trustees will invest and care for endowments and bequests. Dr. Cyrus Adler of Philadelphia and Jacob H. Schiff of New York are members of this board.

A general council of fifteen members was chosen to take general charge of the affairs and expenditures, as follows: Judge Julian W. Mack of Chicago, of the United States Commerce Court, who presided; A. Leo Weil, Pittsburgh; Judge M. C. Sloss, San Francisco; D. H. Ellis, Boston; I. W. Bernheim, Louisville; Isaac Hassler, Philadelphia; Alfred M. Cohen, Cincinnati; Jacob Newman, New Orleans; Jacques Back, St. Louis, and six New York men. Felix M. Warburg of New York was elected president.

TRIBUTE TO BULGARIAN JEWS.

In an interview accorded to a representative of the "Aurore," published in Constantinople, by Gen. Savoff, commander-in-chief of the Bulgarian army and principal plenipotentiary for the peace negotiations, a denial was made to an imputation that he expressed himself offensively about the Jews. The general said: "The Jewish element in our country is appreciated as loyal and patriotic. During the last war I myself witnessed deeds of great heroism on the part of my Jewish compatriots."

THE SPANISH GOVERNMENT AND THE JEWS.

The Spanish government invited Prof. Dr. A. S. Yahuda of Berlin to accept the professorship of Hebrew and Rabbinics at the Madrid University. The Professor was shown unprecedented kindness upon his arrival in Madrid and it has been arranged that he deliver a series of public lectures during the present winter months. The government has voted a sum of money to defray a tour to Morocco which the doctor is to make shortly to study the material and spiritual condition of the Jews under Spanish rule.

WORK OF JEWISH WOMEN PRAISED.

The New Haven section, Council of Jewish Women, gave a luncheon at the Hotel Taft on Oct. 14, 1913. Mrs. Leo Herz, the president of the section, acted as toastmaster and with appropriate speeches introduced the speakers. Chief among these was Prof. Wm. H. Taft, ex-President of the United States. He spoke with high praise for the work being carried on among Jewish women and their wide and far-reaching philanthropies.

Religion and the History of Religions

Written for the B'nai B'rith News

BY
DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

It is in the nature of things that a new science at a time when its necessity is questioned and its credentials are challenged will for the sake of asserting itself overstep its limits and encroach upon territory which is not its. Any new branch of human knowledge, any new department of research ought to be welcomed. The things that may reasonably come within the purview of the investigator constitute a vast domain. and we must hold in honor the brave pathfinders who add to the map of the known a province small or great. But we demand of all seekers after knowledge disinterestedness. a love of truth for truth's sake. Ulterior motives cast suspicion upon the results. There is good reason furthermore why any of the human concerns should be viewed from different angles of vision. But no one point of view should arrogate to itself the claim that it is the only point of view to the exclusion of all others. Religion has been, and probably for a long time if not for all time will be. in the forefront of human interests. Now religion is one thing to the believer to whom it represents the chief concern of life. that for which we were placed into the world. The theologian then proceeds to systematize the religious opinions held by the votaries of a historic religion. The philosopher ventures to lay bare the mainsprings of religious belief. Lastly, the historian will record the coming into life of a religion, its progress, its decay; he will compare one religion with another; he will establish relationships and trace the time-honored institutions to their crude beginnings in long forgotten days or in widely distant areas. There are a few who combine the methods of the theologian, philosopher and historian. But for the most part of the several lines of dealing with religion are pursued apart. in blissful oblivion each of the other. The result is not always satisfactory.

Above all it cannot be emphasized too strongly that investigations about a human concern are not the concern itself. History is interesting, fascinating. It is the more fascinating the more the historian leaves the realm of facts behind and proceeds to indulge in fancy. The data are always meager. The documents obscure more than what they reveal. Where the lines of connection become faint, the historian by dint of imagination constructs connective links of his own. At last there stands out a figure or a period portrayed in bright colors, and the world is ready to admire the skill and ingenuity of the gifted scholar. But constructions remain constructions. The subjective element obtrudes itself at every turn. Students of a candid mind cannot fail to give vent to their scepticism. There is in particular one fault which attaches to the pure historian. In his search for the whence he is ready to go far afield for analogy. Similarity is raised to the dignity of identity. Another fault is the confounding of the starting point with the issue. Nations exchange their spiritual products exactly as they buy and sell the works of their hands. They give and take. They borrow customs and institutions, and in the pagan world the gods themselves. But in borrowing they transform the article in accordance with their own needs or bent of mind. What they really take is the raw material; the product is their own. and it is a new product. It becomes indigenous through naturalization.

We Jews have been wont to pride ourselves on our religion in all its parts as peculiar with us. As believers we said that our religion was given to us by God who elected us as the vehicle of His revelation. We were the medium through which God operated. through which He made known His will and law. The philosophers placed the God-given gift within us. The Jew had a genius for religion. The Jew was so constituted mentally that his religion could but become what it did. That throws the act of Divine operation somewhat further back in time, but a Divine operation it still is, at least in the conception of the theistic philosopher, that is the theologian. Now comes the historian on the scene. He may plausibly argue that racial endowment is but one element. He may tell us that the historical fortunes of the people had something to do with the moulding of their spirit. The Greek placed in a different habitat would not have become what he came to be on the shores of the Agean. Environment, physical, natural, counts for much. Moreover, nations are never isolated. They come in contact with one another. They engage in warfare or in commerce. There is a constant import of ideas as there is of wares. Long before the Israelites migrated to Canaan, the land was saturated with Babylonian lore. And now the whole duty of the historian is thought to be done when a Jewish belief or institution is found to have some resemblance with a Babylonian counterpart. Here the investigator stops. Whence the belief or custom came to the Babylonians, that question is seldom put. Some scholars have argued just as plausibly that the migration of ideas may have been eastward and that the nucleus was in the west. But neither the one nor the other theory can be sustained on a mere say-so. Suffice it to say, that the fashion is to rob the Jew of his birthright. The priority is always the other way, the source always beyond the confines of Israel. But fashions are not subject to logic. Jewish students and the plain unsophisticated Jewish man ought to be warned that there is a flaw in the argument and that prejudice lurks in the background.

We have our New Year, our Feast of Dedication, our Passover. Suppose for a moment that the learned historians of religion are right in tracing them to foreign sources. What of it? If they were not our institutions from the beginning, they have become ours through centuries of association. We have imparted to them a meaning and significance which are of our own making. It may be that in Babylon the god was carried to his temple and there enthroned with the beginning of each year. It may be that the Babylonians too believed in a day of destiny. Well, then. So much the better that we are inheritors of the religious ideas of those that preceded us. We all rest on the shoulders of the generations that are passed away. But the peculiar emphasis on the day of judgment with right and justice as the eternal principles is ours. To the one who stands within, the beginnings are a matter of curiosity, but the final form is a matter of vital concern. The sanctity of the day must be lived through and not merely gazed at from without with an air of supercilious indifference. Our Feast of Dedication may have elements in common with some Roman feast. Is therefore the victory of the Maccabees a legend? And were it a legend, has it not had potent influence on the Jew in steeling his moral fibre, in making him firm against all attacks, in reinvesting him year after year with the power to withstand and to assert himself and to live on despite a world in arms? Fortunately, the Maccabean story is assured as a fact, and the fact is that the Jew refused to be Hellenized, that he came to know himself and to value his inheritance, and that thanks to the victory in those by-gone days we live today as witnesses of the truth that not by might, but by the spirit the things that really count do abide. And the Passover with its rites, no matter whence they came to us, awakens in us, in our children who are made participants in the service, religious emotions of great moment. And so on with a variety of customs and institutions, aye, even of beliefs.

The history class is one thing and the living religion quite another. We are ready to impart all sorts of knowledge to our children. We want them to know the origins of mankind, the beginnings of civilization, the whence of so many things secular and sacred. But do not rob them of their inheritance. The child is heir to our religious emotions. It is not everybody's business to "found' religions. The founders of historic religions are few and far between. We of the plainer folk are satisfied with our inherited faiths. We wisely act religion rather than prate about it. Our children fashion themselves upon our examples. They imitate our mode of talking, our methods at work. They will in the same way fall in with our religious acts. Never mind the whence and the how. Take your children of tenderest years to the house of God. Tell them the story of the Exodus as the Bible has it. Never mind the learned books on the historicity of the fact. Today scepticism prevails; tomorrow it may be found that the story is veracious. There is a constant veering in the scholarly camp. The layman had better abide by what he holds. Let it not wantonly be snatched from his grip. Our children will perchance be less religious, less Jewish than we would wish them to be. Give them enough of positive Jewish teaching and practice as a starting point that when they fall away there may still be a residue which will not forsake them. Start with a maximum, not with a minimum. A deficit there will always be, but let there not be downright defection. For back of all this sceptical attitude of our historians of religion is an inveterate hatred of all things Jewish, innate with the non-Jew, cultivated with the Jew. The deserter need not bother himself about Babylonian beginnings of our religion. If he does not wish to be of us, we can spare him. But let him not beguile the layman that he speaks in the name of truth when his innermost motives are to flee association with the Jew and to escape the misery which, alas, is often the Jew's lot. Our religion is vital to us and to our children. The historians of religion are frequently triflers. We would rather have the article than talk about it. The talk is frequently the meager residue of the article itself once possessed but then dropped in sheer wantonness. They that have ceased to be religious engage in the study of the history of religions!

RUSSIA ANGERS THE KAISER.

The Chicago Tribune published the following:

"Berlin, Nov. 8.—The Russian press is making a grotesque attempt to draw the kaiser into the Kiev ritual murder affair by depicting him as a believer in the myth charges.

"The anti-Jewish Novoe Vremya of St. Petersburg started the yarn and another prominent Russian paper this week went so far as to publish a reproduction of Emperor William's celebrated cartoon regarding the yellow peril and substitute underneath for the original words the following text: 'Peoples of Europe, be prepared to guard your holiest treasure from falling under the Jewish yoke.'

"The kaiser was so outraged at this criminal misuse of his name that the North German Gazette, official organ of the German Government, issued a vigorous categorical denial of the insinuations made by the Russian press."

PASTOR OPPOSES BIBLE IN SCHOOL.

Use of the Bible in the public schools was called un-American by the Rev. M. J. Magor, pastor of the McCabe Memorial Methodist Episcopal church of Chicago, in a sermon preached on "The Failure of the Public Schools."

"To try to force back the Bible into the public school I do not call a square deal," he said. "Even if it is used it accomplishes but little good because goodness in the public school is taught much more effectively by example and by the atmosphere created than by a formal reading of the Bible by one who perhaps has but little faith or interest in it.

"I lay the failure of the public school largely upon the home, the church, and the community which handicap the teacher and make him or her work difficult.

Blames Church and Home.

"The ideals of the home are those of financial success or social position. We allow social engagements and business to become so exhausting that we do not have time to train our children in character and then we throw the responsibility upon the public school.

"The church is defective in its training of children in the Bible. The teacher falls when simply teaching for a living. Also there is failure when the teacher does not inspire the pupil with right ideals of citizenship, a love for truth, and a desire for public service.

"The remedy is found in an aroused community interest in the school. I commend the teaching of domestic science, manual training, and of sex hygiene. I go further and think the public school ought to be the center for public instruction in art, music, and for training in the use of the ballot.

"Politics ought not to be allowed to dictate in school management, nor in the appointment to membership in the school board. The teachers ought to have better salaries and a more adequate pension."

JEWS HONOR COL. ROOSEVELT.

At a reception that was tendered to Col. Roosevelt at Buenos Aires, Argentine, all the foreign societies took part. The Jewish societies, which have over 40,000 members, presented the distinguished visitor with a gold tablet.

COMMUNICATED.

Chicago, Oct. 21, 1913.

Editor B'nai B'rith News:

While reading in the B'nai B'rith News the article written by Mr. H. Eliassof in which he criticizes the existence of Kol Nidre in our prayer books, I, being a member of an orthodox temple, cannot help but say something in defense of the origin of Kol Nidre.

During the Spanish Inquisition 400 years ago, when so many of our race lost their lives, while their only crime was that of being a Jew, a good many of them in order to save their lives, while in their hearts remained Jews, to satisfy the Spanish Government of that time, became Christians and attended their church; but in their homes and also in some cities there were underground places and to these they would go once a year, on Yom Kippur. It was in these circumstances that the Kol Nidre was created in which they prayed to God that all their vows and promises that were given during the outgoing year and also those that they might give in the coming year should not be binding, alluding to the vows and promises they were compelled to give in order to save their lives.

In conclusion I would say that while I would agree with the Honorable Mr. Eliassof that this prayer of Kol Nidre should be abolished in a free land where one may worship his religion freely, I only want to mention the origin of this prayer, which it seems he has omitted in his article.

Respectfully yours,
S. Sobel.

ASKS THAT JEWISH BE TAUGHT IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Board of Education of Omaha, at a meeting held on Oct. 6, 1913, placed on file a petition from the Jewish National Workers' Alliance, asking that Jewish be taught at the Kellom School. The petition was sent by Branch 54 of the Alliance and the document bore the signatures of about 100 residents near the school.

The board took the position that the new state law requires the teaching of "modern European languages" if fifty patrons petition for such instruction, and the contention was made by Superintendent E. U. Graff that Jewish is not a modern language in the sense contemplated by the law. The law also requires that petitions be filed three months before the beginning of the school year.

PARDON PRECEDENT.

In the granting of a pardon to a Jewish inmate of this institution on the last Jewish New Year, Governor Cox established a precedent. Perhaps never before in any state of the Union had a Jewish holiday been recognized in like manner.

Charles Block, a typo engaged on the News, recently addressed a communication to the chief executive, calling attention to the fact that, in the matter of holiday pardons, the Jewish people, as a race, had never been recognized. He cited the part the Jews had taken in the wresting of this country from the tyrannical grasp of Great Britain, and the efforts, both physical and monetary, by them later put forth to the end that the United States might be preserved one and inseparable.

The following communication speaks for itself:

State of Ohio,
Executive Department,
Columbus.
October 7, 1913.

Mr. Charles Block,
41816 O. P.,
Columbus, Ohio.

My Dear Sir:—

Your communication of September 23rd, in regard to granting a Jewish New Year pardon, was received. The idea contained in your letter was a splendid one, and was immediately acted upon, as you are by this time well aware. I showed your letter to a prominent Jewish citizen who is interested in the unfortunates of your race, and he informed me that he would try to see you personally and congratulate you upon advancing your idea for a New Year pardon.

Very truly yours,
James M. Cox.

WANT CHECK ON HOLIDAYS.

A resolution condemning any movement seeking special holidays for public employes of the Jewish faith was adopted at a meeting of the Woman's Party of Cook County, Inc., at the Hotel La Salle, Chicago. The resolution is signed by Mrs. Charlotte C. Rhodus, President of the society.

NEWS FROM LONDON

BY OUR CORRESPONDENT DR. M. EPSTEIN

London, 21 October, 1913.

"The King has been pleased to approve the following appointment:
"'To be Lord Chief Justice of England, the Right Honorable Sir Rufus Isaacs, K. C. V. O., Attorney-General.'"

So we read in yesterday's morning paper, and the rumors that had been floating about for some time thus became reality. The office to which Sir Rufus Isaacs has been appointed is one of the most important in the state; it is also one of the oldest. The Lord Chief Justice is the foremost of the English judges and their spokesman. There is no need to expatiate on the dignity of the position. The interest for Jews is that for the first time in English history it is held by a Jew. A decade or two ago such a fact would have produced loud-sounding phrases of gratitude on the part of Jews. Today the position is changed. Today the Jew regards such an appointment as this as a natural effect, as a logical conclusion of Jewish emancipation. The Jew asks for justice, and if he demands the rights of citizenship he is also willing to undertake its burdens and to serve the state in the capacity for which he is best fitted. He does not want special treatment, either because of his virtues or for his vices. Let both be handled as are those of other citizens. And so, while we rejoice that a Jew has the capacity which enables him to serve the state in so high an office as that which Sir Rufus Isaacs now holds, we feel that there is no need for special exultation. It is only as it should be, and the choice of the King is for the welfare of the nation.

There is no doubt that Sir Rufus is held in high esteem by the members of the English bar. Here is what the Lord Chancellor said of him at the ceremony of induction: "He would speak first of the new Lord Chief Justice. Some of them had known him for a quarter of a century. There was no relationship more searching, none in which more intimate knowledge of a man was obtained, than in the case of a man with whom one was brought into the intimate daily contact of legal life. To a commanding grasp of the various branches of his profession Sir Rufus Isaacs added other qualities. It was not often that one found such a combination of a mastery of the law with such a keenness in dealing with facts as was found in Sir Rufus Isaacs. He was a man whose highest desire had been to do right between man and man; he was a man of the highest honor and of the highest desire to ensue truth when it could be ensued." The words are no exaggeration. Had the Marconi incident never occurred, there would have been absolute unanimity in the welcome given to the new Lord Chief Justice. As it is, there is a section—possibly a small section—of the public opinion of this country which will cavil at the appointment.

Those who disagree on personal grounds have a perfect right to their opinion. They would have said the same thing in the same circumstances had the nominee of the Crown been Mr. A. or Mr. Z. But those who raise objections to the appointment of Sir Rufus on the ground that a Jew has been raised to the head of the English Bench of Judges are showing the cloven hoof of prejudice and injustice. There will be such people. It would be something of a miracle if among the 45 million inhabitants of these islands there were not warped and prejudiced minds, whose ill-will made itself heard in and out of season. But fortunately for this country they are not very numerous. At heart the Englishman does possess the sense of justice. "Playing the game," he calls it; and he sees that racial and religious prejudice is not "playing the game."

A word or two as to Sir Rufus Isaacs' career may be of interest to our readers. He was born in 1860, and from his early youth upwards he has had romantic experiences. The spirit of adventure led him to run away from home and go to sea. Whether this is merely a legend is not certain. But it passes current everywhere. It could not have been a comfortable life; it must have involved a good deal of privation and uncertainty. On his return home he drifted to the Stock Exchange, which he left after only a short acquaintance. It was when he went to the bar that he discovered his true vocation. His experience in the city, his keen intelligence and his amiability soon brought success, and he became famous in many a famous case. Perhaps the best known is that of Whitaker Wright, who, because of his cross-examination, called Sir Rufus "Sir Ruthless Isaacs." In 1904 he entered Parliament as Member for Reading; he was soon in succession Solicitor-General and Attorney-General, and in the history of the last named office he will always have a special place as the first holder to be included in the Cabinet.

Beilis! There are some words that lose their original meaning and take a secondary connotation which becomes typical. A Gascon is a boaster: a Don Quixote is a first-class idealist; a Tartar is a rogue. We venture the prophecy that when in future generations it will be necessary to describe diabolical injustice, prejudice, ignorance and superstition, the mixture will be termed Beilis. For what else is the exhibition at Kiev? For some time past Englishmen have not been told much about Russian affairs in their newspapers. The economic possibilities of the land of the Czar have undoubtedly been boomed; and with justice. But of the internal affairs of the country not a word has been uttered. It looked like a conspiracy of silence in which only a few organs of the press were not included. But the murder charge at Kiev could not be passed by, and most of the papers have special correspondents who send home regular reports of the doings of the court. Into the details of these reports it is unnecessary to go. You in America will have had them, too. But their general reception here is important. There seems to be a consensus of opinion that the whole thing cannot but break down, and the correspondent of our foremost newspaper concludes that the real issue at Kiev is not Beilis at all. Says The Times: "It is daily becoming clearer that under the forms of law a momentous political struggle is being fought. This is not the Beilis case. It is possibly a final fight for existence on the part of the innermost powers of reaction—the old unyielding party, the now almost isolated Extreme Right—against all the modern forces in Russia. The daily wrangling of counsel on both sides over irrelevant points grows more bitter, and shows the rising storm."

This is significant, despite the writer's "possibly." And it is cheerful to see that the overwhelming mass of public opinion in England will have none of the blood myth. To a Jew it is utterly inconceivable that even the rumor that Jews need blood should arise. Surely it is ignorance that is alone responsible for its spread. Those who have studied Jewish practice, those who know Jewish law, those who are acquainted with Jews must of necessity see the absurdity and cruelty of the accusation. There are such men, and they raise their voice in the interests of truth. Prof. Strack, of Berlin, as good a Protestant as any in Germany, has shown conclusively that there is not one jot of substance in the wicked libel. The truth is that to a Jewish mind the idea of blood is abhorrent. Whether it is so to a Christian mind let Christians themselves say. We need only mention that, given an ignorant, superstitious peasantry, brought up to believe in the Sacrament, what more natural to them than to give credence at once to any story about the need of using human blood in religious ceremonial. Fortunately our boast today that superstitions are exploded is to a large degree true. Hence the attitude of the English press to the Kiev trial: hence the resolution of the Independent Labor party, which was moved by nothing else than a sense of the wrong and the injustice of it. The Independent Labor party was voicing the opinion of the mass of the working people of this country and its resolution is worth reading. Here it is: "That, having had our attention drawn to the proceedings against Mendel Beilis, who is charged with having bled a boy to death as a sacrifice demanded by the Jewish faith and practiced by his followers (the Parliamentary Committee of the I. L. P.) declares that overwhelming evidence exists, proving conclusively that no such sacrifice was ever demanded by the Jewish faith or practiced by its adherents, and that nowhere outside the domain of Russia could such a charge be laid or maintained in these modern days. The council further protests most vehemently against the revival of this ancient and long-exploded lie, which is not now entertained by any educated person or state, and asks the Right Hon. Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, to forward this resolution to the Russian Consul, to be forwarded by him to his government; and we further strongly urge Sir Edward Grey to point out to the Russian authorities that to persist in the proceedings against Mendel Beilis, in so far as the proceedings against him are based on the blood ritual charge, will be offensive to the British people and to His Majesty's Government, which desires to live on terms of amity, not less strong than those now existing between the two countries." "Nowhere outside the domain of Russia could such a charge be laid or maintained in these modern days." The words deserve repetition.

In the face of the Beilis case local problems of the Jewries of the world shrink away to very small dimensions. Nevertheless they have their place in life; the mighty building is only made complete by patiently laying brick on brick. Perhaps the biggest problem in Anglo-Jewry, excepting only that of education, is the condition of the provincial congregations. The position of the Jewish communties in England today remind one very forcibly of the saying of Sir Josiah Child in the seventeenth century, when he deplored the growing population of London and the depopulation of the country towns, "We have a fat head and lean members." Anglo-Jewry today has a "fat head," which is London, and "lean members"—in the provinces. For what do we find? The bulk of English Jews are concentrated in the capital. There there is an attempt at organization. It is not perfect by any means, but there is something. As a result, we have large synagogues; we have classes for religious instruction; we have responsible ministers. What is the state of affairs in the provinces? A small body of Jews live in a town. They are not over rich, though they may be comfortable. They rent a small building as a synagogue; a teacher of religion for their children they must have; they also need a Shochet. But their means are slender and economy in expenditure is their governing passion. Hence they try to find a man who is able to combine the duties of Shochet and teacher. Owing no doubt to a bad tradition, the slaughterers with us wear clerical attire and bear the title of reverend. And if on occasions the Shochet-teacher gives an address in the synagogue, then he thinks himself doubly entitled to the garb and the title. There is no harm in all this. But the salary which the community is able to offer him is somewhat small. Hence he is forced to supplement his income. What does he do? There are cases on record where officials have in this way become furniture dealers, small shopkeepers or peddlers. Honest callings all, but hardly to be combined in modern days with that of the representative of the community.

The result of this development has not been good, and a change is needful. The Chief Rabbi has shown his political acumen in recognizing that this is a problem that requires immediate attention. It is not only a matter of money, though money will do much to alter things. If the congregations have the means they will obtain the ministration of trained men, whose qualifications will give them the necessary influence for good, which a minister should possess. But a reorganization in the communities is also necessary, and above all, the desire to rid our minds of ancient conditions and a readiness to create new and better ones. The Chief Rabbi apparently has in view a scheme of Bezirks-rabbiner, who shall be the heads of local Bote-Din, and generally represent the community worthily. It is usually said that every congregation gets the minister it deserves. Raise the tone of the provincial congregations therefore, and you will raise the standard of the ministry.

It occurs to us to ask, how far can the Order in England assist in this very necessary work? The "educative" side of lodge life should not be minimized. In America the lodges in the smaller congregations must surely be a center and a "hoop" at one and the same time. It is not otherwise in Germany. Why should it not be possible in England? For the moment no practical steps have yet been taken, but when they are—and it will not be long now—the question of extending the Order in the provincial Jewries of this country should receive attention. Manchester already has a lodge. Other large centers must be turned to next, until slowly but surely every congregation of any size shall possess one. Nothing, we feel certain, would have given the late Siegmund Bergel so much pleasure as the contemplation of a scheme like this.

We have had two slight diversions in London during the High Holidays which are just coming to an end. One was at the New West End Synagogue, where a couple of lady suffragists broke the solemnity of the Musaph service on the Day of Atonement by praying aloud that Mr. Herbert Samuel and Sir Rufus Isaacs might be forgiven for their treatment of women suffragists in prison. The incident requires no comment; the mere account is sufficient. We would only add that, as far as one can judge, the conduct of these ladies found but scant sympathy among the general body of Jewesses. The other diversion was the public contradiction of a minister in the pulpit by a member of his congregation. They are both little things, but we wonder whether they are the straws which are indicative of the direction in which the wind is blowing.

Of matters of great significance we have but little, seeing that the life of the community begins to throb again only after the Holy Days. Literary societies will begin their sessions, so will religious classes; there will be a growth of young men's institutions—one new one at least is already established; the Board of Deputies will meet; so will the United Synagogue. So will the lodge, the first ordinary assembly after the recess due in November. In our next issue we hope to be able to record news of its activities.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE.

A circular signed by Bro. Adolf Kraus of Chicago, as president of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, announces the organization of a league to combat defamation of the Jews and other classes wherever it may take place and he hopes to receive the co-operation of all our co-religionists and those of other creeds.

We believe that there is much need of such an activity and that it should be of a national character, but, we are also of the opinion that it is the province of the Order B'nai B'rith direct to conduct such a campaign, and not through an outside organization, although that body may be under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith.

We have consistently advocated that the B'nai B'rith should undertake all activities of national and international scope and have persistently written against other organizations such as the American Jewish Committee and others. Neither of these organizations has the prestige, the universal character nor the efficient organization of the B'nai B'rith. This organization represents through its membership all classes of Jews. The Orthodox, the Reformed, the Conservative and every shade between are gathered in its ranks for the purpose of laboring for those interests that are common to all.

We were very much pleased to observe that this view is held by others. On Wednesday evening of this week, Rabbi E. W. Leipziger, in an address to a Joint meeting of our B'nai B'rith lodges, presented this view very forcibly, showing that each of the other organizations lacked one quality or another to be representative of all the Jews, whereas the Order B'nai B'rith possessed them all.

We believe the B'nai B'rith should undertake the work under its own direct management, appointing committees, wherever it may be deemed advisable, for local observation and work.—Jewish Ledger.

JEW'S GIFT TO THE LOUVRE.

The Louvre Museum has now been authorized to accept the fine art collection, estimated to be worth over £300,000, bequeathed to it by the late Count Isaac de Camondo. The collection is to be placed in seven rooms, each of which will constitute a small museum.

PROTEST MEETINGS.

SENATE PROTESTS "RITUAL MURDER."

Senator Lewis Asks That U. S. Request Withdrawal of Accusation.

Senator Lewis, of Illinois, in the Senate introduced a resolution calling upon the Government of the United States to use its good offices with the Government of Russia to withdraw "the unjust ritual murder charge" against Mendel Beilis, on trial in Russia for the murder of a Christian boy.

The resolution, which follows, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Whereas, the public press reports that the Government of the Empire of Russia is now engaged in the prosecution of a Jewish laborer, Mendel Beilis, upon the charge of having murdered a Christian boy for the purpose of having used Christian blood for religious purposes;

"Whereas there appears absolutely nothing in the Jewish religion or doctrine requiring such a practice, but on the contrary the use of blood in any manner is absolutely prohibited by the Mosaic law (Seventeenth Leviticus, Ten);

"Whereas, eminent divines and scholars of all religions and denominations have testified to the falsity of the accusation that the Jewish religion requires the use or sacrifice of human blood;

"Whereas, the constant and relentless persecution of the Jews in Russia is bringing to our shores thousands of Russian Jewish refugees who must be taken care of and the United States Government is therefore directly interested in this matter;

"Whereas, the Beilis trial is calculated to incite the ignorant people in Russia to commit outrages against the Jewish people, and as a result of such fear the Jewish immigration to the United States since the commencement of the Beilis trial has already increased, therefore

"Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Senate of the United States looks with disfavor upon the prosecution of the Beilis case and that the proper officers of the government be directed to use the good offices of the Government of the United States with the Government of Russia to the end that the unjust ritual charge against the Jewish people at large and Mendel Beilis in particular be withdrawn and the Jewish people receive the vindication justice requires."

THE INDEPENDENT LABOR PARTY SPEAKS OUT.

At a meeting of the Parliamentary committee of the Independent Labor Party in London the following resolution was unanimously carried and copies ordered to be sent to Sir Edward Grey and the Russian consul: "That, having had our attention drawn to the proceedings against Mendel Beilis, who is charged with having bled a boy to death as a sacrifice demanded by the Jewish faith and practiced by its followers, declares that overwhelming evidence exists, proving conclusively that no such sacrifice was ever demanded by the Jewish faith or practiced by its adherents, and that nowhere outside the domain of Russia could such a charge be laid or maintained in these modern days The council further protests most vehemently against the revival of this ancient and long-exploded lie, which is not now entertained by any educated person or state, and asks the Right Hon. Sir Edward Grey, the foreign secretary, to forward this resolution to the Russian consul, to be forwarded by him to his government; and we further strongly urge Sir Edward Grey to point out to the Russian authorities that to persist in the proceedings against Mendel Beilis, in so far as the proceedings against him are based on the blood ritual charge, will be offensive to the British people and to His Majesty's Government, which desires to live on terms of amity not less strong than those now existing between the two countries."

RUSSIAN PEASANTS PROTEST.

In Alexandrousk in the government of Cherson, peasants held a protest meeting and have condemned in sharpest language the Beilis prosecution. Most interesting is the circumstance that two Anti-Semitic converts, Ephron and Tetelbaum, have also protested. [illegible] protest is directed principally [illegible] the Archimandrite Antonius [illegible] convert.

CONGRESS TO MEMORIALIZE RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT IN RITUAL MURDER CASE.

Representative A. J. Sabath of Chicago introduced on Oct. 17th a joint resolution in the House of Representatives ordering the Secretary of State to inform the Russian Government that the United States believes to be false the ritual murder charges now being tried at Kiev. The resolution was ordered to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Points to Regret in This Country.

The preamble of the resolution recites:

"The people of the United States have learned with keen regret that in the trial of Mendel Beilis, now being conducted at Kiev, Russia, an attempt is being made to indict the Jewish race by introdueing an outrageous and unfounded charge that the Jews have practiced 'ritual murder.'

"The civilized world is aroused by this false and senseless accusation that the Jews use the blood of Christians in any of their religious rites.

"Religious and non-religious bodies throughout the United States are holding mass meetings and adopting resolutions of protest against this absurd charge and prominent men of our nation are expressing their indignation at this preposterous accusation.

"It is manifest that the object sought to be accomplished by this accusation is to create prejudice in the minds of the Russian subjects against the Jewish people.

Recalls Massacres in the Past.

"In the past when similar accusations have been made they have always been followed by the massacre of thousands of innocent Jewish men, women and children, and the destruction of their property.

"It is believed that the continuation of such charges will have a tendency to bring about a repetition of these outrages."

The resolution then declares it "the sense of the American Congress that the principles of eternal justice and the interests of civilization demand that these false, senseless, and unfounded charges and accusations that this man or any other Jew was ever guilty of 'ritual murder' be withdrawn."

The Secretary of State is "authorized and instructed to convey through the ambassador at St. Petersburg the sentiments and feelings of the American people as voiced and expressed by their representatives in Congress."

IRISH FELLOWSHIP CLUB OF CHICAGO ADOPTS RESOLUTIONS OF PROTEST.

Protests against the pathetic, ridiculous, trumped-up charges of "ritual murder," against the monstrous injustice, the infamous farce and prejudiced barbarism were voiced at a meeting of the Irish Fellowship Club of Chicago on Oct. 18, 1913. The speakers were Judge John P. McGoorty, Rev. Floyd Beckwith of the Baptist Church, and Judge Hugo Pam. The following resolution was adopted and ordered forwarded to Congress and the Secreary of State:

"We call upon the Congress of these United States and our Secretary of State to represent to the Russian Government the united protest of our people, that the horrors of another Kishinev may be avoided, and that the eternal principles of right and justice may yet prevail, securing freedom to Mendel Beilis, and the full blessings of civil and religious liberty throughout the Russias, to his long suffering people."

PROTEST BY LOS ANGELES MINISTERS.

Christian churches of all denominations united in a general protest against the Beilis murder trial and a series of sermons were preached from many pulpits on Nov. 2, 1913, denouncing the attack against the Jews of Russia as tending towards future massacres of the Jewish people in Russia.

CITY COUNCIL OF WINNIPEG PROTESTS.

The city council of Winnipeg, Canada, has joined its protest with that of other cities in the country against the ritual murder trial now pending in Russia. The resolution was introduced in the council by Ald. Munroe, and a copy of the same was sent to the Russian consul at Montreal.

PROSECUTION FOLLOWS PROTEST.

The Court of Appeals has ordered the prosecution of 120 members of the St Petersburg Bar Association, who signed the protest gainst the Beilis trial.

TORONTO CITIZENS PROTEST.

A mass meeting was held in Toronto, Canada, on Oct. 20, 1913, to protest against the cruel and unjust treatment of the Jews by the Russian Government. Over 4,000 people were present. Mr. John Shayne occupied the chair, and the principal speakers were Dr. Hincks, Comptroller McCarthy, Rev. Dr. Gordon, of Montreal, and Rabbi Minkin of Hamilton. Rev. Dr. Hincks introduced a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, condemning the Russian Government's action, and it was ordered that a copy of the resolution be sent to the Russian consul at Montreal. Letters of regret at their inability to attend were received from His Grace Bishop Sweeney, Prime Minister R. L. Borden, Mayor H C Hokin, and Sir Wilfred Laurier, whose letter we print below:

Ottawa, October 17th, 1913.

Mr. J. Shayne,
Toronto, Ont.

Dear Sir,—

I have yours of the 15th inst., inviting me to attend a meeting to be held in Massey Hall on the 19th inst., to protest against the revival in Russia of the unfounded "ritual murder" charges.

I am sorry that the engagements which I have on my hands will not permit me to attend and to take part in the proceedings.

I sincerely hope that the voice of the civilized world will be strong enough to at last put an end to an imputation which is not only crying against humanity, but which bears upon the face of it the mark of absurdity.

Believe me, Yours sincerely,
WILFRID LAURIER.

SAN FRANCISCO MASS MEETING.

A mass meeting in Scottish Rite Hall at San Francisco was held on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 26th, to protest against the ritual murder trial in Russia. Jew and Gentile, men and women, of all shades of religious and political belief, were represented in the vast audience of several thousand people. City Attorney Percy V. Long presided, and addresses were delivered by Dr. Chas. Aked, former Lieutenant Governor Warren R. Porter, Rev. Geo. Burlingame of the First Baptist Church, Mayor Rolph, Rev. W. R. H. Hodgkin, dean of the Episcopal Church of San Francisco; Mr. Robt. Newton Lynch, Vice-President of the Chamber of Commerce, and Rev. Father Ramm, of St. Mary's Cathedral.

The following resolutions were adopted and ordered forwarded to Washington:

"Whereas, It has been the practiee on the part of malevolent persons periodically to circulate the malicious report that Jews use human blood for their Passover celebration in order to incite ill-will among people who would otherwise live in harmony with one another and to bring about mob violence, resulting in massacre and outrages against humanity; and,

"Whereas, Public approval has at times been given to this belief by the holding of trials based upon such accusations; and,

"Whereas, In nearly all the countries of the world belief in the truth of such accusations has long given way before overwhelming proof to the contrary; and,

"Whereas, The further retention of such falsehood is a blot on Christianity and upon Christian civilization and an insult to the intelligence of modern man; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the citizens of San Francisco, in mass meeting assembled, do hereby urge upon the people of Russia their imperative duty to remove this blot from the fair name of modern civilization, and in the name of humanity and for the sake of truth to discontinue and prevent anv and all attempts to promulgate the dastardly and slanderous falsehood of ritual murder; and, be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Secretary of State at Washington, to be fowarded by him through the proper channels to the court of Russia."

EPISCOPALIANS CONDEMN RITUAL MURDER TRIAL.

The House of Deputies, the joint clerical and lay body of the Protestant Episcopal Church, at its triennial general convention held in New York on Oct. 15th, adopted the following resolution registering a public protest and refutation against the ritual murder charge:

"We call upon the archbishops, bishops and other members of the Holy Orthodox Eastern Church of Russia to make formal pronouncement that charges of so-called 'ritual murders' are without foundation or justification in the teachings of the religion of Israel."

PROTEST BY CHICAGO SOCIETY OF RATIONALISM.

Mr. John Emerson Roberts addressed the Chicago Society of Rationalism on the subject of "Ritual Murder."

"The charge of ritual murder made against Mendel Beilis by the Russian Government has a double meaning." Dr Roberts said. "It is a protest not against one obscure man, but against the modern Jew because he is a potent factor in the education and enlightenment of Russia. The Jew is intelligent and is therefore a menace to Russian absolutism.

Calls Case Persecution.

"In the minds of the ignorant and prejudiced an accusation is equivalent to a conviction. Therefore, to accuse Beilis of an atrocious crime is to set him forth as guilty. This act is simply an appeal to the age long hatred of the Jew. It is a deliberate attempt to rekindle the fires of persecution. Persecution of the Jew has been the pastime of this so-called Christian nation.

"All that the Christian religion has or is came from the Jews. Its prophets, apostles, scriptures, and its Christ are of Jewish origin.

"The distinctive characteristic of Judaism is its forward look. It is looking for a better humanity. This is the meaning of its messianic hope. Judaism is a living, hoping faith, instinct with the future.

Jew Development Factor.

"The Jew has been a big factor in the development and prosperity of every country and at some time or other has been banished from every one. In the discovery of America the Jew played an important part and then was not allowed to emigrate to the new found world.

"The Jew has shown mankind the possibility of maintaining racial integrity. A wanderer over the face of the earth, the Jew has kept himself a Jew. He has been exiled, tortured, flayed, and burned at the stake rather than renounce his race or forswear the religion of his fathers. In dignified exclusiveness and proud independence he maintains his faith and cherishes his ideals and asks no favors except to be let alone."

PROTEST MEETING AT HULL, ENGLAND.

A mass meeting was held on Oct. 20th at the Central Hall, which was largely attended. A resolution of protest was moved by Councillor Coult, which was carried with enthusiasm, and is as follows:

This public meeting of citizens of Hull, representing all shades of religion and politics, desires to enter its solemn protest against the attempt made by Russian authorities to revive the hideous charge of ritual murder, known as the blood accusation, against Judaism and the Jewish people, in spite of the fact that the blood accusation has been publicly declared to be entirely without foundation by the heads of all religious denominations and great schools of learning throughout the civilized world.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to Sir Edward Grey, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and to the loeal members of Parliament, with an urgent request that His Majesty's Government be pleased to transmit a copy thereof to the Russian Government.

MASS MEETING AT PARIS, FRANCE.

On the evening of Oct 17th a meeting organized by the French League of the Rights of Men and of the Citizen, the French Socialist Party, was held, at which more than 5,000 persons were in attendance.

Mr. M. Jaures, the famous Socialist leader, delivered an address in which he condemned the villainy of Russian justice and emphasized the grandeur of a race, which dispersed all over the world, spread through it the profound sentiment of justice and right. The following resolution was adopted:

The 5,000 citizens assembled in the Salle Wagram protest against the infamous trial of the Jew Beilis on the imbecile and monstrous charge of ritual crime. They affirm the complete solidarity which unites the proletarians of France as well as all men of progress and right conscience with the accused at Kiev, and with the Jews in Russia, who are threatened in his person.

The meeting separated with cries of "War to all obscurantism, to all fanaticism, and to all barbarities."

PROTEST FROM MILWAUKEE.

An audience of over 6,000 persons gathered at the Auditorium in Milwaukee on the evening of Oct. 19th, all creeds and nationalities being represented, in a protest against the "ritual murder" trial now pending at Kiev.

PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD, IN CANADA CONDEMNS RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT.

At a meeting held in Toronto on Oct. 13 to 15, 1913, by the Synod of Toronto and Kingston for the Presbyterian Church in Canada, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

"We, the members of the Synod of Toronto and Kingston in connection with the Presbyterian Church in Canada, desire to associate ourselves with the protests signed in Russia, France, Germany, England and the United States, by leading theologians, men of letters, scientists, politicians and others, against the attempt made in the city of Kieff to revive the hideous charge of 'Ritual Murder,' known as the 'Black Accusation,' against Judaism and the Jewish people.

The question is one of humanity, civilization and truth. The "Blood Accusation" is a relic of the days of witch-craft and "black magic," a cruel and utterly baseless libel on Judaism, an insult to Western culture, and a dishonor to the churches. It has been formulated by ignorant fanatics. Religious minorities, other than Jews, such as the early Christians, and Christian missionaries in China, have been victimized by it. It has been denounced by the best men of all ages and creeds. We deem it our duty to raise our voices against such deplorable absurdities, and we desire in the name of humanity, and in the name of Him who pitied the persecuted, to lift up our voices in protest against the wrongs inflicted upon the Jewish people in Russia, which are an offence to the conscience of Christendom."

LONDON PROTEST MEETING.

A meeting of protest against the revival of the "ritual murder" accusation was held in London on Oct. 28, 1913.

Letters expressing sympathy with the objects of the meeting were read from Andrew Bonar Law, Joseph Chamberlain, T. P. O'Connor, Lord Rothschild, Lord Rosebery, the Earl of Selborne, the Duke of Norfolk, Viscount Milner, Israel Zangwill, the archbishops of Canterbury and York, the bishops of London, Carlisle, Winchester, Rochester, St. Albans, Oxford, and Manchester, and many other prominent men.

Invites Moral Support of World.

A resolution was adopted "protesting against the recrudescence of the utterly baseless and wicked blood ritual charge against the Jewish people, or any section of it, made in the course of the trial of the man Beilis, and inviting the moral support of the civilized world for the Russian Government in any measures it may take for protecting the Jewish subject of the emperor from further obloquy, insult, or hurt."

NEW YORK ASSEMBLY PROTESTS AGAINST RITUAL MURDER CHARGE.

The assembly went on record as opposed to the Russian trial for alleged "ritual murder."

Majority Leader Aaron J. Levy, of New York, introduced and had passed without opposition a long preamble and resolution. These set forth the injustice to those of the Jewish faith in Russia and requested the Federal Department of State, "through its diplomatic and high offices," to point out to the Russian authorities that persistence in these proceedings, in so far as they are based upon the "blood ritual" charge, will be offensive to the American people and to the Government of the United States. The United States Government is asked to point out to the Russian authorities the necessity for their interposition, to the end that a fair and impartial trial may be had, and to use and employ all honorable means and its best endeavors in the interest of justice and common humanity.

MASS MEETING AT CLEVELAND PROTESTS.

A mass meeting was held at the Eagle Hall, Cleveland, on the evening of Oct. 21st, where representatives of the Federated Churches and public officials delivered addresses. A resolution denying the practice of ritual murder was ordered forwarded to Secretary of State Wm. Jennings Bryan, and to Senators Burton and Pomerine and to the several representatives of the State in Washington. Judge F. A. Henry, President of the Federated Churches, presided, and expressed regret that illness prevented the attendance of Bishop John P. Farrelly of the Catholic Diocese of Cleveland. Letters of regret were received from Mayor Baker and Mr. H. L. Davis, candidate for mayor, and Governor James M. Cox.

CZECH PROTEST AGAINST THE BLOOD LIBEL.

A very remarkable protest signed by Czechs of high social standing has been published. It is a document which cannot fail to give satisfaction to the whole of the Jewry. "It wrings one's heart," say the signatories to the protest, "to think of the fatal consequences the trial of Beilis may have for millions of Russian Jews who, as it is, are living in utter misery. We fear that the Beilis case will lead to new pogroms and to the fresh shedding of innocent blood." Many prominent persons, members of the Austrian Parliament, of the Bohemian Diet, Professors at the Czech University and at the Polytechnic High School, magistrates, artists and representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, and last but not least, Roman Catholic priests are among those who have signed the protest.

TORONTO CITY COUNCIL PROTESTS AGAINST THE BEILIS CASE.

The city council of Toronto, Canada, adopted the following resolution introduced by Alderman Anderson at a meeting held on Oct. 13, 1913:

"That the city council of Toronto desires to associate itself with the protest against the attempt made in Kiev, Russia, to revive the hideous charge of 'ritual murder,' known as blood accusation, against Judaism and the Jewish people.

"Animated by the most friendly feeling towards Russia, we can have no idea of meddling with its domestic concerns, but this is a matter of humanity, civilization and truth. The blood accusation is a relic of the days of witchcraft, a baseless libel on Judaism, an insult to western culture and dishonor to the churches in whose name it has been falsely formulated by ignorant fanatics and Jew-baiters.

"The city council of Toronto joins the voice of the Winnipeg council and those of other cities, and protests against such unfounded accusations, and directs that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Russian consul at Montreal."

PROTEST MEETING OF MONTREAL CITIZENS.

On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 19, 1913, in the Gayety Theater of Montreal a monster protest meeting against the so-called "ritual murder" charge took place. Over 3,000 people were in attendance. Prominent among the speakers were Mayor Lavallee, S. W. Jacobs, K. C., Rev. Dr. H. Gordon, and Messrs. Godfrey Langlois, M. P., P. Berkowitz, K. C., and Louis Fitch.

Mayor Lavallee, who was accorded an ovation, uttered his protest in no feeble accents. He said that he knew all the citizens of Montreal joined him in condemning the atrocious slander on the Jewish people, whose religion preached the sublimest ideals of humanity and morality.

CHRISTIAN CLERGYMEN APPEAL TO THE CZAR.

Prominent Christian clergymen who called on Secretary Bryan with a petition addressed to the Czar of Russia urging that the charge against the Jew, Beilis, be withdrawn were told that the department could not transmit the document because it was understood the Russian Government did not desire to receive such communications.

The petition then was sent to the Russian ambassador. It appealed to the Czar to stop the trial of Beilis "because of the untold evils to the cause of humanity which may follow from its further prosecution."

Reciting the history of ritual murder charges, the petition said, "we are convinced that the blood accusation against the Jews, which has been made sporadically, is as unfounded as was the same accusation which, as history shows, was frequently directed against the early Christians."

The petition was signed by about thirty-five of the leading clergymen and officials of Christian denominations in the United States, including the names of such men as Cardinal Farley, Bishop Grier of the Episcopal Church, the Rev. Dr. William F. Manning, rector of Trinity Church; Bishop Scarborough, of New Jersey, and many other officials of Christain churches.

PROTEST BY THE LIBERAL MINISTERS' CLUB.

The Liberal Ministers' Club of New York made public a resolution denouncing the prosecution of Beilis at Kiev and the charge of "ritual murder." "This charge," the resolution says, "has been disapproved again and again. It is a disgrace to Christendom that it should be revived."

GERMAN MEDICAL FRATERNITY PROTESTS.

The Deutsche Medizinische Wochenschrift, one of the leading organs of the German medical fraternity, publishes a stinging condemnation of the "medical expert evidence" introduced by the prosecution at Kiev. The article, which was written by Professor Ernst Ziemke, Dean of the College of Medical Jurisprudence of the University of Kiel, makes a special attack on the alienist Sikorski, who has played so prominent a role at the trial.

"Sikorski's contentions," says Ziemke, "are so monstrous that one must be convinced that his expert report was not based on facts but on a conclusion reached in advance that a ritual murder had taken place and that the 'report' merely attempts to reconcile symptoms revealed by the corpse and all other external circumstances with that 'conviction.' Not only in the interests of humanity, but for the sake of our own reputations as medical experts are we physicians obligated to protest against such practices."

PRESBYTERIAN PASTORS PROTEST.

The Chicago Presbyterian Ministers' Association added its protest to that made by the people. At a recent meeting of the association the ministers passed a motion which allied them with the protestors against the ritual murder charge.

A FRENCH BISHOP'S DENUNCIATION.

Bishop Duchesne, a member of the French Academy, has sent the following letter to a colleague in the academy:

"You ask me, with respect to the trial at Kiev, to tell you what I think of the charge of ritual murder among the Jews. You know very well what I think, for I have expressed my opinion several times, and Abbe Vacandard, in his excellent work on the subject, has repeated it to his readers. Like the Popes and the bishops who have had occasion to deal with the subject, I am of opinion that we have here an absurd fable analogous to certain calumnies which in former times were leveled at Christian assemblies and were also devoid of all foundation.

"It is not always wise to ignore such calumnies, absurd as they may be. Throughout many centuries there were imbeciles who alleged that the church in council had decreed that women had no souls. This stupidity, however, had no serious consequences, it did not embitter the relations of women with the church. But the ritual murder legend is another matter, for people have died on account of it. These stories of children from whom blood has been drawn have claimed real victims; they may cause more. And we cannot flatter ourselves that reason will soon prevail. One cannot enter into a discussion with religious passion; and as for human stupidity, which plays a great part in the world's affairs, it is absolutely impregnable.

"But we must protest all the same. Let us press the truth; something may result from it."

OUTRAGE ON HUMANITY.

Rev. Herbert Symonds, vicar of the Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal, expressed himself regarding the Beilis case as follows:

"The Beilis case in which a Jew is charged with the murdering of a Christian child in order to make ritual use of the blood, is one which calls for the interest and sympathy of all who are concerned with justice and with civilization. Such slanders have been repeated in by-gone days of Christians as well as Jews, and it is an outrage on humanity that they should, without apparently a shred of evidence, be resuscitated in our times. Let it remembered the question is not whether the boy Yushinsky was murdered or not by a Jew, but whether the murder was performed for ritual purposes, in which case the whole of Jewry would be to some extent involved. Concerning this oft-repeated charge, it is stated in the German protest that "not a shadow of proof has ever been adduced to justify this crazy belief,' and at the recent Medical Congress in London, Professor Puppe contended 'that no case of 'ritual murder' had ever been proved against Jews.'"

REV. PETER J. O'CALLAGHAN OF CHICAGO.

"All right thinking men, of all creeds, of every race, color and condition, all lovers of liberty, will join us in protest against this attempt to persecute a race under cover of the absurd charge of 'blood ritual' murder."

CARDINAL GIBBONS AND THE RITUAL MURDER CHARGE.

James Cardinal Gibbons, head of the Catholic Church in America, has joined with many other world leaders in denouncing the ritual murder charge. In reply to a communication of Brother Edward Menkin, of Chicago, District Deputy of the I. O. B. B. for the State of Illinois, Cardinal Gibbons sent the I. O. B. B., Cardinal Gibbons sent the following letter:

Cardinal's Residence,
408 North Charles street,
Baltimore. Oct. 23, 1913.

Mr. Edward Menkin,
Attorney and Counsellor,
1206 Rector Building,
Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Mr. Menkin:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your esteemed favor of the 21st instant.

In regard to the charge that the Jews are using blood for ritual purposes, I beg to assure you that I have never for an instant believed in any such accusation, and I regret that such a false accusation should form the basis for such persecution.

With sentiments of esteem, I am,
Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) J. CARD. GIBBONS,
Archbishop of Baltimore.

CARDINAL FARLEY REFUTES RITUAL MURDER CHARGE.

His Eminence John Cardinal Farley of New York has written the following to Rabbi Dr. B. Drachman in reply to his request to express his views as to the existence of ritual murders:

New York, October 20, 1913.

The Rev. Dr. Bernard Drachman, President, Board of Jewish Ministers.

Reverend and Dear Sir: In reply to your request that I give expression of my views as to the existence of ritual murders in the worship of the Jewish people, I am free to say that I have never for an instant given credence to any such accusations. With best wishes, I am, very faithfully yours,
John Cardinal Farley.

PAPAL SECRETARY MERRY DEL VAL.

It is reported that Cardinal Merry del Val, Papal Secretary of State, in replying to an inquiry, denied the assertion made on the stand at Kiev by the monk, Pranditis, that the Catholic Church believes the practice of "ritual murder" is widespread among the Jews and that the documental refutations made by Pope Innocent IV., in 1247, and Cardinal Ganganelli, in 1758, are forgeries.

Cardinal del Val was asked to verify the matter from the originals of the documents issued by Pope Innocent IV. and Cardinal Ganganelli, or official papers in his keeping. The Cardinal set all doubt at rest by replying that the refutations are certainly authentic and disclaiming belief in the idea that "ritual murder" is practiced by the Jews.

BISHOP FALLOWS ATTACKS RUSSIA.

Russia's attitude toward the Jews as exemplified in the prosecution of Mendel Beilis at Kiev on the charge of "ritual murder" was condemned as a "disgrace to civilization" by Bishop Samuel Fallows of Chicago, presiding officer at the thirty-fifth annual council of the Reformed Episcopal churches of the Synod of Chicago, which closed its session at Cleveland on Oct. 16th.

"No treaty should be renewed between the United States and Russia until the ban has been lifted by the latter country upon the entrance of American citizens of Jewish faith," said Bishop Fallows. "The abrogation of the treaty by President Taft was an act of justice that appealed to every fair-minded citizen of this country and the English-speaking world. Until the persecution of the Jews in Russia ceases. I would strongly oppose the renewal of any treaty between the two countries.

"Public opinion is not only potent, but almost omnipotent, and no country can long stand up against a great storm of public disapproval. The 'ritual murder' trial at Kiev focuses the attention of the world, especially the English-speaking nations, upon the injustice being done the Jewish race, and throughout all Christian nations a wave of indignation is spreading like wildfire. Eventually good will be brought out of evil, for this trial cannot help but so arouse the public sentiment that the Jews will be benefited thereby."

W. R. H. Hodgkin, Dean of the Episcopal Church of San Francisco.

Many years of most careful theological research have failed to uncover any sacrifice of blood in the Hebrew faith. This charge is an absolute lie.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

PRESENTATION TO VICTOR ABRAHAM.

Notwithstanding the very inclement weather, Assembly Hall of the Rockdale Avenue Temple Annex at Cincinnati was well filled on Sunday evening, Oct. 19th, to witness the presentation of a handsome hammered silver Menorah to Victor Abraham, who for twenty consecutive years, has been Secretary of District Grand Lodge No. 2.

The presentation was under the auspices of the Cincinnati Lodge No. 4, and the occasion was one long to be remembered by those whose good fortune it was to be present on this memorable occasion. No words can convey the depth of feeling and the note of affection which were made manifest in every act and utterance of the evening.

The audience was an unusual one, even for Cincinnati. Men were present who would not venture out in a drenching rain like that which fell in the early part of the evening except for the desire to demonstrate their real love for the man and brother they had come to honor at the cost of great physical inconvenience. It was a representative body of men and women whose presence alone was an honor.

One striking feature of the evening was the entire absence of that formality which somehow or other always seems to attach to occasions of the kind, and the gathering was more like a company of old friends and companions—a family reunion, with Brother Abraham as the guest of honor.

The program, which was neither long nor elaborate, was as follows:

Music—Symphony Trio.

Introductory remarks—Sol. L. Levi, President Cincinnati Lodge No. 4, and presentation of Chairman Harry Simon, of St. Louis, President D. G. L. No. 2.

Address—Rabbi Joseph S. Kornfeld, Columbus, Ohio, First Vice-President, D. G. L. No. 2.

Address—S. J. Kornhauser, Cleveland, Ohio, Second Vice-President, D. G. L. No. 2.

Music—Symphony Trio.

Presentation address—A. Lewenthal, Past President D. G. L. No. 2.

Response—Victor Abraham, Grand Secretary D. G. L. No. 2.

In addition to the addresses on the program speeches were made by Jacob Furth, of St. Louis, and Martin A. Marks, of Cleveland, Past Grand Presidents of the District. In addition to those mentioned, there were present Jacob L. Lorie, Kansas City; Karl M. Vetsburg, St. Louis, and Louis Bernstein, St. Joseph, Mo., members of the General Committee.

The speeches were marked by earnestness and enthusiasm and offered just tribute to services of Secretary Abraham and his unselfish devotion of forty years to the interests of the B'nai B'rith Order. The presentation address by Past President Lewenthal was especially impressive and the response of Grand Secretary Abraham was full of vigor and the spirit of youth. He expressed thanks and appreciation of the splendid token in a few words that conveyed the full measure of his gratification at the honor shown him by his friends.

The seven-branched candlestick is of hammered silver and was made after a design on the ancient Roman arch of Titus and copied from the Menorahs captured in Jerusalem at the destruction of the second temple.

There were no set speeches. Whatever the speakers on the program had prepared themselves to say they said in the fewest possible words, and then gave rein to their natural feelings and emotions. The experience was as pleasant as it was unusual and resulted in the home-like evening with manifestations of human feelings that will live through the years to come.

A reception followed the program with felicitations, congratulations, and handshaking, in which the distinguished visitors had full share.

JOINT MEMORIAL SERVICE IN MEMORY OF LATE MOSES S. HYMAN.

On Sunday, Oct. 26th, services were held at the Home at Yonkers, New York, in memory of the late lamented Brother Moses S. Hyman, who was a member of the governing body of the institution since its inception thirty-one years ago. For ten years he was its President, and the welfare of the Home and the inmates was one of the most cherished pleasures of his life. He has endeared himself lastingly in the hearts of all who knew him by his straightforward and honest manner in which he treated all whom he came in contact with. The Home has lost a faithful worker, the district an ardent supporter.

The introductory address was made by Mr. S. M. Lyon, Vice-President of the Home, and the address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Jos. Silverman, President of District Grand Lodge No. 1.

The Executive Committee was represented by Brother Charles Hartman; the General Committee by President Dr. Joseph Silverman, First Vice-President Herman Asher, of New York, and Second Vice-President Judge Abraham K. Cohen, of Boston, Mass.

There were also present Brothers Samuel Fleischman and Maurice P. Davidson, of New York; Past President Joseph H. Ullman, of New Haven, Conn.; Past President Hon. Charles M. Stern, of Albany, N. Y., and Rev. Dr. Maurice Thorner, of Bridgeport, Conn., of the General Committee.

The Board of Governors of the Home was represented by President Governor Sim. M. Lyon, Vice-President Henry Meyers, Governors Mo. Minzesheimer, Jacob Cane, Henry Duschness, Henry Gutenstein, Myron Sulzberger, Isidor H. Kempner, Abraham Anhalt, William B. Koller, all of New York; Isidor Chase, of Waterbury, Conn.; Abram M. Friedman, of New Haven, Conn.; Benjamin Kashman, of Hartford, Conn., and Reginald E. Zunder, Secretary of the district.

A beautiful white marble tablet, lettered in gold, was presented to the Home by the members of the Board of Governors in memory of their colleague, the late Goovernor Moses S. Hyman. It is inscribed as follows:

"Dedicated to the memory of Moses S. Hyman, died Sept. 8, 1913. Served faithfully as Governor of this Home from its inception in 1882 until 1913, and as its President for ten years."

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Under the auspices of the Advancement Committee, Washington Lodge No. 19, I. O. B. B., arranged a lecture on "The New Palestine" by Miss Henrietta Szold at Temple Israel of Harlem, New York, Thursday, October 30th. Miss Szold showed a large number of stereopticon views taken in the Holy Land, and explained the possibilities which exist in that country for the Jews who settle there.

Miss Szold, who is the President of the Haddassah Chapter of the Daughters of Zion, explained particularly the work which that organization has inaugurated in Palestine, namely:—District Visiting Nursing—and she endeavored to interest the audience in this work with a view of financially assisting therein.

A short report of the activities of the Haddassah Chapter was rendered by Miss Leon who accompanied the first two nurses who were sent out to Palestine to take up the work.

The audience, which completely filled the vestry room of the Temple, was very enthusiastic regarding the work undertaken by the small band of Jewesses, and many offered to assist. The lecture was followed by the singing of the Hatikwa and the Star Spangled Banner, copies of the songs being distributed.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

Weeks of active propaganda work on the part of Jericho Lodge No. 44, of Pittsburgh, Pa., terminated in the initiation of a large class of candidates at a well-attended meeting held on Sunday morning, Oct. 12th.

In honor of the occasion the meeting was attended by several officers of the District Grand Lodge, who addressed the meeting on the work and progress of the Order. The initiation was conducted by the degree team of the lodge and was very interesting.

NEWARK, N. J.

Under the auspices of Ezekiel Lodge No. 90 of Newark, N. J., a well attended meeting was held on Oct. 29, 1913. The occasion was honored by the presence of Rabbi Dr. Morris H. Harris of New York, who delivered an address on the subject, "The Ritual Murder Trial."

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Lodge attended the meeting in a body and a pleasant evening was enjoyed by all present.

RESOLUTIONS IN HONOR OF AMBASSADOR MORGENTHAU.

At a meeting of Jordan Lodge No. 15, held on Monday, October 6th, 1913, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, we have learned with extreme pleasure that the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, has appointed our member, Brother Henry Morgenthau, to represent this country as Ambassador to Turkey, and that the appointment has been confirmed by the Senate.

WHEREAS, said appointment because of its importance reflects credit upon Henry Morgenthau as an American citizzen, we, the members of Jordon Lodge No. 15, I. O. B. B., in meeting assembled, do

RESOLVED, to extend to Brother Henry Morgenthau, our congratulations and our sincerest hopes and prayers that he will always enjoy to the fullest the respect and confidence of all with whom he may come in contact, and that the term of his service may be ever a source of honor and pleasure to him.

RESOLVED, that these resolutions be spread on our minutes and a copy of the same be forwarded to Brother Henry Morgenthau.

JERICHO LODGE, PITTSBURGH.

Another in the series of class initiations being held by Jericho Lodge No. 44 took place at a meeting of the lodge on Nov. 2, 1913. An excellent program was arranged after the conclusion of the initiatory ceremonies.

The Propoganda Committee is actively engaged at the present time in increasing the membership of Jericho Lodge and in promoting the progress of the organization. With the members of the Committee lending diligent efforts to advancing the cause of the Lodge and the principles of the Order, a winter season of great avtivity is promised.

DANMARK LODGE, COPENHAGEN

Under the auspices of the committee on lectures and entertainments of Danmark Lodge No. 712, of Copenhagen, Denmark, the following program of lectures for the present winter season has been arranged:

"L. I. Brandes, the Philanthropist," by Mr. Carl Lehman, mayor of the city.

"The Administration of the Congregation," by Dr. A. Rothenborg.

"The Restlessness of the Present Time, with Special Reference to the Jews," by Prof. Dr. D. E. Jacobson.

Lectures will also be delivered by Rabbi Dr. C. Koch, of Goeteburg, and by Mr. Maximilian Stein, of Berlin. In addition to the foregoing program the committee has arranged for discussions and reviews of foreign Jewish periodicals, and preparations are being made for a musical entertainment, to be followed by a dance to take place at the close of the season.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte Lodge No. 733 celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Oct. 19, 1913, with an open meeting. Over one hundred men were present. Speeches were delivered by the following: David B. Paul, President of the lodge; Dr. Adam Fisher, Captain John A. Parker, Col. C. A. A. Beyers, Mr. F. L. Bonfoey, Mr. R. B. Elam, Dr. Samuel Levy, and the Vice-President of the lodge, Michael Kirschbaum. After the speaking light refreshments and cigars were served. President Paul acted as toastmaster.

During the afternoon of the same day an entertainment was given the Charlotte Hebrew Sabbath School by Charlotte Lodge. Hon. Chas. A. Bland, mayor of Charlotte, addressed the school and delivered certificates of honor to the pupils. Short talks were made by the following: David B. Paul, superintendent of the school; Dr. Samuel Levy, Rev. Chas. Arik, Mr. M. Kirschbaum, Mr. L. Katzen, Mr. N. Paul, Mr. I. Schwartz and others.

The enthusiasm during the day was so great that the Hebrew ladies of the city immediately began preparations for a local Ladies' Hebrew Aid Society. At a mass meeting in the B'nai B'rith hall Sunday, Oct. 26th, the ladies formed an aid society, to be known as the Daughters of Israel, of which the following officers were elected: Mrs. B. J. Steinberg, President; Mrs. Samuel Levy, Vice-President; Mrs. J. Lamb, Secretary, and Mrs. S. Miller, Treasurer. They will hold their meetings every other Sunday in the B'nai B'rith hall.

The B'nai B'rith Lodge, the Sabbath school, the newly formed Daughters of Israel, are all assisting in the efforts to secure sufficient funds with which to pay off the indebtedness on the lot recently purchased for the Hebrew Temple, and to begin building. They are at present all busily engaged preparing and soliciting goods and funds for a bazaar to be held some time next month.

B'NAI B'RITH DINNER.

Under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago, representing all the local lodges, an informal dinner was given at the Hotel Sherman on Thursday evening, Oct. 30, 1913, which was largely attended. The dinner was followed by a discussion and analysis of the pending immigration bills in Congress. The speakers were:

Judge Hugo Pam—The Dillingham Bill.

Julius H. Meyer—The Roddenberry Bill.

Edward Sonnenschein — The Smith Bill.

Benjamin Samuels—The Burnett Bill.

Hon. Philip Stein acted as chairman. The addresses were followed by a discussion participated in by several members.

CHICAGO, ILL.

Arrangements are being made for the annual celebration of B'nai B'rith Day by the Chicago Lodges under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council. The celebration will be held at the Hotel La Salle on Saturday evening, Jan. 17, 1914, and will consist of a banquet, at which addresses will be delivered by notable persons, and the festivities will be concluded with a ball. Members of the Executive Committee of the Order, who are scheduled to hold a meeting the following day, are expected to attend in a body. On the following evening, Sunday, Jan. 18th, a meeting of the joint Lodges of Chicago will be held in honor of the visiting members of the Executive Committee. On this occasion a class initiation of candidates will be held and the initiation will be conducted by the degree team of the Central B'nai B'rith Council. Addresses by all the members of the Executive Committee are expected to be made. Refreshments will be served at the conclusion of the meeting,

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The B'nai B'rith Lodges of New Orleans have resumed their activities. The joint committee of the lodges held a meeting on Oct. 21, 1913, and discussed the details of a campaign for the season. As a result a joint meeting of all the New Orleans Lodges was held under the auspices of the joint committee on Oct. 29, 1913. Rabbi E. W. Leipziger delivered an address, and there were short discussions on topics of current interest.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

ABRAHAM LIPPMAN LODGE, PITTSBURGH.

At a meeting of Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672 of Pittsburgh, Pa., held on Oct. 22nd, which was attended by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Lodge and the Lodge members, final arrangements were made for the annual affair to be given under the auspices of the two societies on Nov. 20th next. The propaganda committee had procured for this meeting a number of players from one of the theaters, who for over an hour and a half entertained the audience.

Abraham Lippman Lodge has been in existence only about three years, and during this period, aided by the Ladies' Auxiliary, it has succeeded in raising nearly $3,000 for the Home of the Friendless, which is now being constructed at Erie, Pa.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Des Moines Lodge No. 330 is again active and good results may be expected. The lodge decided to have every other meeting a social meeting, when business will be discarded, devoting the evening to social and intellectual pursuits.

The formation of a ladies' auxiliary is under consideration. It is thought this might stimulate interest and attendance and serve to a deeper interest in B'nai B'rith affairs on the part of the Des Moines Jewish population.

The lodge has arranged for a series of card and dancing parties during the winter, the first to be held Thanksgiving evening. It has also been arranged to have one on Christmas eve and again on Washington's birthday.

NEWARK, N. J.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of Ezekiel Lodge No. 90 of Newark, N. J., was organized about a year ago, and has been successful from the beginning. The object of the league, outside of social features, is to raise funds towards the support of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage now in course of construction at Erie, Pa. Meetings are held monthly in conjunction with regular meetings of the Lodge. After the Lodge is adjourned the ladies meet with the members for the enjoyment of a social hour.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by the ten lodges of San Francisco at the Golden Gate Park Stadium on Sunday, Oct. 26, 1913. Literary exercises and a field and track meet were the features of the day. The athletic program began promptly at 1:30 in the afternoon with field and track events and it was followed by a musical program and addresses. Among the speakers were Mr. I. M. Golden, President of the District Grand Lodge, and Henry Neuberg. Medals were awarded the winning athletes.

LINCOLN, NEB.

Lincoln City Lodge No. 377 of Lincoln, Neb., celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary and B'nai B'rith Day with a banquet given at the Lindell Hotel on the evening of Oct. 21, 1913. There were about one hundred ladies and gentlemen present, including Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer, representing the Grand Lodge of District No. 6, and Mr. Julius Rosenfield of Council Bluffs, State Deputy for Iowa. Mr. Chas. Mayer, a charter member of the lodge, acted as toastmaster, and in a very able and felicitous manner introduced the several speakers. Rabbi Jacob Singer of Congregation B'nai Jeshurun of Lincoln, and Vice-President of the lodge, delivered the address of welcome. In his usual happy vein he extended a cordial greeting to those present. Mr. Edward Guggenheim, President of the lodge, spoke briefly on "Our Prospects." Mr. M. A. Newmark responded to the toast, "The Order B'nai B'rith, Its Achievements, Its Mission." He stated he was present when Lincoln City Lodge No. 377 was organized, and at the banquet then given extended the welcome of the newly formed lodge to those who came to launch it on its sea of life. After giving a historic review of the life and activities of the Lincoln Lodge for the past 25 years he spoke at length on the Order, its achievements, its mission. He instanced its great service to humankind, and especially its extended activities since the great influx of immigrants from Russia and Roumania with the resultant congestion in the large centers of population and the many problems growing out of it. Mr. Newmark closed with an appeal to the Jewish young men to join the Order and by strengthening the lodges render material support to those engaged in this beneficent work.

Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer brought greetings from the Grand Lodge of District No. 6, after which he spoke at length upon the attitude of the younger generation to Judaism and suggested reforms to increase their interest and correct the laxity shown. He spoke eloquently and ably and was freely applauded. Mr. Julius Rosenfield delivered an address, in which he told of the formation of the Ladies' Auxiliary and the benefits accruing from it, and advised the ladies of Lincoln to form a similar organization. Following his suggestion the ladies of Lincoln present organized a B'nai B'rith auxiliary, with Mrs. Morris Friend President, and Mrs. Henry Schlesinger Secretary. Speeches were made also by Messrs. Isaac Friend, Henry Schlesinger, Morris Friend and several others.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

At a meeting of Jordan Lodge No. 15 of New York City, held on Oct. 20, 1913, several candidates were initiated, including Hon. Max S. Grifenhagen, Register of New York County.

The younger members of this lodge have organized a bowling club, and although the financing of the club has nothing to do with the lodge, nevertheless membership in the club is restricted to members of the lodge.

At the next meeting of the lodge, held on Nov. 6th, Brother Eugene H. Lehman, M. A., entertained those present with the first of a series of short talks.

At a meeting or Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., held on Oct. 29th a class of 12 candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge. The meeting was the largest attended since the organization of the lodge two years ago. At the conclusion of the business luncheon was served and a social time was enjoyed. The lodge is making arrangements for the holding of an important meeting next month and a committee representing the Grand Lodge will be in attendance to pass upon and judge the work done by the degree team of Harmony Lodge. All the degree teams of the District are at present engaged in a prize contest for a trophy offered by the Grand Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

A rollicking minstrel show of the old time character is being prepared by Indianapolis Lodge No. 58, of Indianapolis, Ind., which will be presented at the German House on the evening of Dec. 5th. Special curtains and stage effects are being painted in New York and costumes for the principals have been ordered in Philadelphia.

Great enthusiasm and activity has been displayed of late in the affairs of Missouri Lodge No. 22 of St. Louis. The movement to increase sociability among the members of the lodge has borne fruit. A smoker under the auspices of the entertainment committee of the lodge was held on Oct. 28th at the Odeon, which was largely attended and manifested the highest type of good fellowship among the members.

The St. Louis B'nai B'rith lodges are arranging to celebrate B'nai B'rith Day on Nov. 11th, on which occasion Hon. Chas. Nagel, ex-Secretary of Commerce and Labor, will deliver an address on the subject of "Immigration" at Temple Israel.

The annual banquet of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, of Cleveland, Ohio, was held on Nov. 3, 1913, in connection with the B'nai B'rith Day celebration. The speakers were Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburgh, U. S. Judge Wm. L. Day and Dr. G. Wolfenstein.

At the regular meeting of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, of Cleveland, O., held Oct. 26, 1913, a class of 7 candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge.

Arrangements have been made by Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 of Indianapolis, Ind., to use the Communal Bldg., which will soon be dedicated. The regular meetings of the lodge as well as its social affairs will be given in this building hereafter.

Arrangements are being made by the Cincinnati Lodge No. 4 of Cincinnati, Ohio, to observe B'nai B'rith Day. The celebration will be held at one of the Temples on Monday evening, Nov. 24, 1913, and Mr. A. B. Seelenfreund of Chicago, Secretary of the Order, has been invited to deliver the address.

Missouri Lodge appointed a new committee entitled "The Social Service Committee," with Mr. Oscar Leonard as the chairman. The purpose of this committee is to gather data concerning Jews confined in public institutions and to investigate the white slave traffic, if such there be, in St. Louis.

A further committee was appointed by Brother J. S. Seelig, chairman, to consult with the officers of the Y. M. H. A. to ascertain in what way Missouri Lodge can be of assistance to the association.

At a meeting of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 of Cleveland, Ohio, held on Oct. 26, 1913, a resolution was adopted asking that the lodge communicate with Senators Burton and Pomerene and Representatives Bulkley and Gordon, requesting them to work and vote for the resolution introduced by J. Hamilton Lewis of Illinois with reference to the Beiliss trial.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Various committees of Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672, of Pittsburgh, Pa., are hard at work to complete arrangements for the entertainment to be held at the auditorium in Pittsburg on Nov. 20, 1913. The committee is providing numerous features and the proceeds of the affair will be devoted to charitable purposes.

Under the auspices of Ezekiel Lodge No. 90 of Newark, N. J., the employment bureau was re-established and will begin operations soon. This is the result of an entertainment held by the lodge, the proceeds of which were devoted to finance the employment bureau.

Within a few weeks Jericho Lodge No. 44 of Pittsburg, Pa., will celebrate the 51st anniversary of its founding. Plans for this celebration will soon be announced.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

The B'nai B'rith ball to be given by Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal., on the evening of Nov. 12th promises to be a great success.

At a meeting of Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 of Los Angeles, Cal., held on Oct. 14, 1913, Mr. C. F. Rosenberg delivered a talk on "Modern Business Methods." The annual ball of the lodge was held on Tuesday evening, Nov. 4th.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the B'nai B'rith Building Assn. of Portland, Ore., was held on Oct. 26, 1913.

The Daughters of the Covenant gave an informal dance to their members and those of Theo. Herzl Lodge No. 314 of Portland, Ore., on Oct. 28, 1913.

Rainier Lodge No. 627 of Seattle, Wash., held a business meeting on Oct. 13th at which only business matters were considered.

The members of Cremieux Lodge No. 325 and many visiting friends were pleasantly entertained on the evening of October 27th by an address by Mr. Edgar C. Levey of this city. The speech was preceded by several musical numbers of an enjoyable character. President J. Hart Dasteel also introduced Second Grand Vice-President Bro. Harry K. Wolff, whose inspiring words were enthusiastically received. Refreshments were served. This was but one of a series of such evenings planned by Cremieux Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

At a recent meeting of Charlotte Lodge No. 733, of Charlotte, N. C., resolutions were adopted condemning the ritual murder trial now in progress at Kiev. Copies of the resolution were transmitted to Congressman Webb, with the request that he bring the matter to the attention of the government.

Various committees of Gate City Lodge No. 144 of Atlanta, Ga., are now actively at work making preparations for the 25th anniversary of the founding of the Hebrew Orphan Home of Atlanta, Ga., which will be held next March. In connection with this celebration the annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 5 will be held. Preparatory to the meeting it is proposed to hold a series of open meetings.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

A concrete proof of the importance and usefulness of Winnipeg Lodge No. 650 of Winnipeg, Canada, has been demonstrated by the extremely gratifying success with which the building committee of the Canadian Jewish Orphan Home, an institution fathered by Winnipeg Lodge, has met. The net result of a few days' campaign was a total subscription to the building fund of $7,500.

Pending the building of the proper quarters, the committee has opened up temporary accommodations in a clean, comfortable, nice house, centrally located and sanitary in every respect.

Negotiations are in force for the purchase of a large piece of ground in a desirable location, which the building committee is confident will shortly be acquired at a reasonable price. The building committee, under the chairmanship of Brother A. H. Aronovich, is conducting a campaign for funds and will no doubt meet with the success it deserves.

King David Lodge No. 641 of Madison, Wis., has displayed much activity of late. New members have been taken in at every meeting, and the meetings are attended by from 75 to 80 per cent of the membership. Discussions are taken up after the close of routine business, and in this manner the Intellectual Advancement idea is furthered.

Due to the efforts of B'nai B'rith members of Racine Lodge of Racine, Wis., organized about two years ago, a reform congregation was reorganized and arrangements have been made to hold weekly services on Sunday mornings, Rabbi Israel Klein of Chicago officiating. A Sabbath school will be carried on in connection with the congregation.

A dancing party was held under the auspices of Mesaba Lodge No. 673 of Virginia, Minn., on Sunday evening, Oct. 19, 1913. The affair was well attended, many residents of the Range District were in attendance.

Lake Cities Lodge No. 696, of Ft. William, Ont., is making arrangements for the observance of B'nai B'rith Day during the month of December. At the last meeting of the lodge three candidates were initiated.

At a meeting of David Fish Lodge No. 130 of Chicago to be held on Nov. 18, 1913, the Central B'nai B'rith Council will pay an official visit.

Wm. McKinley Lodge of Omaha, Neb., has at the present time 113 members. The recently established ladies' auxiliary is of much benefit to the lodge and both organizations hold joint meetings, which are of much interest to the members. The lodge is working out plans for the celebration of B'nai B'rith Day and expect to have an elaborate affair.

Dacotah Lodge No. 731 of Grand Forks, N. D., has initiated a movement to counteract the activities of certain organizations of the state having in view the introduction of the study of the Bible in the public schools of the state and the cities. A special committee was appointed to have charge of this matter.

On Oct. 26th Brother Adolf Kraus, President of the Order, and Brother Sylvan E. Hess, President of the District Grand Lodge, held a conference with about twenty-five members of the Order in Detroit at Hotel Pontchartrain, at which the welfare of the two Detroit Lodges was discussed.

On Sunday evening, Oct. 12, 1913, Dacotah Lodge No. 731 of Grand Forks, N. D., gave the first informal dancing party of the season. More than 60 couples took advantage of this opportunity, and the affair proved a success.

Mishan Lodge No. 247 of Kalamazoo, Mich., was visited on Oct. 27th by Brother Sylvan E. Hess, President of the District. A dinner attended by members of the Lodge was served and an address delivered by Brother Hess. Brother Sam Folz, Past President of the District, presided and addressed the gathering, as did also other officers and members of the Lodge.

On Sunday, Oct. 26th, a meeting of Dacotah Lodge No. 731 of Grand Forks, N. D., was held, at which a class of candidates was initiated by the degree team of the Lodge, which was recently organized, and which is under the charge of Brother G. Papermeister and under whose direction the team did effective work.

At a regular meeting of Winnipeg Lodge No. 650 of Winnipeg, Canada, held on Oct. 9th a class of four candidates was initiated by the degree team of the Lodge.

At a meeting of Fox River Lodge No. 209 of Appleton, Wis., the resignation of President Albert Rindsberger, owing to his removal from the city, was presented and accepted. The vacancy was filled by the election of the Vice President, Brother Gabe Ullman, to serve as President for the unexpired term.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Ceremonies attending the laying of the corner stone of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital were held at Hot Springs, Ark., on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 2, 1913.

Under the auspices of Ft. Smith Lodge No. 306 of Ft. Smith, Ark., a resolution was drawn up to be sent to Congressman Otis T. Winge, which resolution was signed by hundreds of citizens approving the proposed resolution now before Congress in the pending ritual murder trial.

A meeting of Houston Lodge No. 434 of Houston, Texas, was held at the Concordia Club on Oct. 21, 1913. President J. H. Sam submitted report of the activities of the officers of the Lodge during the summer period. At this meeting a class of six candidates was initiated and ten applications for membership were presented. Preparations are being made by the Lodge for the observance of B'nai B'rith Day, the date for holding, which will be announced later.

Memphis Lodge No. 35 of Memphis, Tenn., held a meeting on Nov. 9th, at which the nomation of officers and delegates to the Grand Lodge was held.

DISTRICT NO. 8.

District Grand Lodge No. 8, Germany, will meet in biennial convention on Nov. 22, 1913, in the city of Berlin. The sessions will be held at the B'nai B'rith building of the Berlin lodges, and it is expected that the same will last three days. The creating of an emergency fund, the status of the women in the Order, the relationship of the special committee for Intellectual Advancement to the General Committee, mixed marriages, creation of a Jewish Court of Honor, will be among the special subjects to be brought up for discussion and action.

PROTEST MEETINGS, Etc.

Governor Dunne, Illinois.

No intelligent person believes for a moment that the Jewish religion calls for the sacrificing of human blood under any of its rituals. To make such an accusation, even in a court of justice in any land in the twentieth century, brands the accuser as a malignant perjurer or a gullible fool. The wonderment is that any self-respecting court could be prevailed upon to consider seriously such an accusation.

Senator Lewis, Illinois.

Senator Lewis telegraphed this message:

All civilization will protest against such slanders upon so great a people. Christianity will rise up to resent such injustice upon a God fearing race. Justice to the Jew as to the Gentile over the whole world should be the demand of free Americans.

King Constantine and the Blood Libel.

King Constantine granted an audience on Oct. 13 to the Grand Rabbi of Salonika, who assured his Majesty of the loyalty and devotion of the Israelite community, who, he said, in conformity with the prescriptions of their religion, were the loyal and faithful subjects of the countries in which they lived and always defended the country of their adoption with their lives.

The King, according to a semi-official account of the interview, expressed his satisfaction with the Grand Rabbi's remarks and declared that he would never tolerate in his kingdom the "ritual murder" calumny. He added that he had greatly appreciated the services of the Jewish soldiers in his army. In conclusion he assured the Grand Rabbi of the benevolent attitude of the authorities towards the Jews.

Mayor Rolph, San Francisco.

My blood has been at the boiling point because of the unjust attack against the Jews. Representing the people, I want to voice the protest of all the citizens of this city against the [illegible]. Humanity's interest is our in[illegible]d for the people.

Robt. Newton Lynch, Vice-President San Francisco Chamber of Commerce.

This charge is positively sickening to our sense of civilization. There have been fifty or more historical trials of this character, but in not a single trial has evidence been given to bear them out.

Rev. Father Ramm, St. Mary's Cathedral, San Francisco.

I speak representing the Archbishop as the representative of the Roman Catholic Church of San Francisco. I think that the Catholic Church, as a whole, has the greatest sympathy for the Jews because of this ridiculous charge, for the reason that the Catholic Church has been in the same boat herself. Meetings of protest are certain to do some good, but there must be many more meetings and many more protests before the benighted peasants of Russia will be made to understand that they are living in the dark. In the end freedom will come because right must prevail.

Warren R. Porter, ex-Lieutenant Governor of California.

As an Episcopalian, I am here today to voice the sentiments of my church, as embodied in a resolution recently passed by the convention of the house of deputies of the Protestant Episcopal Church, held in New York City.

This was in defense of the Jews and protesting against the charges of ritualistic murder made against them, which are without foundation or justification in the teaching and practice of the religion of Israel.

We know of no other way of calling the attention of the Russian Government to our disapproval of such unnatural acts than the method which my church has adopted. We feel in this advanced stage of civilization that the treatment of Jews in Russia is an offense to us.

Rev. Geo. Burlingame, First Baptist Church, San Francisco.

I am voicing the protest that has been surging in my heart for many days against the pitiless and cruel oppression of the Jews in Russia, and, in protesting, I believe that I may call myself a faithful representative of the Baptist Church throughout the world.

This present trial in Russia is a crime of international import, for the reason that it is a world-wide crime to maintain a farce under the guise of a court of justice. To prosecute that trial with the defendant deprived of his rights is not a crime in Russia alone, but a crime against humanity.

Rev. Dr. Chas. Aked, San Francisco.

We have gathered not as Jews, not as Christians, but as men and women. We are shocked and horrified by the revival in Russia of a hideous superstition. It is intensely humiliating to the pride we take in the human intelligence of this day and age, to see the monarch of a great European country groping back into the dark of past centuries.

Here we are this day to register our solemn protest against bigotry and race hatred. It is impossible for us who are Christians not to resent the insult against the Jews of this or any other country.

I think that our protest, joined with the protests coming from the other intelligent men in other parts of the United States, is certain to bear some weight in Russia. Even Russia is amenable to the pressure of public opinion.

Miss Jane Addams of Chicago.

"So far as the Czar is the autocratic ruler of Russia we must condemn him for directing this persecution. But the Czar is enslaved. He is the creature of his ministers. He is a victim of ignorance and superstition."

Jenkin Lloyd Jones of Chicago.

"This quarrel is not between America and Russia. It is a quarrel between enlightenment and ignorance, between liberty and oppression. All differences of color, race and religion disappear in the presence of a wrong done to humanity."

BY GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

(Novelist and Dramatist.)

This silly and rancorous story of Jewish ritual murder is as old as Christianity and is a very great disgrace to it. The only sect which practices cihld murder is the modern sect of vaccinationists, which formerly killed a child a week in England and probably does so still in America. But this is falling into deserved disrepute and will eventually be suppressed.

Monsignor Lavelle Denounces Ritual Murder Charge.

Monsignor Michael J. Lavelle of New York, secretary to Cardinal Farley, expressed himself as follows regarding the ritual murder charge:

"My opinion, in a word, is that it is a mockery, I am convinced, or rather, I feel justified in saying I know, that there is no such thing as ritual murder among the Jews. There couldn't be. It is impossible to even imagine its existence, and there has never been a suspicion of such a thing by intelligent people in hundreds of years."

Father Alexander Kukulsky, Head of St. Trinity Russian Greek Orthodox Church.

The accusation made against us, that we believe the Jews in Russia kill the children of Christians to use their blood in the Passover feast, is a monstrous misapprehension. It is absolutely false. It is nonsense. We do not believe anything of the kind. I think the Beilis youth will be cleared of the charge. I am not prepared to say that politics, either local or national, is at the bottom of this affair, but so far as the church is concerned please let it be known that we are innocent of any such belief touching the Jewish people.

Father Sava Voyvovich, Head of Servian Greek Orthodox Church.

I would prefer not to make any statement at length on this matter. All I know of the case is what I have read in the newspapers. My people are mostly Slavs. I have a large congregation and I speak for them all. We are under the protection of the Russian Government and thus must look to them for our wants. I do not for one minute believe that the church in Russia accepts the story of "ritual murder" and am positive that no member of the Russian Church today believes the unjust accusation against the Jewish laborer.

Speaker Clark Defends Jews.

"The 'ritual murder' prosecution now in progress in Russia is the most preposterous and monstrous performance of this age and finds no parallel since the days of witchcraft," said Champ Clarke, speaker of the House, at Washington, D. C., on October 19. "Just why anybody wants to persecute the Jews, of all men, utterly passes my understanding. They are among the very best, most industrious and most peace-loving citizens of all the countries where they locate, and help their full share in every public enterprise.

Prof. George Burman Foster of Chicago.

"I am in hearty sympathy with this nation-wide protest against the bringing of this time-worn, false and barbarous accusation against a humble member of the Jewish race as a means of excusing further persecution of millions of his co-religionists in Russia."

Judge Edward Osgood Brown of Chicago.

"We protest not only against this calumny, but against the circulation of the printed incitements to outrage and murder out of which this present action has sprung, against the plots and conspiracies which make this trial a pretext for massacre."

Interpolation of Austrian Parliament.

The Austrian government was interpolated by a Jewish deputy at a session held on Oct. 28th whether the government is prepared to instruct the foreign office to make representations to the Russian government calling its attention to the great dangers threatening the Jews in Russia and requesting it to take prompt measures to avert them.

Father Ambrose Mandelares, D. D., Head of San Constantine Greek Orthodox Church (Hellenic).

I am not a Russian, but no Russian priest of the Greek Orthodox Church believes the statement made concerning Jews killing Christian children to use their blood in ritual service. The story comes from ignorant people of the lower classes and originated in the third and fourth centuries. The whole matter as it is before the public today is the result of politics in Kiev.

The Peru Chamber of Deputies by a vote of 66 to 4 has adopted a policy of religious freedom to all sects. There are not many Jews in the country to enjoy the rights thus granted.

EDITORIAL ON BEILIS CASE.

Pall Mall Gazette, London, Eng.

Across the gloomy Russian sky a flash of wit comes like a lightning-stroke to clear the air. A local paper, greatly daring, has said a true thing concerning the "ritual" trial at Kieff, and, like many another famous mot, it sets one wondering why it was not said before. The Kievlianin takes the indictment against the unfortunate Jew, Mendel Beilis, and turns it upon the prosecution with startling effect. It is Christian Russia which is plunging us back into the Middle Ages, and after breaking a poor artisan's spirit by two years in gaol, is pursuing him with a charge which nobody believes for a moment. The Press and the pulpits of Europe have protested against the iniquity, but seemingly in vain, as they have protested so many times before against absolutism and its methods. It has remained for this provincial paper to play Elijah and denounce the Ahab of persecution to its face. Of course, the result has been to impound the paper, but the truth is out, and the spirit of Tolstoy and Dostoievsky is alive. Whether it survives official action or not, the name of this courageous organ deserves to stand high on the roster of the world's Press. It has done more for Russian freedom in a day than all the bombs and the hugger-mugger of Nihilism, and it has done it by a few outspoken words.

Evening News, London, Eng.

Up to the present that part of the English public which has troubled to read the "evidence" in the Kieff ritual murder trial is wondering why the prisoner was arrested. Such testimony as has been offered up to the present on behalf of the prosecution appears to incriminate nobody except the police—an unfortunate example of the Russian method of bringing a prisoner to justice. This method appears to be to keep the accused in prison until everybody concerned is either dead or has forgotten the facts, as only then is it possible—short of absolute perjury—to obtain evidence favorable to the prosecution. This ritual murder story is a very old superstition. We find it enshrined in the tale of Hugh of Lincoln, but whether any Jew ever so far forgot his faith as to sacrifice a Gentile child is doubtful, to say the least of it. Certainly any such dark deed would have no more to do with Judaism than had the murder lately committed by a priest in New York to do with Christianity. The sad part of it is that those in Russia who could most effectively denounce anti-Semitic superstitions refrain from doing so—a reminder of the fact that Russia as a whole is apt to be a century or so behind the times.

IN DEFENSE OF THE JEWS.

The cause of the Roumanian Jews has been taken up by the semi-official Roumanian organ, the Adeverul. The paper states that there is no truth in the statement that the Jews exploit the Christians, as the Jews themselves are poor. In Roumania anti-Semitism is on the decrease, and the King himself has changed the anti-Semitic views he held in his younger days

THE JEWISH "IMMORTAL."

Indications are that the Jewish people will at last be represented among the "Immortals," Prof. Henry Bergson having been proposed for a seat in the French Academy. This will be a worthy tribute to the great philosopher, one of the most eminent figures in the world of intellect today. Prof. Bergson when elected will be the first Jew ever chosen to membership in the Academy.

EPISCOPALIANS REVISE GOOD FRIDAY PRAYER.

At the Episcopal Church convention held in New York City on Oct. 15, 1913, the Deputies approved a proposition to take out of the Good Friday prayer in the Episcopal service the mention of "Jews, heretics and infidels" as being in bad taste. The Board of Bishops, however, did not approve of the proposed change.

A NEW RESTRICTION.

At the request of the Russian Ministry the Senate has finally prohibited Jewish midwives, dentists, chemists and medical assistants to carry on their respective medical professions outside the Pale. Any departure from the order will be met by immediate expulsion.

The French Government has conferred the Cross of Officer of the Legion of Honor on Professor Cohn, of Columbia University, New York.

BY PROF. DR. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH

II.

People in general are prone to color the past with romantic hues. The isolation of the ghetto is generally thought to have been complete. A little careful reflection would show the error of this without a study of historical sources. A Jew had to make a living. He had to make his living by dealing with non-Jews. The latter did not help him to gain his livelihood out of a feeling of love for him. He had to work hard in order to obtain, economically speaking, a foothold in society. This compelled him to come into frequent and intimate contact with Christians.

Another proof that the isolation of the Jew could not have been so complete, is found in the smallness of most of the Jewish settlements. Take dear old Moravia, and my old Kehilla, Kanitz. With 600 Jewish people in a population of 3,000, it was already a middle class congregation. There were some with only twelve families. In Bohemia the Jews were still more scattered, and in southern Germany, as in Bavaria and Alsace, the Jews lived almost exclusively in villages, not divided from their Christian neighbors by physical boundary lines. This latter condition was strictly enforced in Moravia since 1727. This date brings home to us the lesson that laws were not so rigidly enforced in olden times, and even under a monarchial government. The church had insisted since early medieval times on the social separation between Jews and Christians. The Pope had enforced this principle in Frankfort in 1460, and had made it a law for the whole church in 1555. This, however, did not mean that the rule was always enforced. In many instances it was impossible. The Jewish settlements mostly owed their origin to the good will of a noble who by seignorial rights, could assign to Jews land under his jurisdiction. Occasionally such land was a house that he possessed in a certain village, and over which the local authorities had no control. At other times the settlement was so small in the beginning that a ghetto would have been impossible. Only in very few exceptional cases as in Rome, Prague and Frankfort a. M., was the ghetto surrounded by a—wall and closed with gates, so that the inhabitants actually lived in a prison, which they were not permitted to leave at night, nor on Sundays, Christian holidays, and special occasions, when either precaution on the part of the city authorities, who feared a mob attack, or a further desire to humiliate them by excluding them from some sight, as a coronation, dictated their seclusion. Our ghettos in little Moravian towns had neither walls nor gates. They were of comparatively recent creation, as already said. In the beginning of the eighteenth century, when the Jesuits had reached the height of their power, having succeeded in almost completely crushing Hussitism, it was the turn of the Jews. Some priest in Raussnitz claimed that the Jews had mocked at Christian ceremonies, and the result was that the government ordered that the law, demanding separation of Jews from Christians, must be strictly enforced.

This could be done with regard to habitation, but not with regard to personal contact between the two sections. The town of Raussnitz, which numbered about 1,000 Jews, could not afford to furnish to the Jews the means of earning a livelihood. Only a very few, and they were either the poorest or the richest, could afford to stay at home. The poor Jew was a Schochet, a teacher, a cobbler, a poor widow, who kept what, with a stretch of imagination, we might call a grocery, for the needs of the ghetto. The absence of walls and gates has already been noted, but even these could not form a complete bar. The ghetto of Venice was the oldest of its kind. It was closed with gates, and yet Leon Modena, a rabbi of the seventeenth century, tells us of his son-in-law, who was a teacher of music and dancing, and made his living by giving instruction in Christian families. Some Jewish toughs, who handled the stiletto as readily as the Ghristian members of the craft, he significantly called mules.

We have to consider, as the most important point, how Jews earned their livelihood. Most of them, of course, were traders. The local trade, naturally, was insignificant, though on Sundays, when the peasants from surrounding villages came to town, or during the fairs, Jahrmaerkte, which were held, four, and in some instances, even six times a year, there was local business. For the most part, however, the Jew had to go out from home to carry on his business. Generally speaking we might divide the Jewish merchants into two classes: peddlers, selling their goods or buying in villages, and vendors of goods at fairs. The peddler in villages, Dorfgeher, or as Moritz Oppenheim the painter calls it, "Dorfgaenger," started out on Monday morning with a pack of goods, usually dry goods, going from house to house in villages, and from village to village, until Friday when he returned to his home. It was surely not an easy way of gaining his living, to carry a pack weighing 100 to 150 pounds on his back, regardless of weather conditions, and besides it was not easy to make a sale because competition was very sharp, and cash rare.

These dry goods peddlers were already to some extent capitalists. Below them was a poorer class, called "Zukumenish" buyers. They went to the village to buy whatever could be found, cast off metal, chicken feathers, rabbit skins, small quantities of all kinds of produce, or they were brokers for the rich commission merchants, hide—wool, flax dealers, or whatever special product this section of the country would offer. In the latter instance the wholesalers, to whom they sold formed the aristocrats of the ghetto. They attended the big fairs at Leipsic, Breslau, Budapest, and if they dealt with any seller directly, it was only the great estate owner.

One could hardly classify the mechanics of the country. The law up to the end of the eighteenth century, did not allow the Jews to engage in any mechanical trade. The principle governing these restrictive laws was that the Jew must not engage in any business occupation, at which the Christians could make a living. Perhaps no instance will illustrate this selfish cruelty better than a letter which Frederick the Great, a liberal in religion, addressed in 1780 to his minister, von Hoym. In Silesia, as in all Slavic countries, the Jews were engaged in the distilling business as tenants of landed proprietors, and as their business required it on account of its connection with slop feeding, they were to some extent engaged in farming. Von Hoym proposed to allow this condition to continue, but the king scolded him for favoring the Jews, and said: "I have a different opinion. If the Jews are prohibited from engaging in any agricultural pursuit, and Christians shall take their places, it would be an advantage to the country, for we would have fewer Jews and more human beings." For the same reason restrictions existed on certain lines of mercantile activity. Some merchants, for instance, found that the Jews were inconvenient competitors in the hide business, and without much effort they obtained a prohibition for the Jews, restricting them to commerce in leather, but prohibiting raw hides. At another time complaints were made that kindling was too high for the poor, and an order was issued prohibiting the Jews from dealing in kindling and from buying any at the market before 10 a. m.

LUIGI LUZZATTI

A Portrait

The fact that the Academy of Sciences of Paris has named Professor Luigi Luzzatti as foreign member, in place of Gladstone, the former Prime Minister of England, evidences what the name of Luzzatti means abroad. But the fact that Luzzatti is a prophet who is honored by his own countrymen, who are of a fault-finding disposition, is of greater significance. When in the next few years new commercial treaties will have to be concluded between Italy and Austria-Hungary and the German Empire, then all parties of the Chamber of Deputies, the King and his Government, the aristocrats and the democrats, the Jews and the Christians will write in the one thought, that Luzzatti alone is the right man to conduct the negotiations. He need not fear any opposition as long as he lives. He is undoubtedly the first national economist, the greatest financier of the Kingdom and as a stateman he possesses a creative power which since Cavaur has only been attained by Minghetti and Giolitti.

Luzzatti was born on May 11, 1841, in the city of Venice (which then still belonged to Austria) and the wonderful charm and the lively commercial spirit of his home city mirror themselves in his nature. In the family of Luzzatti, which is still Jewish today, there is to be found a long line of prominent representatives of education and erudition. Luigi himself was an incomparable genius even in his youth. When he attended the gymnasium in Venice he perplexed his teachers by wandering away into the remotest realms of social sciences, he frightened his parents by his delving deeply into the endless problems of philosophy and religious history. At the age of twenty-two years he completed his law studies in Padua with distinction and a few months later he presented to the scientific world a prominent work: "The Spread of Credit and the Peoples Banks." This was a rich program for the development of the economic system of Italy and of—the author. His first work was of such ripeness that as Prime Minister, when he was seventy years old, he could refer to it and state how in the twenty-six different commercial treaties which he had negotiated for his country, he was mainly guided by the principles which he, as a youth, had embodied in his first book. The Austrian authorities disliked the views of the young jurist to such an extent that they threatened to institute court proceedings against him for treason on account of his proposition to establish aid funds; and nothing remained for Luzzatti to do but to flee with all the existing copies of his first work to Milan. In Lombardy, Luzzatti at once went to work to establish a great number of people's banks, through which new life flowed into the most miserable strata of the population. In the same way Luzzatti, when twenty-three years old, established the first consumers' societies.

At twenty-five years of age Luzzatti was ordinary professor of state law, one of the faculty of the University of Padua. In the first six months he lectured on the relation of the church to the state in the modern societies, and these lectures grew to a basic propaganda of freedom of conscience, which he published as his second work.

In various books of reference the statement is found that in 1867 Luzzatti represented the Italian Government as commissioner at the World's Exposition of Paris. This is a mistake. The savant visited the exposition as a private man, but on the shores of the Seine he started the first direct connection with the Italian government. In Paris he became acquainted with Marco Minghetti, the brilliant society man, who was as much at home all his life in the salons of London and Paris as in those of the Arno and the Tiber, the noble politician who was first co-worker of Cavaur and after the latter's death happily continued the life work of the creator of the united Italian states. Minghetti, the fine man of the world, who possessed a universal literary education, united with a proper political conviction, was so forcibly impressed by the knowledge of Luzzatti, that he tried hard two years later to get the professor as a helping force into the ministry of agriculture and when Luzzatti explained that his ambition prohibited him from accepting a subordinate position, Minghetti quickly appointed him as his assistant secretary of state. So the Jew Luzzatti became the substitute of the minister at the age of twenty-eight years, an age in which he could not have become a member of the Chamber of Deputies.

"The state is no anonymous mercantile association but a commonwealth illumined by the goodness of the Creator. . . . The state has duties to fulfill, if the working people are not to look upon it as upon a power forced upon them from without; duties of all kinds of social superintending and care-taking." With these thoughts and these words Luzzatti commenced his official activity in 1869 and as he always remained true to these principles and always acted accordingly, the richest fruits did not fail to grow for his country. Luzzatti is the statesman who was first in Europe to establish a department in the cabinet for the interest of labor, that which the Austrians have had only a few years: a Minister of Labor. The aim of this office was and is, to make the life of the hard-working people in every respect pleasanter or at least more bearable, to create cheap, more sanitary, light and airy dwelling, to advance every spiritual progress of the masses and to fight against alcoholism. This is Luzzatti's social politics. He led the public school to thrive safely, he had a great hygienic law passed which secures to the mass of the people the supply of healthy water, he created a law to govern animal pestilence and has issued orders which prohibit the torment of animals and among a dozen other important legal innovations in the social realm he finally brought about the great work of planting forests in Italy.

The highest point of his financial achievement is the conversion of the state debt which in 1906 amounted to eight milliards. The conversion of 3¾ per cent. brings annually to the budget a gain of 20 millions and it has helped the country to a condition of prosperity which Luzzatti alone foresaw. The King recognized this act by conferring upon Luzzatti the title of permanent minister of state.

Luzzatti also understood how to increase the tax income of the Kingdom by 30 millions annually and the people hardly notice the additional burden. So he could say of himself: "I am in possession of the secret of mild taxation, which is accepted calmly."

As Prime Minister he greatly extended the election privileges and his entire activity as statesman means a consequent system of liberalism. Liberty is to him the organic unassailable product of the life of the people, the freedom of action and the freedom of opposition. The union of the friends of progress in order to fight together for the highest possessions of the people, he declared to be the first and the last aim of the leader of parliament. "There is one aim which must unite all good spirits and urge them on to action above all the miserable petty party differences, this is the all-sided elevation of the people." So he said in one of his thoughtful speeches in parliament and at another time he said: "For a democracy which intends

LAYING OF THE CORNERSTONE OF THE LEO N. LEVI MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

A large gathering witnessed the laying of the cornerstone of the beautiful Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 2, 1913. The following program was rendered.

Invocation—Rabbi Louis Witt of Little Rock.

Anthem—M. Costa quartet.

Address—Chas. J. Haase, Memphis, Tenn.

Address—Gov. Geo. W. Hays.

Laying of the cornerstone.

Address—Emil Nathan, St. Louis.

Address—J. W. McClendon, mayor of Hot Springs.

Address—W. W. Waters, president of the Arkansas State Fair Association.

Address—Dan Daniels, Little Rock, chairman of the Building Committee.

Benediction—Rabbi A. B. Rhine, Hot Springs.

Beth Israel Lodge of Hot Springs entertained the visitors with automobile rides and a luncheon at the Arlington Hotel, in which one hundred and fifty persons participated. Mr. G. Strauss acted as toastmaster. After the luncheon the visitors were escorted in automobiles to the hospital site to witness the exercises. The chairman of the arrangements committee introduced Governor Hays as the guest of honor, who delivered the following stirring address:

I am glad to be with you today to testify both as a personal tribute and as your governor to the high standing of the Jewish citizens of our great state.

In every capacity of citizenship, in war and in peace, they have always loyally and ably responded to the call of Arkansas. The state is richer for their presence in it and by their participation in all its activities. In business, in the learned professions, in private life or in the public movements of the times, their influence is markedly felt, and usually for the cause of peace and uplift and a higher morality.

As law-abiding citizens their record is and always has been deservedly high. As teacher, preacher, lawyer, doctor or business man, their irresistible energy and ambition bring them reputably to the front in every community in which they have the sphere of their activity. In political life their influence has been effectively demonstrated, and the state and our country have been well and patriotically served, not only in the high class and honorable course of its Jewish public servants, but by the enthusiastic and devoted loyalty of its Jewish private citizens.

Have Used Opportunities.

The prophetic foresight of the founders of our country in throwing wide open the portals of this glorious land of liberty and opportunity to all the oppressed and weary-laden of the earth, and removing every ban of favoritism and prejudice, making this the home of free speech, individual and religious liberty, has been amply justified by the honorable record of the Jewish people who have made this their home and country.

In return for the right hand of fellowship that we have gladly extended to them, they have richly given us all the full fruits of their brilliant intelligence, their unceasing energy, their cordial friendliness and their splendid patriotism. In peace the country has profited by their suffrage and their public spirit, while in every war, from the sufferings of our Revolution, through the strife of our Civil War, and to the later Spanish War as well, the roll call of every regiment bore its full proportion of Jewish soldiery in a record of honor and bravery.

Driven from the parent land of their race, the Holy Land that first heard the teaching of the precepts of the true moral laws upon which are firmly based the foundation of every civilized religion and government of our day; ceaselessly and cruelly forced to roam from one land of oppression to the other: their weary, longing pilgrimage has brought them to our glorious land of liberty as to the shores of a new Jerusalem. We gladly welcome them to our common country, for honest observation has fully shown that in every land in which they have sojourned, in spite of the tyrannical oppression which they have suffered, their aims and their lives have proven them the best of citizens. Almost could they declare in the words of Thomas Paine: "The World is my country, to do good is my religion."

Benevolence a Jewish Characteristic.

In every land wherein the followers of Moses, that divinely gifted maker of God's highest moral laws, have sojourned, that country has been enriched and blessed by their large-hearted benevolence and good deeds. So characteristic is this that the charity of the Jew, not only for the unfortunate of his own faith, but for the weak and sick and suffering of all other sects and creeds, has become almost a world-wide axiom. Even in darkest Russia, with all its infamous record of centuries of unspeakable cruelty and oppression to the millions of your unfortunate brethren, the hand of sympathy and succor has not been withheld even from the ruthless enemy of the Jew in their hour of distress.

The hearts of the Jewish people are peculiarly responsive to the cry of the sorrowing ones. Even tradition tells us that in the remote days of the building of the temple, the workmen therein vowed among themselves that they would go to the relief of the suffering and the distressed, wherever found worthy. And in doing these good works, the Jew is acting in strict accord with the basic principle of his religion, which, itself, is the fountainhead of all our own Heaven-aspiring hopes. He does not forget the divine injunction, "Deal justly, love mercy and walk humbly before thy God."

Have Overcome Prejudice.

In the bright sunlight of this land of opportunity, God's chosen people are fast emerging from the shell of isolation and senseless prejudice that past ages of persecution and hatred had fastened around them. At last they stand upright in the strength and beauty of their own high manhood. Day by day they are adding to the sum of their worth and value to the citizenship of the country. In their glorious ideals and in their solid and practical achievements, they rank with the very best of America's sons. None are prouder of their heritage in this great country than is the Jewish citizen and none will better prove their true and loyal allegiance in days of stress and trial.

A Monument to the Race.

This splendid edifice, the foundation stone of which is now to be placed, is an eloquent proof of the generosity of your hearts and the greatness of your liberality. Built only by Jewish contributions, supervised only by Jewish endeavor, its doors are open to the suffering poor of every denomination. It is the "outward and visible sign" of your unwavering faith in the teaching of your ancient Prophet wherein he says, "Are we not all the children of one Father? Hath not one God created us all?"

Fittingly has it been named in the memory of a typical Jewish-American citizen, whose honorable private and public life was made still more noteworthy by his leadership in great movements of practical benevolence and active philanthropy. A man of forcefulness and deeds, of high-minded morality and self-forgetting charity, his death in the very high noon of his earthly usefulness was a loss to his country and mankind. But his spirit on this happy and notable day cannot but rejoice and be proud of this perpetual memorial that his blessed and useful life has not been in vain and that his memory will ever be cherished, not only by us of today, but by generations yet to come. Never will he be forgotten.

A Boon to Humanity.

The words of a grand old hymn tell men of every faith that "God shall wipe away all tears." You, by this splendid institution, are doing your part toward relieving and removing human sorrow and suffering as far as poor, feeble, finite hearts and hands can do. God's blessings are sure to richly requite you in this. The hearts of the suffering will be brightened by your generous deed. The hearts of your fellow-countrymen of every sect and faith will be softened and their minds broadened by this testimonial of your unlimited charity, of your own faith in the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. The state of Arkansas, and its citizens of this world-famous city are, each and all, grateful to you for this work of your hearts and hands, so greatly enlarging the scope of our efforts for the relief of suffering humanity. In the name of our great and proud state, I sincerely thank you for it and humbly ask God's choicest blessings for this institution and its donors. Arkansas thanks you for placing it within its borders. And I thank you for the personal honor of your invitation and the privilege of addressing you on this happy occasion.

Order's First National Hospital.

The Leo N. Levi Hospital is being built by the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and had its inception at a meeting of District Grand Lodge No. 7, in San Antonio, about 12 years ago. It is the first hospital built by the Order that is national and will be supported by the National Order. The building is a three-story, fireproof structure, modern throughout, according to the requirements of the United States government and will have a bath house in connection. The building will contain five wards, four of which will hold 12 cots or beds, while the other will have 10, giving it a capacity of 58. Everything will be free and all who cannot afford to pay for treatment in other hospitals will be given shelter and treatment absolutely free, regardless of religion. No one can pay for any treatment.

It will be maintained entirely by the Order at large and the individual districts and members of the Order who have pledged annual contributions for its maintenance.

In the days preceding the manufacture of goods on a large scale, the mechanics formed the most influential class of a city's population. With "the era of enlightenment" in the latter part of the eighteenth century, the conviction spread that the state had no right to complain of the pernicious business activity of the Jews, unless it gave them a greater freedom of economic activity. If petty trading, Schacher—derived from the Hebrew "Socher," merchant—was an exploitation of the population, and mechanic trades an honest living, then the Jews should be allowed to practice them. Amongst those rulers who honestly adopted such principles was the noble Joseph II., of Austria (1780-1790). The son of a brilliant, though bigoted mother, Maria Theresa (1740-1780), who openly stated that she hated the Jews like the plague, Joseph II. wished to raise the status of the Jews and therefore permitted them to become mechanics. The permission, however, was of limited value. All mechanical trades were organized in guilds. None could become a master, which meant to open a shop of his own and work with hired help, without being registered by the guild. The latter was autonomous, and could refuse such permission at will. No one could ever become a master without having served his time first as apprentice, and afterwards as assistant to a master. The master could not receive an apprentice in his shop, without registering him with the guild, which again might refuse such permission. It actually happened that the guild of tailors in Dresden, as late as 1837 refused to allow a master to indenture a Jewish boy as an apprentice. Under such .conditions, naturally, the number of Jewish mechanics was not very large, yet some of the more common trades like that of shoemakers, tailors and glaziers were represented. Exceptionally one would find a bookbinder, and an engraver. The latter occupation has especially an interesting history.

We had quite a number of shoemakers in our town. Some of them were mere cobblers, who buying up old shoes and slippers, patched them up and sold them at the market, where in the most primitive fashion they displayed their goods on the ground. It is hardly necessary to state that there were no millionaires amongst them. I suppose that they were beyond the jurisdiction of the guild, as they did not make new goods, and in all likelihood they had not gone through a regular apprenticeship. One man had a large shop, which may be regarded as a forerunner to the modern method of manufacturing. He produced ready made shoes for the market, visiting the fairs in the neighborhood. When one thinks of our present denunciation of sweat shops, all this agitation appears like a sensational exaggeration compared with the condition of working people in the days that I can still remember. Moshe Morganstern's shop was located in an alley (Gaessel). It was a dingy room with low ceiling, and the help slept in the same place, with all the odor of glue and bad tobacco, two beds being placed one on top of the other, like the berth in a steamship cabin.

A limitation of working hours was never thought of. They worked as long as there was work to be done, but in addition to Sunday, they took their Monday off. The blue Monday was a sacred institution. It was spent in drinking, and the wages of the previous week were spent before the work of the new week began. In good times Moshe employed as many as twenty hands. In his old age, however, he was a poor man, who working for the few customers that remained, barely eked out an existence. There was occasionally also a tailor, a locksmith and a carpenter. These had served their apprenticeship in Hungary, the blessed country of freedom for our people, where there was no restriction on trade, none on the number of marriages, and very few on the right of residence.

The right of marriage was the most coveted privilege. All throughout the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, we find these restrictions in western Europe. The guiding principle was that of old Pharoah, as still laid down in the Bavarian law on the Jews of June 10, 1813. The number of Jews must not be increased, but if possible decreased. The best way to enforce these restrictions was the Schutzbrief. No Jew could obtain a legal right of residence without such a document. Occasionally the governments tried to enforce the restriction of marriages by fixing the number of Jewish households legally permitted (Numerus Clausus). Frederick William I. of Prussia, had in 1730 decreed that no more than 100 Jewish families should be tolerated in Berlin. The principle was not carried out consistently, and Frederick the Great in the law of 1750, left it to the authorities in each individual instance to decide whether the Jew should be given the permission to marry or not, stipulating at the same time that only one son of each family should be permitted to marry. His contemporary Maria Theresa was more determined. In 1744 she ordered the expulsion of all the Jews from the kingdom of Bohemia, which included the provinces of Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia. After great efforts made by the Jews, and through the mediation of various powers, she repealed this edict, though her pride called this repeal merely a suspension. Yet the principle that the number of Jews must not be increased, remained. For the province of Moravia, 5.400 Jewish families were permitted, and each town had its assigned number. Kanitz had the privilege of housing 111 Jewish families, and when my father married, in 1846, his marriage license read that he was given the "Familienstelle" number so and so, vacated by the death of Solomon Deutsch, a distant relative. Those who were not fortunate enough to obtain this privilege, usually emigrated to Hungary, and by a wider application, the name of "Magranten" (emigrants) was given to those who married in spite of the law, and remained at home. This condition led to endless quarrels, and informations. It is so important a feature of the ghetto life previous to 1848, that it shall be treated in a special article.

to elevate the weak and the oppressed, without pulling down the chosen ones and the strong, there is no more beautiful and worthier sight than capital which is justified by labor, the labor which has gained freedom by knowing how to capitalize itself."

Luzzatti became Minister of Finance for the first time in 1891 and in the course of a decade he occupied not less than ten such different high positions. So it became possible for this ideal thinker to gaze deeply into real life, so he was destined to create that of which he dreamed in his youth: to shape the economic forces and to master them soberly.

Luigi Luzzatti's figure is tall and of classic beauty; from his deep black eyes beams an endless goodness and his gift to entertain his listeners is really enchanting. He is a human work of art chosen by nature and culture.

A JEWISH MAYOR FOR CZERNOWITZ.

The recent municipal elections in Czernowitz, the capital of Bukowina, resulted in the return of Dr. Weiselberger, as Mayor of the town. The newly elected Mayor is highly respected by the Jewish community there and his election caused much satisfaction to the Jews of the district.

THE SITUATION OF THE JEWS IN ROUMANIA

The situation is becoming more and more critical. A furious campaign has been commenced against the Jews. Adversaries are disapproving in advance of all concessions which might be made to the Jews. They declare they do oppose and will oppose everywhere all naturalization, even that of the mobilized Jewish soldiers. As for the solution of the Jewish problem itself they do not even wish to have it discussed.

The "Liga Culturala" is an important organization and has a very powerful influence on public opinion. It has published recently a manifesto which can be considered as a real declaration of war against the Jews in general and against the "Union of Native Jews" in particular. This league has decided to hold meetings and a special Congress with a view to exerting influence on the government and preventing all concessions relating to the naturalization of mobilized Jews. Its president has cynically declared in an interview that that is the nature of the action which they have in view. The campaign, still more accentuated, against the political organization of "The Union," is also being pushed and disturbances will become more violent. It is not at all unlikely that it will result in excesses. It is more than likely that the nationalist and anti-Semitic disturbances will degenerate into a pogrom in spite of the attitude taken by the "Liga Culturala."

As an evidence of existing feeling against the Jews mention might be made of the recent agitation in relation to the play "Manasse." The director of the National Theater thought it advisable to again place this play on the bill. He could not have done more to raise loud cries from all those anti-Semitically inclined, especially from the students; to represent in a theater subsidized by the State a masterpiece from the pen of a Jewish author—what a crime of high treason! The government, intimidated, ordered the production suppressed.

This anti-Jewish manifestation preceding so closely the entrance upon the scene of the "Liga Culturala" is very significant. It appears as a menace full of grave portent for the future. This League is very influential in the country and has as its real object the prevention by all means of the naturalizaton of the Jews, who participated in the recent military campaigns. Serious consequences are sure to follow and it is not impossible that a new era of animosity and persecution has commenced for the Jews in Roumania.

The "Union" sent the following letter to the "Liga Culturala:"

"To the President: As representatives of the political Organization of native Jews, we submit to the central committee of the League our refutation of the communication which the League published in the newspapers recently with relation to the Jewish question.

The Committee reproaches us for discussing the Jewish question in an aggressive tone; that we did so we now formally deny. No one can prove the Committee's affirmation. We do not understand moreover why the central committee of the League attaches so much importance to the tone of the communication, that being a secondary matter. You confuse violence with dignity. If it were a question of violence it would show itself in our activities and would give color to those of which we are not culpable. This discussion, however, evades the main issue and places the question on a false basis. On the other hand the Committee affirms that the methods employed by the Roumanians will be higher. We are fully prepared to prove to you that immediately after the organization a violent campaign of invectives going almost to the point of threats was commenced against us and against the Jewish population.

With relation to the Congress of the "Union of Native Israelites," which your committee represents as being an expression of our defiance, permit us to state that we have no other object but that of stating our claims, and of finding a means to carry on our efforts to clear up public opinion.

The native Jews, deprived of all their rights, pursued, submitted to a rule which places them as a class in the situation of vagabonds and foreigners, claim at least the right to be able to freely organize in order to discuss the problem which constitutes for them a vital question, and in order to seek to convince their Roumanian co-citizens of the justice of their cause. Does the "Liga Culturala," which has for its mission the attainment of liberty for all, believe that that liberty ought to be refused to the native Jew?

Further, your communication states that in view of the action taken by the central committee it is necessary for the League to examine into the question. That would be excellent if at the same time the communication did not definitely indicate what the opinion of the central committee on the Jewish question was. In reading this communication no one could have the slightest misconception of the ideas, sentiments and proposals of those at the head of the League. The manner in which it is conceived shows that the Committee intends most energetically to oppose any favorable plan which the government might provide as a solution of the Jewish problem.

We feel ourselves in duty bound, Mr. President, to address to you before the meeting of the League a publication which definitely states the point of view of the "Union of Native Israelites" in which the Jewish question is treated in detail. Perhaps we will succeed then in convincing some of the justice of our cause and of the necessity of settling for this country once for all the Jewish problem in accordance with our claims, which at the same time are backed up by the most sincerely patriotic sentiments.

If by means of your public communication or by interventions which such publications bring about, any one believes that the Jews are going to permit themselves to become intimidated and as a consequence to give up the fight, he is very much mistaken; we will not give up the opportunity we have gained whatever may happen. We will defend ourselves. It is our duty to do so. We are convinced that our cause is a just one, and that we are working in the interest of the whole country. Most certainly no one would wish to push the Jewish population to the extreme—a subjugated minority which is denied even the right of organizing and is obliged to defend itself by all available means.

NATIONAL FARM SCHOOL.

Beginning with this month, the Applications Committee of the National Farm School will receive applications for admission into the freshmen class next February.

The committee has found in recent years that many applicants who are deficient in schooling could coach up their work before entering the school if given sufficient time. The committee, therefore, is beginning to receive applications now, in order that worthy applicants who are physically fit and who, because they have been out of public school some time, can not answer the educational requirements at once, may have an opportunity of preparing themselves between now and the end of February.

The National Farm School gives to poor boys, between the ages of 16 and 20, who desire to make agriculture their life's calling, a complete three-year course in practical and scientific agriculture, free of all cost to them as to tuition, board, lodging, clothing, etc.

Applicants should address themselves to the Secretary of the National Farm School, 407 Mutual Life Building, Philadelphia.

JEWS RETALIATE ON CZAR.

Doctors Won't Treat Royal Heir Unless Race Is Aided.

The New York Tribune in its issue of Nov. 23, reports the following telegram from St. Petersburg:

The Czar has intrusted Kokovtzoff, the Russian Prime Minister, who is traveling for his health in Europe, to look for a specialist to bring back to Russia to treat the heir apparent, Grand Duke Alexis, who is suffering from an incurable spine and kidney disease.

It is understood here that while in France Kokovtzoff has been in conference with a French doctor, who, however, has refused to go to Russia because he is a Jew.

In answer to the Prime Minister's request this reply was made: "Telegraph his majesty I will come at once to Russia and give my time to the care of the heir apparent only if the Kieff trial is immediately stopped and Beiliss, my coreligionist, released without delay." Kokovtzoff refused.

While in Berlin he saw several leading kidney specialists, some of them prominent Jews. One asked the Czar to promise to repeal several anti-Jewish measures.

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE OF DISTRICT NO. 5.

The General Committee met at Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 24, 1913. President Weil called the meeting to order and telegrams were read from Brothers S. L. Rosenthal and Julius I. Peyser, expressing regret because of their inability to be present.

Those in attendance were: Lionel Weil, I. E. Marcuson, Harold S. Bloomberg, Milton Klein, Edwin L. Levy, George Solomon and Rabbi J. L. Meyerberg, District Deputy for North Carolina.

The Secretary gave a detailed report of the standing of the various lodges of the District. After all the facts were discussed it was decided that Columbia Lodge be dropped from the roll. The same action and attitude had been adopted toward Sinai Lodge of Sumter, S. C. However, though the Lodge practically does not exist, it was determined that one final effort be made to bring it into life, and therefore the matter of Sinai Lodge was left in the hands of the Secretary so that he might report conclusively concerning it before the next convention of the District Grand Lodge.

The situation in the District was then gone into, and as it was pointed out, that unlike practically all other Districts of the Order, there are only two or three large cities in this district, and the balance of the territory consists of smaller places with a fluctuating population, it was apparent that while new lodges might be created, none of these could be expected to be large in membership. In this connection the Secretary pointed out that the District might be strengthened if the State of Florida be added to its territory. As an ex-member and ex-President of District No. 7, he expressed the belief that if Florida were added to No. 5, it would not merely help District No. 5, but it would also be a help to District No. 7, since it is almost impossible by reason of the great expense and the long distance and time required, for District No. 7 to do anything with the eastern side of Florida. After some discussion it was decided that the Secretary be requested to communicate with District No. 7, and also with the Executive Committee of the Order to the end that Florida, exclusive perhaps of Pensacola, be detached from No. 7 and added to No. 5.

The letter of protest from Micah Lodge of Albany, Ga., concerning the action of Gate City Lodge in re-electing Leo M. Frank president of the Lodge after he had been convicted of murder, was taken up. The net result of the discussion was that the action of Gate City Lodge had been intended (and so it was stated by the representative of Gate City Lodge who was present), merely as an indication of the loyalty and confidence of the brethren in his innocence. The General Committee sympathized with this attitude and regretted only that the publicity given to the affair resulted in its being discussed throughout the country, carrying the report in such a manner that it appeared to be the whole Order of B'nai B'rith that was standing behind Leo M. Frank, and this would give the impression that the Jews of the country, as Jews, were taking up his cause, irrespective of the merits of the case. The General Committee regretted the impression that had gone out as a result of these reports.

At 1:30 the Committee adjourned for lunch, and reconvened at 3 p. m.

The statement was made by Brother Marcuson that Beaufort, S. C., had voluntarily expressed the desire for the establishment of a Lodge there.

Arrangements were then made that the various lodges of the District should be visited by the different members of the General Committee, and the President was to hold himself in reserve so as to go wherever and whenever his presence was necessary.

The question of the exchange of pulpits on the part of the various rabbis in the district was then carefully considered, and it was finally concluded that the congregations might, in some instances, resent the apparent interference of an outside organization in their affairs, and it was concluded that, instead of attempting to arrange the exchange of pulpits, the President of the Propaganda Committee should correspond with the various rabbis of the district and try to arrange a series of lectures to be given by them in the different places on some evening other than the Sabbath.

The Secretary was instructed to send B'nai B'rith buttons to all new lodges, and to write the old lodges requesting that as often as a candidate is initiated into the Order he be presented with a B'nai B'rith button.

The Secretary was also directed to try to make it a point to send out four times a year a list of suggested subjects for discussion at the meetings in the different lodges.

A formal resolution embodying the attitude of the Order in the Frank case was then prepared, and for the best interests of the Order and for the good of the brother himself, it was decided that no publicity should be given to this resolution unless by a two-thirds vote of the General Committee.

It was then arranged that a series of prizes be offered, one to the lodge under fifty in membership, a second to those under a hundred in membership, and then to those above a hundred in membership; giving to the lodge in each class which procured the largest percentage of membership for the current year, a prize of $25.00 cash, provided that the increase should be at least ten per cent.

Brothers Bloomberg and Levy stated that they had arranged for a one-day campaign in Richmond, whereby letters were to be sent to a certain number of the members of the lodge, requesting that each of them get at least one member on a particular day, assigning a person for him to see, and suggesting if he could do nothing with that particular person that he should turn him over to someone else.

It was suggested that the same plan might be tried in every other place with good results.

After arrangements were made for a Baltimore campaign, the committee adjourned.

B'NAI B'RITH ORPHANAGE AT ERIE, PA.

During the past two years District No. 3 has concentrated its efforts towards the establishment of an orphanage and home for friendless children at Erie, Pa. The ground for this institution, some 85 or 90 acres, was donated by the Jewish residents of Erie through the efforts of Erie Lodge No. 620, and the first building is now in process of erection. It is expected to have this building ready for dedication and occupancy about July next. Meanwhile temporary quarters have been secured, in which 19 orphans are being cared for. The Board of Directors jointly with the Grand Lodge officers are at work securing additional subscriptions to the building fund and hope to increase the fund by $35,000 during the coming year.

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE, DISTRICT NO. 10.

The session of the General Committee took place on Nov. 2, 1913, at Vienna, Austria, and was attended by all its members. From the president's report it appears that the brethren of the District contributed the sum of 50,000 crowns to the fire sufferers in Pressburg. A part of this sum was used for the immediate relief of the distress of the fire sufferers, while the greater part of it was added to the money received by the Chevra Kadisha of Vienna for the purpose of calling into life a lasting socio-political work. The plan is to build a large structure which will furnish to Jewish working men cheap dwellings. work rooms, etc.

The resolution to create an itinerary library, which was adopted at the last District convention, was carried into effect, and the use of the library was given to the Allianz Lodge in Budweis. In addition an appropriation was also made to defray the expenses of two new libraries. It was resolved that the presidents of the Lodges should give once a year a course of instruction for the enlightenment of the younger brethren, especially those who have been newly initiated.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF EINTRACHT LODGE, VIENNA.

On Oct. 14, 1913, Eintracht Lodge No. 562 of Vienna celebrated its 10th anniversary by a gala meeting, at which many candidates were initiated. On this occasion the Lodge donated 15,000 crowns to the building fund of the home which is soon to be erected to serve as a retreat for children and as a Toynbee-hall. On Oct. 18, a grand banquet was given, which was attended by all the members of Eintracht and Wien Lodges, and their united efforts succeeded in making the affair a great and glorious success, which brought joy to every heart. The first decade of the existence of Eintracht Lodge was indeed full of successful deeds and the Lodge hopes to continue the good work in the coming years.

THE LEO. M. FRANK CASE

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 3, 1913.

Editor B'nai B'rith News:—

You have probably read short accounts in the northern papers about the trial and conviction of Leo M. Frank, in this city, of the murder of a young girl named Mary Phagan. The case is of peculiar interest on account of Frank being a model young man, married, and head of the Atlanta Lodge, B'nai B'rith So great was the interest in the trial locally that an enterprising writer, evidently a reporter on one of the newspapers, has published a paper-covered book, entitled "The Frank Case," copy of which I am forwarding to you. This volume is being sold on the newstands and railroad trains throughout the state.

That the trial was an unfair one, and the conviction totally unwarranted by the evidence, can be readily seen from a casual reading of this book, which endeavors to give both sides, not always, however, accurately.

The crime was a mysterious one, and the police followed their usual line of laying the crime on the nearest person. Frank, who is the superintendent of the factory where the body was found, had paid off the little girl, and was the last reliable witness to have seen her alive.

Feeling ran high when the crime was discovered, and the solicitor-general of Fulton county, Dorsey, was accused (see page 40) of "employing detectives, not to work with open minds towards solving the mystery, but to seek only evidence against Frank." To show the bias of the prosecution, they shielded the most likely suspect (a negro who admitted, only after rigorous third-degree questioning, to having been in the factory on the day of the murder), from indictment at the hands of the grand jury. After getting the information that he was in the building, this book describes Conley's affidavits as follows: "The defense of Frank has declared that after the first day it was not a third-degree that the negro Conley went through, but a school, and the detectives, they say, were the instructors, putting the words in Conley's mouth."

Two notes were found near the dead body, which were the only clues to the murderer. This negro at first claimed he could not write, but after being cornered, admitted writing ONE of the notes "at Frank's dictation." So important are these notes, and the nature of their composition so evidently the work of a negro, that I give them in full:

Note No. 1.

"He said he would love me laid down play like the night witch did it but that long tall black negro did buy hisself."

Note No. 2.

"Mom that negro fire down here did that when i went to make water and he pushed me down a hole a long tall negro black that did it i wright while play with me."

To again quote from the book: "The general value of expert testimony is shown by an incident in the case. Jim Conley had never admitted writing but ONE of the notes, so the solicitor continued to have both of them examined by experts. Six so-called experts declared they were ready to go on the witness stand and swear that Frank, not Conley, had written BOTH notes. Finally, in desperation, Dorsey took both notes to New York, where one of the country's best-known experts declared that Conley wrote both notes. On his return, the solicitor forced the confession from the negro that he did write both notes."

This negro was the ONLY material witness against Frank, and his story was contradicted by the state's other witnesses time after time.

The feeling was so high, however, that a fair trial was impossible, and the jury brought in a verdict of "guilty." To quote again, from the last chapter in "the Frank trial":

"Fear lynching preceded verdict . . . Feeling was intense. Solicitor Dorsey had been applauded every time the crowd caught a glimpse of him Two thousand people remained in the vicinity of the court room all of Saturday It was with difficulty that the police handled the mass There was talk of violence in the event of an acquittal and the militia was kept in readiness to prevent any attempt at violence should such occur."

It was this mob-feeling, threatening alike to judge, jury and defendant which brought the verdict. No evidence was considered. The four weeks' trial was [illegible] by the jury in thirty-[illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] the argument for a new trial the trial judge, Roan, overruled motion for a new trial with these significant words: "Gentlemen, I have thought about this case more than any other I have ever tried. I AM NOT CERTAIN OF THIS MAN'S GUILT. With all the thought I have put on the case, I am not thoroughly convinced that Frank is guilty or innocent." He refused, however, to reverse the jury's action, and the case now goes to the Supreme Court with these words included in the bill of exceptions, which covers 102 points of error during the trial.

It is to be hoped that a fair trial, unaffected by mob spirit, can be given the defendant. He has the sympathy and confidence of the best people, both Jew and Gentile.

Yours truly,
Milton Klein.

IS FRANK GUILTY?

(Editorial in Montgomery Times).

Some people in Atlanta are agitating the question of erecting a monument to Mary Phagan, the little 14-year-old girl, who the superintendent of the pencil factory, where she worked, is charged with assaulting and murdering. We do not know for what reason these people are actuated in proposing a monument to the girl, unless it be that she gave her life for her honor. That is commendable in them, and is their affair, but it is far more important to do justice to the living than to commemorate the noble deeds of the dead.

Is Leo Frank, who is charged with the crime and has been convicted and sentenced to hang by a jury of his countrymen, guilty of the terrible crime? Many people have very grave doubts of his guilt. They have watched every development in the case, kept fully posted in every stage of the testimony and are convinced that it is somewhat of a persecution, and that Frank has not had a fair deal, and that he was convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of the negro, Conley, and in compliance with a false sentiment.

The Times printed a few days ago extracts from a sermon of Rev. A. R. Holderby, the pastor of the Moore Memorial Presbyterian church, in Atlanta, in which he expressed grave doubt of Frank's guilt, and said he had been the victim of circumstances and to an inordinate desire of the prosecution to put the crime on some one, and asked for him a square deal and a fair trial. Mr. Holderby is known and honored all over Alabama, where he lived so long, and his expressions are sure to have weight.

If Frank is guilty, he is a degenerate —a human brute, and no punishment is too bad for him. But we have from the first doubted his guilt. There was no motive or incentive to induce him to commit such an act. He is a Jew, and that race of people are not given to such heinous crimes; their men are rarely convicted of crime, and their women are noted for their virtue. He had a loving wife and a happy home, and has been the victim of unfortunate circumstances, and to a demand to run the crime to earth, and in answer thereto, Frank has been made to bear the brunt of it all.

The people of Atlanta owe it to themselves to see that this man gets a fair trial and a square deal. The solicitor and the police cannot afford to fix a crime of such magnitude upon an innocent man, and the people of the whole country demand that the case be reopened and a full, free and unprejudiced investigation into all the facts be made, and if Frank is guilty, let him be punished; but if he is not, let justice be done him. Those concerned in the case owe it to their own reputation to do this much in behalf of justice.

The strongest indorsement that Frank has is that the Jewish Order of B'nai B'rith has unanimously re-elected him president, and thus this powerful order expresses confidence in his innocence, and they will bend their energies to see that he has a fair trial. Although Frank is in the prison tower under sentence of death at the time of the elections in the order, this did not deter his associates from again placing the fortunes of the organization, which is charitable in purpose, in the hands of the young pencil factory superintendent. They have just come to realize the danger the man is in, and they will now come to his aid and will, as a matter of course, exert a great influence in his behalf.

EDITORIAL IN ATLANTA GEORGIAN.

Judge Roan's decision in the Frank case upon the motion for a new trial is the most amazing announcement ever made from the bench. Read it carefully and study it closely. Here it is:

"I have given this question long consideration. It has given me more concern than any other case I ever was in. And I want to say here that, ALTHOUGH I HEARD THE EVIDENCE AND THE ARGUMENTS DURING THOSE THIRTY DAYS, I DO NOT KNOW THIS MORNING WHETHER LEO FRANK IS INNOCENT OR GUILTY. But I was not the one to be convinced. THE JURY WAS CONVINCED, and I must approve their verdict and overrule the motion."

The words capitalized are ours. They are plain words. They mean just what they say—that Judge Roan, skilled in the law, skilled in the handling of criminal trials, with a long and honorable service for the people, does NOT KNOW EVEN NOW after hearing every word of the evidence, after hearing both Frank and Conley, after hearing every legal point raised, after deciding all questions—JUDGE ROAN DOES NOT KNOW EVEN NOW if the accused is guilty.

Could anything be more astounding than this?

If Judge Roan DOES NOT KNOW and the jury only APPEARS to know, what shall be said of the confusion in the minds of the great public who read only fragments of the evidence? How could the people form a just opinion, if Judge Roan could not do so?

This newspaper has always been and always will be firm in upholding the law, and standing out against all unfair opposition to our judges. We believe in our courts and in our judges. We believe our jury system should be so safeguarded in the future that it will be impossible for men to qualify as jurors who have, previous to their selection, uttered opinions either for or against the individual on trial.

It would seem that Judge Roan has written into the case an objection so large and overshadowing that the other 115 sink into insignificance and that the Supreme Court will order a new trial on Judge Roan's decision, if for no other reason.

Judge Roan, because of his ability and learning, because of his honesty and sincerity, seems to have made a new trial certain, and even those persons who believed in Frank's guilt up to the moment that Judge Roan said that he is still in doubt will agree that the famous case has been reopened, and that it never will be closed until Frank's innocence or guilt is clearly and positively established.

Judge Roan has put himself at the head of that group of men and women who are still in doubt, who ask only for fair play, and who will be only satisfied when every doubt is removed.

To the lay reader it would seem that if Judge Roan had sat in the jury box he would not have found a verdict of guilty. He could not honestly have done so.

Every accused person, under our law, must be given the benefit of the doubt. That is fair. That is justice as the American people understand it.

Bear in mind that this issue is larger than Frank personally.

This newspaper has no special interest in Frank the individual. If he is proven guilty, beyond doubt, let the law take its course promptly. The humblest person in our state will always receive fair treatment from us. We heartily favor the hanging of Frank—if he is guilty—if all doubt is removed.

But when Judge Roan, the trial judge, is in doubt, and boldly says so, is it not time to pause, before legal murder is added to the long list of other crimes in our state?

THE FRUIT OF RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE.

As sober second-thought in conscientious, reasonable thinking, is indulged by the person of unclouded mind, freed from all prejudice, the trial, conviction and sentence of Leo M. Frank, for the murder of Mary Phagan, recently concluded in Atlanta, appears to be a miserable farce in the interpretation and enforcement of law and a monstrous miscarriage of justice, as guaranteed by the constitution and institutions of this nation. There is not even the excuse of strong circumstantial evidence in the case. The only proven fact, as developed by the evidence, was that Mary Pragan was murdered in the pencil factory of which Frank was the superintendent. There was not evidence enough to justify the arrest of anyone, except, perhaps, some of the negro employes about the factory, the body having been found in the basement of the building, until after certain detectives, who were desirous of making a reputation for themselves, and were, in all probabilitity, working on a contingent basis of pay, got hold of the negro, Jim Conley, and made a star witness for the State out of him.

These detectives, of course, had access to Jim Conley at all times, because the negro was locked in jail under a charge of having committed, or being implicated in, this very same murder. Moreover, Frank did not have, and could not have, any communication with the negro. It was Jim Conley's evidence, only, that enabled the State to get the case to the jury. Who knows what influence was brought to bear on Jim Conley? Who knows what inducement, reward, hope was held out before the trembling negro while he, himself, faced the gallows? Who knows, when Jim Conley stood at the forks of the road, one prong which led to a gallows for Frank and the other prong to a gallows for himself, what enlightenment was given to him? And having the opportunity, would it be strange if a stronger man than Jim Conley had chosen the easier and safer way? Even as good and great a man as King David did a similar thing when he was interested in gratifying his lustful passion. Jim Conley may have attempted to obliterate the results of his lust by destroying his victim, and then succeeded in saving his own life by laying his crime at the door of Frank. Is his evidence sufficient, tried by all the tests of law and philosophy, to justify the State of Georgia in taking the life of Leo M. Frank? Does any Georgian, or any citizen of any other State, believe that any jury would have found Hoke Smith, or Clarke Howell, guilty of murder, in any degree, upon the same evidence, if they had denied guilt?

Then, why convict Frank? Inquiry of this proposition must make every freeman blush. The conclusion that the action of the jury was due, first, to the mob that hung about the court room and, with signs, cheers and various demonstrations made it clear to the jury that they demanded the conviction of Frank, and, second, to the further fact that Frank was a Jew, is irresistible.

In regard to the first proposition, every citizen ought to be concerned. The question, and the simple question, is: Are the courts subservient to, or superior to, the mob? The sickening cowardice of Pontius Pilate, a representative of the greatest government the world ever saw until our own, when the body of the unoffending Nazarine was demanded by the mob, ought to settle and determine the question with everyone worthy to be enrolled on manhood's scroll. In regard to the second, it must be humiliating to every normal Caucasian when he realizes that the scales of justice, established by him, through the guidance and help of a just God, to save him from his persecutors and tormentors, are turned by a mob, against a member of the race that worshipped God when his forbearers were wild and naked in the forest—against a member of the race that established law at Sinai—against a member of the race that first established a court under the oak at Mamre—against members of the race that gave to the world the great Book of Books, from Moses to the Messiah Himself—against a member of the race that has been persecuted, without reason, in every land, yet who has filled the treasuries of those lands with most of their jewels and values, merely because he was a member of that race—A Jew.

MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE.

(From Memphis News Scimitar.)

Now that the rivalry for sensationalism between the yellow journals of Atlanta has subsided, and people are given opportunity for reflection and cool judgment, the consensus of opinion is that the conviction of the man Frank, who was accused of murdering a young girl in a factory where she worked was a miscarriage of justice. The conviction was obtained upon the testimony of a negro, who is said to be an ex-convict, and at this distance it certainly is not at all convincing. Unfortunately racial prejudice entered largely into the case, and religious fanaticism followed closely upon its footsteps. The facts in the case were lost sight of, and an inflamed public sentiment instilled itself into the jury box and compelled the verdict.

JUSTICE OR CONVICTION.

From Southern Ruralist, Atlanta, Ga.

Two quite different legal battles, in widely separated parts of the country, have lately been forced upon the attention of the reading public. In one, a previously unknown, but respectable citizen has been on trial for his life. In the other, a man already notorious—chiefly as a freakish spendthrift—has been fighting for his personal liberty.

The only point of resemblance between the two cases is in the similarity of characteristics and tactics between the two prosecuting attorneys engaged.

In Georgia Solicitor Dorsey has prosecuted, convicted and prevented a new trial for Leo M. Frank, charged with murder. In New Hampshire Former District Attorney and now Special State's Attorney Jerome, of New York, has secured the extradition of Harry K. Thaw, charged with conspiracy in escaping from a New York asylum for the criminal insane. The only reason for the connection of Jerome with the proceedings before the Governor of New Hampshire is the fact of his known animosity to Thaw continued through two trials for murder and several legal attempts at liberation from the Matteawan asylum.

If any proof of this assertion, other than the long record of the Thaw case, were needed, it is furnished by the boast made by Jerome in a recent interview: 'I'll get him if it takes three years."

With the crimes and alleged criminals involved in these two cases we have no present concern. It is immaterial whether Thaw is sane or insane, whether he is a dastard murderer or the humble instrument of fate in ridding the world of a fiend incarnate. It is equally far from our purpose whether Frank is the innocent victim of circumstances or the hellish perpetrator of a diabolical crime.

In both cases the very foundation principles of common and statutory law have been violated. Justice has been ruthlessly trampled under foot for selfish aggrandizement and to satisfy personal vanity of two ostensible servants of the people. The most lamentable phase of the matter is that these two cases differ from many others chiefly in the prominence attained rather than in degree of culpability.

There is a growing tendency among public prosecuting officers to forget that fundamental principle of our criminal procedure: a man is innocent until proved guilty by a jury of his peers. In theory the public prosecutor represents the people as an instrument of justice.

Today not justice, but conviction is the sole object sought. Personal popularity, professional reputation—with a view to political preferment or future fees from private practice—outweigh all consideration of justice and even sworn respect for the law itself.

Dorsey shows contempt for the law by issuing subpoenas contrary to law that he may secure questionable evidence under false representation. He resorts to illegal imprisonment that a witness may be coerced—through threats and intimidation—to create evidence and sign affidavits worded to suit his purposes. His reward comes when a newspaper published by a corporation of which his law partner is president announces: "Dorsey has won his spurs." He constantly asks questions not allowed by the judge—relating solely to excluded evidence—with the apparent persistent purpose of poisoning the minds of the jury.

In argument he indulges in insinuation, inuendo and personal opinions unsupported by any evidence whatever, while the mob listening through the windows applauds.

Jerome fights through two long drawn out trials and spends hundreds of thousands of dollars to prove Thaw to be sane and therefore punishable for the crime of murder. He fails, and Thaw goes to the state asylum for criminal insane. Then the prosecutor turns about. Through two different legal efforts at liberty, by means of establishing the fact of restored sanity, he insists that the man he and his experts strove to convict as sane is really insane and should not be liberated.

Finally Thaw escapes and Jerome—no longer official prosecutor—becomes private prosecutor. He hies to Canada and insists that the insane man be deported as an undesirable resident. Thaw is given a free ride over the line into New Hampshire. Jerome follows and again flops. The trip has cured Thaw's insanity and Jerome demands his surrender as a sane man upon a requisition from the Governor of New York. The requisition is made for a fugitive from justice on the plea that the escape was a conspiracy and conspiracy is a crime.

The grand jury of the county where the alleged crime occurred declined to adopt this view and refused to indict. Then the persecutor goes to his own county and secures an indictment on the theory that the alleged conspiracy started there because the auto in which Thaw escaped came from there.

Here again neither the law nor the merits of the case at present concerns us. The conduct of the official administrators of the law is the issue.

If Thaw was legally insane he could not commit a crime, and therefore could not be legally extradited for a crime. If sane, he could not be legally recommitted to an asylum for the insane. Where do these two facts leave Mr. Jerome?

Some of us remember when a Governor of New York refused to honor the requisition of a Governor of South Carolina for a notorious fugitive from justice on the plea that politics were behind the indictment. The Governor of New York is in poor position to insist upon the inviolable nature of his requisition upon another Governor.

Justice does not mean merely mental fairness and correct interpretation of the law. It means that facts, not opinions, shall rule. It means that actual evidence, uninfluenced by promise, by coercion or by official authority shall be considered. It means that the public prosecutor performs as great a public service when he aids in establishing innocence as when he secures conviction. Above all things, it means that personal aggrandizement by means of questionable methods of securing convictions for crime is the most culpable, most harmful and most cowardly form of official malfeasance.

A STRANGE RULING.

(From Memphis Commercial Appeal.)

In overruling the motion for a new trial in the Frank case in Atlanta, Ga., it is stated that the judge, Mr. Roan, made the following announcement from the bench:

"I have given this question long consideration. It has given me more concern that any other case I ever was in. And I want to say here that, although I heard the evidence and the arguments during those thirty days, I do not know this morning whether Leo Frank is innocent or guilty. But I was not the one to be convinced. The jury was convinced, and I must approve their verdict and overrule the motion."

Frank had been convicted of murder. The verdict was returned by a jury of twelve men. Motion was made for a new trial, and after arguments were in, the statement quoted is said to have been made by the court.

This statement of the judge we submit to lawyers skilled in matters of criminal procedure in the belief that they, from the legal point of view, will agree that the judge should have ordered a new trial.

We think that lawyers hold to the principle that in a motion for a new trial the court becomes, as it were, a juror, and unless he is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, he must grant a new trial.

If a judge sustains a verdict rendered by a jury, he then becomes equal to the jury as a supporter of that verdict. If the judge, then, is a supporter of a verdict, he is in an illogical position if he does not know whether the accused is innocent or guilty, or that the verdict is right or wrong.

If the evidence is not sufficient to let his mind rest easily on the accuracy of the guilt verdict, then he is in a bad way in sustaining it.

Looking at this statement by the judge from the logical point of view of the layman, an analysis of it is interesting.

"I do not know this morning whether Leo Frank is innocent or guilty," says the judge.

In the everyday affairs of life, when we do not know that a man is bad, we must presume that the man is good. The presumption of a man's goodness of character goes with him everywhere.

If, after hearing all the evidence, this judge does not know, then he is in a state of doubt. If he is in a state of doubt, he is uncertain. If he is uncertain, his mind is fixed on nothing, and if his mind is fixed on nothing, his mind is incapable of acting in any orderly manner.

If the judge, in overruling the motion for a new trial, did not know whether the man was guilty or not guilty, his act was similar to that of an infant or an insane person, because he did a thing without a reasonable cause.

In this case it does seem that it was the duty of the judge, failing to be convinced one way or the other, to declare the trial no trial, because so far as his mind was concerned it was no trial, for it settled nothing in his mind.

In the last sentence of his statement the judge says: "But I was not the one to be convinced. The jury was convinced and I must approve their verdict and overrule the motion." The judge, then, apparently bases his act upon the act of the jury. He then should not have permitted the lawyers to consume time in arguing for a new trial.

In effect he states that the jury's verdict was a finality with him, regardless of what he thought or didn't think. Therefore, he should have saved the attorneys for both sides the labor of preparing briefs for and against a rehearing.

THE JEW!

(John A. Sleicher in Leslie's, October 23, 1913.)

A Jewish boy came to this country fifty years ago, with little in his purse, but a boundless ambition in his heart. He had determination, courage and physical strength. He was honest and trustworthy. He had been taught by virtuous parents, and he brought their benedictions with him when he landed, a stranger in a strange land.

Beginning as a humble errand boy in a shop, he rose to a place behind the counter and speedily to the ownership of a little establishment. Small it was, but it was the day of opportunity and he made the most of his.

Fifty years have passed. The monument to his zeal and integrity is a magnificent business block, one of the largest of its kind on the most fashionable thoroughfare of trade in the greatest city of the land. Here the little Jewish boy reached the culmination of his aspirations.

His goal has been success. He achieved it beyond his wildest dreams. Wealth poured in upon him in a ceaseless and increasing stream. He devoted much of it to the care and comfort of an army of employes. He became fascinated with the love of art. For a bit of porcelain $1,000 was a common price, $10,000 for a rare vase and $250,000 for a beautiful painting. Thus he enjoyed the fruits of his labor.

The surging crowd on the city's royal highway on a week-day morning saw, with surprise, every iron shutter on the great building of the merchant prince drawn to the sidewalk. The rich display of priceless goods in the show windows was hidden from sight. Upon the door the passing throng eargerly read the little white placard: "Closed on account of death of the proprietor."

Fifty million dollars in fifty years—a million a year! Shall we begrudge it to the earner? Shall we denounce him for his success? Shall we spurn his money as "tainted"? Shall we revile the Jew for his riches?

The immigrant boy became a merchant prince, a lover of mankind and a generous dispenser of help for the needy. It is not a tale of one great city in our favored land. It is an oft-told tale in many American cities and of many a noble-minded Jew.

This is a land of opportunity for all. Let envy rest!

INSTITUTION OF BRADFORD LODGE AT BRADFORD, PA.

Impressive services marked the institution of Bradford Lodge, No. 745, of Bradford, Pa., on Nov. 16, 1913, with a charter membership of 70. The initiation of candidates, installation of officers and the institution of the lodge occurred in the afternoon at the Progress Club. In the evening a banquet was served at the Hotel Holley in honor of the newly installed officers and the out-of-town guests, which was followed by a mass meeting at the Temple Beth Zion. At the conclusion of a musical program of various numbers, addresses were delivered by Dr. B. S. Pollak of Jersey City, President of the District Grand Lodge; Rabbi M. C. Currick of Erie. Pa.; and Brother Isidor Sobel of Erie, Past Grand President of District No. 3, who spoke on the progress of the Order throughout its existence and on the plans it has outlined for the future. Short talks were also given by various visiting members. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and the remainder of the evening was spent in a social way.

MEETING OF GENERAL COMMITTEE OF DISTRICT GRAND LODGE NO. 8, GERMANY.

A meeting of the General Committee of District No. 8 was held at Berlin, Germany, on Saturday evening, Oct. 18, 1913.

The President called the attention of the Committee to the death of Brother Alexander Cerf of Erfurt, and paid a tribute to his memory. He further reported the receipt from District Grand Lodge No. 6, Chicago, of resolutions in memory of deceased Brothers Siegmund Bergel and David Wolff; he also announced the receipt of a bequest of deceased Brother Hammerschmidt of Luebeck amounting to 2,000 marks for the work of the Ladies' Auxiliaries of the B'nai B'rith lodges.

It was further announced that the members of the Executive Committee of the European District Grand Lodges will hold a conference in Berlin on Dec. 28, 1913, and that on the previous evening a joint committee representing the General Committees of District Grand Lodges Nos. 8 and 10 will also convene in Berlin.

The question as to the time of opening the Grand Lodge session was then taken up for discussion and it was resolved that the sessions should begin at 7 o'clock in the evening on Saturday, Nov. 22, 1913; whereupon a special nominating committee was appointed to submit candidates for the various offices to be filled at the convention.

The subject of enlarging the work of Jewish nurses was discussed and it was unanimously resolved that the institution of Jewish nurses should not only be continued, but enlaregd in its sphere of activity and that the home for mothers should be maintained.

It was further resolved that the question of mixed marriages among members of the Order, which was proposed to be submitted to the convention, be withdrawn for the present.

The sessions were continued on Sunday morning, and the first subject taken up was the finances of the District. It was resolved that the finance committee together with the treasurer assume the entire control of all financial matters.

The proposition submitted that lodges be relieved from the payment of the per capita tax to the Grand Lodge for such members as are unable to pay their obligations was referred to the Grand Lodge.

Appropriation was made for religious instruction in the smaller Jewish congregations.

It was thereupon resolved that the proposition submitted by President Timendorfer that Grand Lodges should be entitled to elect more than two vice-presidents, that the secretary of the Grand Lodge may be elected from members of the Order who are not past presidents, and that Grand Lodges should be empowered to elect any member of the Order, irrespective of the fact whether or not he is a past president, to membership in the Grand Lodge was ordered submitted to the Constitution Grand Lodge of the Order to be held in San Francisco in the year 1915.

The suggestion that the perpetual membership in vogue in some of the lodges, whereby a member may pay a stipulated amount into the treasury of the lodge, the interest of which amount to cover the annual dues of such member be discontinued, was not adopted.

The proposition to create a B'nai B'rith Day to be observed by all the lodges on the same day was referred to the Grand Lodge.

The most important business before the committee was the subject of creating an emergency fund, to consist of an annual contribution of one mark per member in each lodge. After an extensive debate, participated in by nearly all those present, it was resolved that an emergency fund be created. It was further resolved to recommend that the manner of collecting this fund be left to the discretion of the individual lodges of the District.

The care of the transient Jewish poor was given attention, and it was resolved that the work be continued, and a suitable appropriation was made for this purpose.

The question of admitting women to membership in the lodges was, after debate, ordered referred to the Grand Lodge.

After adoption of a resolution of thanks to the President of the District for services rendered by him, the meeting adjourned.

THE JEWS IN AMERICA—IN THE PROFESSIONS

Address by Mr. Hugo Sonnenschein at a Dinner Given by the Central B'nai B'rith Council, Chicago, October 20, 1913

I trust it will not seem to come with ill grace if the few remarks which I shall make this evening do not fall strictly within the lines indicated by the subject, "The Jews in America—In the Professions."

I take it that a recital or cataloguing of the names of American Jews risen to glory and splendor in the spheres of learned professions would be not only gratuitous but would subserve no substantial purpose. It were gratuitous because it is one of the common facts of every day observation that the American Jews in proportion to their members have more uniformly and more preeminently attained distinction in the scholarship tests of the universities and colleges in the domain of law and medicine, of engineering, of pedagogy, and of the other learned professions than have their neighbors loyal to other faiths or attached to other creeds. And the fact is not at all surprising but rather the logical result of an attitude towards learning centuries old and a discipline of adversity whose extent is also measured in the mile posts of the centuries. The Jews from prophetic days down through medieval times and up to the very present have placed high value upon learning and have crowned him who possessed it with a diadem equal in beauty and richness with that which by right of birth in ancient days graced the brow of him who was lifted into the priesthood or elevated to the high station of King. And coupled with this natural and normal passion of learning, characteristic of the Jews at all times, there came into being another factor effective in the development of keen minds.

Adversity, persecution and discrimination, cruel and pitiless as they were and visited upon the Jews for decades and centuries and even today rampant and regnant in certain parts of Southeastern Europe, accursed as they were in their heavy load of sorrow and suffering, of stunted and deformed bodies, of misery and of tears, created a patrimony of golden treasure for the modern Jews—for under that terrible pressure of persecution, of discrimination of vocation, and of restriction to certain Districts, only he could survive whose mind quickened and stimulated to abnormal activity, could devise new avenues of escape from the oppressor and new sources of livelihood. And that persecution which denied to the Jew the common pleasures, ambitions and joys of life drove him to the refuge of the family circle and the sanctuary of the faith and the learning of his fathers; against the hostile onslaught of the world who shut the door of a ghetto hut, but within that hut he found the trinity of family love, of religious faith and of deep learning to strengthen and inspire him. Upon that trinity of love, faith and learning he founded his life and the gates of hell could not prevail against him.

So the fact so well known, of the superiority of the American Jews in the professions has an easily discoverable historical basis,—but it is well for us, the American Jews, so apt in our assumed enlightenment to take credit unto ourselves for all our achievements, to remember that not alone such moral strength as is ours but also the keenness of mind, the quickness of wit, the sublety of reasoning and the power of research is part of our historical heritage, bequeathed to us by those generations of moral heroes whose bodies stunted and deformed within the confines of ghetto walls rose titanic in strength of mind and in keenness of intellect. But whatever the cause it were gratuitous to detail the names of those American Jews who have become famous in the professions. Call the roll of those in high positions at the Bench, and at the Bar, in Hospital and in Laboratories, in University Halls and in Engineering Camps, and the names of American Jews would leap into the foreground. But not only were it gratuitous to thus recite a list of names. Outside of trenchant and signal refutation of the claims of ignorant anti-semites, that the American Jews are mere money grubbers and industrial parasites, by demonstrating by a recital of the American Jews famous in the professions, that the Jews in every department of professional endeavor are [illegible] their share in bringing about a [illegible] and better civilization, it would serve no good purpose to enumerate in detail their success; rather it would bear the suspicion of a boast and would smack a little of that vain gloryism which so often crops out in after-dinner speeches at Jewish gatherings, but which surely ought not to pass the lips of members of an Order like the B'nai B'rith, whose watchword is work and not reward, service and not praise.

So with your indulgence we will consider for a moment another, and perhaps a strained interpretation of the subject "The American Jews in the Professions," regarding the term "profession" in the sense of a creed of social and civic ideals. What has the Jew contributed and what can he, by reason of his historical development, contribute to America's profession of her own destiny, to the creating and activizing of those social and civic ideals upon which and in accordance with which her destiny shall be wrought out? It seems to me that in the growing discussion considering the place of the Jew in American life we shall ultimately face the question, does the Jew contribute to or detract from the highest ideals of American life, and this question cannot be successfully met wholly by the proof that the American Jews are successful business men; that they are leaders in the professions or even that they are charitable as a whole. In men of any other creed it would be enough that they succeeded in the very things that American Christians succeed in and in which they strive to succeed. But for the Jews, strange and inconsistent as it may be, while the Gentile world declaims against us as of a lower civilization and standard of ethics than our Christian neighbors, they exact from us a higher quality of ethical conduct and a deeper sense of moral responsibility than they possess. Do you doubt this? Have you read the opening chapters of a recent series of articles in McClure's magazine, a magazine as widely read as any monthly publication in the United States? The opening article was headed "The Invasion of America by the Jews" and to the author's mind it was an industrial invasion. It was the coming of an industrial army against the forces of whose commercial shrewdness and cunning, against whose penurious saving and indefatigable industry, native Americans and Northern and Western Europeans alike would go down in defeat. He summed up in a way the glib indictment which the average American, whether induced by envy, whether smarting under commercial defeat or a victim to mere superficial subservance, has in mind, and which rises to malicious expression in article and in cartoon, in the pages of such a magazine as "Life." They praise our cunning, our thrift and our shrewdness; they speak with great admiration of the marvel of men rising from a shoe string capital in a few years to the heads of great industrial organizations, dominating and controlling a whole domain of commerce and in "The Rise of David Levinsky," the title to a series of articles following the introductory article we shall have the story of a Jew who, by reason of the characteristics above referred to, rose from direst poverty to the possession of great wealth and to leadership in a gigantic industry. And yet beneath all the flowers of their praise one hears the cold serpent's hiss and in their exaggeration of our commercial efficiency and our industrial superiority one reads the insinuating charges, "Yes you are successful and you become wealthy, but there is no conscience controlling your business and your industrial power is not under the consecration of social ethics. You are an army of industrial invasion whose Captains urge you on with the promise of financial reward, an army to whom victory means the reaping of profits and whose Gods are the Gods of the golden dollars." We shall soon hear them openly make the charge, "Yea, you are keen of mind and gifted with industrial power, you lead in our business and our professions, but what do you contribute to our National ideals, what do you add to the richness of our spiritual power?"

I for one welcome the challenge. I agree that in a great composite Nation like ours where are fused and amalgamated the sons of every soil and clime and the children of widely diversified civilizations, traditions and standards, the only test of fitness is not that written in the figures displayed upon the ledgers of cold commercial success (though I submit in all fairness that if the record of commercial and intellectual superiority which is ours could be claimed for the credit of any other people, the Irish, the French, or the Italians, that America would wax enthusiastic over their coming here to add their strength to our Nation). But I do agree that the social ideals, the standards of right and wrong, the conception of duty to fellowmen, and to the State, the attitude toward the responsibility of the individual for the condition of those surrounding him, are fundamental and imperative considerations in determining the contribution of any group of men toward that composite ideals or body of ideals which we style the American Nation. But I take the position that if this consideration is to have high regard then the contribution of the American Jew toward the fundamental ideals of America far outweighs his contribution to its industrial power or its standards of professional excellence, and if the potential contribution of the Jew to American ideals were activized the American Jew would, of all Americans, constitute the highest type of American.

For what are those ideals which in the last analysis constitute the best and most hopeful accents of American life? They are to be found in the growing recognition that social responsibility and social service are the first letters in the alphabet of an ethical life, they are to be found in the new sense of the responsibility of the individual to the community; they are to be discovered in the conception that wealth and power are yoked to social responsibility and are to be made instruments of social blessing, in the new sense of inter-dependence of man to man, of the obligation of the individual to his past and his duty to the present and to the future society; the glory of the destiny of America is that here, not under the sway of socialism or under some vague utopian plan, but under organized government in a society which shall encourage the stimulus of individual reward for individual effort there shall be developed in ever wider measure social righteousness, and social justice and a broadening and deepening of the humanity of all citizens of whatever rank and in whatever station. These ideals are exemplified in the new social legislation, in the factory laws, in the tenement house laws, and in the workmen's compensation act; they are basic to the social centers and the settlement houses, to the Fresh Air Camps, and the Working Girls' Rest Rooms; they rise to personal expression in the splendid character of a Jane Addams, a Mary McDowell, a Minnie Low, a Julius Rosenwald, and in every other man and woman who with skilled hands and loving heart is laboring to make life here and now sweeter and its contents fuller, and to make men rise more and more to the full dignity of their humanity. Who will deny that these are the ideals basic to what is best and noblest in American life today?

Are they Christian ideals? They are certainly not—they make man and not God the center of their efforts,—their passion is to make life richer and fuller and not to impoverish it,—their mission is to conquer and not to submit to evil,—their kingdom is of this earth and not of a vague kingdom to come in clouds above, —their hope is to make of this world here and now a kingdom of heaven through love and through co-operation among men on earth. The Christians may be pardoned for denominating these ideals, the new gospel of social salvation, but they are familiar to us Jews just because we are Jews. They are the old ideals of Israel's ancient prophets, those men aflame with the passion for righteousness and aglow with a fervor for social justice. They are un-Christian ideals, but they are sound Orthodox ancient Jewish ideals. Not the sermon on the Mount and not the world renunciation reported of him who died on the cross, but the love of man and mankind, the passion for social justice and righteousness which made radiant the hills of Palestine are the true inspiration for the highest American idealism. If America shall go on to its destiny it shall be under the consecration of Jewish and not Christian ideals. Amos when he cried out "take away from me the sound of your songs and I would not hear the music of your viols, but let judgment run like water and righteousness like a mighty stream" could have written the watchword for those who strive today for the attainment of American ideals, and if America shall learn that her matchless wealth and power must be geared to the wheels of the common uplift of all humanity through work, through struggle, and through co-operation it is from the lips of an Amos, a Micah, and an Isaiah that the truth shall become hers; and as in the early days of the Republic, the Puritan fathers shaped her destiny in accordance with Old Testament theocracy so in the days of America's full strength the guiding ethical consecration shall come from Israel and Israel's prophets.

Do we say this in a boasting spirit? God forfend! We say it first because self-respect demands that we refute finally and conclusively the charge that we contribute nothing save industrial and professional efficiency to American life. We say it further because devotion to the memory of our fathers and to historical truth demands that we demonstrate to the world that our ancestors in the struggle of centuries held aloft and saved from extinction a torch whose radiant light is still potent to guide the uphill struggle of the world, and we say it moreover because we American Jews need to be reminded again that we have a historical mission and historical destiny. These ideals can best be exemplified by those whose fathers for generations and generations cherished them and bequeathed them to us, their descendants, as the richest historical heritage of spiritual power that the world has ever known; and finally we must sound the warning lest we Jews through indifference to our faith, through ignorance of our literature, our philosophy and our ethics shall no longer become the standard bearers of these ideals to the end that in the days when all of America's thinking public shall openly and loyally avow their devotion to these Jewish ideals there shall be heralded as Christian because forsooth the Jews themselves no longer know the treasures that are theirs.

So my friends not in a boasting spirit, but with a deep sense of the historical responsibility and destiny of the Jew, shall we, of the B'nai B'rith, more deeply resolve to strengthen the pillars of the Synagogue and to uphold the hand of the teachers in Israel; to make our Judaism more intense and vital in our lives; to spread from one end of our land to the other, wherever Jews shall dwell, the knowledge of their Judaism and the sense of the high mission to which all Jews are called. Let us in America but live up to the potentialities of our own Judaism, let us drink deep of the waters of life made ours through our Prophets, our teachers and our philosophers. let us be at home again in the spirit of the faith of our fathers and we can say to America, "Not as a curse, but as a blessing do we come to your shores. We bring you commercial power, yes, we bring you keenness of mind and superiority in professional achievement; yes, we increase your wealth and your power, but we also bring to you those ideals of social justice and social righteousness, that love of man and mankind and that spirit of endeavor to improve the conditions of man here on earth which shall give to the Nation the inspiration and the power to achieve its destiny of erecting on this Western Continent a true Temple of Humanity pillared on justice and arched with righteousness, a Temple where man shall labor not for self alone, but find in the true service of self, the service of all men, a Temple flooded with the melody of a glad song of hope, and opportunity whose echo shall be found in the hearts of all of the sons of men."

Sir: Mr. Sobel is mistaken, when he attributes the introduction of the Kol Nidre to the desire to satisfy the conscientious Jews of Spain who had been compelled to adopt Christianity, and wished to make a declaration beforehand that, should they be compelled in order to save their lives to profess Christianity, their vows should not be binding. The Inquisition in Spain was established 1480, and the forced baptisms due to mob attacks began with the persecution started by Ferdinand Martinez in 1391, while Kol Nidre is already found in the ritualistic books of 9. cent., as anyone can find out, who reads the article on "Kol Nidre" in Jewish Encyclopedia, VII, 540.

Respectfully yours,
G. Deutsch.

SPION KOP

(Spy Hill)

By Theo Behr

I dropped into the club one night, and found several members gathered around discussing the fighting abilities and pluck of various nations. The topic of conversation had turned to the British-Boer War; a War in which all nations had been represented. My opinion being asked I related the following true story:

Isaac Rose, as we shall call him, though that is not his name, first saw the light of day in a small English village. His parents were respectable hardworking English Jews and the father made a fair living in the rag trade. Isaac had a fair schooling and was about 25 years of age when the war broke out between England and the Boers. His father had tried in vain to interest him in the rag trade, but the boy did not take kindly to the sorting and grading of rags and had spent most of his time studying Chemistry. This action had often caused disputes, as his father felt that the boy should learn the rag trade and someday take charge of the business.

In due time the news of the impending war peeped into the little village and Isaac lent a willing ear to the call for volunteers. The idea of seeing a new country, a new people, and the chance to fight for his country appealed to him. Coupled with these facts the constant strife at home was very unpleasant and summing it all up he decided he would enlist.

He duly took leave of his family and went by the first available train to London. He did not mean to lose any time, now that his mind was made up. Shortly after his arrival in the Metropolis he accosted a color sergeant for information. The sergeant was busy enlisting recruits so he lost no time in answering questions, but took Isaac and enlisted him in his regiment—the Seaforth Highlanders.

At the time of his enlistment it did not occur to Rose that his position was a curious one. He had joined a famous Scottish Regiment, a regiment with famous traditions and he found that every man, except himself, was Scotch to the backbone. There he was, a Jew in kilts, and many a time he had this fact impressed upon him by his fellow soldiers.

Matters were being rushed by the British War Office and the Seaforth Highlanders, together with many other regiments left for Southampton, where they boarded the Troopship for Cape Town.

During the voyage, which took about 3 weeks, Rose got a better knowledge of the men with whom he had to eat, sleep and fight. Most of the soldiers ignored him, and those that did think it worth while to talk to the new recruit, sneered at the fact that he was a Jew. He took all such remarks goodnaturedly but the taunt he could not forgive was the one often spoken in his hearing—"That a Jew could only be a Coward." He knew well that such a statement was untrue, unfounded and a base calumny against a splendid race, even though the Jewish Race was not a race of Warriors. He had come into contact with the Captain of the regiment once or twice. His attention had been drawn to the Captain at the time of his enlistment. Captain Ronald MacDonald was almost a perfect specimen of manhood, a direct descendant of the famous Fighting MacDonalds, a clan that bred fearless fighting leaders, and it was no wonder that Rose had been attracted by the man. Nothing untoward occured and soon the Troopship dropped anchor in sight of Cape Town.

General Buller, the Officer Commanding in South Africa, was directing operations in the interior of the country. He had called for all possible re-inforcements, and a large number of regiments were rushed to the front, including the Seaforth Highlanders.

General Buller had taken up a position on the veldt (plains or prairie) at the base of a huge mountain known to the Boers as Spion Kop, so called as the mountain commanded a splendid view of the surrounding country and was an excellent position to be held. (The word Spion, meaning Spy in English).

The Boers fully realized the importance of the mountain and so did General Buller. At the summit the Boers had a large force, well posted and they meant to repel Buller at any cost. The British General had gathered a huge fighting force at the base and meant to make every effort to drive the Boers from their vantage point. Owing to the position of the Boers the mountain could not be assailed in daylight, as the Boer sharpshooters would have the British at their mercy; so a night attack was agreed upon. The desired opportunity was not long in coming. One of those sudden South African storms arose and General Buller decided to attack that night. The storm was at its height, the wind tore over the veldt, moaning and shrieking, rain came down in torrents, vivid lightning flashes lit up the mountain sides and the boom of the thunder seemed to foreshadow the battle to come.

The order to advance was given shortly after 11 p. m. and as the men fell into line, many realized that on this night they would give their lives for their country.

The Boers were safely entrenched at the top. They knew the British were below them and not only had the terrible task of scaling the mountain sides but they had to contend with the sweeping rifle fire which the Boers kept up. Huge boulders made climbing difficult, and woe betide the poor soldier that stood in the way of the stones that were loosened and rolled down the hill as the soldiers advanced.

The battle had been raging for about two hours, the British had made headway, but the loss had been great and it was seen that the odds were too great. Not only did the raking fire of the Boers account for many lives, but they commenced loosening the huge boulders and sent them crashing down through the British lines. Rose had been in the thick of the fight. At first he was nervous. The din of the battle and smell of gunpowder was something new to the raw recruit, but he gradually recovered his composure and kept up a steady fire. During a particularly vivid flash he perceived the Captain was close at his side, leaning against a huge boulder, and at the same moment the clear notes of the bugles sounding the retreat rang out. The Captain had noticed the Jewish soldier and shouted to him "Well it's been a bad night's work Rose" to which Rose replied "Yes Sir, I suppose we may as well turn back." He did not receive any reply and thought the Captain had not heard him.

He was wet, tired and footsore so he turned around and started down the mountain side. The Boers were well aware that the British had become disheartened but they maintained their rifle fire during the retreat. Rose did not like the idea of turning his back on the enemy, not only because he regretted the defeat but the idea of a stray bullet finding a place in his back gave him an odd feeling.

As he picked his way down he suddenly remembered the Captain and wondered what had become of the Officer. He had not replied to his remark nor had he noticed any sign of the Captain returning to camp. He stopped and thought hard. Why had he lost track of the Captain? He could not be far away and yet no sound of anyone else descending could be heard. The more he thought of the matter the less he liked it. Suppose the Captain had tripped up and hurt himself or more probable, he may have been hit. It seemed awful to Rose that anyone should lie wounded or hurt on the mountain. Thoughts surged through his brain,—good thoughts and bad thoughts. He wanted to get back to the camp, where he would find a welcome, food, warmth, shelter. He needed these things badly. The Captain may have found an easier way down and was now in camp. Then with a rush came the remembrance that the soldiers said "A Jew could only be a Coward." Was it true? Suppose the Captain was wounded lying on the wet ground. No man could live through such a night. No, he could not go down until he had made sure, so back he turned and re-traced his steps. He shouted from time to time but the only reply was the "swish swish" of the rain and an occasional crack of a rifle. After he had gone up a short way he decided he was somewhere in the vicinity where he had last seen the Captain. He commenced searching the ground, trusting to the lightning flashes to see. It was difficult work, the loose stones caused him to trip and the darkness hid everything. His search was unsuccessful and he moved slightly over to the right. He found himself against a large boulder, which seemed familiar. Then he recollected, it was the same boulder that the Captain had been standing against. He braced himself against it and as he bent down to obtain a foothold, he heard a slight moan. He stood still and listened. Again he heard the moan as if someone were in pain. Hastily laying aside his rifle he bent down to find out where it came from but nothing could be seen in that darkness. He, thereupon, got down on all fours and felt his way around the boulder. Suddenly his hand touched a body and feeling his way carefully over it he felt the straps across the chest, which he recognized were worn only by an officer. Something told him it was the Captain and he immediately picked the body up and slung it across his shoulder. The body was a heavy weight but Rose did not care. He had only one thought now, and that was to reach the camp safely with his burden.

* * * * * * * * * *

How that terrible tramp down those awful mountain sides with his burden ended he could never tell, but after recovering consciousness, they told him that he had staggered into camp in the grey dawn. Blood covered his tunic; it had run out from a terrible wound in the Captain's chest,—such a wound as only a Dum Dum Bullet (The Boers cut off the lead top of the bullet, scratched a cross thereon and these bullets made terrible wounds, especially when they encountered bone) can make. He had grasped the Captain's straps with both hands and they had forcibly to loosen his grip from them.

* * * * * * * * * *

I stopped talking for a moment. "Well" said one young fellow, very impatiently, "surely that is not all, what happened afterwards." "No" I replied, "It is not all. The best is to be told." They made Rose a Sergeant in the Seaforth Highlanders and he was accorded the highest honor a British soldier can attain or hope to attain. He was awarded the Victoria Cross, the medal for brave soldiers. And Captain Ronald MacDonald recovered from his wounds and never forgot that he owed his life to the man of whom the soldiers had said "Because he is a Jew, he can only be a coward."

ANTI-JEWISH RIOT IN BUCHAREST.

Recent dispatches contain the news of a riot instigated by the anti-Semites against the Jews of Bucharest. As a protest against the intention of the government to accord equal rights to the 15,000 Jewish soldiers who took part in the recent war, the anti-Semites held a large meeting in the Roumanian capital, where addresses of protest were made inciting further hatred of the Jews. Although the police were prepared for a possible outbreak, the mob was so excited that they could not be checked. In their rage they murdered a small Christian boy, whom they took for a Jew. Then they went to the Jewish quarters and attacked several Jewish houses, including the home of Dr. Stern, the representative of the Jewish community of Bucharest.

JEWS IN THE BALKANS.

An inquiry was sent to Sir Edward Grey, Secretary of Foreign Affairs of England, in reference to the question of the rights of religious minorities in the Balkans under the Treaty of Berlin. In reply Sir Edward Grey declares "that the Articles of the Treaty of Berlin are in no way abrogated by the territorial changes in the Near East and remain as binding as they have been hitherto as regards all territory covered by those Articles at the time when the Treaty was signed.

His Majesty's Government will consult with the other Powers as to the policy of affirming in some way the provisions of the treaty of Berlin for the protection of the Jews and other liberties of minorities in the territory referred to, when the question of giving formal recognition by the Powers to the recent territorial changes in the Balkan Peninsula is raised.

FOURTEEN JEWISH SENATORS IN ITALY.

The King of Italy has appointed Dr. Bellom Pescarolo and Signor Gabriele Pincherle, Senators of the kingdom. The first named is Professor at the University of Turin, and chief physician at the St. Giovanni Hospital in that city; the latter is President of a section of the Council of State. There are now no less than fourteen Jewish Senators in Italy.

SERVIA WANTS JEWISH SETTLERS.

In view of the fact that the territory acquired by Servia as the result of the war is but sparsely populated, the Servian Government has made it known to the Jewish community in Belgrade that it will gladly welcome a large settlement of Jews in that territory. The Government accordingly invites proposals to this end.

THE COST OF CONVERTING THE JEW.

The annual report of the Society for the Propagation of Christianity Among the Jews, with headquarters at Berlin, has just been issued.

"Last year," says the report, "nine Jews and six Jewesses were converted in Germany. This is a result of the special work of the Jewish missions, which have made it possible for these Jews to become Christians. We know that these conversions have been the fulfilment of the heart's desire of these people."

The report classifies the result of its efforts as to occupation of the new converts, showing one tailor, one waiter, two merchants, one painter, one director of a factory, one general director, one engineer, and one medical doctor. The report further states that more than 10,000 copies of the society's organ, "The Messenger of the Messiah," were printed and distributed free of charge to the public, that the disbursements of the society for the year amounted to over 40,000 marks, which would show that the cost of every one of those converted is almost 4,500 marks, a big outlay for such a return.

A CANON'S TRIBUTE TO JEWISH MOTHERS.

Canon J. Simpson, of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, in a recent sermon on behalf of the Mothers' Day Fund, paid a high tribute to Jewish mothers for the care they bestowed on their children. Comparing the offspring of Jewish and Gentile families in the same social environment, he said that the Jewish children presented a normal average, whereas the Gentile children were miserably below that average. Jewish mothers seemed to have the instinct of proper child nourishment, but this was too frequently absent among their Gentile neighbors.

JEWISH CHAUTAUQUA SOCIETY.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the Jewish Chautauqua Society, enthusiastic reports were presented, showing the scope and usefulness of the Society.

Extensive preparations are being made for the Twentieth Anniversary Assembly in Philadelphia, as it was deemed fitting that it should be held in the city where it had its origin. The date of the Assembly will be December 25th to 31st.

The Program Committee presented its report. A number of days will be devoted to Correspondence School work which will be presided over by the Dean of the Faculty, Dr. William Rosenau. Illustrative lessons for teachers will be conducted by the members of the Faculty. The entire Faculty of the Correspondence School will be present during this Assembly.

The list of representatives from the various Congregations already received bespeaks a very wide spread and large attendance. Arrangements are in charge of the Secretary, who will be pleased to give full information as to hotel rates and general outline of the program.

The new register for 1914 will soon be ready and can be had upon application to the Home Office, 1400 Jefferson Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE JEWISH RACE.

In the course of an address delivered by Rev. Dr. Saleeby at Keighley, England, on the subject of "Purity in Relation to Race Generation," he referred to the Jews as follows:

While great nations had sprung into existence, boasted their greatness, and gone down into the night of time, there had been always one people, constantly oppressed and constantly harassed, who had persisted throughout the centuries and were at this moment more powerful than they had ever been. And that great Jewish race which had somehow survived had not survived because of a great navy or army or because they had had any of the material or economic implements of greatness, but they had had the advantage of a quality of parenthood which had, he supposed, never been equaled or paralleled in the known history of mankind—a quality which they directly derived from the original father of national hygiene, Moses, the founder of preventive medicine, and which had been maintained from his time to ours.

ASSAULTS ON POLISH JEWS.

Serious assaults on Jews have been committed in the streets of Warsaw. In other places the recruits broke the windows of Jewish houses, and demanded money from the inhabitants. The Jews have asked for protection.

THE VERDICT.

That Mendel Beilis would be acquitted was by no means a foregone conclusion. In any other country, we should have been spared the spectacle of a man imprisoned and charged with murder when there was not even the pretext of evidence. But in Russia, what outrages on justice are not committed daily when the question turns upon the Jew? We knew that mighty forces of darkness were behind the viperous Viper and his venomous onslaught on Jew and Judaism. What with the Double-Headed Eagle and the Novoye Vremya and the Nobility and the Real Russians and the other nameless powers poisoning the mind of the people and inciting the worst prejudices of the masses, where was there room for an honest conduct of the case? Yet, Mendel Beilis has been set free, acquitted by a jury of ignorant peasants. We are ready to acclaim their incorruptibility. We shall be the last to deny them the credit which is their due. There would indeed have been no "but," had there not been tacked on to the verdict of acquittal so far as the accused individual was concerned a covert avowal that the murdered boy came to his death as a victim of ritual murder. Here is the unpleasant "but." Beilis is acquitted, but the charge of ritual murder still stands.

The result is a slap on the face of twentieth century civilization. By indicting the Jew, official Russia has indicted itself of barbarism and medievalism. As if there could be a doubt that Russia was still steeped in medievalism. We have little concern with the reputation of Muscovy. Nor are we for a moment in the dark as to the real motive of the second part of the verdict. The ritual murder charge is a sop to the reactionaries, just as the acquittal of Beilis was a necessity in view of the attitude of the world outside Russia. Yea, in Russia itself a substantial body of the people has been on the side of truth and decency and fair play. Beilis is free. But the Jews of Russia are exposed to grave dangers. The court at Kiev has supplied the enemies of the Jew with the fictitious formula of ritual murder. At any day we may expect the charge to be revived. A Christian child disappears and the cry is raised, The Jews have kidnapped him. A murdered body is found, and the nefarious criminal will have covered up his traces by casting it upon Jewish premises. Thus they did in the middle ages. And to make appearances convincing, the number of wounds will be made to correspond to those of the Kiev lad, and a jury will be found ready to condemn the Jewish people. The reactionaries have forged a weapon with which to cow the Jew to submission, to reduce Jewry in Russia to a helotism lasting in its pernicious effects. To what straits a tottering scheme of government has come the trial at Kiev abundantly illustrates. A straight acquittal of the individual and of the race would have been the signal to a revolution which might have swept away the throne. So the throne has saved itself by throwing over the Jew to the bestial instincts of the masses.

Notwithstanding all this we have reason to rejoice. What Russia thinks of Judaism is a matter of concern only because of the practical injury which must ensue for the Russian Jew. Russia is incapable of tarnishing the fair name of the Jew. It is she, and not Judaism that stands condemned in the eyes of the world. The world long ago formed its opinion of the baselessness of the charge. The world, the thinking, scientific, professional, literary world, voiced its protests in clear tones. The acquittal of Beilis has therefore put the seal on the world's verdict. There is no "but" to that verdict. It was well that the Jew raised his voice in solemn protest. It was well that the unbiased world joined him in these protestations. The protest meetings had their effect. Public opinion is a formidable weapon which not even the Czar of all the Russias can ignore. The imbecile on the throne and his desperate minions were forced to call a halt to their nefarious designs. They were compelled to let an innocent man return to the bosom of his family. Let the Real Russians erect a monument to their "martyred lad." It will be a monument erected to their own shame. England linked to Russia in an unholy alliance for political reasons unshackled itself unofficially but nevertheless effectively. Well might the government circles stay away and be silent; the English people through its high ecclesiastics, Catholic and Protestant, through its members of parliament and its men of affairs, through its professional and literary lights, spoke out freely, unrestrainedly, in the manly fashion of English gentlemen. And so did America. The petition to the Czar may still rest in the Washington embassy; but it had the signatures of Cardinal Farley and David Greer and a host of bishops and clergymen. The primate of Hungary spoke for truth and justice to the Jew.

The lie is an ancient one. But it still lingers in Darkest Russia. It is alas fraught with evil incalculable. We never believed that we should have another Megillah to recite, Megillat Beilis. But when the story of Kiev is told our children, the hopeful part of it will not have to be left out—that part of it which shows the enlightened world crying out with the Jew for justice to the Jew.

FREE SCIENCE.

Science, "Wissenschaft," should be free. No one would think of prescribing to the astronomer or the physicist or the chemist what the results of their investigations should be. We want at their hands the facts and not the fancies, the naked truth. But in the realms of the spirit, when the object is literature and history, preconceived notions are frequently allowed to guide the investigator's course. The search after truth should be international and intercofessional. Yet, history is made subservient to the policies of the hour, and the facts are distorted to suit a misguided patriotism. And when we approach the study of sacred history, we find that the denominational interest obtrudes itself vitiating honest results. It is not always the religious bias either that is prejudicial to the progress of untrammeled investigation. Irreligion or indifference to religion colors the writings of many would-be scholars. Sometimes conviction is sacrificed to fashion. For there is the tyranny of fashion even in science. Few men have the courage to think for themselves. There is a theory which is at present the dominant one, and the independent investigator who dares to run counter to its decrees may lose caste. So while in theory the scholar is free, in practice he is often just the reverse.

It would seem that the condition of things being what it is, one set of chains is just as good or just as bad as another. Then at least we should abide by the prejudices which are of our own making. There have been Jewish scholars who resolutely refused to recognize a distinct Jewish science. Science is universal, said they; there is a science about the Jew, about his religion, about his philosophy, about his literature, but it ought not to be Jewish. Theoretically, it might be conducted by Jew or non-Jew, provided he had the information. But theory and practice do not square. The truth of the matter is that in the first place the non-Jew cannot be expected to have an interest in, not to say a love for, the knowledge of things Jewish. If he have an interest, it will be Christian. And here immediately is the Christian notion that Judaism means, and has significance only as, a stage leading up to Christianity which is its consummation and fulfilment. Judaism is after all a sort of inferior religion. It had the potentialities of the higher, but the Jew refused to accept the fruition of his best labors when in the end of time it came. We have no quarrel with the Christian who constructs a theory of the Jewish Scriptures to suit his conception of the Christian Bible and the Christian religion. But we must insist that we Jews ought to be allowed to place our own value upon the products of our genius. Given a Christian point of view, the Jewish angle of vision has an equal right to assert itself.

The Bible has come to be considered as the domain of the Christian scholar. We are told again and again that modern Jews have done little to elucidate the Bible. That is not quite true. If it is remembered what the numerical proportion of Jewish institutions of learning is to Christian universities with their faculties of theology, the literary output of Jewish scholars will receive its due measurement and appraisal. Naturally the Jewish investigator turns to many fields in which the Christian cannot have that immediate interest which the Jew has. But even in Bible work, the Jewish contribution in modern times has been by no means as small as people generally believe. There is a multiplicity of Bible commentaries written by Christians, and a very small number composed by Jews. But when it is a question of quality, the Jewish commentary is superior. The up-to-date commentator among the Christians does a deal of copying and very little original work. The Jew for the most part has blazed new paths. Malbim, Luzzatto, Ehrlich will outweigh a host of Christian expositors. And when the Christian scholar goes out of his sphere and dabbles in post-Biblical Jewish literature, he commits blunders worthy of a schoolboy—that were but half of the damage—but, what is more detrimental, he brings, with notable exceptions, to his subject a prejudice which is as unscientific as it is shameful. In the studies of some of these would-be students of Jewish literature among the German scholars for example the weapons are forged which in the hands of the Black Hundreds assume the form of ritual murder charges and what follows therefrom. We have in mind a definite case. A Heidelberg professor has published a commentary on the tractate of the Mishnah dealing with the Passover. In the introduction there is a covert insinuation that in Biblical times, at the beginning of the barley harvest, that is at the time of the Passover festival, it was the custom to execute criminals and that such execution partook of the nature of a sacrifice! All of which, of course is an invention pure and simple.

We Jews will have to take care of our own literature. We have no secrets to conceal. We will gladly open up the treasures of our lore. But we will bring to the study of our own an interest and love which only he who is nurtured in Judaism can bring to the subject. Scientific publications are placed on the market and exposed to the criticism of the competent. That will suffice as a guarantee that we shall pursue in our investigations the rigid rules of scholarly work. Beyond that we have a right to our own estimate as to what is and what is not of value. Valuation is a subjective process. We cannot and must not surrender this Jewish valuation of things Jewish. We want to be fair to our opponents, and expect a fair deal at their hands. It is high time that the isolated Jewish students should band together. The Catholics have their own scientific congresses, though as individuals they participate in general scientific conventions. Let the Jews do likewise. Let us meet as often as we can, in local assemblies and in international conventions. Let us give to the world a visible presentation of our aggregate endeavor. Let us be servants of truth, but for the sake of truth let us vindicate Judaism and the Jew. Let us be free and Jewish at the same time. Let there be a free Jewish scholarship.

A CORRECTION.

In the November issue of the News it was stated that Col. Cutler is the only Jew who has ever been elected to the command of a militia regiment in the United States. That statement is incorrect. Our attention has been called to one other, and the returns are not all in yet; there may be more.

In commenting upon the American Jewish Year Book for 5674, the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society feels aggrieved, as expressed in the Jewish Immigration Bulletin of October, 1913, that it is not mentioned in the list of Jewish national organizations in the United States, stating that an organization having 2,600 affiliated societies with a membership close upon 800,000 in 46 states of the Union deserves mention even in the Jewish Year Book. Now if all this is true there is small wonder that it was not mentioned in the Jewish Year Book, as adequate mention of it would have left room for nothing else.

BULLETIN No. 1

A fire insurance policy issued to a young business man of Detroit by a Pittsburgh Fire Insurance company was canceled for the reason, as stated in a letter to the sub-agent of the company by the Detroit General Agent, that it was the policy of the company "to place no Jew business" without first obtaining the consent of the company. The Executive Committee took the matter up with the home office of the company. The company denied the authority of the agent to make such a statement and concluded their communication as follows:

"We are taking action which will preclude the possibility of the recurrence of any such annoying incident both to yourself and to this company. Please understand that we regret the imposition and admit that there were no extenuating circumstances."

ST. LOUIS.

In a select residence district of the city a large sign was placed on an apartment house—"To Rent. No Jews Wanted." The Executive Committee directed a communication to the proprietor, stating that we had no desire to dictate whom she should accept as tenants, but that we must insist upon the obnoxious sign being removed forthwith. The sign was removed.

CHICAGO.

A moving picture film entitled "The Last Bet" was exhibited, picturing a Jew as a thief. A protest was made by the Committee to the owner, who apologized and promised that in the future no picture, which could in any way injure the sensibilities of the Jewish patrons, would be shown in any of his five moving picture theaters.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Minneapolis Tribune published on the outside page a series of objectionable articles, entitled "Personal Mit Business. A Humorous Series of Characteristic Letters From Simon Mutterzolb to His Son." Protest was made to the editor by the resident member of the Committee and, under date of October 24, the editor writes that he will discontinue the publication of the series. These articles are sent out by the Star Company, which owns the copyright, to newspapers all over the country, and negotiations are now pending with that company for a discontinuation of such articles.

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

An article, entitled "Deadbeats and Bad Debts," appeared in the October 11 issue. The article contained offensive matter. On October 22 a letter was written to the editor calling attention to the objectionable parts of the article and requesting a more careful editorial scrutiny. The editor replies, under date of November 11, as follows:

"It is contrary to the policy of the Saturday Evening Post ever to discriminate against any particular race or any particular class. * * * We regret extremely that we should have published anything that could give rise to a misapprehension of our attitude in this matter."

KANSAS CITY.

On October 16 there appeared in a Kansas City newspaper an advertisement entitled "A Way Out of the Currency Problem." The article contained scurrilous references to people of the Jewish faith. The advertisement also stated that another article of a similar nature would appear the following Saturday. Protests were filed with the editor by the resident members of the Committee. Under date of October 18, the editor replied, apologizing for his carelessness in permitting the advertisement to appear in his paper and stating that the second article offered for the following Saturday would not be published.

MOBILE.

A local newspaper on November 7 published an account of the arrest of a young man in Pensacola, Florida, for a serious crime. The article described him as a Jew. The matter was called to the attention of the editor by the Mobile member of the Committee, and on November 12 the editor replied, apologizing for the article and promising to prevent the repetition of such offensive description thereafter.

KANSAS CITY.

A Kansas City newspaer on October 30 printed an article casting ridcule upon the Jewish people, their holidays and their customs. The matter was taken up with the editor, who expressed his deep regret and chagrin that the article had appeared. He stated that their reportorial staff had been instructed, and an order to that effct had been posted, that the word "Jew" should not be improperly used and that this particular article had been written by some reporter either in ignorance or in disregard of this rule. He stated further that he would do his best to prevent a repetition of the offense.

MOBILE.

A Mobile theater billed an act entitled "A Baxter Street Jew," containing an offensive caricature. The resident member of the Committee writes as follows:

"I promptly saw the manager of the theater, who was courteous and apologetic, and at my request took me behind the scenes to have a talk with the actor in question. I had the actor carefully read the Anti-Defamation League Principles and then further explained to him our attitude. He promptly expressed his desire not to offend the Jewish or any other people with his acts and promised to take the act off. He kept his promise."

NORTHWESTERN AGRICULTURIST.

An article entitled "Fur Firms and Fur Firms," containing an improper use of the word "Jew," was published in the November issue. A protest was made to the editor, and, under date of November 20, he replies as follows:

"Your letter of the 19th instant came to the writer as a great surprise and mortification. We fully agree with your attitude in regard to protesting against the use of the term 'Jew' in a slighting way. There is no occasion for it whatever, and on behalf of The Northwestern Agriculturist we apologize for the slip which got into our columns. We assure you that we have taken the matter up with our assistant and given orders that nothing of the kind shall ever again be permitted in the columns of The Northwestern Agriculturist."

KANSAS CITY.

PENDING CASES.

Reports of important cases in which action is still pending will be made in the next bulletin.

LEGISLATIVE ACTIVITIES.

Among the bills which we are drafting and which will be introduced in the various legislatures this winter are the following:

(a) A bill designed to prevent hotels and summer resorts from advertising that they do not desire Jewish patronage. It is not the purpose or desire of the League in advocating the passage of this bill to compel the reception of the Jew where he is not wanted. But the widespread advertisement, through railroad folders, steamship announcements, magazines, printed circulars, etc., to the effect that the hotel or summer resort does not desire Jewish patronage frequently creates erroneous impressions. It is for this reason only that we are endeavoring to make public advertisement of discrimination unlawful.

ATTENTION!

The Managing Board of the Executive Committee meets at least once each week to carefully consider the cases which come to its notice. Hasty action by well-meaning co-religionists is apt to injuriously affect the work of the League. We therefore request all those who know of any case which requires attention to communicate with the resident member of the Executive Committee in their respective cities, or send their complaint direct to the main office of the League, 721 First National Bank Bldg., Chicago, Ill

DAVID S. HIRSHBERG.

AN APPRECIATION.

By I. J. Aschheim, Secretary, District Grand Lodge No. 4.

The Masons read their customary burial service at his obsequies. The A. O. U. W.'s are sincerely mourning his passing away. Attorneys at the bar and judges upon the bench have eulogized him in terms of praise and endearment, but it must be clearly understood that Dave Hirshberg was rooted in the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith and that, aside from his own hearth and home, it was here where he wanted his memory to be enshrined and where it will assuredly be held sacred as long as the last of the present generation will remain this side of eternity. His funeral was a splendid testimony of what the city of Oakland thought of one of its most sterling sons and Rabbi Friedlander rose to the occasion and, indeed, surpassed himself, not only by his eloquence, but by his sincerity as well, for he was visibly affected and well might he have been so.

My first meeting with Dave Hirshberg dates back to 1878, when I saw him, a beardless boy, sending forth his thundering protests against what he considered an unjust decision of the then grand president. Unlike others, who meteor-like, diffuse a light and then drop into empty space, he remained in the front rank from that day until he was called thither. He entered the grand lodge about the year 1880 and without hesitation took a leading part in its deliberations, showing his power as an analytical debater of force and character. In 1882 his father, the late Samuel Hirshberg, was elected to the chair, but died during his term of office. Dave followed his father in line of official preferment in the year 1883, when he was elected second vice-president, next in rank to the writer, who had the honor of being elected the first vice-president. Dave was placed in the chair in 1885, an eventful year for District No. 4, and well for its fortunes that he was in the commanding place during the crisis following the general convention of 1885. After his retirement from the chair, and almost at the first organization of the District Court, he was elected one of its judges and was kept there for the balance of his years. Almost since the reorganization of the library committee in the year 1888 he assisted in governing that institution, was the chairman of the committee, and unremittingly worked for the improvement and elevation of the once famous B'nai B'rith library. In all the years from the middle eighties until the day of his death there was hardly a committee of importance designated by the grand lodge without having Dave Hirshberg one of its members. But no matter what he did during those years, no matter what love and devotion he manifested for his cherished brethren, the one crowning act of his B'nai B'rith life he performed the year he presided over the grand lodge, holding that body within the limits of law and discipline, saving the district from secession and ultimate destruction.

Owing to a general demoralization of the endowment systems prevalent in the several districts of the order, the general convention in 1885 adopted an amendment to the constitution, giving the districts the right to maintain such systems but prescribing for them a maximum monthly rate to be charged the members for that privilege. Immediately there arose in this district a sinister leadership which took advantage of the situation and with the battle cry of "home rule," began an agitation with designs which could easily be discerned. Defiance against the constitution grand lodge became rampant and it was then where the strong hand of Grand President Hirshberg came down in sledge-hammer fashion. Let me quote a few sentences from his memorable message to the session of 1886.

"It will be urged by those who advocate the reprehensible views already referred to, that the constitution grand lodge has no legal right, under the laws of the state, to legislate on the endowment and that successful opposition thereto can be made in the court. I sincerely hope that no such procedure will be adopted by this body. I trust that it will never be recorded of the I. O. B. B. that it resorted to the public tribunals for the settlement of its disagreements.

"Would it not be well for us, while we are indulging in wholesale denunciation of others because of impending danger, to look around and ascertain if the trouble is not of our own creation.

"The constitution grand lodge is our National legislature, and its decrees are final and absolute.

"Dare any state of this country give expression to the rebellious thought that it will not comply with the enactments of Congress? Such position on the part of a state would at once be construed as nullification, a principle at once abhorrent and dishonorable."

The timid ones under the leadership above indicated began to weaken and the session ended in a love feast instead of open rebellion.

Even at the session of 1895, when the grand lodge was on the brink of yielding to a maudlin sentiment and to condone an offense in the name of Rachmonas, Dave Hirshberg rose like the typical tribune and in his stentorian voice and with unanswerable argument called the grand lodge back to itself and averted what would perhaps have amounted to an outrage of public opinion.

The cynics may smile at all this, but it is well to remind them that we can not all play our parts on the world's stage and that some are made to conquer smaller worlds.

Our younger members will wonder that so much lay in the past of the man whom they had recently observed laden down with physical pain, trying to make himself heard in a feeble and hectic way, but the shadow had already fallen on him and he was but a remnant of his former self.

The world will go on just the same. Nothing in the course of evolution will stop because Dave ceased to be, but we of the district grand lodge, if permitted to witness the opening of the next annual session, will assemble with the feeling that there is an eclipse on the sun; faint though it may be, yet there is an eclipse.

MEETING OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE GENERAL COMMITTEES OF GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN DISTRICTS.

A joint meeting of delegates of the General Committees of Districts 8 and 10 will be held in Berlin on Dec. 28, this year, for the purpose of devising ways and means by which the two Districts can be brought into closer contact. Other questions of mutual interest to the two Districts will also be considered, for instance, the raising of a general aid fund, the publishing of the reports of one District in the publication of the other; the endeavor to induce Galician and Russian co-religionists to work in mines; how the two Districts are to act in cases of important international relief work, and the publication of a pamphlet against the ritual murder accusation, etc.

MEETING OF EUROPEAN MEMBERS OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE ORDER.

In compliance with the resolution adopted by the full Executive Committee at its meeting held in Berlin in 1912, the European members of the Executive Committee will hold a session at Berlin on Dec. 27, 1913. It is expected that the following will be in attendance: Dr. Berthold Timendorfer of Berlin, representing Germany; Dr. Adolphe Stern of Bucharest, representing Roumania; Mr. Adalbert Skall of Prague, representing Austria, and Mr. J. Niego of Constantinople representing the Orient.

GREEK GOVERNMENT FAVORS JEWS.

The Greek Government in Salonika is showing in every way its favor in behalf of the Jewish inhabitants of the town. They have just offered to the representatives of the Salonika Jewish community a large sum of money towards defraying the expenses attached to the work of repatriating the Jews that have fled the district during the war. Thousands of Jews have been exiled, most of them voluntarily, from their native places and have resided most of the time in Constantinople, awaiting the end of the war. Now that the war is over they find themselves destitute and unable to go back to their native places. The Jewish relief societies have done much in assisting them, but these are powerless to deal with the problem as a whole, and the help of the Greek Government will certainly be greatly appreciated by the leaders of the Jewish communities.

I expect to pass through this world but once. Any good work, therefore, any kindness, or any service I can render to any soul of man or animal, let me do it now! Let me not neglect or defer it, for I shall not pass this way again.—Carlyle.

The Bible in the Making

Written for the B'nai B'rith News

BY
DR. MAX L.
MARGOLIS

The Bible is in everybody's hands. It is the textbook of the religious school. It is solemnly read in the service. It is preached in the pulpit. Its texts accompany us through life, from the cradle to the grave. It is the religious classic of our civilization. That side of course is its glory, the goal of its destined course. Nevertheless there was a time when that part of it which is commonly designated as the Old Testament was enshrined in a receptacle in the Synagogue. And at a stage farther removed the Hebrew Scriptures, now conveniently comprised between two covers, were in the making.

The Hebrew Scriptures are tripartite. In the English Bible the order is, Historical Books (Past), Liturgical and Didactic Writings (Present), Prophets (Past). In the Hebrew, the Pentateuch or Law (Torah) is segregated from the historical books as a section by itself; the Prophets occupy the middle position consisting of the three large (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel) and the twelve smaller (Minor) prophets, preceded by the historical books, Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings; in the third section are placed Psalms, Proverbs, Job, the five small volumes (Song, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther), Daniel (not among the Prophets), Ezra-Nehemiah, Chronicles. A shifting and dislocation apparently took place at different times. On the whole, the Hebrew order may be regarded as more original.

The third section is the least homogeneous. Its medley of constituent elements points to a fourth section which the English Bible prints in an appendix or in a separate volume, the Apocrypha, i. e. books withheld from public service, the writings that are without. Not a few of these were written originally in Hebrew. Most of the Hebrew originals are no more extant. There is even a fifth order of Scriptures, the so-called Pseudepigrapha, writings which falsely go by the name of the patriarchs, like the Book of Enoch or the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. Yet even they were in part written in Hebrew.

Why were the fourth and fifth order excluded from our Bible? The Bible as a collection is the work of the spiritual authorities of the Jewish people known as Pharisees. These leaders of Jewry survived all other sects, the Sadducees for instance. As the rigidity of the victorious party and its non-compromising character assumed definiteness, the collection was narrowed in its compass. Out of a rich and varied literature a small remnant was committed to the care of the Synagogue. With an eye to the supreme need of conserving Judaism in the dispersion, with an eye to the dangers political and religious that threatened the annihilation of the Jew and the dilution of Judaism, the canon of Scriptures was promulgated, the Bible suited to a dispersed minority clinging fast to the faith in the One God and to its glorious past and dreaming in the night of tribulation the dream of the golden future. 'And of more than these, my son, be on Thy guard; of making many books there is no end." So instead of the many, we have received the few; instead of the fourfold and fivefold things that were written, the threefold.

Jeremiah knows of a threefold canon, so to speak. "For the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel (the same as wisdom) from the wise, nor the word from the prophet." Priest, prophet and sage were the three recognized authorities whose function was to advise or set aright the perplexed individual The priest gave instruction (torah), the prophet revealed the word (dabar) of the Lord, and the sage offered counsel or wisdom (hokmah). Wisdom is the one thing that stands out as the least national product. There was wisdom in Edom and among the children of the East generally. Job dwelt in the land of Uz on the confines of Arabia and Idumea. Wisdom is the parent of science; the men of science constitute the republic of letters. Experience is universal. Proverbs travel from people to people. Eliphaz boasts of a traditional lore, "Which wise men have told from their fathers." And Bildad: "Inquire, I pray thee, of the former age, and apply to that which the fathers have searched out: for we are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are as a [illegible] From the store-house of [illegible] experience of precedents, of analogous conditions or circumstances, the wise drew their counsels. There were the wise of both sexes. The wise woman of Abel who saves a city from a general's attack; the wise woman of Tekoa who turns a king's heart to his exiled son. Both use quaint language: the pleading of the Tekoite woman takes on the form of fictitious narrative, of the parable. Note the touch of the secular to the sententious utterance concerning the finality of death—a scepticism which antedates and foreshadows the Preacher. "For we must needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up." The high repute in which the wise man stood equalled the prophet's authority. "And the counsel of Ahithophel, which he counselled in those days, was as if a man inquired at the oracle (dabar) of God." Wisdom and prophecy co-existed, just as prophecy and the Law flourished side by side. The wise counsellor arrogated to himself the inerrancy of the revealed word, and the prophet when occasion demanded played the wise man and imitated his very language. Both prophet and wise man were possessed of the spirit, were inspired. The Bible speaks of the spirit of counsel and wisdom. It is the spirit of wisdom that manifests itself in the cunning craftsman. The worldly tone and tenor of wisdom was apparently not to the liking of the prophet. Confronted with a generation given to lip worship and piety learned by rote, Isaiah declaims against "the wisdom of their men and the understanding of their prudent men." Jeremiah would have no wise man glory in his wisdom: a man shall glory in that he understandeth the Lord. In this conflict between wisdom and prophecy—the prototype of the conflict between science and religion—prophecy was victorious. Jewish wisdom as we have it in the third section of the Bible—and we have only the smallest part of the wisdom literature that circulated among the people—was suffused with the prophetic spirit before it could win recognition and a place in the Scriptures. What of its secular origins clung to it was effaced. The biblical wisdom is ethically orientated. Job the doubter, wearied with finding wisdom, the formula of the universe, acquiesces in little wisdom, the sum of which is, Fear the Lord and depart from evil. For the Preacher, when all hath been heard, the conclusion of the matter is, Fear God and keep His commandments. The fear of the Lord is the beginning, i. e. the quintessence, of knowledge, of wisdom.

When we say that the prophets looked askance at wisdom with its secular tendencies, we mean the prophets of the canon. The collection of the prophetic writings in the same order and probably in the same compass as we have them today was the work of the scribes, the men of the Great Synagogue. The feeling had gained ground that prophecy had ceased. So the people turned to the prophets of old. Now, at the time when the prophetic writings were collected, there may have been extant just those and no more, i. e. the scribes simply gathered up what they found and suppressed nothing. It is just as likely that they exercised a censorial function. Be that as it may, there can be no doubt that in the times of the activity of the prophets there was a richer prophetic literature of which we possess but a part. The "false prophets" also were literary men or had their disciples who wrote about them. "False" and "true"—that depends upon the verdict of history. The encounter of Elijah and the prophets of Baal—as he calls them—was narrated on both sides. Micah son of Imlah ridicules Zedekiah son of Chenaanah and his men as duped by the lying spirit; Zedekiah's version is not extant. The whole booklet of another Micah, the Morashthite, at least in the first three chapters, reads like a pamphlet inspired probably by the attacks of those popular orators whom he lampoons most mercilessly as followers after wine and strong drink. Jeremiah who counsels submission to the yoke of the Babylonian king is denounced by the patriot Hananiah. The bitter antagonism of the day which was summed up in the impudent bidding to the seers that they see not and to the prophets that they prophesy not right things, but that seers and prophets speak glibly and prophesy deceitfully, prompted Isaiah and his brother-prophets to write down their preachings in a book for aftertimes. To counteract an opposite tendency was the main purpose of the historical books which in the Hebrew open the middle section. History in our sense of the word they are not. Their authors had before them excellent records and writings which deserved the name of histories. But in the historical books of the Bible the interest is centered in temple and prophetic guild. All else is mere byework. The political history is there just to the extent that it may serve as a framework. Ahab and Jeroboam are of no consequence; it is Elijah and Amos that count. And so the ancient chronicles were consigned to oblivion, just as in later times that fine record of the exploits of Judas the Maccabee was cast out. Just as the Pharisees would not put up with the First Book of the Maccabees, so the scribes and the disciples of the prophets preserved Jeremiah's writings and placed on the outside Hananiah's. The standard by which the prophetic writings were adjudged worthy of recognition was their conformity to the Law, Torah, whose interpreters they were considered to be and which itself was priests' work largely permeated with the prophetic spirit.

Torah is badly rendered Law. It is true, the five books of Moses are the law-book, the code of Judaism. But Torah in the making signified pointing out the way, direction, opinion. A lawyer with us is consulted for an opinion. In ancient Israel the priest was consulted for a torah, an opinion concerning a matter of law. The people sought torah at the priest's mouth. In olden times, the torah was oral, handed down from mouth to mouth; but at a very early period there were written torahs in multitudinous rolls, a torah of the leper and a torah of the Nazirite, a torah of the burnt-offering and a torah of the sin-offering, a torah of what may be eaten and of what may not be eaten, and so on. Such torahs were committed to the priests for their own use. The function of the priests was to teach the people, give them torah—instruction—in matters of the holy and the common, of the unclean and clean. They acted as the confessors of the people and guided the individual in matters of conscience. Those ancient torahs were excerpted by the codes which we find in our Torah or Pentateuch quite after the same manner as were the ancient chronicles excerpted by our historical books. Though concerned with a fixed ritual, not all priests were the stiff ritualists our prophets make them out to be, nor were all prophets anti-ritualists. But in the main the priesthood and the priestly torah stood for organized piety which is necessarily external, while prophecy demanded the piety of the heart. The conflict between ritualism and moralism was of long duration, but in the end a compromise was effected, and the compromise is represented by our Torah. It is a blending of priestly ritual and law and prophetic exhortation. The Torah is a code not cold and iron clad but suffused with the warmth of moral suasion. It succinctly sums up in finished prophetic style the best prophetic teaching—the prophetic torah—concerning the love of God and man and the inward piety of the heart. Thus the Torah went forth on its career dominating the people's life in public and private affairs, a catechism of Judaism in the making of which priest, prophet, and wise man cooperated.

The Bible Made, the canon, the finished collection, is the work of scribe and Pharisee. The Bible in the Making mirrors the varied interests of a living nation. The process of Bible making reveals a conflict of spiritual tendencies resulting in compromises. Israel was once upon a time exceeding human. It rejoiced like the peoples. It was on the road to making peace with the culture of the Canaanite. Religion had not assumed the sombre character of later days, it was tinctured with life, responsive to many chords. From the dawn of time singers sang. They sang of the exploits of heroes, of war and peace, of national fortune and misfortune, of private joys and sorrows. The song of the swordsman who forged the weapon for revenge; the song of the shepherd digging a well for the thirsty flocks; the song of the bridegroom and the bridegroom's friends; the idyllic song of the love of man for maiden; the hedad shout at the wine-press; the dirge of the mourner and the wail of the wailing women; the song of dancers and merry-makers when the festival night was sanctified—of all of them there are faint echoes in the Hebrew Scriptures. When at last Israel found herself, when she discovered her genius, religion absorbed all her interests, a serious note was struck, and the process of Bible making was begun. And if the question is asked, Who gave the impulse to this process? the answer must be, The prophet in Israel. The prophets who preached a religion without sacrifices and ritual were at bottom they who intensified the self-consciousness of the Jew and made him stand forth for all times as the elect of God. The Bible Made did narrow down the sum of a people's interests of which the Bible in the Making is a witness. But the loss to the Jew was the world's gain.

WORLD'S DEBT TO THE JEWS.

Excerpt of Sermon by Rev. Jasper Howe of Omaha.

The Israelites have been the religious teachers of all the races of mankind. Their history is a record of trial in the cause of God that must touch every feeling heart. Revelation, their guiding star, constitutes the grandeur of their history.

The Jews stand, in a pre-eminent degree, for faith. Where is more sublime faith than the sight of this God-intoxicated people, journeying in the wilderness, revering the creation, chanting the Psalms and inspired by the prophecies? No people ever stood with like reverence before the majesty of God! Moses saw the world aflame with deity!

Jew Stands for Ethics.

What have the Hebrew scriptures wrought? The Ten Commandments are the foundation of civilization and ethics. At that fountain well of ethical truth, three religions had their source. Here was the inspiring source of literature, politics and philosophy. The Hebrews drank at the fountain of ethics, the Greeks from the stream and the Romans from the pool. While the Greek stands for aesthetics, the Jew stands for ethics. The history of civilization is only the application of the ethics of the Hebrews. The prophets of Israel still live in the grateful remembrance of universal Christendom. They prepared the soil out of which Christianity was to spring. Men of classical antiquity are forgotten, while Samuel, Elijah and Isaiah are household words.

For the first time a book was made the foundation of a religion. This religion must be sounded in every language to every people—both for those afar off and for those who are nigh. The Holy One of Israel was predestined to become the God of all people. God disciplined them through many experiences. He delivered them from Egypt, and by a mortal struggle they became established in Canaan. The worship of Jehovah gradually triumphed over Baal. Carmel and Elijah are beacon lights. In all of these experiences as well as during the suffering of the Babylonian captivity they were the witnesses of Jehovah.

Been God's Battle-Axe.

The scattering of the Jews through all lands made it inevitable that they should be a missionary people among their heathen neighbors. This race has been God's battle-axe. Their dispersion prepared a monotheistic starting point for the gospel.

This people has given us our Bible, our Holy Land and our Saviour. The first place of influence has been awarded to Israel by universal history. Other powerful nations have contributed nothing to modern civilization. The whole intellectual and spiritual atmosphere which modern people breathe is saturated by ideals that first found expression among God's chosen people.

Let it never be forgotten that Jesus, our Redeemer, was a Jew. The New Testament was written by Jewish men; Peter, the preacher of Pentecost, was a Christian Jew; Paul was the leading Jew of his day before he became the leading Christian of his day, and the New Testament is Hebrew in thought.

ROUMANIAN POLICY TOWARDS JEWS IN MACEDONIA.

It is reported that the Roumanian minister of foreign affairs has finally declared the policy that Roumania intends to pursue towards the Jews of the conquered sections of Macedonia. In the villages only one Jewish family per village will be allowed. Jews will be allowed to own land only under restrictions. Not more than two Jewish representatives of these districts will be allowed in Parliament. Under Turkish rule the Jews were on a footing of equality with all the rest of the inhabitants. After the war, it will be remembered, Roumania promised not to change the status quo of the Jews.

NEWS FROM LONDON

BY OUR CORRESPONDENT DR. M. EPSTEIN

London, Nov. 19, 1913.

At the present moment we in this country are pretty busily occupied with questions of moment to the general well being. No doubt you in America are aware of the Irish problem, where the position is admittedly serious. Even if it stood alone it would require all men's attention. But it does not stand alone. There is industrial unrest and dissatisfaction in a good many quarters; the political parties are engaged in a vital struggle, and every Englishman's newspaper gives him sufficient to occupy his mind. Nevertheless, when the appeal went forth to protest against the Beilis trial, the response was indeed great. The meeting in London sounded one note and one only—horror and condemnation, and the similar protests in other towns, notably in Leeds and Sheffield, were not otherwise. It is not too much to say that the voice of the English nation was on the side of justice.

The same applies to the English press. One and all the papers expressed their views on the case in an unmistakable fashion. Even those whose policy it is to advocate Anglo-Russian friendship could not refrain from showing their disappointment that their good ally should be so mean, so unjust and, above all, so stupid. It is pretty clear that the whole business has a political bearing which it is not at first sight easy to see. It is the old struggle between light and darkness, between progress and reaction, between today and yesterday. The gang in power are uneasy as to their position; they attempt to divert public opinion to the Jews. But after all, the internal politics of Russia do not directly interest outsiders. The battle of the factions will go on, and sooner or later Russia will emerge into the light of modernity.

What is of interest, however, is the way the public in Russia have been influenced. Jew-hatred has shown its face in its wildest aspect. The speeches for the prosecution will become notorious, and historians of the future will regard them as splendid testimony to the backward state of the Czar's Empire in the year of grace 1913. And then the suggestions of bribery! They went not far short of asserting that the Jews had bribed the Almighty himself. Accusations of such a character are difficult to meet; but in other cases it is sometimes possible to demonstrate the falsity of the accuser's position. Among the Russian journals that have won evil fame in connection with this shameful business is the "Two-Headed Eagle." In one of its issues it invokes the authority of Prof. Frazer of Cambridge to prove the existence of ritual murder.

Now Prof. Frazer is one of the greatest of living scholors in England, and it is not too much to say that he is probably the most learned folk-lorist in the world. His "Golden Bough" will long remain a classic; it is known wherever the English tongue is spoken. In the volume entitled "The Scapegoat," belonging to the third edition of the "Golden Bough" (1913) at pages 395-96, Dr. Frazer, after referring to an instance of the death of a Christian child alleged by the early Church historian, Socrates, to have occurred during a Jewish festival in the year A. D. 416, writes as follows:

"If all the charges of ritual murder which have been brought against the Jews in modern times are not, as seems most probable, mere idle calumnies, the baneful fruit of bigotry, ignorance, and malice, the extraordinary tenacity of life exhibited by the lowest forms of superstition in the minds of ignorant people, whether they are Jews or Gentiles, would suffice to account for an occasional recrudescence of primitive barbarity among the most degraded part of the Jewish community. To make the Jews as a nation responsible for outrages which, if they occur at all, are doubtless quite as repugnant to them as they are to every humane mind, would be a monstrous injustice; it would be as fair to charge Christians in general with complicity in the incalculably greater number of massacres and atrocities of every kind that have been perpetrated by Christians in the name of Christianity not merely on Jews and heathen, but on men and women and children who professed—and died for—the same faith as their torturers and murderers."

To this passage the "Two-Headed Eagle" refers, adding, "Here we have the voice of an impartial English scientist whom, we venture to think, it is difficult to suspect either of belonging to the Black Hundred or of being a clericalist." All this was published in the "Times" on Nov. 10, 1913, and one can easily imagine the effect of such an argument on the mind of even an educated Russian. But on the following morning the "Times" printed a letter from Dr. Frazer, the importance of which cannot be over-estimated. Here is the actual wording:

DR. FRAZER'S DISCLAIMER.

To The Editor of The Times:

Sir: From your issue of today I learn that a passage in my book "The Scapegoat" has been quoted by a Russian paper, the "Two-Headed Eagle," for the purpose of lending color to the accusations of ritual murder which in certain quarters are now leveled against the Jewish people in Russia. The editor of the "Two-Headed Eagle" can hardly have quoted the passage from my book in full, or his readers would have seen that, while I discuss hypothetically the possibility of an occasional crime instigated by superstition among the dregs of the Jewish as of the Christion population, I stigmatize such accusations against the Jewish people as "a monstrous injustice," and speak of all the charges of ritual murder as most probably "mere idle calumnies, the baneful fruit of bigotry, ignorance, and malice." That is my deliberate and considered opinion; and as the editor of the "Two-Headed Eagle" appears to attach some weight to my judgment, I will tell him what I think of the attempts which he and other organs of public opinion are now making in Russia to stir up prejudice against the Jews by the spread of such vile calumnies. I think that the concoction and diffusion of these slanders are the blackest of crimes, that they dishonor the nation which applauds them and the religion in the name of which they are perpetrated.

J. G. Frazer.

Cambridge, Nov. 10, 1913.

Out of evil often comes good. Out of the Beilis trial comes this expression of opinion from Prof. Frazer. The feeling of the man is unmistakable: it is what every right-minded human being cannot but share. But this letter was not the only good. In another part of this issue will be found copy of correspondence which passed between Lord Rothschild and Cardinal Merry del Val, Papal Secretary of State. All honor to his Lordship for acting promptly in the matter. It is always difficult to fight lies. Yet Lord Rothschild, representing the Anglo-Jewish community, proceeded with dispatch and received the necessary assurance. This was at once forwarded to Kief, but was not admitted as evidence on the technical ground that the Cardinal's signature was not authenticated. On learning this fact Lord Rothschild communicated with the Papal Secretary once more and this time he received the reply properly attested by the Russian Ambassador to the Curia. But it came too late to be of use at the trial. It exists, however, and it is good to realize that the Catholic Church officially dissociates itself from a calumny, which has reality only in the evil imagination of people harboring cruel hatred. But what church could do otherwise? The Jew and blood! The idea is perfectly preposterous. Only a person of unsound mind could be capable of dishing up such trash, and it is pretty well established that the authority of the priest, Pranaitis, was the outpourings of a mind diseased. We have reason to believe that a copy of the "treatise," hailing from Malta, is in the private possession of a collector in London. There is not the shadow of a doubt but that it contains the ravings of a hopeless lunatic.

The acuteness of the Beilis incident tended to withdraw attention from the Jews in the Balkans. Nevertheless something has been done with regard to them. The notice of Sir Edward Grey has been called to the guarantees of religious liberty and equality contained in the Treaty of Berlin, which has never been really carried out. His reply is in so far satisfactory that it goes beyond the mere acknowledgment usual with his office. The British Foreign Secretary states that the changes in the near East by no means abrogate the guarantees of the Treaty of Berlin; on the contrary, they remain as binding as before. When the time comes for giving formal recognition by the Powers to the new territorial divisions, "his Majesty's government will consult with the other Powers as to the policy of reaffirming in some way the provisions of the Treaty of Berlin for the protection of the religious and other liberties of minorities in the territories referred to." This at least is a promise, and we must see to it that it is not forgotten. But it may not mean much after all. If Roumania, for instance, refuses to give civic liberty to her Jewish subjects, no one is going to force her. However, the London Lodge must keep a sharp lookout for the fulfillment of this promise.

Another Synagogue is about to be demolished in London. Once more the reason is that it no longer satisfies a demand. The community is shifting its center. The old haunts for one reason or another are left, and the newer suburbs are receiving Jewish residents. This time it is the Western Synagogue, in the Haymarket. Many an American visitor to this city may possibly have visited the old structure, which is very close to the Carlton Hotel and is within easy reach of the Cecil and the Savoy. Not long ago the New Synagogue was pulled down, and a new one in its stead is planned for Stamford Hill. The same will probably be the case with the Western Synagogue. It is interesting to notice that while synagogues in the center of the town are ceasing to be, there is a demand for new ones in the outlying areas. There is talk of a Synagogue for Golder's Green, and one also for Cricklewood. Some such tendency as this was to be expected, and the demand is healthy. It shows that after all religious activity is not dead. On the contrary in several directions it is putting forth new effort.

There is a movement on foot to start another Boys' Club in the district of St. George's, nearer the river than the area served by the existing clubs. We cannot have too many clubs, and the new one will do good service to many boys. In the main it is to be run on the lines of all our clubs, with this difference, that an effort will be made to introduce a religious atmosphere. Will it succeed? The question is an exceedingly interesting one for those who are acquainted with the peculiarities of Jewish Boys' Clubs in London. In the Girls' Clubs they have succeeded in getting a religious tone; in the Boys' Clubs that has been found almost impossible. Not that the clubs have not been doing splendid work. But to some people this was desirable. There are other folk, however, who would not have it otherwise. It remains to be seen whether Mr. Henriques and his associates will succeed where others have failed before. The new club is to be under the semi-official patronage of the Congregation of British Jews and the Liberal Synagogue.

This is just one more instance of how Jews participate in movements of the day. Club founding is one aspect of social work generally; and you have a new Jewish Club. The question of the suffrage for women is another burning question; Jews are to be found there also. The latest phase of the suffrage movement is for the denominational sections (there is a Jewish, a Catholic and an Anglican League for Women Suffrage) to hold a "prayer-week" and "prayer meetings." Jews have joined in this movement likewise. It seems a little incongruous to some that Jews (or rather Jewesses) should pray for the granting of the vote. The voice is the voice of Jacob, they say, but the hands are the hands of Canterbury. And yet, on the other side, why should not religion be commensurate with life? If getting the vote means so much that is deep, why should not the feeling behind it express itself in prayer? The doubtful point is the denominational side of a national question. As well form a Jewish League or an Anglican Society for improving the Land Laws or diminishing the strength of the Navy. But there it is; it is an actuality.

The truth is that we in London lack a healthy Jewish tradition. The excellence of the community of Frankfort is that it has an old tradition. Many another city might be mentioned as being in a like case; even Berlin, comparatively new though it is, has one. But London has not. The year 1660 is usually given as the starting point of the second part of the history of the Jews in England. By the beginning of the 18th century there must have been a good deal of Jewish life in the metropolis. Possibly there was a growing tradition until the eighties of the nineteenth century. But the shifting of the population from the old centers and the arrival of newcomers from all the corners of the earth have tended to destroy any tradition that was growing up. There may be a tradition at the Great "Shool;" there is none at Hampstead or Brondesbury or St. John's Wood. This applies to the German (ashkenazic) section: it does not apply to the Spanish and Portuguese Jews. Go to their old Synagogue in Bevis Marks and you will think yourself back in the days of William of Orange, nay, of the ancient Hidalgos of Cordova and Toledo. It is the atmosphere of the place, and though their new synagogue in the West End of London does not make you feel quite like that, you do realize that there is a tradition there.

Possibly, if we can produce a uniform system of religious education, we may in the long run produce a tradition worthy of the importance of the Anglo-Jewish community. Our Union of Hebrew and Religion Classes is doing something in this direction; and its annual conference will in the end make some impression. At present it is at the talking stage. But then talking is necessary too to clear one's own mind, and more than that, to clear the minds of other people. The Chief Rabbi gave a proper lead on this question at the last conference held a week or two ago. It is only to be hoped that he will be enabled to carry his plans into existence. There is much talk and little more—it is the wool that Anglo-Jewry needs. But the conferences and meetings do show the existence of activities, and that is much.

On the ninth of November, in each year, the Londoner celebrates a local holiday—Lord Mayor's Day. In accordance with the ancient custom the new Lord Mayor prepares a pageant for the public to see, and in the evening he gives a dinner to all the notables of the realm. The Cabinet is represented; the diplomatic body is there in full force; the "City," of course, is present; so are the judges and representatives of the Church. The Prime Minister usually makes a speech which is awaited with great expectations; other ministers also make pronouncements of varying interest and importance. This year a Jewish Lord Chief Justice was present at the Lord Mayor's banquet for the first time. His speech was courageous and sounded a true note; it was worthy of the historic occasion. In the course of it his Lordship remarked:

"I cannot address you here, tonight, in the city, without recalling that I should not be here, occupying this position at this moment, if it were not for the great struggles of the city—now so many years ago—in the cause of religious liberty. (Cheers.) I should be ungrateful indeed if I allowed this opportunity to pass without reminding you that, first of all, it was the city that insisted upon members of my community being members of your corporation. And it was the city that led the struggle for representation, again, by members of my community in the House of Commons. (Hear, hear.) If I have strayed for a moment into those paths which, perhaps, are not peculiarly appropriate to the toast for which I am responding, it is because I should think that I were false to everything that is within me if I did not give utterance to these sentiments, remembering as I do that memories so quickly fade, and that, while a whole nation now agrees that there should be the fullest religious liberty and toleration, that was not the case when the city fought the battle which placed me here." (Cheers.)

The Jew values liberty; he has had to fight for it hard enough. There is therefore something eminently fitting in a Jew taking up the cause of an oppressed people in a free land. The Indians in Natal are laboring under restrictions which are admittedly unjust. They have arisen to fight their cause and

PRESS COMMENTS

ON THE

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

BUFFALO NEWS.

The Order of B'nai B'rith has organized a league called "Anti-Defamation." The purpose of it is to bring about an abatement of discrimination against Jews. The league will furnish libraries with lists of books on Jewish subjects. It will engage the services of prominent persons, regardless of religion, to deliver lectures on Jewish subjects. It will spread literature that gives a true understanding of the Jews and Judaism, and it will aid in safeguarding the mind of the growing child against prejudice and will wage war to remove textbooks which tend to create a prejudice.

Whether much good will be done in that way remains to be seen. The world is moving with respect to the Jew and that citizen gains in general respect and in protection of law in nearly all countries. If Russia is still barbarous, even infamous in her treatment of the Jew, she is less cruel than formerly and is beginning to respond to a world opinion that is growing in favor of justice to all, whether Jew or Gentile, bond or free.

The estimate of the Jew in almost any community is formed, largely, by conduct of the Jews in each community and since they are as a rule found to be highly industrious and thrifty and patriotic and intelligent, whatever prejudice may have existed generations ago in America, at least, is very largely dissipated.

One does not hear the question raised when a Jew is a candidate for public office. Neither is there the least social obstacle to their recognition as members of society, in accordance with their worth and station and circumstances, like any other class of citizen.

Still the league may be of service in pushing home all the time the merits of the Jew as an answer to the criticism or the prejudice that may be found on occasion and that lies in the mouth of the thoughtless.

The league recognizes that the main aid to its purpose is the Jew himself and says that he must keep his house in order, so that complaints of the league may be justified when they protest against unfair treatment.

ROCHESTER (N. Y.) TIMES.

With the view of decreasing petty spite and prejudice against the members of the Jewish race the "Anti-Defamation League of America" has just been founded. This league aims to make an organized effort to end unfair discrimination. Among the immediate activities contemplated by the league are the foloiwng:

"Public and university libraries will be furnished with lists of books on Jewish subjects, which, in the opinion of the league tend to show the facts regarding Jewish ethics, customs, history, religion and philosophy.

"Where it is found that the endowment of institutions, either private or public, does not permit the procurement of a fairly comprehensive number of books on these subjects, it will be the aim of the league to supply them. Investigations show that a majority of the public libraries of the country do not even possess a Jewish history written by a Jewish historian.

"Investigation will be made of the bibliography on Jewish subjects in libraries. Wherever it is found that books which maliciously and scurrilously traduce the character of the Jew, are kept for general circulation—especially in public stackrooms—the proper authorities will be urged to withdraw such books from general circulation, or, at least, to place a restriction on their use.

"The services of prominent lecturers and publicists regardless of religious affiliation, will be enlisted for the purpose of delivering lectures on Jewish subjects at universities, public schools and at appropriate gatherings.

The league will provide also for the dissemination of literature designed to give the public a true understanding of the Jew and Judaism.

The league recognizes the fact that the mind of the growing child must be safe-guarded against even a suggestion of prejudice, therefore, where in our educational system, either public or private, text books are used which tend to pervert the mind of the child and create prejudice, a determined campaign will be waged to eliminate all such books from the curriculum."

In addition the league will take cognizance of all publications, theaters and moving picture houses in which unfair treatment is accorded Jews. Efforts will also be made to obtain suitable legislation on the subject.

Every unprejudiced person will sympathize with the work of this league. In this age and country there should be no discrimination against any person on account of race or religion. Recently in this state a law was passed to prevent such discrimination by hotels and places of public entertainment. Such prejudices are held only by the ignorant and narrow-minded and there are encouraging evidences that the number of these is steadily growing less.

CEDAR RAPIDS GAZETTE.

The Anti-Defamation League of America is the name of a new organization with headquarters in Chicago. It is founded under the auspices of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and as the name suggests, is an organization of Jewish people formed to combat the constant and seemingly increasing tendencies to traduce the Jew.

The league has a legitimate mission. The Jew long has been traduced and caricatured. The race and its individual members have been insulted by people and communities who ought to know better. We have had the stage Jew as well as the stage Irishman—caricatures which never ought to have been tolerated by a civilized people. The league will find plenty of fair-minded people who will lend it willing support in its campaign of education and vindication.

NEW ORLEANS DEMOCRAT.

Under the auspices of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith the Anti-Defamation League of America recently has been organized "to bring about the abatement of the defamation of the Jew." In a circular just issued the league presents a statement of its principles and an outline of the activities it has planned. "Public and university libraries will be furnished with lists of books," it is explained, "which, in the opinion of the league, tend to show the facts regarding Jewish ethics, customs, history, religion and philosophy. * * * The services of prominent lecturers and publicists, regardless of religious affiliation, will be enlisted for the purpose of delivering lectures on Jewish subjects at universities, public schools and at appropriate gatherings. The league will provide also for the dissemination of literature designed to give the public a true understanding of the Jew and Judaism."

In addition, the league proposes to keep careful watch upon theaters and moving picture films to prevent the production of plays giving "an unfair or untrue portrayal of the Jew." It will seek to secure the enactment of State legislation providing for a Board of State Censors, "with a view of preventing the presentation in moving picture theaters of films which are malicious and scurrilous caricatures, or are objectionable in other respects." Toward the close of its circular the league expresses the hope that "all persons, when once convinced of the beneficence of this work, will join with us therein, and that a spirit of sympathy and fellow feeling will commend our purposes to the co-operation of all citizens. * * * We wish to emphasize the fact," it adds, "that in this work good sense and wise tolerance must guide our action. A little excessive pride, or a lack of perspective, may seriously hamper our efforts."

The constant and consistent exercise of "good sense and wise tolerance" will, in our opinion, commend the work of the league to all fair-minded citizens, for liberal minds hold no sympathy for the attempts to provoke prejudice against a race or a faith by defamatory plays or literature. But it may be suggested in all kindness that a movement of this character, carried to extremes by counsels of unwisdom or intolerance, might do more harm than good. A supersensitiveness that leads a people or a race to take offense where none is intended, to magnify a portrayal of individual character into an insult to a nation or a faith, may not safely be encouraged. The effort to disarm and to prevent the spread of cruel and groundless prejudices is worthy of hearty support and commendation But its distortion, by supersensitiveness or intolerance, into an effort to suppress every book or play presenting delineations that might be misconstrued into insults or affronts upon this or that nation, people, race or faith, would deprive our libraries of some of their greatest books and bar from the stage not a few of its masterpieces.

WATERLOO EVENING COURIER.

Recently there has been organized the Anti-Defamation League of America, which has for its present and primary object the suppression of defamation of the Jew. Perhaps there is not an American who has not been present in some theater, or read some newspaper or book, wherein the Jew is held up in an unenviable light for entertainment. The better class of people and those having a sense of fairness have not approved the caricatures of the Jew from the stage or in the public prints. It is manifestly unfair to take the idiosyncrasies of a few individuals and hold them up as types of the entire people or race. To depict the shortcomings of the individual character and to ascribe them to any people as a whole is an injury which any people have just cause to resent. The Jewish people themselves appreciate that there are now and then malefactors among the Jews, as well as among other peoples, but to ascribe such a malefactor as a Jew is no more permissible than to describe a wrongdoer as a Catholic or a Protestant.

Individually, and as a race, the Jews have done much for every country in which they have been given a free and equal opportunity. This newly organized league asks nothing that is unreasonable, and reasonable people, when their attention is brought to the matter, should give the movement hearty endorsement and moral encouragement. The society aims by organized effort to bring about the abatement of the defamation of the Jew and ultimately to put an end to unfair discrimination against all citizens. For the present the league contemplates the following activities in an educational way:

1. Public and university libraries will be furnished with lists of books on Jewish subjects, which, in the opinion of the league tend to show the facts regarding Jewish ethics, customs, history, religion and philosophy.

Where it is found that the endowment of institutions, either private or public, does not permit the procurement of a fairly comprehensive number of books on these subjects, it will be the aim of the league to supply them. Investigations show that a majority of the public libraries of the country do not even possess a Jewish history written by a Jewish historian.

Investigation will be made of the bibliography on Jewish subjects in libraries. Wherever it is found that books which maliciously and scurrilously traduce the character of the Jew are kept for general circulation—especially in public stockrooms—the proper authorities will be urged to withdraw such books from general circulation, or, at least, to place a restriction on their use.

2. The services of prominent lecturers and publicists, regardless of religious affiliation, will be enlisted for the purpose of delivering lectures on Jewish subjects at universities, public schools and at appropriate gatherings.

The league will provide also for the dissemination of literature designed to give the public a true understanding of the Jew and Judaism.

3. The league recognizes the fact that the mind of the growing child must be safe-guarded against even a suggestion of prejudice; therefore, where in our educational system, either public or private, the text books are used which tend to pervert the mind of the child and create prejudice, a determined campaign will be waged to eliminate all such books from the curriculum.—Waterloo Evening Courier.

JEWISH DAILY NEWS.

To the many important accomplishments of the B'nai B'rith we must add the creation of the Anti-Defamation League, which has been founded and is under the protection of this powerful international Order.

The Anti-Defamation League has assumed an important obligation and undertaking. It proposes to reply to all articles in the press that contain false statements injurious to the Jewish name. The League will combat also sensational magazine writers who delight in picturing Jewish home life in a false and incorrect manner.

Mr. Sigmund Livingston, an attorney full of energy and enthusiasm, is chairman of the Committee, which is composed of influential and capable men that will consider carefully and effectively all questions that will come before them.

The readers of the Tageblatt are requested, whenever it comes to their knowledge any articles or remarks in a newspaper or magazine that is injurious to the Jewish name, to report such fact to the Anti-Defamation League, which will take proper steps in the premises, and it is hoped that all false accusations and calumnies against the Jews, the League will with the aid of sincere co-religionists, sweep away so that the public opinion of the Jew and about the Jew will be such as the Jew deserves—Translated.

JEWISH CRITERION.

The principles of the Anti-Defamation League are a splendid set of resolves, and their accomplishment will work much good. But why try to reform the Gentiles, when the chief part of our sorrow comes from our own people The disease is largely within our own house and not without. The statement of Isaiah still obtains "thy destroyers and they that make thee waste shall go forth from thee." (XLIX 17.) Of what use to preach to the Gentiles, when Israelites crowd week after week to see Potash and Perlmutter? A recent issue of a monthly magazine has some "American Proverbs of Tomorrow," among which is found "Set a Ganov to catch a Ganov" and another is "There's many a slip twixt the Shidduchin and the Chuppa." Such sayings are printed because Israelites read them, enjoy them, and purchase the magazine which prints them. The death this week of the lamented Mrs. Frank of Baltimore, recalls to mind a disagreeable incident about Jews forcing themselves into hotels which do not want them. We have always felt that the first step toward a solution is to inculcate Jewish people with love and pride for their faith. If we refuse to patronize a show which pokes fun at our religion, how quickly will it be withdrawn. Let this League encourage Israelites to show all institutions inimical to Judaism, and a splendid forward step will be taken. It is well to confer with Gentiles about combatting prejudice, but it is both easier and more to the point to educate the Jews.

Equality Before the Law

In a libel case that was tried before Mr. Justice Scrutton at York, England, in which a Jew complained of being slandered, in his address to the jury his Lordship said:

Recently, in at least two countries, there have been cases where it has been said that to be a member of the Jewish faith is not to get justice. I hope that in England that cannot be said with truth. No doubt some of you have in the course of your experience met Jews not worthy of the traditions of their ancient religion. So, probably, have you met Englishmen not worthy of the traditions of their country or religion, and you must not judge either Jews or anyone by the worst specimens of the race. You have to uphold the same justice to Jews as you would to Englishmen. I hope it is not necessary to say much more than that to a Yorkshire jury.

AMERICAN JEWISH HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The Twenty-second Annual Meeting of the American Jewish Historical Society will be held in the City of Philadelphia, on February 22 and 23, 1914 (Sunday and Monday). All persons intending to present papers at this meeting are requested to send the exact titles thereof to the Corresponding Secretary not later than January 15, 1914. Particular attention is directed to the fact that papers are not limited in treatment and subject-matter to American Jewish history, but that the object of the Society includes the promotion of the study of Jewish history in general. Cyrus Adler, President, 2041 N. Broad st., Philadelphia, Pa. Albert M. Friedenberg, Corresponding Secretary, 38 Park Row, New York, N. Y.

An attachment was recently issued against a pew held in a Newark, N. J. synagogue for a debt owed to a grocer. The writ was secured in accordance with a "Supreme Court decision which held the right to a pew granted by a church corporation to a man and his heirs is real property."

What Our Lodges Are Doing

BAY CITY, MICH.

More than 200 members of the Order and their friends gathered at the Elks Temple at Bay City, Mich., on Monday evening, Nov. 24, 1913, to celebrate the anniversary of the founding of the Order.

Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer of Des Moines, Ia., gave the address of the evening, taking as his subject, "Our Heritage and Our Duty." Rabbi Mannheimer pictured the former supremacy and pride of Israel, a people that has lived "4,000 years among the peoples of the earth, not merely existing, but working." He contrasted with this the present decline of Judaism with its glorious past, and exhorted his auditors to take up the duty of reviving the now enervated racial strength and godliness.

"Let us go on to make true the dream of the prophets," said Rabbi Mannheimer, "and the day shall come when God shall be one and His name one in all the earth."

Special music was provided for the occasion by a quartet composed of Miss Marguerite Newkirk, Mrs. George E. Crawford, Mrs. T. R. Ware and Miss Bertha Diehl. Miss Newkirk gave one solo, and Jerome D. Greenberg, violinist, a selection. Mrs. A. F. Mueller and Miss Ila Dawson accompanied. Refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

LAFAYETTE, IND.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated at Lafayette, Ind., under the auspices of Barzillai Lodge No. 111 on Sunday evening, Dec. 7, 1913, and was well attended.

Mr. Emil Mayer of St. Louis, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, delivered an address on "Functions and Activities of B'nai B'rith." Rabbi Arthur Zinkin, President of the lodge, in opening the meeting, remarked that the B'nai B'rith organization has for its purpose the solving of two vital problems with which the Jew in America is confronted—first, how can the Jew live as far as possible the life he deems noblest uncomprisingly? Second, how to prevent or suppress secret prejudices harboring in the hearts of a great many of the non-Jewish world from assuming forms injurious to the moral and social welfare of the Jewish people? He then introduced the speaker, Mr. Emil Mayer, who spoke feelingly and inspiringly on the work of the Order.

Mr. Bero, representative of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, who happened to be in the city, delivered a short talk on the work of the institution he represents. Mr. Zinkin, who introduced Mr. Bero, saw more than a logical connection between the work of the B'nai B'rith and the institution Mr. Bero represents, remarking that the vital contribution which the Jew has made to America is public spirit. The Jew is essentially a public-spirited man. He thinks in terms of nationality and society and as such is a vital factor in the welfare of the republic and the more we can swell the volume of the Jewish citizens the better for the welfare of all.

A short talk was also made by Mr. Harry Atlass, President of the congregation.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

B'nai B'rith Day was fittingly celebrated by Indianapolis Lodge, No. 58, of Indianapolis, Ind., on Sunday, Nov. 30, 1913, with an opening meeting in the Communal building. Mr. Sigmund Livingston of Chicago, president of the Jewish Anti-Defamation League, was the principal speaker of the evening. Mr. Livingston, who is a forcible and entertaining speaker, gave a brief sketch of the history of the Jew, and showed that the preservation of the Jew through all times of persecution was due to his being ever law-abiding and observing the sanctity of his home. Miss Emma Messing, vocalist, and Miss Gertrude Drosdowitz provided several pleasing solos during the evening. Preceding the meeting, the present officers of the local Lodge, Past Presidents and delegates to the last District Convention, entertained Mr. Livingston at dinner at the Indianapolis Club.

DENVER LODGE, DENVER, COLO.

The auditorium and balcony of Temple Emanuel were filled by members, their ladies and friends on Sunday evening, Nov. 23, on the occasion of the celebration of B'nai B'rith Day by the Lodge. A splendid program was rendered. President Max S. Schayer presided, and delivered the introductory address.

The speaker of the evening was Brother Leon Block of Kansas City, who spoke on "Scenes from B'nai B'rith Activities." Brother Block presented his subject in a very simple, yet striking manner, illustrating how diversified and altruistic these activities were. The closest attention was given to the speaker, and his address elicited much applause. Miss Beatrice Zwetow sang effectively; Miss Mayme Kolinsky's rendition of a piano solo was skillful and artistic, and Mr. Ben. Poberesky, the young violinist, again captivated his audience by his proficiency and skill on the violin. The audience then adjourned to the vestry rooms, where a pleasant hour was spent.

OPHIR AUXILIARY, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Ophir Auxiliary No. 3, Daughters of the Covenant, as a result of the energetic efforts which its members have been making to interest others in its fraternal activities, and to invite their active association, held a class initiation on Tuesday evening, Nov. 25. Miss Yetta Marks, President of the Auxiliary, initiated the ceremonies, with a few well chosen remarks.

I. J. Ascheim, Grand Secretary of District No. 4, I. O. B. B., held the attention of the initiated and the members with an interesting and instructive talk touching the aims and objects of the Order, Arthur W. Jonas, President of Ophir Lodge, the parent Lodge of the Auxiliary, and B. Lazansky, a venerable Past President, made interesting addresses. The literary features of the evening were interspersed with a well rendered musical program, all of which combined to make the occasion an enjoyable success.

B'NAI B'RITH CONVENTION TO BE HELD IN PHILADELPHIA.

For the first time in twelve years, District Grand Lodge, No. 3, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, will hold its biennial convention in the city of Philadelphia. The date set for this convention is the 25th and 26th of January, 1914. In previous years, the B'nai B'rith held frequent conventions in that city, but in the past decade or more conventions have been held in various cities of the district, which embraces the states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and West Virginia. The officers of the district have found that the time is ripe for a convention in that city, and therefore Philadelphia became the choice of the executive committee, notwithstanding the fact that various cities have offered their hospitality and invited the Grand Lodge as their guest for the occasion.

A convention of the B'nai B'rith brings with it usually the most prominent Jews of the communities represented, and the bringing of the convention to this city means that the leaders in Jewish work within the states embraced will be in attendance.

The program outside of the regular work of the convention has not yet been announced, but it will be of unusual significance and distinction. Prominent Jewish speakers of national reputation will address meetings, to which the Jewish public, though not members of the B'nai B'rith, will be invited. In addition, an extraordinary social program is being arranged, of which due announcement will be made.

Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 of Mobile, Ala., will celebrate B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Dec. 14, 1913, in the B'nai B'rith hall, on which occasion a class of new members will be initiated. After the initiatory ceremonies supper will be served by the ladies of the lodge and addresses will be delivered by prominent members of the Order. The committee having in charge this celebration is making all efforts for a successful reunion of the resident B'nai B'rith.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

The Thanksgiving dance given by the members of Harmony Lodge, No. 711, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, in the Sagal building, proved to be a most successful venture. The affair was largely attended by local people together with a number of visitors from New Haven and Hartford. The feature of the evening was the program rendered by the Comedy Band, of 14 pieces and composed of members of the lodge. The musicians were in costume and were led by A. L. Kline. In the course of the evening a turkey luncheon ,was served to which all did ample justice.

ATLANTA, GA.

The monthly meeting of Gate City Lodge, No. 144, was held on Nov. 14 at the Educational Alliance. The meeting was of much interest and was well attended. More than twenty applications for membership were presented and a large class was initiated. The Lodge is engaged in a campaign with the object of doubling its membership and at the same time its usefulness. A special committee of the Lodge is arranging a series of open meetings, at which subjects of importance will be discussed by prominent people from neighboring cities.

MAON LODGE, NORFOLK, VA.

Maon Lodge No. 172 was honored on the evening of Sunday, December 7, 1913, with the presence of Brother Harold Bloomberg, Grand Sergeant-at-arms, and Brother Edwin L. Levy, member of the general committee of the Grand Lodge. Both of these gentlemen delivered addresses to the members present, in which they set forth the splendid work being done by the Order in this country and abroad.

The lodge took up the matter of contributing to the support of the night school for immigrants, which was established by the local Council of Jewish Women, and appointed a committee consisting of three members to look into the matter and report at the next meeting.

The officers for the ensuing year were also elected.

The lodge appointed a committee of two to constitute an Anti-Defamation League Committee, to co-operate with similar committees appointed by other representative Jewish bodies, all of which committees are to constitute a general Anti-Defamation Committee with power to represent the Jewish attitude in all matters, tending to ridicule or defame the Jew, which might arise in the community.

SAN BERNARDINO.

Paradise Lodge, No. 237, I. O. B. B., Entertained Its Grand Officers.

On November 30, 1913, Paradise Lodge, No. 237, I. O. B. B., gave a complimentary reception in Native Sons' Hall to the grand officers of District No. 4. A musical program and other social diversions were greatly enjoyed by the members and friends of the order.

Mr. Isidore M. Golden, grand president of District No. 4, gave an interesting talk on the principles of the order and the prospect of further growth of this institution.

The grand orator, Edmund Tauszky of San Francisco, who was on the program, could not be present. In his place Rev. Dr. M. S. Levy of San Francisco acted in that capacity, and his eloquent remarks were listened to with rapt attention.

Jacob S. Jonas, president of the local organization, presided. He called the meeting to order and introduced the various numbers of the program after an interesting address of welcome.

The program from beginning to end was thoroughly enjoyed.

HOUSTON, TEXAS.

The joint committee of the B'nai B'rith lodges of Houston are making preparations for the annual B'nai B'rith Day celebration. A plan has been afoot to have Mr. Leon Schwarz, of Mobile, Ala., past president of the District Grand Lodge, make a tour of the state of Texas so as to have him present in Houston about January 11th next.

LADIES' AUXILIARY OF McKEESPORT I. O. B. B.

Characters from the masterpieces of fiction and from the pages of ancient history mingled together in fraternal concord Thanksgiving night at the annual character dance of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the McKeesport I. O. B. B., held in the McKeesport Masonic Temple between the hours of 8:30 and 12 o'clock. The members of the entertainment committee acted as judges and prizes were awarded to the persons costumed in the best way. Uniqueness, fidelity to the character represented, and other things were considered by the judges.

The temple was beautifully and elaborately decorated for the occasion, a color scheme of pink and yellow being carried out. The orchestra was screened by an embankment of palms, ferns and hot house plants, as were also the window ledges and radiators. The walls and ceiling were draped in pink roses and vines, as were also the windows and the orchestra dome. The lights were covered with pink and green shades, and festooned with roses.

In the center of the main auditorium a French basket filled with yellow chrysanthemums and tied with an immense bow of yellow peur soi maline, was suspended. The balconies were made to represent an Italian garden scene, the lattice work being covered with rose vines, behind which Italian screens and lanterns were hung.

About 150 couples were in attendance and enjoyed every part of the evening's entertainment. Light refreshments were served. The committee in charge was composed of Mrs. Mark Abel, Mrs. Eugene Krow, Mrs. M. S. Neiman and Mrs. Charles Friedman.

I. O. B. B. EDUCATIONAL BOARD OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

A meeting of the I. O. B. B. Educational Board of Allegheny County was held at Pittsburgh, Pa., Brother Lasdusky presiding. Those present were Joseph Lasdusky, Homestead; J. J. Schmidt, Braddock; S. M. Weinthal, Sar Sholem Lodge; M. Wiesenthal, Abraham Lippman Lodge; Adolph Edlis, Ibn Gabirol Lodge, and Frank R. S. Kaplan, McKeesport.

Mr. Robert Davidson who formerly had charge of the work at Warrandale was present and stated that he would be pleased to take up the work that he had discontinued, if it could be arranged to have the Sunday School in the afternoon as formerly. A letter was read by the Secretary from Mr. James M. Morris, Superintendent at Warrandale, offering his hearty co-operation to Mr. Davidson. Mr. Davidson then tendered his services to the Board which were accepted.

Mr. Davidson then outlined his plan of procedure which met with the approval of the Board who voted him their hearty support. The Secretary was requested to communicate with the schools at Morganza, Oakdale and the George Junior Republic, and ask for information regarding the Jewish children in those institutions.

JOPLIN, MO.

United Cities Lodge, No. 533, I. O. B. B., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day Sunday, Nov. 23, with the largest gathering of Jewish people that city has ever held. The hall was filled to overflowing and a jolly good time was had by all present. Visitors from Pittsburg and Galena, Kan., Webb City, Carterville and Carthage, Mo., were present. After initiating several candidates, Brother Harry Simon of St. Louis, President D. G. L., No. 2, delivered an eloquent address, after which all were invited to the banquet hall, where an elegant dinner was set and partaken of by all. Speeches were made by Rabbi Abelson and others, after which the meeting adjourned.

INFORMAL DINNER.

The Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago, representing the local Lodges, has arranged for an informal dinner at the Red Room of the Hotel La Salle on Thursday evening, Dec. 18, at which Judge Julian W. Mack will deliver an address on "Dispensing Charity, the Old and the Modern Way." The address will be followed by a general discussion. Mr. Adolph D. Weiner, Past President of District Grand Lodge, No. 6, will preside.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

CLEVELAND, O.

Cleveland Lodge, No. 16, of Cleveland, O., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday evening, Nov. 23, 1913, by giving its 10th annual dinner and 3rd annual entertainment at the Pythian Temple. More than 500 people sat around the tables, which were artistically decorated and which were attended by the daughters of the members, who served most acceptably.

At the conclusion of the dinner Mr. Fred Bruml, President of the Lodge, introduced Federal Judge Wm. L. Day, who spoke on the subject, "the Progressiveness of the Supreme Court," citing decisions of the United States Supreme Court to show that it is the "most humane court in the world today." He was followed by Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburgh, who spoke on the subject, "The Sons of the Covenant."

He stated that the B'nai B'rith commended itself to the thinking man and is of an international character. It stands for the mental, moral and social elevation of the Jews and for unity in Israel. It is the common basis upon which all Jews can meet irrespective of religious belief or nationality. It aims to protest against the oppression of the Jews, and it is the B'nai B'rith that has raised its voice of protest against the oppression of the Jews in Russia and Roumania. It has always guarded the civil rights of the Jews and with its membership of one hundred thousand it has served as a federation in Israel. The B'nai B'rith is independent of the synagogue and aims to inculcate within the hearts of the members a love and loyalty to their ancestral faith.

Israel has always uttered a protest against wrong and Father Abraham protested against polytheism, and this protest has been sounded through the ages of antiquity down to the present day. The gods of the ancient nations have sunk into oblivion, and with them has departed the splendor and power of their followers and today Israel, inspired by her prophets of old, still protests against the wrongs done to humanity. The basis of Israel's belief is a common fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man regardless of what his creed or race may be, and it is no wonder that the Bible, which is the inspiration for the religion of Israel, is regarded as the most wonderful book in the world.

It was the Jews who first gave to the world the ideas of democracy. Before the law all Jews were regarded equal regardless of what their station in life may have been. It was not so with the other nations at that time. Strangers were also regarded as equal before the law. The Jewish conception of true charity is social justice and this is one of the fundamental ideas of Judaism. Although much advancement has been made in all directions, yet there are numerous difficult problems to solve and the idea of "Am I my brother's keeper?" dominates the order B'nai B'rith. That organization stands for the protection of the oppressed and will do all in its power to alleviate the misery of humanity.

Mr. Alfred A. Benesch, the newly elected director of public safety, who is secretary of the Cleveland Lodge, I. O. B. B., was congratulated by the lodge as a body. Former Governor William L. Sulzer of New York was to have spoken at the banquet, but he was unavoidably detained.

After the program had been concluded, dancing followed. Excellent music was rendered by an orchestra during the banquet

THE B'NAI B'RITH FORUM

The B'nai B'rith Forum, which was organized during the early part of this year by the Committee on Intellectual Advancement of District No 1, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, held its November session at Temple Israel of Harlem, on Tuesday evening, November 25. Mr. Julius Henry Cohen spoke on "The Contribution of the Jew to Industry." Mr. Cohen has been actively engaged in connection with the industry question, particularly as affecting Jews, for many years, was Vice-President of the Citizens' Union, formerly chairman of its Committee on Legislation and therefore particularly well qualified to speak on the subject.

Ibn Gabirol Lodge, Pittsburgh, Pa.

At a Memorial meeting held on Wednesday evening, November 12, 1913, as a tribute to late Brother Samuel Levin, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, the Almighty in his infinite wisdom and merciful kindness has removed from our midst our beloved brother and friend, Samuel Levin, and,

"Whereas, we have lost a most esteemed brother, a most faithful officer and a most dutiful Son of the Covenant, and,

"Whereas, his family has lost a devoted parent and the community a devout sincere Jew and respected fellow-citizen, and,

"Whereas, we keenly regret our loss and deeply feel our sorrow, praying nevertheless, that God may grant consolation and renew strength in this hour of grief. Therefore be it

"Resolved, that we, the members of Ibn Gabirol Lodge No. 114, I. O. B. B., in meeting assembled, extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved members of the family of Samuel Levin, a charter member, and for over forty years, Treasurer of this Lodge, and be it further

"Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this meeting, that a copy be printed in the Jewish Criterion and the B'nai B'rith News, and that an engrossed copy be sent to the family.

"Done at Pittsburgh, this 12th day of Chesvan, in the year 5674.

"A. H. KAUFMAN,
"HAROLD OBERNAUER,
"JOS. M. MEYERS,
"Committee."

NEW LONDON, CONN.

Fraternity Lodge No. 743, the latest addition to District No. 1, held a very successful musicale recently at which a large gathering of brethren and their friends were present. The musicale was preceded by a Lodge meeting which was also well attended.

Mr. Charles Jones performed on the cello and Mr. William Lakey rendered piano solos. Miss Dorothy Henkel pleased the audience by a recitation of "Der Erlenkonig."

The evening was one well spent and those present thoroughly enjoyed the festivities.

The Lodge, though only a few weeks old, has organized a Degree Team and is constantly giving the members of the Team practice by having candidates at each meeting to be initiated into the lodge.

Keep up this good work, Fraternity, and you will soon have the older lodges in the District envying you!

BRADDOCK, PA.

Braddock Lodge, No. 516, held a largely attended open session in the new Young Men's Hebrew Association Hall, on Nov. 30, 1913. It was one of the biggest meetings the Lodge ever held and was attended by its many friends throughout the Pittsburgh district.

The address of the evening by Brother A. L. Lipsky on the subject, "The Cardinal Sin" was out of the ordinary and quite instructive, and afforded much opportunity for philosophic and moral discussion.

Morris Adler was chairman of the meeting and a delightful entertainment program was arranged which included a violin solo by Miss Elizabeth Yester; reading by Master Chauncy Hassel; vocal solo by Miss Minnie Sharp; reading by Arthur E. Smith, vocal solo by Miss Edna Kellar; reading by Miss Caroline Hostetter; a vocal solo by Miss Bessie Phillips and a reading by Miss Mollie Rosenberg.

Dr. Deinard was entertained in various ways, and in the evening was the guest of honor at a banquet at the Holland Hotel, at which he delivered an address upon the aims and objects of the Order. Dr. M. Lefkowitz officiated as chairman.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Under the auspices of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of the San Francisco lodges an interesting program was rendered on Monday evening, Dec. 1st, at the B'nai B'rith Hall. The feature of the occasion was an exceptionally fine musical program. A one-act sketch was presented by Mr. Leo Cooper. Short addresses were delivered by prominent speakers. Rabbi B. M. Kaplan, presided.

STOCKTON, CAL.

Hope Lodge No. 126 held an informal entertainment on Wednesday evening, Nov. 12th in its lodge rooms. A large attendance gathered to greet Brothers I. M. Golden, President, and I. J. Aschheim, Secretary, of District Grand Lodge No. 4, who paid an official visit to the lodge and who delivered interesting talks on the work of the Order. President Golden chose for his subject "Unity Among the Jewish People." S. Safferhill presided. At the end of the entertainment refreshments were served.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

Missouri Lodge No. 22 and Ebn Ezra Lodge No. 47, of St. Louis, held a joint celebration of B'nai B'rith Day on Tuesday evening, Nov. 11, 1913, at Temple Israel. Mr. Harry Simon, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, presided and the address of the evening was delivered by Rabbi David Alexander of Toledo, O. The meeting was well attended, more than 600 being present and all expressed themselves as having enjoyed a pleasant evening.

JOSHUA LODGE, PHILADELPHIA.

With the beginning of the fall, Joshua Lodge No. 23, I. O. B. B. has resumed activities. The abolition of all benefits by the lodge, making each member a voluntary contributor to Jewish charities and Jewish endeavors through the B'nai B'rith, has added interest in the Order, and the better class of young men in the Jewish community is gradually appreciating the work of the B'nai B'rith by seeking membership therein.

The debates and discussions on Jewish topics, at the regular meetings, have been renewed. Programs of extraordinary interest have been arranged for the members for the current year, and the lodge is now taking up the subject of interesting the members in a concrete form of Jewish enterprise, wherein members of the lodge can take an active interest outside the meeting room.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A large attendance of members of the Order and their friends was present at a musical and literary entertainment given under the auspices of the Intellectual Advancement Committee of the San Francisco lodges on Monday evening, Dec. 1st, at the B'nai B'rith hall. An interesting program was carried out and one of the features of the evening was a discourse of the One-act Drama by Mr. Leo Cooper. He interspersed his address with illustrative readings from the play, "The Broken Sword." There were also several musical numbers and short addresses by prominent speakers.

DAYTON, O.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by Eshcol Lodge No. 55, of Dayton, Ohio, with an open meeting at the Temple on Sunday, Nov. 16, 1913. Mr. S. J. Kornhauser, of Cleveland, Second Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, was the guest of honor and delivered the principal address. A musical program of varied numbers was also carried out.

KASHRUTH AT THE I. O. B. B. HOME.

The Board of Governors for the Home of the Aged and Infirm, at Yonkers, of the I. O. B. B., held a hearing on the resolution of Maccabee Lodge to reinstitute Kashruth. Rabbi H. P. Mendes, Herbert S. Goldstein and Mr. S. M. Roeder appealed for the observance of the dietary laws, so that any Ben B'rith, scrupulous about Kashruth, may not be barred from the home. It is believed that the Board of Governors will bring in a favorable report to the District convention to be held in Springfield, Mass.

MEETING OF GOVERNORS OF B'NAI B'RITH ORPHANAGE.

At the regular monthly meeting of the board of governors of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children held in the Hotel Lawrence, Pittsburgh, representatives from all parts of the third district of the Order were present. Among the out-of-town members of the board in attendance were A. J. Sunstein, of Pittsburgh; Dr. B. S. Pollak, of Jersey City; Marcus Feuchtwanger, New Castle; Henry Cohen, of Sharon, and Mr. Ruben, of McKeesport.

Aside from the general routine business the board appropriated sufficient funds for repairs needed in the buildings now occupied as a temporary home. After hearing reports plans were made for obtaining an addition to the building fund of $35,000 in the district. It is thought this amount can easily be raised by subscription with little difficulty. A committee was appointed to represent the organization in the district.

Of the forty members comprising the governing board half of the number was chosen to serve for two years and the other half for a term of one year.

A temporary home is now being occupied by the orphanage near Albion where twenty children are being cared for. Officers of the board of governors are Isador Sobel, president; Max Rothschild, vice president; Mrs. E. P. Marks, secretary, and Isador Simon, treasurer.

HOME FOR AGED AND INFIRM AT YONKERS, N. Y.

Thanksgiving Day was celebrated in a very pleasing manner at the Home at Yonkers, N. Y. The annual "turkey dinner," given to the inmates was thoroughly enjoyed by the participants. In the afternoon an excellent entertainment was provided by a committee of the Board of Governors and the intellectual and musical numbers were very much appreciated by those present.

Program.

Violin Solo, selected, Gov. Edward Sanders.

Songs, selected, by Rev. Simon Schlager, Cantor, Temple Emanuel.

Address, by Rev. Herman Lissauer.

Songs, selected, by Miss Renee Schieber, soprano, Temple Emanuel.

Songs, selected, Mr. A. Bloch.

Humorous German Reading, by Gov. Henry Duschnes.

Comic Songs, by Audrey Jean Meyers.

Songs, selected, by Rev. Simon Schlager.

Pianologue "Fair Gretchen," composed and arranged by Mrs. Henry Duschnes.

Patriotic Air (America), by Audience.

Closing prayer by the Dean of the Board of Governors, Gov. M. Minzesheimer.

Mrs. Henry Duschnes and Miss Gertrude Jacobs, at the piano.

After the exercises, refreshments were served and a very pleasant afternoon thus ended.

DANBURY, CONN.

Under the auspices of Friendship Lodge, No. 695, of Danbury, Conn., Rabbi Jos. Silverman of New York, President of District Grand Lodge, No. 1, delivered an interesting lecture to a large audience on Sunday, Nov. 23, 1913. Dr. Silverman spoke upon "The Modern Jew." Mr. Morris Meyers, president of the Lodge, presided at the gathering and welcomed the speakers of the evening. Those, with Dr. Silverman, were Chas. H. Shapiro of Bridgeport, District Deputy, and Rev. E. B. Barbour, pastor of the Universalist Church. Attorney Shapiro gave an interesting account of the work of the Order in the state. He dwelt upon the good being accomplished in Connecticut and urged an increased interest among the Jewish residents of Danbury. Rev. Mr. Barbour was called upon and spoke briefly.

After the meeting adjourned the audience remained to personally meet the speaker of the evening.

A pleasant feature of Dr. Silverman's visit was a dinner tendered him at the Hotel Green under the auspices of the Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

The Committee on Intellectual Advancement has been very busy during the past month arranging for a number of open meetings.

On Dec. 24, 1913, there will be held at the Hotel Astor, a Chanukah Ball, at which it is expected 1,000 people will attend.

On Dec. 29, 1913, there will be held a joint initiation of all the Lodges in New York City, at Pabst Grand Circle.

The Officers of the District and members of the General Committee have paid visits to many of the Lodges in the District. Among those visited were Manhattan No. 156, Maccabee No. 71, Washington No. 19, Zion No. 2, Rehoboth No. 38 and Edward Everett No. 97.

Maccabee Lodge, No. 71, held its most interesting meeting of the year on the evening of Dec. 2, 1913. Among those who addressed the meeting were Herman Asher, First Vice President of the District; Sol. Sulzberger, Treasurer; Reginald E. Zunder, Secretary, and I. Irving Lipsitch, Chairman of the Committee on Intellectual Advancement. Dr. Eugene Lehman of the Faculty of Yale, also spoke. A large class of candidates was initiated by the Degree team.

Jordan Lodge, No. 15, of New York City was again honored, when on Thursday, Nov. 20, Pres. Bro. Dr. Joseph Silverman; member of the Executive Committee, Bro. Charles Hartman; Chairman of Committee on Charitable Objects, Bro. E. Goodhart; and Jordan's own members, First Vice President, Bro. Herman Asher, Chairman of Finance Committee, Bro. Joseph Rosenzweig, and Chairman of District Court, Bro. Henry W. Pollock, representing the General Committee of the District, paid an official visit to the lodge.

Four candidates were initiated, Bro. Eugene H. Lehman, M. A., and Pres. Bro. William Asher taking part in the initiatory work.

Addresses were made by Brothers Dr. J. Silverman, Dr. H. Periera Mendes, C. Hartman, E. Goodhart, H. Asher and Dr. Goldman of Maccabee Lodge.

After the meeting the members and guests were entertained at the West End where refreshments were served.

On Sunday evening, Nov. 23, a very interesting meeting was held by Ansonia Lodge, No. 709, of Ansonia, Conn., at which District Deputy Bro. Charles H. Shapiro and Joseph Shapiro, both of Harmony Lodge, No. 711, of Bridgeport, Conn., delivered addresses to an enthusiastic audience. Several applications for membership were secured.

On the 25th of November the members of Harmony Lodge, No. 711, of Bridgeport, Conn., gathered in large numbers as, is usually the case, to participate in nominations of officers for the ensuing year. The present incumbents were again chosen by the brethren to conduct the affairs of the Lodge, which they have been doing in a manner which has left no loophole for adverse criticism. After the meeting a luncheon was partaken of upon invitation of Bro. Sig. Loewith. The brethren were entertained by the "Harmony Lodge Comedy Band" but recently organized. The members of the "Band" anticipate much pleasure from visiting other lodges in the District.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

The regular monthly meeting of Missouri Lodge, No. 22, of St. Louis was held on Sunday evening, Nov. 16, 1913. Nomination of officers and delegates to the Grand Lodge were made, reports of committees received, and a class of candidates was initiated.

Indianapolis Lodge, No. 58, of Indianapolis, Ind., has completed elaborate plans to entertain its members and friends with its annual show to be presented at the German House on Dec. 8 next. It is to be an old time minstrel show entitled "Way Down South."

Topeka Lodge, No. 698, of Topeka, Kan., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Nov. 9, 1913. A welcoming address by President B. Barnum, a musical program and an address by Brother Harry Simon, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, were the features of the celebration.

An old time resident and pioneer member of Missouri Lodge, No. 22, of St. Louis, Mo., Brother Samuel Schwartz, passed away on Monday, Nov. 3, at the age of 75 years. Members of Missouri Lodge accompanied the remains to the burial place.

Akron Lodge, No. 719, of Akron, O., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Nov. 30, at Temple Israel. Mr. Martin A. Marks of Cleveland, Past President of District Grand Lodge, No. 2, was the principal speaker. His subject was "What the World Wants." A social program concluded the evening's exercises.

Sholem Lodge, No. 78, of Leavenworth, Kan., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Nov. 30. Mr. Karl M. Vetsberg of St. Louis delivered the address at the Temple, after which a musical program followed by refreshments was enjoyed.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by Indianapolis Lodge, No. 58, of Indianapolis, Ind., on Sunday, Nov. 30, 1913. Mr. Sig Livingston of Chicago, Past President of District Grand Lodge, No. 6, delivered the principal address. An appropriate musical program had been arranged for the evening.

At the annual meeting of Springfield Lodge No. 717 of Springfield, Mo., which was well attended, election of officers was held. Resolutions were adopted by the lodge endorsing the work of the Anti-Defamation League, and a special committee was appointed to take up the subject with the local play houses and film theaters.

Denver Lodge No. 171 of Denver, Colo., has made arrangements to have instruction imparted to six Jewish children that are inmates of the state home for dependent children.

Dr. Moise Bergman of New Orleans delivered an address before Denver Lodge No. 171 of Denver on the evening of Nov. 9 on the subject, "The Brightest Star." He compared the various religions of the world, showed wherein they differed, and naturally drew the conclusion that the brightest star in the firmament of religions is Judaism.

Louisville Lodge, No. 14, of Louisville, Ky., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, Nov. 30, 1913. Mr. Ralph Bamberger of Indianapolis, Past President of District Grand Lodge, No. 2, delivered the principal address.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by Emek Beracha Lodge, No. 61, of Fort Wayne, Ind., at the Temple on Nov. 23, 1913. Rabbi David Alexander of Toledo delivered an address on "The Emblem of Our Order." A social session was held at the conclusion of the address and several songs were rendered. Refreshments were served by a committee of ladies.

Denver Lodge, No. 171, of Denver, Colo., gave its first dance of the season at Marble Hall on Oct. 29, 1913. The affair was well attended, and an enjoyable evening was spent.

Denver Lodge, No. 171, of Denver, Colo., has shown much activity in the matter of preventing the defamation of the Jews in the city by means of moving picture shows. A special committee of the Lodge is active in this direction.

B'nai B'rith Day was observed by Harmony Lodge, No. 149, of Paducah, Ky., on Sunday, Nov. 23, 1913. Rabbi David Alexander of Toledo, O., former rabbi of Congregation Israel of Paducah, was the speaker of the occasion. The exercises were held at the Temple, and at the conclusion a reception was held at the Young People's Association building.

Colorado Springs Lodge No. 523 of Colorado Springs, Colo., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Monday, Nov. 24. Mr. Leon Block of Kansas City, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, delivered the address on the subject of "The Preamble of the I. O. B. B."

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Bradford Lodge, No. 745, was instituted on Nov. 16, 1913, in the city of Bradford, Pa.

Joshua Lodge, No. 23, of Philadelphia, Pa., sustained a heavy loss in the death of Brother Henry Wertheimer, who was for many years treasurer of the endowment fund of District Grand Lodge, No. 3.

Fairmont Lodge, No. 726, of Fairmont, W. Va., is progressing rapidly, having since its institution last March secured all available material in the community to be enrolled as members of the lodge. The lodge serves as the center for all Jewish activity in the community.

WHAT OUR LODGES ARE DOING.

Abraham Lippman Lodge, No. 672, of Pittsburgh, through its propaganda committee, has secured a large number of candidates, and arrangements are being made to have a class initiation in the near future. Brother Louis Sulzbacher of Braddock, Pa., secretary of the District Grand Lodge, will be the guest of honor on that occasion.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

The B'nai B'rith ball given under the auspices of Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal., on Wednesday evening, Nov. 12, 1913, was one of the best affairs given in the city by the lodge, and was greatly enjoyed by the large number who attended.

Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503 of Seattle, Wash., held a meeting on Nov. 13, 1913, for the nomination of officers for the ensuing term. After the transaction of business those attending the meeting were pleasantly entertained by Brother Julius Shafer, who gave an interesting talk on his trip abroad.

At a meeting of The Herzl Lodge No. 314, of Portland, Ore., held on Nov. 25th, Mr. Scott Sanders spoke on "The Origin, Growth and Future of Religion."

Lasker Lodge No. 370, of San Diego, Cal., met on Nov. 18, 1913, in regular session, at which occasion preparations were completed to receive the visiting Grand Lodge officers.

Ophir Auxiliary No. 2, Daughters of the Covenant, of San Francisco, held the last of its open meetings on Thursday, Nov. 27th, at which a class of candidates was initiated. All subsequent meetings, excepting those of a social nature, will be closed to the public.

The Ladies' Committee, composed of members from Columbia, Modin and Ophir Auxiliaries of the I. O. B. B., of San Francisco, entertained the Leo. N. Levi Youth's Auxiliary No. 1 on Wednesday evening, Nov. 5, 1913. Among the numbers on the program, aside from several excellent musical renditions, were addresses by Mr. Harry K. Wolff, Second Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, and I. J. Aschheim, Secretary of the District Grand Lodge.

The regular semi-monthly meeting of Rainier Lodge No. 627, of Seattle, was held on Nov. 13, 1913, at the club rooms. After the business session an interesting talk was given by Rabbi Koch on "Ritual Murder," followed by an instructive and pleasing paper by Harry Sigmund on "Current Events."

The meetings of Tacoma Lodge, No. 741, of Tacoma, Wash., are well attended, and much interest is displayed by the members. The Lodge has appointed a committee to take charge of the arrangements for a ball to be given some time in January. The election of officers will be held at a meeting in December.

The Daughters of the Covenant, auxiliary of the B'nai B'rith lodges of Portland, Ore., held a successful card party on December 1, 1913, in which a large number of the members participated. The proceeds will be devoted for the benefit of the hospital fund.

Rainier Lodge, No. 627, of Seattle, Wash., held a joint smoker with Tacoma Lodge, No. 741, of Tacoma, Wash., on Monday evening, December 8th, at their club rooms.

Brother David S. Hirschberg, a charter member of Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal., died on Nov. 22, 1913. Mr. Hirschberg was a native of Oakland, an attorney by profession, served as Grand President of District Grand Lodge No. 4, served as member of the Executive Committee of the Order, and was a member of several Constitution Grand Lodge conventions.

The funeral services were held by Rabbi Friedlander at the Masonic Temple and were attended by an immense gathering.

The 51st annual session of District Grand Lodge No. 4 will convene in Covenant Hall, B'nai B'rith building, San Francisco on Sunday, Feb. 15, 1914, at 10 a m

DISTRICT, NO. 5.

The General Committee of District Grand Lodge, No. 5, held a meeting at Raleigh, N. C., on Monday, Nov. 24. As a result of the meeting the former Leo N. Levi Lodge was re-established.

[illegible] Lodge, No. 68, of Richmond, Va., is planning a membership campaign, at the close of which it hopes to initiate 50 candidates at a rally meeting of the lodge.

The annual convention of District Grand Lodge, No. 5, will be held in Atlanta, Ga., in March, 1914, at the same time that the 25th anniversary of the Hebrew Orphans' Home will be celebrated. Prominent visitors from all over the South are expected to be present on these two occasions.

A new B'nai B'rith Lodge was instituted on Nov. 30, 1913, at Winston-Salem, N. C., to be known as Sadie Jacobs Lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

At a recent meeting of Saskatoon Lodge, No. 739, of Saskatoon, Sask., Canada, a class of four candidates was initiated by the degree team of the Lodge.

This year again as in former years the annual Thanksgiving dinner for the poor children of Saginaw, Mich., was given by Mr. Max Heavenrich, one of the leading members of Saginaw Lodge, No. 636. The event took place at the Elks Temple, and about 300 poor children were the guests of the well-known merchant.

At a meeting of Nebraska Lodge, No 354, of Omaha, Neb., held on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 16, 1913, Mr. Isadore Rees of the Omaha High School faculty delivered an address on "The Blood Accusation." Rabbi Frederick Cohn and Brothers Elgutter and Sher also spoke.

B'nai B'rith Day will be celebrated by the Chicago Lodges on Saturday evening, Jan. 17, 1914, at the Hotel La Salle. Arrangements for the celebration are in charge of the Central B'nai B'rith Council. Hon. Wm. B. Wilson, Secretary of the Department of Labor, Washington, and Hon. Simon Wolf, Past President of the Order, will be the speakers on the occasion. The entire Executive Commitee of the Order will be in attendance, as a meeting of the Executive Committee has been called for the following day.

At the annual meeting of David Fish Lodge, No. 130, of Chicago, scheduled for Dec. 15, 1913, an address on "Chanukah and Its Lessons" will be delivered by Dr. Tobias Schanfarber.

Julius Houseman Lodge, No. 238, of Grand Rapids, Mich., gave a banquet on Tuesday evening, Nov. 25. As a result of the affair a class of eight candidates was secured. Rabbi Eugene Mannheimer of Des Moines was the principal speaker and delivered an address on the work of the Order.

Dacotah Lodge No. 731 of Grand Forks, N. D., is making preparations for the annual meeting of the lodge, which will be held on the 21st inst., on which occasion it is expected to initiate a large class of candidates. At the close of the meeting a dance will be held.

Mesaba Lodge No. 673 of Virginia, Minn., held its annual meeting on Dec. 7, on which occasion the officers for the ensuing year were elected. The lodge is making arrangements to celebrate B'nai B'rith Day on Jan. 4 next, on which occasion it is expected to initiate a class of candidates.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Memphis Lodge, No. 35, of Memphis, Tenn., held its regular meeting on Sunday morning, Nov. 9, 1913, which proved to be one of the most largely attended meetings of the year, and the proceedings were full of interest. Short addresses by Rabbi Max Samfield, Leo Goodman and a general discussion by these and others, added interest to the meeting. Committees to solicit additional funds for the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital, and to secure new members and for other purposes, were appointed.

Adasa Lodge, No. 208, of Monroe, La., is making arrangements for the observance of B'nai B'rith Day on Jan. 12, 1914.

Rabbi L. J. Rothstein of Alexandria, La., reports a visit by himself and Brother M. Weiss, of that city to the adjacent towns of Glennora and Oakdale, where they secured six members to Rebecca Lodge of Alexandria, La.

On Sunday, Nov. 23, under the leadership of Sol F. Klarberg, the lodge at Jonesboro, Ark., which for some time has been dormant, was reorganized with a membership of 30. Prominent members of the Order from Little Rock were present for the opening exercises.

Steps are being taken to organize another lodge of the Order in the city of Dallas, Tex. The new Lodge will be an outgrowth of the parent Lodge and will in no sense conflict with the older organization. It will serve rather to supplement the charitable endeavors and good work of the parent body. The work of organization is under the direction of Brother Arthur L. Kramer, President of District Grand Lodge, No. 7, whose aim is to form a new lodge to be composed mostly of the younger men of the Jewish faith.

Carrying out the already popular idea of extending the membership of Lodges to smaller and surrounding communities, Jonas Meyer of Monroe, La., a member of the General Committee of District No. 7, together with Rabbi Pollack, Mr. Abe Kaplan, and Mr. Sugar, made a pilgrimage to Bastrop, La., and secured eight new members for Monroe Lodge.

In the afternoon services were held by Rabbi Pollack at the temple and a very impressive and inspiring address was delivered by him on "Judaism's Ideal in Relation to Humanity." Not only the members of the Jewish congregation but a large number of Bastrop's representative citizens gathered to listen to the address.

The visitors were entertained at the homes of Mr. Mose Wolf and Mr. August Leopold, who contributed very much toward making the trip a pleasure as well as a success. A similar trip is to be made to Farmersville in the near future, to be followed by excursions to other surrounding towns.

Herzl Lodge, No. 608, of Houston, Texas, has decided to give a ball for the benefit of the members and their friends.

The Origin of the Jewish Calendar

E. M. Knobel, a well known astronomer and oriental scholar, has announced the solution of a problem which has hitherto baffled scientific research. The problem has been to discover the method in which the Jewish calendar was regulated prior to its reform in the fourth century C. E.

Until the discovery of the Aramaic papyri at Syene, translated by Prof. Sayce, and A. E. Cowley, there was no definite knowledge of this subject, but the Syene papyri contained a number of contracts dated according to the Hebrew and Egyptian reckoning. As the Egyptian calendar was well known, it only remained to find a common denominator, as it were.

This was the problem upon which Mr. Knobel set to work, and in a lecture delivered at the Royal Astronomical Society, of which he has twice been president, he reported the successful completion of his task.

The key to the solution was given by the circumstance that two of the Jewish dates were situated exactly thirty Jewish years apart. From this it became clear that, at that time, as at the present day, the Jewish calendar was essentially a lunar one, made up of months running from new moon to new moon—that is to say, actual lunations. This lunar year was made to conform to the solar year by interpolating a thirteenth month occasionally, but the occasions when this correction was made followed a definite rule. This rule is based on what is known as the Metonic cycle, after its supposed discoverer, Meton. It is upon this rule that the "golden numbers" used in the prayer book rules for finding Easter, are based, since nineteen solar years contain almost exactly a complete number of lunar months.

The great interest of Mr. Knobel's paper lies here, that he showed that the Jews were able to compute their calendar by the use of this cycle more than a generation before the time of Meton. The earliest date on the papyri in question is the year 471 B. C. E. The date of Meton is assumed to be about 433 B. C. E., but Mr. Knobel was able to show that this Jewish calendar was in use earlier still. For there was a partial eclipse of the moon in the seventh year of Cambyses, the King of Persia, for which we have the date, according to the Jewish reckoning, and this falls into line precisely with the calendar dates given by the Syene papyri.

No doubt at one time the Jews determined their months from the actual observation of the new moon in the sky. This was quite possible so long as the temple was standing and the Jews were in their own small country. When they were scattered, after the conquest of Judah by Nebuchadnezzar, into countries so far apart as Babylon and Upper Egypt, the only way by which they could secure consistency in their calendars was by adopting some reasonably accurate method of computation.

The Jewish colony at Syene (the modern Aswan) appears to have been composed of some of the refugees who fled from Judah after the murder of Gedaliah, the son of Ahikan, under the leadership of Johanan, the son of Kareah, taking the prophet Jeremiah with them. (See Jeremiah, Chapters XI-XIII) as recently discovered papyri have shown, they built a temple there by permission of the Persian governors, which temple was destroyed by the Egyptians when, for a time they threw off the Persian yoke.

DROP 1,600 JEW STUDENTS.

Following the ritual trial at Kieff, 1,600 Jewish students of both sexes in the schools of dentistry at Kieff, have by order of the governor, been served with notices of expulsion, on the ground that they possess no legal right of domicile in Kieff.

THE IMMIGRATION LAW.

Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor, has opened fire upon the immigration law, which he thinks should be changed so as to give more publicity to proceedings under the law and curb the arbitrary power of inspectors. The evidence upon which immigrants are deported, he says, is often flimsy and the opportunity of the immigrant to make a defense is insufficient.

There have been many mutterings in this country against the operation of the immigration laws, though the general principles upon which they rest are well established. Cases involving extreme hardship often arise, and there is a widespread impression that much of this hardship is unjust to the immigrant and wholly unnecessary for the protection of this country. Ignorance of the law, language and customs of America makes the immigrant peculiarly open to oppression while the Immigration Bureau is both prosecutor and judge.

In such a situation it is the duty of the United States to be solicitous of the rights of these people, and every reasonable safeguard should be thrown around them. There can be nothing unreasonable in the demand of the Assistant Secretary for greater publicity in the proceedings against immigrants and for a less one-sided trial of their cases. —St. Louis Republic.

Gentlemen:—On page 9 of your November issue appeared an article under the caption "Col. Harry Cutler Honored." The last paragraph reads, "Colonel Cutler is the only Jew who has ever been elected to the command of a militia regiment in the United States."

I know of my own knowledge that this is an error, for Col. H. P. Bush, who I believe is a Past President of District No. 4, was colonel of the First Regiment Infantry National Guard of California. He died some years ago. This regiment was the first to volunteer for foreign service during the Spanish-American War, and over ten per cent of it was composed of Jews, most of whom, including the writer, were awarded Special Congressional Medals of Honor on recommendation of President McKinley. I have no doubt that there has been a number of Jews who have commanded militia regiments in the United States.

Respectfully,
M. A. NATHAN.

Protests against Rumania's wicked persecution of the Jews are obtaining formidable dimensions. It has been an international scandal for 35 years and has broken Rumanian pledges to Austria-Hungary, England, France, Germany, Italy and Turkey. A congress is to be held at Berlin next January to prepare for action, and this country is one of the seven great countries that will send delegates there. Secretary Bryan only followed the just example of Secretary Hay when the former protested to Rumania last summer against its violation of its treaty engagements in regard to the rights of Rumanian Jews.—Spokane (Wash.) NEWS FROM LONDON.

have found a leader and supporter in Mr. H. S. Polak, whose father is honored and well known in the city of London. Mr. Polak is at present in prison for his zeal, but it is a fine thing to see a Jew demanding political liberty for those that have it not. Mr. Polak may be blamed for his methods, but the cause is so good that it covers a multitude of errors. Political liberty is one such cause; the world peace movement is another. Here, too, Jews should be in the forefront of the work, and members of the Order more especially. Their ideal of brotherly love and harmony may quite well be applied to the national systems of the world. Beating swords into ploughshares and turning spears into pruning hooks was a picture that a Jew gave the world. Jews should therefore help the world to realize it.

The Work of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives

Twenty-four years ago the thought of a free Jewish Hospital for Consumptives was given birth. Denver was then a city in the making with about a third of its present population, settled by sturdy pioneers in quest of fortune, and many a miner had come down from the hills to transmute his precious ores into stately structures. The fame of Colorado's Capitol City, nestling in a valley flooded with sunshine, protected from the extremes of heat and cold, soon attracted not only the ambitious seeker of wealth, but the enfeebled searcher for health, who, if he had not the strength to gather gold, could at least breathe the air with healing on its wings. No wonder Colorado was a land of promise toward which tens of thousands turned their faces with the confidence of the Psalmist of old: "I lift up mine eyes to the mountains, whence cometh my help."

In this hegira journeyed hundreds of penniless sufferers, whose emaciated frames and hacking coughs and hollow, purple cheeks were sadly eloquent of close confinement in crowded tenement cells. Like gaunt spectres they walked the streets of Denver, begging for work and finding none, subsisting for the most part on the necessities provided by our Relief Society, sleeping in the cramped quarters of unsanitary cottages, or living in the dingy room of a cheap boarding house, where they innocently spun death shrouds for their little children and loved ones. Witnessing their pitiable plight, I appealed to the sympathy of my congregation, and determined to enlist its support in building a hospital. Warm hearts quickly responded; $42,000 were collected, a half block of ground was purchased, a substantial building was constructed, and the president of the congregation was made the president of the hospital. And as Abraham at the cross-roads, under the oak at Hebron, built the first sheltering inn for weary pilgrims, so the Jews of Denver built there, gateway between the East and West, the first free Consumptive's Sanatorium.

We fondly hoped that we could nurse back to health all who came and cried for help. But our dream was doomed to the disappointment of a rude awakening. The panic of 1893, especially disastrous in Colorado, because accompanied by the demonetization of silver, swept fortunes to the winds; the rich man became poor and were painfully reminded that charity begins at home and must for a while remain there. The hospital building over-looking the splendid woods and shaded groves of our picturesque City Park, commanding unobstructed view of 200 miles of snowy summits, stood like Rachel of old, weeping for her children and refusing to be comforted because they were not. It was a promise broken in the middle; a memory of better days, until that great international brotherhood of benevolence, the B'nai B'rith, flung an arch over the cloud-curtained skies and lent another fadeless hue to its encircling bow of love.

The Order opened the doors of the Hospital, and the vision of the little band of Denver enthusiasts came true. The impulse given by the District Lodges and by the Jews of the nation induced the Constitution Grand Lodge to become sponsor for the Hospital, to make of it an independent corporation, and to increase the assessment gradually to forty cents for every American member, which now amounts to $10,000.00 annually. During the year 1913, the various Federated Jewish Charities contributed $25,000.00; the National Council of Jewish Women $1,200.00, and several fraternal organizations $2,200.00. But the major support of the hospital, which requires $85,000.00 annually, is drawn from individual philanthropy.

At first the institution accommodated sixty patients, but the demand for entrance became so urgent that the Guggenheim Brothers consented to erect a pavilion, which is used exclusively for men, enlarging our capacity to ninety patients. Then the Woman's Pavilion, with its circular verandas, was built by the subscriptions of a host of Jews, now enabling the hospital to care for one hundred and thiry patients. It was dedicated in 1909, together with the cosy Chapel, the gift of Adolph Lewisohn, of New York.

Dr. William S. Friedman.

Three hundred patients are treated during the year with an average of seven months' residence for each. They come from every quarter of our land, although New York alone has sent us one-third and Chicago one-fifth of the 2,500 patients who have been admitted. One-half were between twenty and thirty years of age, one-fourth between thirty and forty, and the remaining one-fourth were little children or older men and women. The proportion of men to women has been two to one. Women are less exposed to tuberculosis than men; they are freer from industrial hazards and from the vitiated atmosphere of certain trades. Besides, women are less eager to enter institutions; to break home ties and the familiar scenes of endeared associations.

Our inmates are under the direction of the Superintendent, the first and second Assistant Medical Superintendent, the Medical Advisory Board of five, a staff of thirty consulting physicians and eight nurses. And medical supervision does not cease when patients leave the hospital. Ex-patients who remain in Denver may claim treatment of the hospital externe, who averages fifty calls a month; and may summon our visiting nurse who, during the past year, paid 2,476 visits to individuals and families, or about six visits a day.

It is interesting to note that most of the physicians have located in Denver because they themselves were once afflicted or threatened with the disease they are now trying to exterminate in others. And the same is true of physicians everywhere in the high and dry and sunny altitudes of the cities of the Rockies. The proverbial disagreement between doctors is at an end in Denver, so far as Colorado's climate is concerned, for most of the doctors are living evidences of its efficiency. All physicians are a unit in agreeing that sunshine, pure air, wholesome food and existence in the open are life's elixir for the consumptive. The United States Weather Bureau reports that there are few sections that compare with Colorado in its almost perennial sunshine. Denver enjoys 305 cloudless days during the year; the average annual rain-fall is fourteen inches, while in the Atlantic States the sun is obscured more than half of the year, and the precipitation is forty-nine inches. The mile-high altitude impels deeper respiration—twenty per cent more of air must be inhaled to obtain the requisite amount of oxygen—quickens sluggish circulation, stimulates impaired nutrition, and consequently upbuilds the entire system. The examination of Colorado herds of cattle shows five per cent tubercular implantation, in comparison with fifty per cent in Eastern herds. The climate is without doubt a vital factor in the remarkable results achieved by the hospital. More than one-half, to be exact, three-fifths of all the patients admitted to the hospital recovered from tuberculosis or were greatly improved; in one-fifth there was apparent cessation of the progress of the disease, and of the remaining one-fifth, who were advanced consumptives sent to Denver by the faulty diagnosis of physicians, a number died before they were in the hospital a month, and the others were unimproved.

It should be clearly understood that the hospital was never intended to be a home for incurables. If it were, a fatal injustice would be done the incurable consumptive and the hospital would sadly fail of its purpose. The sudden change from sea level to a highly rarefied atmosphere, with the severe strain and wearing hardship of long travel, are apt to aggravate tuberculous complications and hasten death. Misery loves the company of wife and child, and certainly the sick poor feel the anguish of separation as keenly as luxury does. The privilege of passing the closing hours at home with loved ones at the bedside is a consolation all the more precious and sacred to the incurable consumptive for whom life offers nothing else. Colorado as a last chance is a lost chance.

Besides, incurable consumptives exercise a very injurious influence upon those in early stages of the disease. To place the ill-starred victims of the valley of the shadow of death in hourly contact with those whose hearts beat high with hope, is a pitiable attempt at performing service. Even the staunch and strong of mind and body feel a diminution of vital activity in the presence of the dying. Good cheer is indispensable to a healthful and happy life. It is a magic wand to the consumptive. The constant effect of depressing mental suggestion is fatal to recovery. Nor dare we make a plague center of Colorado—the paradise of the early consumptive—or invite State or Municipal restrictive measures which may bar the curable with the incurable. Since Colorado cannot welcome America's consumptive million, it is the imperative duty of each city or commonwealth to care for its own incurables. Every incurable consumptive admitted to the hospital excludes a curable on the waiting list, and, in turn, may make of him an incurable.

In addition, a flagrant wrong is perpetrated upon the people of Denver by sending us advanced consumptives. Although sympathetic men and women are everywhere hurrying on errands of mercy, our Relief Societies are always ready for the hands of the receiver; and adequate aid, is, of course, impossible. It is sentimentalism run wild; it is philanthropy perverted, to transport incurable consumptives to Colorado. There are unthinking individuals and sometimes an organization, that pursues the policy of shifting its own responsibility upon us, and there are even those who still consider that by ridding themselves of the sad burden, they have made a shrewd bargain. Experts everywhere are again insisting that the incurable consumptive remain at home, while strongly advising consumptives in the early stages to seek a favorable climate.

The primary mission of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives was to give the poor, absolutely without cost, the same opportunity the rich enjoy in our health-restoring climate. But the character of our patients soon convinced us how incomplete would be the work, if having arrested the disease, the patients were sent out stranded into the world. Many are recent immigrants unfamiliar with our native tongue, and the great majority are accustomed to vocations which they cannot follow without imminent danger of relapse. The generosity of Mrs. Joseph E. Shoenberg and your own Mrs. Hermon August, whose philanthropy has been felt in several cities, in Cleveland, St. Louis, and notably in Denver, built, a little over a year ago, a classic, white-stone, fire-proof structure, a Memorial to beloved husband and father, Joseph E. Shoenberg, our former Trustee, whose soul was knit in the Hospital's welfare. A graded school holds sessions in spacious rooms, and the patients with their hereditary thirst for learning eagerly avail themselves of its advantages. Little children, already handicapped in life's race, no longer carry the additional weight of enforced backwardness, and men and women are given the incentive to fit themselves for vocations otherwise beyond their reach.

But the problems of the hospital are by no means ended here. Sixty per cent of the discharged patients are advised to remain in Colorado or in a similar climate. Work must be found for the new man and woman, something often radically different from that which had been done before, and in which consumption was contracted. The National Employment and Relief Agent of the Hospital, renders valuable service, but it is extremely difficult to secure the positions the patients want, because such positions are already overcrowded. And so an industrial school has also been established in the Shoenberg Memorial so that many patients may substitute for their old indoor employment, a new outdoor healthful pursuit, which will insure permanence to the benefits received. Classes have been organized in drafting, drawing and sign-painting, electric wiring and telegraphy, typewriting and stenography, and women are given particular instruction in domestic science and dress-making.

Moreover the Joseph E. Shoenberg Memorial contains a carefully selected, well adapted Library of 1,500 volumes, with a large reading and writing room; a Recreation Hall with moving-picture machine, player-piano, and various games; a stage for lectures, concerts and theatricals. This is no mere luxury. Entertainment and amusement are at least as essential for the health and happiness of the sick as for the sound, and contribute largely to the cheerful atmosphere and kindly spirit which characterizes most of our unfortunate inmates. The equipment of the Shoenberg Memorial was supplied by one of your townsmen, Hermon August. And what merits especial emphasis and highest praise is the rare fact that this unique and far-reaching social service of the Hospital is conducted without a dollar's expense to the institution. Hermon August has permanently endowed the Joseph E. Shoenberg Memorial.

On the day of the dedication of the Joseph E. Shoenberg Memorial, the great heart of Louis D. Shoenberg, once a citizen of Denver, presented to the Hospital "The Dudley C. Shoenberg Memorial Farm," a tribute to his only son, whom God had summoned to the realms of eternal light and life, just as he was crossing the threshold of youth. Those who knew Dudley and loved the gentleness, the tender sympathy and unaffected simplicity of his sweet nature, realize how significant and singularly appropriate was the father's gift of the Dudley C. Shoenberg Memorial Farm.

The Farm is eight miles from the center of the city; consists of 70 acres of highly fertile soil, with modern sanitary brick buildings, and is stocked with choice cattle and poultry—all the free-will offering of Louis D. Shoenberg. The purest products are thus supplied to the patients.

And now to perfect the work of the Hospital there has come forward, as usual, the modest and compassionate prince of philanthropy, whose bounty is known everywhere and who has enriched the institution not only with his generous gifts of money, but with years of painstaking thought; who has seen it grow from a stripling to a sheltering oak nursed into strength by storms. I refer to our honored president, Samuel Grabfelder, who, during the coming spring, will build and completely equip that greatest of all present needs of the Hospital, a model Medical Building, including examination rooms, laboratories, drug room, X Ray Department, animal quarters for experimental purposes, and a Medical Library. Inadequate facilities have all along prevented thorough research work; but with the Grabfelder Medical Building we may await results in original investigation that will prove a priceless boon to the human race.

The group of buildings, constructed at a cost of $300,000, and standing on two blocks of ground, gives but a faint idea of the real worth of the Hospital. Dead figures do not symbol live values, and figures are often juggled to suit the temper of the statistician. There is no uniform system of hospital bookkeeping. You cannot count the cost of human souls in dollars and cents. When I read reports of institutions that boast of low per capita cost I grieve that life is so cheap; and I know from such rating that something is wrong; that souls are dear and that cheapness is always at the sacrifice of efficiency and humane service. Not the least that can be done for the poor consumptive, but the most for his lasting health and future welfare, should be the watchword.

It may or may not be true that the per capita cost of patients in the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives is slightly higher than in several other tuberculous sanatoria, but there can be no doubt that there is no consumptives' hospital in the world whose scope is so wide and embracing as the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives. There is no other hospital that so lovingly provides for the physical, mental and spiritual well-being of its patients; that employs not only the interne but the externe; not only the house-nurse but the visiting home-nurse; that cares for the patient not only within the hospital, but that secures work for him after he has left the hospital, and even supplies him with a Loan Fund if he is able to embark in business for himself. No there is no other hospital that besides giving the patients the most wholesome food and the best of out-of-door sleeping accommodations and engaging experts in every department, employs teachers for sick children and recent immigrants, educates in healthy trades, cheers with helpful entertainment, comforts with spiritual instruction and floods with the light of joy and a new hope the darkened lives of impoverished sufferers.

The work of the National Jewish Hospital cannot be measured by the ordinary method. True, during the fourteen years of its blessed existence, it has harbored 2,500 patients, and has saved more than 2,000 from certain death. It has not only rescued these men and women, but it has restored them to economic independence and has reunited with his own many a sole supporter of a family which otherwise would have become pensioners of our Relief Societies, and whose children would have entered our orphan asylums, as the Jewish Charities of Cincinnati have testified. The Hospital thus stands in the first rank of new and old constructive Jewish philanthropy—it helps the poor to help themselves.

The Hospital has not only prevented parents from infecting their children and children's children, but every ex-patient of the hospital enlists as a trained soldier in the war against the White Plague and wields an influence in staying its progress that cannot be over-estimated. So the Hospital sends out medical missionaries who usually live amid environments where there is imperative call for their presence and example. As a pioneer in the work it has given inspiration to a score of local sanatoria, and many institutions throughout our land have profited by its long-tried and approved methods. It depends upon you and the favored Jews of our country whether you will give practical encouragement to the aims and ideals of the Hospital—a witness to the truth that Judaism is first in all that makes for the better life and loves to translate creed into conduct.

Naturally, the Hospital has taken a guiding hand in that battle which is more destructive of human life than wars, calamities and contagious diseases combined, which counts among the stricken over a million of our citizens, and which annually reaps its grim harvest of 150,000, or one-eighth of all who succumb to death. We cannot compute with exact accuracy the financial loss entailed by tuberculosis—five hundred millions a year, or five dollars for every man, woman and child in the nation is a conservative estimate. Yet what is this stupendous sum when compared with the families broken up, the lives wrecked in their prime, the suffering, misery and wretchedness that accompany the disease.

The National Jewish Hospital is lucid illustration of the control and final conquest of tuberculosis by scientific application. We, of course, shall not live to see the day when all tubercle bacilli will be annihilated, but the decrease in the death rate of twenty-four per cent in the past ten years, is proof that the blighting implantation may be entirely neutralized by strengthening the soil in which the vegetable parasite flourishes. We must do our share in raising the low standard of living, implying as it does diminished vitality, unsanitary surroundings, insufficient food and inadequate clothing. Justice and Righteousness—Zedakah, is the remedy for the disease. However, until Justice and Righteousness—Zedakah become universal, there will be urgent need for Gemiluth Hasodem—love, self-sacrifice and personal service in the support of the Hospital and similar sanatoria.

I know that the Jews of Cleveland, as well as of many other cities, have built their own hospitals and are giving liberally to their own local charities. None can withhold from you the full measure of unstinted praise. But, bear in mind, that the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives is not a Denver institution; it belongs no more to Denver than it does to Cleveland or to the sister cities of our land; it is the property of the Jews of the nation. It was located in Denver not because Denver was eager for a National Hospital, but because poor consumptives from every section went there and were sent there, and are there and crave for loving care. Denver is carrying the burden,—a blessing, that belongs to all, and in which each should have a part. And the early consumptive has been amply justified in his choice of residence. You can hear the story told by a thousand lips, the story of abandoned hope and abject despair turned to gratitude and cheer and a life of usefulness.

Like unto the prophet of old, the hand of the Lord is upon our hospital which is set down in the midst of the valley which is full of dry bones. From the four winds, from thousands of American Jews, has come the spirit which has breathed upon these slain ones that they may live, an exceeding great army. They have come up out of their graves and have been restored to their own. They rise up and call you blessed.

There is no worthier cause in philanthropy than the maintenance of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives; none whose appeal should stir us to quicker response.

All honor to the distinguished Trustees and members who have come from far and near to attend our Annual Meeting. All honor to the loyal men and women in every city and hamlet who willingly give their time and their treasure to this life-saving cause. They form a holy brotherhood—a Hebra Kedusha—who find their reward in the satisfaction which the world cannot give and which the world cannot take away.

CO-OPERATION OF RABBIS.

The committees on Religious Endeavor and Intellectual Advancement of District Grand Lodge No. 1 sent the following communication to the rabbis within the District:

Reverend & Dear Sir: The I. O. B. B., with those activities you are doubtless acquainted, asks your aid and co-operation in creating propaganda for the work it is doing for Jews and Jewry, not alone in America, but over the entire world. We have today lodges in every continent of the globe, where we are fighting prejudice and race hatred, as well as all slander and crimes against our brethren wherever they may be found.

Every Rabbi should be a member of the Order for the sake of the good that could thereby be accomplished. That, however, is aside from the purpose of this letter, which is written to enlist your moral support. To this end every Rabbi in a given district is being asked to assist in our uplift work by delivering a B'nai B'rith address at any one of his services which he may prefer during the present season.

Will you not be one of those to help forward this international work? If you are unwilling or unable to devote an entire talk to this subject, will you not, at least, speak on it for five or ten minutes at one or more of your services? Kindly let me know when you expect to deliver the address, so that proper notice may be taken of same. Any detailed information as to the plan and scope of the Order will be gladly furnished you upon application.

Trusting that our efforts at propaganda will appeal to you, and that we may be favored with your valued services, I am

Faithfully yours,

JEW PRESIDENT OF SWITZERLAND.

The American Israelite, in its editorial columns of December 19, reports: "The Great Council of Switzerland on December 11 elected the former Vice-President of the National Council, Dr. Arthur Hoffmann of St. Gall, as President of the Republic for 1914." If that report is correct, we have at last succeeded in securing a Jewish president of a republic.

JEWISH RELIGIOUS EDUCATION ASSOCIATION OF OHIO SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The seventh annual convention of the Jewish Religious Educational Association of Ohio was in session at Columbus from December 29 to 31. Rabbi Louis D. Gross, President of the Association presided, and a large number of teachers from all over the State were in attendance.

One of the most important features of the meeting were two institutes conducted under the auspices of the Teachers' Institute of the Hebrew Union College. The first institute in 3 lessons was conducted by Dr. J. Z. Lauterbach on the "Talmudic Period and the Growth of Jewish Tradition." It was a remarkably clear presentation of the development of the oral law and the origin of the Sadducees and Pharisees.

The second institute, conducted by Dr. Henry Englander, was on Biblical History and Literature from the exile through the Maccabean period. He showed how many of the books of the Bible were the outgrowth of the political and social conditions of the times, and suggested many other ideas useful in teaching this period.

A number of valuable papers were presented. Rabbi David Lefkowitz of Dayton speaking on the "Religion of Young Childhood," made clear that the child is by nature religious.

Other papers were delivered by Miss Rosalind Schanfarber of Columbus, on "Discipline in the Sunday School," and by Miss Bernadine Elgutter of Toledo on the "Teachers' Responsibility." Miss Anna Berger of Cleveland ably discussed the Adolescent in the Sabbath School, and Miss Lena Schulman of Dayton dealt interestingly with the Circulating Library in the Sabbath School. "The teaching of Hebrew in a Reform Sabbath School," was the theme of a paper by Mr. M. Krohngold of Akron. A Religious School Exhibit, consisting of models, pictures and reference books, was provided by the Department of Synagog and School Extension and conducted by Rabbi George Zepin.

Under the title, "What is Religious Education?" Rabbi Jos. S. Kornfeld of Columbus, O., pointed out the duty of implanting in the Jewish child a Jewish point of view.

The various papers as well as the institutes aroused considerable helpful discussion, which was participated in by many of those present.

An open meeting was held on Monday evening, Dec. 29, in B'nai B'rith Israel Temple. The following program was enjoyed by a large gathering:

Symposium: "Judaism and Life;" Invocation, Dr. Henry Englander; "Judaism and Industrial Ethics," Rabbi David Alexander, Toledo; "Judaism and Philanthropy," Rabbi Jacob Mielziner, Cincinnati; "Judaism and Education," Rabbi Louis D. Gross, Akron; "Judaism and the Ideal," Dr. David Philipson, Cincinnati.

This was followed by an informal reception tendered by the B'nai Israel Alumni Association.

The local congregation gave a banquet and dance on Tuesday evening to the delegates and visitors at the Progress Club, who were hospitably entertained by the Jewish community in numerous other ways during their stay.

B'NAI B'RITH LIBRARY AT THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS.

Dr. D. S. Blondheim, formerly of the University of Illinois, has succeeded in making for the University of Illinois a reasonably inclusive collection of Jewish books. He published recently a pamphlet reciting how it came about that such a library was created at the University, stating therein that the officers of the District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., recognizing the importance of affording Jewish students the opportunity of developing a Jewish intellectual life, provided the necessary funds for the purchase of books, thus carrying out in a practical manner one of the ideals of the Order. The fund placed at the disposal of the University authorities by the B'nai B'rith of District No. 6 has enabled the University to purchase the beginning of a useful Jewish library, which is being added to by gifts from private individuals, for the most part members of the Order and by annual contributions of the District Grand Lodge.

BY PROF. DR. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph.D.

III.

The most cruel of all laws discriminating aaginst Jews was the restriction placed on marriages. If, however, we wish to understand this condition thoroughly, we ought to view the wider subject of Jewish disabilities. To my knowledge this has not been done comprehensively up to this day. These disabilities may be divided into four classes: political, economic, social and religious.

The political disabilities begin with the edict of Ravenna, issued by the Roman emperor, Theodosius I, 380. This law requires a religious test for all who wish to hold public office. They are disqualified if they do not profess the Christian religion. It was not directed against the Jews particularly, but it affected the Jews as a matter of course. These disabilities still continue in Russia and Roumania by direct legislation, and as a force of tradition in western Europe and even in America. Of all German states, for instance, only the grand-duchy of Baden, had a Jew as minister. He was Moritz Elstaetter (1827-1905), who was at the head of the department of finance for twenty-five years. Even in this liberal state, which preceded all the states of Germany in the improvement of the condition of the Jews, by the "constitutions edict" of 1806, it is safe to say that no minister of the interior would have risked appointing a Jew as the head of a Bezirksamt, and surely in Prussia where Jews have risen to the high position of Oberlandesgerichtsrat in the department of justice, a Jew might just as well expect to become king as to be appointed as "Landrat," which is the position of head of a county. Similarly in Austria we had various Jews who rose to the rank of "Oberlandesgerichtsrat;" others occupied the position of head of a department in the ministries, one of them, Ludwig Doczy, baptized since, having been the right hand man of Count Andrassy, minister of foreign affairs, but no one ever was appointed "Bezirkshauptman," which is equal to the rank of "Landrat" in Prussia.

Economic disabilities of the Jews might easily fill a book, and would make very interesting reading, illustrating both the cruelty and the folly of statesmen. The strongest illustration of this sad chapter of Jewish history is an instruction, issued by Markgrave Albrecht of Brandenburg in 1462 to his deputies who had to collect a special tax from the Jews of the German Empire. The markgrave, who occupied what we might call today the position of minister of finance, says in his circular, "When a Roman king or emperor is crowned, it is his right to confiscate all the property of the Jews and to kill them, leaving only a small number as a specimen. To follow this subject up in detail is impossible, but just as an illustration I would quote a case in Frankfort a. M., which occupied the courts for over thirty years, from 1740 to 1771, and (one might say of course) was decided against the Jews. Some Jewish grocers sold flour. The governing senate of Frankfurt found that this act was a violation of the "Judenstaettigkeit" of 1616 which prohibited that Jews engage in dealing with produce. About the same time an order of the senate prohibited that Jews sell sugar and coffee because the same law prohibited that they deal in "aromata," and the law department of the University of Goettingen had declared sugar and coffee as spices. As late as 1824 we find in Frankfurt such restrictions. Very numerous also are the social disabilities. It was the object of the church, from the time she obtained control of the Roman Empire, to erect a barrier between Jews and Christians. Canons of the various church councils made laws which prohibited that Jews and non-Jews dwell under the same roof, that they frequent public bath-houses together or eat at the same table. The two strongest expressions of this were the "Yellow Badge" and the ghetto. The first law was promulgated for the first time by the Lateran council of 1215. The designation is not exact, because the church did not demand a yellow badge, but merely that the Jews wear some distinguishing mark on their outer garments. It was not the merit of the church that this law was abrogated. As late as 1740, King Charles III of Sicily, wishing to improve the condition of the country, readmitted the Jews who had been expelled in 1492, and one of the conditions which the Jews made was that the ignominious law of the yellow badge which invited the mob to attacks, be abrogated. The king consented, but the pope strongly protested. The ghetto is found occasionally in medieval times, but it was not until 1555 that Pope Paul IV declared the institution an ecclesiastic law for all Christianity. The last ghetto in Europe existed in Rome, and its walls fell, when September 20, 1870, the Italian troops marched into the Eternal City, and made an end of the papal dominion.

Religious disabilities were based on the principle that Jewish worship should not be public. About 600, Reccared, King of the Visigoths in Spain, ordered that the Jews should not sing Psalms at funerals. After the battle on the White Mountain near Prague 1620, which decided the defeat of Protestantism in Bohemia, the dean of the Catholic Church of Teplitz complains in a report to his bishop of the "roaring and the bellowing" of the Jews in the synagogue, which disturbs the services of the church. The landgrave of Hesse, a very strong Protestant, orders in 1695 that the synagogues must be on side streets in rooms which do not front on the street and that the sound of the services must not be heard outside. In 1826, when the Jews of Vienna for the first time after their expulsion, were permitted to build a synagogue, one of he conditions was that the front must look like an ordinary house. In order to be just, it must be stated that a similar order was imposed on the Protestants. As late as 1852, when the Jews shortly before readmitted to Nuremberg, after their expulsion in 1490, for the first time held services in a rented hall, the city council made it a condition of the permit that no sound must be heard on the street.

It is difficult to decide which class of these disabilities the restriction on marriages belongs. The main object was the same which Pharaoh of old promulgated nearly 3,500 years ago: "Let us deal wisely with them lest they multiply." We find this law in various forms. Usually it was merely implied by the Schutzbrief conditions. A Jew could not settle in any country without a special permit. Children might live with their parents, but as soon as they married and established a household of their own, they had to obtain a Schutzbrief for themselves. In some countries the government laid down a fixed number for the Jews who would be permitted to take up residence, though in other countries it was left entirely to the will of the sovereign how many jews he would admit, but the theory was maintained everywhere that their number should not be increased. This is stated indirectly in the Prussian regulations which remained in force up to 1812. It was declared that only one child of each family could marry. Under special circumstances when a young couple could prove that they possessed at least 1,000 thalers they could marry even if a brother or a sister had married previously, but they had to pay double the amount of the usual license. In the beginning of the 19th century, a Prussian Jew had to carry on litigation in the court for several years, when he wished to marry his daughter, because the authorities declared that he had received the exceptional privilege of marrying as the second child of the family, and if such a second child had the right to perpetuate his right, the law would defeat its own ends, and the Jewish families would be doubled with each generation. The king finally decided that this law was antiquated and should not be carried out strictly, and in 1812 it was definitely abrogated. In Bavaria, however, the law of June 10, 1813, while intended to improve the condition of the Jews, still maintained this principle. It required that no Jew should marry without obtaining a special permit, called a "Matrikel," and this piece of medieval legislation survived even the storms of 1848, and was not abolished until 1861. In the kingdom of Bohemia, the so-called "Numerus Clausus" obtained since the days of Maria Theresa, 1704-80. Her father had ordered in general that any Jew who would marry without special consent would be publicly flogged and sent out of the country. In a later order this punishment was extended to include the rabbi who would perform the ceremony. Maria Theresa had in 1774 ordered the expulsion of all the Jews from the provinces of Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia. In two unfortunate wars she had lost the greater part of Silesia to Frederick the Great, and a scapegoat had to be found. However, before the beginning of the war, Baron von Seherr-Thoss, the commander of the fortress of Spielberg in Bruenn, a persecutor of the Jews, who before the beginning of the war, exacted from them a contribution of 40,000 florins, implored the empress to relieve him of his command, because he could not hold the fortress against an enemy, and he did not wish to end his long military carĕer in disgrace, yet the defeat was ascribed to Jewish spies. The empress ordered the expulsion of the Jews, and owing to her independent character it was very difficult to make her change this cruel decree, which would have sent nearly 150,000 souls into exile. When she finally yielded, she merely suspended her order and allowed the suspension to stand, but it is significant as an evidence of her calmness in later years, that during the war of seven years, 1756-1763, the charge of treason was not repeated, and in one instance it was expressly stated that the charge leveled against the Jews in 1774 was unfounded. In connection with these events, however, a new census was taken, and it was declared that the number of families then tolerated, should not be increased, nor should any Jew be permitted to reside in a place, where up to that time Jews had not resided. It was found that Moravia had 54,000 Jewish families, divided into 53 congregations.

No Jew could marry, therefore, unless a place in his town became vacant. The applicants had to prove that they were residents of that particular town, that they were twenty-four years of age, of good repute, possessed both secular and religious education, and owned property worth 600 florins, which in the absence of real estate, they might produce in cash. The decision rested with the provincial government, which again acted upon the report of the subordinate authorities, the "Amtmann," who was appointed by the landed proprietor.

The legal situation is very complex. Since the 13th century the control of the Jews was transferred from the emperor, who represented the federal government, to lower instances. In our case it was the king of Bohemia, who not later than the 14th century exercised the privilege of the "Judenschutz." He transferred it again to what we might term, vassals, the lords who owned landed estates. The landed proprietor was to a certain extent a sovereign. He appointed an official, Amtmann, or Oberamtmann, who united in his person both the executives and the judiciary factions. A very important source of his revenue, formed the various disabilities of the Jews.

If a Jew died, a family became vacant, and all persons entitled within the law to fill this vacancy were invited to apply. It was a struggle in which both pull and money counted. Very few Jews possesed secular education, but for this there was a remedy. One Yaykef, whose widow I still knew quite well, could neither read nor write. He passed to the Oberamtmann a snuffbox filled with ducats—though this may be an exaggeration—the Oberamtmann took the snuff, and Yaykef was told to learn how to write his name in German. His family name was Ekler, adopted in accordance with the law of 1787, which required the Jews to assume family names, chosen because he lived on one of the corners (Ecke) of the Ghetto. Yaykef learned how to write Jacob Ekler, and he obtained the right to marry, although his opponent claimed that he could not write any other word. The final authority was the Oberamtmann, who declared truthfully that Yaykef had passed the examination to his satisfaction.

A very difficult test was the proof of religious education. Not that the Jews were ignorant of their religion, for even Yaykef could give a point to many an American rabbi on the questions of synagogue ritual, but the government had ordered that every candidate must pass an examination in catechism, for which Herz Homberg's "Bene Zion" was prescribed. When the candidate had convinced the Oberamtmann of his worthiness, he had also to fix matters up with the Jewish teacher, for nothing was easier than to ask Yaykef what he knew about "Patriotismus," and the duties of the Jews in this respect. Very comical stories are reported in this connection. One girl was asked, "Who was Abraham?" She quickly replied, "Abraham is my father, and I also have two brothers whose names are Herschel and Pinkus!" Another candidate is asked to state the difference between "Thier" (animal) and man. He replies, a "thuer" (door) has hinges and a man has not. Once the Oberamtmann takes a turn in posing a question. He asks a young lady, "Which are the duties of married life?" She blushingly replies; "Der Herr Oberamtmann is a rascal." No inconsiderable difficulty was met with in the case of proving one's moral character. It actually happened that a man, whom I knew quite well, was rejected because when a boy, attending a fair where he helped his father, he tripped a woman who carried a basket of eggs on her head. The Oberamtmann, who had been convinced by the candidate's rival, that the latter possessed a high moral character, disqualified Nossa for this immoral act. Sometimes the objections were of a more serious nature. Young folks, who possessed neither influence nor money married in spite of all restrictions secretly. Of course the rabbi could not perform such a ceremony, but the Jewish law did not require the presence of a rabbi, and so the marriage was performed in a quiet place by some poor devil of a teacher. It was called "Bodenchassene" (garret-wedding). By and by such people would come into the possession of means, and would try to obtain the permit afterwards, but then their previous record was a strong argument against it. In one such instance—and I still remember both parties—the husband, anxious to legalize his marriage, stated before the tribunal that the woman was not his wife and the children not his children; she was merely a tenant of his. In Bohemia, where as it seems, the law was enforced less strictly. Adam Sattler, an old schoolteacher in the congregation of Bruex, where I was rabbi, told me that he had married without a license, and when, as it would happen, the police asked a question, he said that this woman was his housekeeper. Dr. Wise also told me that he did not bother about getting a license, though in his case it was not a matter of great consequence as he, not so long after his marriage, emigrated to America. Even the law requiring to furnish a proof that the applicant possessed 600 florins was a considerable hardship. In spite of the proverb, "Rich like a Jew" a majority of the Jews lived in dire poverty. In such a case, the family would scrape together what they possessed, and friends would help temporarily to furnish money as a deposit, and all efforts would be made to furnish the required amount. One instance which happened within my own family is worth telling because of its typical nature. My grandfather was Judenrichter, when the son of a friend applied for the marriage license. My grandfather, wishing to help, pawned the silver ornaments of the Thorah that were used only on holydays, to enable the young man to deposit the required amount with his application, but the leader of the political opposition got on to the game, and informed the authorities, with the result that the petition was refused, my grandfather indicted, and glad that with considerable sacrifice of money he was permitted to retire from office.

The whole story of this misery has a moral for our own time. Our present anti-immigration movement is still based on this silly conceit that those in authority have both the right and the wisdom to regulate all public and private activities. How much they wasted their efforts in those days of old, is proven by the fact that the population of Moravia has been decreasing steadily, not merely in proportion, but even in numbers since these restrictive laws were abolished. The census of 1900 showed 44.225 Jews among two and one half millions. The census of 1910 shows that the Jews had decreased to 41,158. The same condition pertains in Bohemia. If we observe Germany, we also see that those states which had the strictest laws against increase of the Jews, have lost in some instances as many as one half of their Jewish inhabitants. If Russian statesmen were real statesmen, they would be able to learn a lesson.

HOLLAND PLACES RESTRICTIONS ON RUSSIAN STUDENTS.

Following the example of several German and Austrian universities, where restrictions against Jewish students coming from Russia have recently been introduced, the Government of Holland also took measures of limiting the number of Russian students in the universities there. According to a recent ruling, only 5 per cent of the total number of students in any university may be of Russian origin. By "Russian" only Jews are meant, so that now in liberal Holland, Jewish students who come from Russia will be admitted only in accordance with a percentage norm.

The Situation In Roumania

Special Report to the B'nai B'rith News

The situation in this country is becoming more and more critical. A furious campaign has been started by plotters against the Jews. Our adversaries are disapproving in advance of all concessions which might be made to us; they declare that they are under all circumstances against and will oppose by all means all naturalizations even that of the mobilized Jewish soldiers. They will not permit a word to be said about the solution of the Jewish problem.

The "Ligna Culturala," an important association and of great influence upon public opinion, has recently published a manifesto which may be taken as a declaration of war against the Jews in general and against our "Union" in particular. This league has decided to hold meetings and a special Congress for the purpose of exerting a pressure upon the government to prevent all concessions in regard to the naturalization of mobilized Jews. In a conversation held with one of our people the president of the league has declared that this is the motive of the action commenced against us. A more vigorous campaign is announced against the political organization of our "Union." The fight is becoming violent and it is not all impossible that it will lead to excesses It is my opinion that this is the opportune moment for us to appeal to the Occidental press and to point out the fact that the provocations of the nationalists and anti-Semites may degenerate into pogroms as is evidenced by the attitude of the Ligna Culturala.

The recent agitation about the theatrical piece "Manasse" is only one of the signs of unrest. The director of the National Theater saw fit to reintroduce this play. At once a great cry was raised by the enemies of the Jews, principally by the students. What treason against the fatherland to present the masterpieces from the pen of a Jew in a theater subsidized by the state! The Government becoming intimidated interdicted its presentation. The fact that this anti-Jewish manifestation happened shortly before the "Ligna Culturala" appeared on the scene is very significant. We consider it the gravest menace, more so for the future, because this League has great influence in the country and because its actual aim is to hinder by all means the naturalization of the Jews who participated in the last Bulgarian campaign. Below we give you the names of persons who compose the League and we hope you will devote your attention to these agitations. Some serious events are preparing themselves and it is not impossible that a new era of animosity and persecution will begin for the Jews of this country. We implore you to awaken to our fate and act accordingly.

In closing I give the answer which our "Union" considered it its duty to make to the "Ligna Culturala":

Mr. President:

As representatives of the political organization of the native Jews we permit ourselves to submit to the Central Committee of the League our refutation of the communication which it has recently published in the newspapers regarding the Jewish question.

The Committee reproaches us for discussing the Jewish question in an agressive tone; this we now formally deny. No one can prove that affirmation. We cannot understand why the Committee of the League attaches so much importance to the tone, that being a secondary matter. You confuse violence with dignity. If it is at all a question of violence it manifests itself in the agitations of which we complain and the same violence gives a color to our tone of which we are not culpable. This confusion puts the question in the wrong light.

On the other hand the Committee affirms that the tone used by the Roumanians is "soft." We can prove to you that immediately after the demobilization a violent campaign of invectives bordering upon open threats was begun against the Jewish population

Concerning the congress of the "Union of Native Jews" which your Committee designates as a defiance on our part, permit us to tell you that we have no other aim than the one to strictly state our claims and to find means by which to so organize the work that it [illegible] be able to clarify public opinion.

The native Jews, deprived of all rights, pursued, subjected to a rule which places them in the position of a class of alien vagabonds, claim at least the right to freely organize themselves to discuss the problem which is of vital importance to them, to seek to convince their Roumanian fellow-citizens of the justice of their cause. Does the "Ligna Culturala," which assumes the mission of fighting for the victory of liberty, believe that this liberty is to be refused to the native Jews?

However, the communication states that the Central Committee has arranged beforehand that the League shall examine the question of naturalization. That would be excellent, if at the same time the same Committee would not have indicated the opinion of the Central Committee upon the Jewish question. No person that reads this communication can have a doubt of the ideas, the sentiments and the projects of the leaders of the League. The manner in which it is conceived shows that the Committee intends to oppose energetically all favorable solutions which the government may attempt to give to the Jewish question.

We consider it our duty, Mr. President, to address to you before the Congress of the League takes place, the publications which define the viewpoint of the "Union of the Native Jews" and in which the Jewish question is treated in detail. Perhaps we will succeed in convincing somebody of the justice of our cause and that it is to the interest of our country to settle once for all the Jewish problems in accordance with our claims, which prove our sincere patriotic sentiments.

If by the communication which you publish or by the interventions which such publication brings about, any one believes that the Jews will permit themselves to become intimidated and as a consequence give up the fight, he is very much mistaken. We are not disarming; whatever happens we will defend outselves. It is our duty to do so. We are convinced that we fight for a just cause and that we are acting in the interest of the country. No one can safely drive the Jewish population to extremes; the subjugated minority to whom the elementary right of organization is refused is obliged to defend itself by all means.

We complete this information with the following: The agitation of the "Ligna Culturala" has transformed itself into campaign of savagery. At present the minds are highly excited. In all the cities, little or big, meetings are held which are called by sections of the League and it is openly preached to raise the shield against the Jews who have the great audacity to demand rights.

This movement is assuming very grave proportions and it is not impossible to notice in it evidences of coming excesses. Violent appeals are scattered to all parts of the Kingdom and in the public meetings all kinds of prejudices and baseness are exploited with the view of reviving in the minds of the lower classes their fanaticism and instincts of hatred against the Jews. The members of the League have openly declared that the aim of the campaign is not only to thwart the solution of the Jewish problem (it is not the same question) but to hinder the naturalization of the Jewish soldiers who have taken part in the last campaign. Here are some examples of that which is being published in the press on this subject.

At the meeting in Jassy on the 3rd of November, one of the leaders of the anti-Semites, the professor of the University, A. C. Cuza, declared "that today as in 1866 (in 1866 violent agitations were made against the Jews) there are Roumanian butchers who are ready to whet their knives" and "that some synagogues are still demolished." (An allusion to the Temple of Bucharest which was destroyed in the same year).

The same Cuza has threatened the Jews with street troubles.

Another creature, G. Sturtza, has declared that resistance against Jewish pretensions should be carried to the point of savagery. Here are his own words: "It is our sacred duty to organize without delay a tenacious and—if necessary—a savage resistance."

A third creature, the Capta[illegible]lulescu, said: "* * * The [illegible] Roumanians are in duty bound to [illegible] by all means even if it must be violence, the naturalization of the Jews."

An anti-Semite journal, the "Cuvantul," organ of the "Ligna Culturala," in the issue of November 5th, announces "that the meetings of the League will be followed by a violent anti-Semitic movement."

This movement has already assumed disquieting proportions. The peasants are not invited to the meetings of the League? The rural population cannot be made to believe that the Jews demand rights for the purpose of laying their hands upon their territory? Only those who are familiar with conditions and the spirit of Roumania as well as with the grave aspect of the agrarian question, can figure out the disagreeable consequences of these criminal excitations.

All these we consider grave events. Last Sunday, the day of the meeting at the capital section of the League, a part of the Jewish population was thrown into panic for several hours. The Government called out all the police and all the gendarmery; the disorders in the streets were evident everywhere. On their part the Jews took measures to defend themselves in case of necessity.

Unhindered, the anti-Jewish campaign is developing a more violent character from day to day. The old times have returned with the expulsion of the Jewish intellectuals, who fight for the emancipation of their brethren. When one reads the resolutions (attached hereto), which were voted upon at the last meetings of the League, not counting the number of pamphlets scattered all over, he can form an idea of the aim pursued by the anti-Semites and the Nationalists. Our adversaries take advantage of the coincidence that the same persons who stand at the head of the "Union of Native Jews" are also members of the B'nai B'rith lodges to excite the minds against the whole Jewish population and demand the expulsion of all the Jews.

We pray you to give your earnest attention to the examination of this grave situation, to bring it to public notice, and to find a way to prevent these agitations from degenerating into pogroms.

TEXT OF THE RESOLUTIONS VOTED UPON AT JESSY AND BUCHAREST, AT THE MEETINGS OF THE "LIGNA CULTURALA" AND THE TEXT OF AN ANTI-SEMITIC MANIFESTO AT CALARASI.

Resolutions of Jassy.

The citizens of Jassy meet today, November 8th, 1913, in the hall of the National Theater, in response to a call issued by the Committee of the "Ligna Culturala" for entire Roumania;

Noticing the movement instigated by the native Jews who demand naturalization in bulk;

Noticing the declarations made by certain politicians of the Government party concerning the solution of the Jewish problem in the sense of the claims made by the Jews;

Noticing the announcements appearing in the official journals of the Government which affirm that the Council of Ministers has decided to naturalize at once and by a strange project of the law all the Jews who mobilized on the occasion of the last emergencies;

WHEREAS; the Jews are not at heart assimilated with the mass of Roumanians, not even economically, for it is said that they do not admit Roumanians to work in their stores and factories;

WHEREAS, they are of a foreign culture, having no affinity whatever with our Latin culture;

WHEREAS, the simple military service and a campaign of a few weeks void of all perils of real war does not constitute a sufficient reason for trampling underfoot the fundamental laws of the country;

WHEREAS; all naturalizations in bulk are an evident violation of the law which does not recognize it neither in its letter nor in its spirit;

WHEREAS; according to the actual state of our electoral system naturalization in bulk of 20,000 Jews means the preponderance of a foreign element in the electoral college which today directs the politics of the country.

WHEREAS, from an economic standpoint the naturalization of these Jews is equivalent to the alienation of the rural estates and to their passing into the hands of the Jews who are already masters of industry, commerce and the crafts;

WHEREAS; the aggressive tone of the claim of the Jews, together with the provoking agitation and the odious calumnies spread among foreigners—provocations and calumnies against which those who appeal for naturalization have never expressed one word of protest—besmirching the good name of the country;

WHEREAS; if the right is granted to the Jews Moldavia will surely be lost to Roumania;

WHEREAS; Article 7 has given sufficient satisfaction to all foreign elements which in reality are assimilated and defend our legitimate Roumanian interests;

WHEREAS; this article is an agreement entered into by us and the European Powers who have executed the Berlni treaty;

For all these reasons the meeting believes that it is right and our duty to demand:

1. That Article 7 of our Constitution shall remain an absolute intangible point. We cannot allow the least violation neither of its letter nor of its spirit.
2. That steps shall be taken to protect the Roumanian element whose economic life is being endangered.
3. That an effective surveillance be exercised against the infiltration in the country of strangers who continually show themselves indignant and demand more rights.
4. That measures be taken against the Jewish agitators who abuse the right of meeting which the Constitution grants to Roumanians only; they menace the latter and disturb public order which will finally provoke great disorders.

That the Jews shall be excluded from military service, for they have proven themselves to be lacking in all military virtues.

RESOLUTIONS OF BUCHAREST.

1. WHEREAS; there is certain proof that the agitation of the "Union" is the ostensible and delud[illegible] Semitic-Masonic S[illegible] whose Grand Mas[illegible] and [illegible] themselves in New York, America;
2. WHEREAS, for a long time this Order has been carrying on a political anti-Roumanian agitation in the country and finds blind and traitorous instruments in the lodges affiliated in Roumania belonging to the so-called 9th District of the Order;
3. WHEREAS; it is proven that the 9th District of the Order I. O. B. B. is ready to overcome our fatherland by a net-work (sic) of industrial and commercial banks endowed with vast foreign capital, which is placed exclusively at the service of the Jewish population of Roumania;
4. WHEREAS; the action of this Order is an unexampled audacity of the organization of a state within a state:

The citizens of the Capital in meeting called by the "Ligua Culturala," on November 10th, therefore decide to request the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Justice:

1. To order the office of the Public Prosecutor and the Police to proceed against them in all cities where lodges of B. B. exist;
2. To propose and execute the expulsion of all the foreign agitators and the members of the lodges who act in violation of the principles of the Constitution of the Country;
3. To thus give entire satisfaction to this morally maltreated country (sic) by these agitations and by the greatest abuse of our hospitality, which is being perpetrated in Roumanian territory;
4. The Minister of Public Instruction is requested to verify:

(A) The amount of subventions accorded by the Lodges B. B., and the influence obtained at the price of these subventions.

(B) To ascertain whether the parties connected with these schools colaborate or not in the political agitations of the Lodges and of the "Union."

Our Neglected Educated Classes

By Jacob D. Schwarz

Every once in a while we hear complaints because Jews do not do missionary work. Some religious or communal leader is continually taking the rabbis to task because they do not make more direct efforts to acquaint the world with our beliefs and principles—what we are and what we stand for. Surely only good can come from creating an intelligent understanding of Judaism in the world at large. It sounds a trifle pretentious, however, to say the least, to talk of expounding Judaism to outsiders when so much of the very same thing remains to be done in our own camp. If our leaders and organizers are sincere in their avowed purpose of making the new Judaism a living creed in American Jewish homes, and if they attempt to meet whole-heartedly and adequately the indifference and the apathy which has laid hold on a portion of our people, they will find that they will have their hands full and that all the financial resources and all the effort that can be mustered may easily be expended in lengthening the cords of our own tent and in strengthening its stakes. How many, not only in isolated communities, but even in larger centers, are in large part if not wholly without the pale of Jewish religious influence! What a vast work is required to be done in reaching the lukewarm and those already estranged from the faith of their fathers!

In none of the many spheres in which the Jewish influence must be extended and the Jewish spirit make itself felt, can more important or more effective work be done than among the Jewish students in our colleges and universities. As is to be expected in a land of opportunity such as ours, many of our Jewish young men are eager to secure the advantages of a university education. They are flocking in no inconsiderable numbers to the larger and smaller colleges of the country. What a pity that in those intellectual centers they are in most cases, almost as a matter of course, cut off from nearly all Jewish influences! We who are so proud of the place that Jewish young men are coming to occupy in the business and professional world, do so little to keep them Jews and to attach them to the Jewish cause, while their minds are ripening and while their ambitions and ideals are being shaped and molded. It is our duty to see to it that the superior training and insight of our college men are turned to the account of Judaism and not to the account of the free-thinking and the indifferent. These young men will be the molders of opinion of the future. They are the very ones to whom we must look for future leadership in our congregations, in our young people's societies and in all the activities that make a living Judaism. We have the right to expect distinguished service to the Jewish cause from our college men, and we need their leadership. In order to preserve their loyalty we must stimulate it, and in order to attach them to the faith we must first reach them. If we allow them to drift away while their minds are developing and their characters are forming, not only will so many more young men be lost to us, but the opportunity will also be lost of securing a larger number of trained and enthusiastic leaders in our congregational and other religious activities.

The pitiable need for Jewish influences in our colleges is strikingly revealed by a letter received some time ago by The American Israelite which, by the courtesy of the Editor, I am permitted to make use of. The letter reads as follows, the name of the writer being withheld for obvious reasons.

University of North Carolina,
Chapel Hill, N. C.,
October 11, 1912.

Editor American Israelite:

Dear Sir: I am a student of the University of North Carolina, where there are about ten Jewish students. University life here centers around the Young Men's Christian Association, into which the Jewish students are also drawn.

I am a faithful son of my religion and earnestly desire to do religious work in the university among my fellow Jews and also in the small neighboring Jewish communities. My humble request to you, as the head of a paper that labors for the Jewish cause, is to give me suggestions and connections that will help me to do good work on religious lines. I am myself of a small southern town and am not familiar with the proper methods by which such work should be conducted.

With the sincere hope of a speedy reply, I am

Respectfully yours,

N. B. I must start to work at once, for the Jewish students may join other societies and no time will be left for a Jewish one.

This letter shows that the absence of religious influences among Jewish students in our higher educational institutions is keenly felt at least by some, and other instances might be cited of students who have felt the need of strengthening the tie that binds them to their Jewish fellows. A few will always be found who have been brought up in religious homes, and in exceptional cases there will be those who remain loyal in spite of the long years of famine as far as Jewish interests and Jewish inspiration are concerned. But unless some means are devised for reaching them effectively, the majority of those who leave their homes and are cut off from Jewish congregational and communal life during their college years, will in all probability be lost to us.

Here is work to be done by our rabbis and by our central organizations. Where the number of Jewish students warrants it, regular weekly services should be instituted. While in Cincinnati about a year ago, Mr. Israel Abrahams, of Cambridge University, England, made mention of the fact that weekly services and other Jewish activities are part of the regular routine among the Jewish students at Cambridge. This example may well be emulated by our American institutions of learning. In union there is always strength, and organizations of Jewish students established specifically for religious purpose will help solve the problem. Where the universities or college are in or adjoining the large centers the responsibility rests upon the local rabbis and much may be done by them in the way of religious welfare work among the students. The students should not only be welcomed to the services in the synagogues and to the congregational societies, but the rabbi should strive to come into personal contact with them wherever possible, to understand their needs and to keep alive the Jewish spirit within them. The rabbi's duty does not end with those who are enrolled on his congregational roster. He must reach out and extend his influence to all who are in need of it, and to none more than to the young men who, away from home and engrossed by various interests, need him perhaps more than some of his own congregation.

In the colleges removed from the larger centers other means must be found for promoting religious welfare work among the students. The value of Jewish students' organizations has already been pointed out. In this work also, as in many other spheres of activity, the spoken as well as the printed word may be powerful factors. Lecture courses on Judaism, on Jewish history and on Jewish literature should be provided, and would without doubt in most instances be warmly welcomed. Two years ago the Union of American Hebrew Congregations provided a series of lectures by prominent rabbis for the Jewish students at Harvard University under the auspices of the Harvard Menorah Society, which were acknowledged by a large number to have been productive of excellent results, and requests have since come from several large universities for similar lecture courses. Where it is not feasible to provide lecturers, well-planned series of lectures can be printed and distributed for use in the Jewish student organizations. Perhaps some Jewish Maccenas will come forward to furnish adequate funds for this work.

Some day when our religious forces have become more effectively organized and our resources for carrying on all forms of home missionary work have been greatly augmented, the bringing of the message of Judaism to our college men will be no longer a theory but an extensive activity, and religious welfare work of this kind will rank among the most important activities that our central organizations can carry on.

Charity is a universal duty which is in every man's power sometimes to practice, since every degree of assistance given to another upon proper motives is an act of charity, and there is scarcely any in such a state of imbecility as that he may not, on some occasions, benefit his neighbor.—Johnson.

THE UNION OF AMERICAN HEBREW CONGREGATIONS.

Annual Meeting of the Executive Board at Cincinnati.

The annual meeting of the Executive Board took place on December 7, 1913, at the Hebrew Union College. President J. Walter Freiberg was in the chair. Full and comprehensive reports were presented by the several officers and boards showing the excellent condition of the affairs of the Union and its continuously growing activities and influence in American Jewry.

Preparations for the Next Biennial Council.

Committees were appointed to prepare a program and make suitable arrangements for the meeting of the next biennial Council which will be held in January, 1915, in Chicago.

Monument to Moritz Loth.

It was announced that the monument to Moritz Loth, the first president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, would be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies on February 18, next—the first anniversary of his death.

National Propaganda Fund.

Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburgh was appointed chairman of the National Propaganda Fund Committee to collect money in furtherance of the objects of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

Temple Sisterhoods.

The President stated that in view of the action of the twenty-third Council held in Cincinnati last January, the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods had been organized and it was resolved that the Executive Board regard the National Federation as a subsidiary organization and that its direction, as far as such direction is advisable or necessary. be placed in the hands of the Board of Managers of Synagogue and School Extension.

National Advisory Board.

The president reported that in accordance with the action of the Twenty-third Council, a National Advisory Board had been created under his direction and the following resolution in reference thereto was adopted.

Resolved, That the action of the president with reference to the National Advisory Board be approved and that he be authorized to proceed in such manner as will in his judgment prove for the best interests of the Union. It was further ordered that the attention of the Board of Governors of the Hebrew Union College be called to the foregoing action with the request that they invite the Central Conference of American Rabbis and the Alumni Association of the Hebrew Union College to appoint either annually or for a term of years, their quotas of the members of such Advisory Board. The Board of Governors was also requested to consider the advisability of providing for annual meetings of the Advisory Board and for paying the expenses of their appointees attending such meetings, as in all probability similar action will be taken by the Central Conference of American Rabbis and the Alumni Association of the Hebrew Union College.

Superannuated Ministers' Fund.

The President was authorized to appoint five members of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund Commission, pursuant to the action of the Twenty-third Council.

Anniversary and Founders Day.

The following preamble and resolution was offered and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Since the death of Isaac M. Wise, his birthday anniversary, the 26th day of March, has been observed by appropriate proceedings as Founders Day, and

Whereas, the thirtieth day of March is the anniversary of the first organized meeting of Congregational representatives that led to the formation of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the occupants of the pulpits of the congregations belonging to the Union of American Hebrew Congregations be requested to deliver on the last Sabbath in March yearly an address or sermon devoted to setting forth the aims and objects of the Union and asking support for our cause.

FIGHTING AT JASSY (ROUMANIA).

Many Jews Wounded by Anti-Semites.

Anti-Semitic students recently forced an entrance into a hall at Jassy where a meeting was being held in support of the Jewish cause in Roumania. Severe fighting took place there, and the assaults on Jews were subsequently continued into the streets. Twenty persons were severely injured, and many others were slightly wounded.

ANNUAL MEETING OF NATIONAL JEWISH HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives was held at the Jewish Orphan Asylum in Cleveland, Sunday, January 4. The meeting was one of the largest ever held by the trustees of the hospital, and one of the most enthusiastic. Mr. Samuel Grabfelder, who has been President of the hospital since its inception, was re-elected and was given a great ovation by the members present. He announced in his report that on account of his advancing years he would not again accept the presidency. He was, however, induced by the great appreciation and great love shown him by the members of the board, to again accept the office. Other officers elected were: Walter Freiberg of Cincinnati, First Vice-President; David S. Lehman of Denver, Second Vice-President; Dr. Wm. S. Friedman of Denver, Third Vice-President, and Mr. Hermon August of Cleveland, Fourth Vice-President; Mrs. S. Pisko of Denver, Secretary, and Mr. Benjamin Altheimer of St. Louis, Treasurer; Messrs. Martin. A. Marks of Cleveland, L. D. Shoenberg of New York and the Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburgh, on the Executive Board.

The plans for the Samuel Grabfelder Medical Building were discussed, and as soon as arrangements can be made with architects to complete the plans the building will be begun. This will undoubtedly be one of the most complete medical buildings in the world.

The financial report of the hospital showed $131,000 in the endowment fund. It is the intention, in the near future, to make a campaign for a million-dollar endowment for this institution. One enthusiastic friend of the hospital has already promised to start the fund with a $10,000 donation. No charity institution that is dependent on the voluntary subscriptions of people from all over the country, as is this institution, can be considered on a solid financial basis until an endowment fund of this size has been obtained. Most generously has the hospital been supported during all these years, and the management bespeaks the continued interest of its many friends for the years to come. The management of the hospital reported a better percentage of cures than ever, and, as the work of the hospital grows more and more proficient, it will occupy even a greater place in the affection of the Jews of the United States, through whose bounty its existence has been made possible. During the past year over 300 patients have been cared for in the institution. More than half of them left the hospital cured, or so greatly improved that they were restored to economic usefulness. Those remaining in Denver have been looked after by our ever-watchful and faithful national relief agent, a visiting nurse and an interne doctor. They live in sanitary cottages in a neighborhood that is not congested and where the bright sunshine penetrates their rooms. And so the work of this institution goes on from year to year, healing these sick people who come from all parts of the United States, without cost to them, and giving them the opportunity for renewed life and usefulness.

THE PASSING OF DAVID HIRSCHBERG.

The removal by death of David Hirschberg at San Francisco last week takes from among the Jews of the Pacific Coast one of their most capable defenders and one of California's leading exponents of conservative Judaism. David Hirschberg was a most prominent figure for many years in the District Grand Lodge of the B'nai B'rith and was ever on the side of what to his mind was the "underdog." His defense of the so-called country delegates in the various conventions and his wonderful oratorical powers were ever listened to with rapt attention. He was one of the few real leaders of this Grand Lodge, to whom the rank and file of the delegates looked to for instruction and information. Possibly the best posted past grand president, he was ever appealed to to solve knotty problems, and to him nearly every year fell the honor of installing the newly elected officers of the Grand Lodge. He was a man of many parts, of broad sympathies, of deeply Jewish feelings, ever playing fair with his friends and neighbors. He will indeed be missed in the deliberations of the Pacific Coast B'nai B'rith and the San Francisco and Oakland Jewish activities with which he has been connected for many years. News From The Orient

By Our Correspondent, DR. ISRAEL AUERBACH, Constantinople

For several months your correspondent was not able to report to you. A serious illness and a long journey prevented him from doing it. What an endless number of events transpired during this comparatively short space of time! It is almost an impossibility to report them all and to do justice to all the extraordinary changes to which the Orient, and with it also the Jewish Orient, was subjected! The second Balkan war, which we repeatedly predicted, has in the meantime taken place; it has caused new terrors in addition to the old ones; it has opened new fearful wounds in addition to those yet unhealed; the much too patient earth drank new Jewish blood in addition to that which has already been spilled. Also the B'nai B'rith in the Orient has again to lament its sacrifices. Siberia Lodge has already sent in the list of its dead to the Grand Lodge and we have fulfilled the sad duty of remembering its dead in our lodge. We do not yet know the number of victims who fell on the Bulgarian side, but alas, it will surely be much greater than the first named.

The position of the Balkan Jews has again become entirely disarranged. Large communities were again apportioned to territory of different states. Adrianople has returned to the lap of its former fatherland, Turkey; Greece has now absorbed the Jews of Kawala and of other Macedonian communities; Servia has now considerably enlarged the number of her Jews; by giving up Dobrudsha to Roumania Bulgaria has lost more Jews than she gained from Turkey through the conquest of the first war; some of our people will even have to get used to a totally new State, namely, that of Albania, who, by the common consent of the powers, is now receiving her prince or king. The new conditions can be stated in the following figures: Turkey has lost about 130,000 Jews. of whom 20,000 to 30,000 go to Servia. 10,000 go to Bulgaria and about 100.000 to Greece. The last has therefore become a country with a comparatively very large Jewish population, which she never had before with her former 7.000 Jews.

To our regret we must now expect that this will bring the so-called Jewish question into Greece. For even if the Hellenic statesmen are thoroughly in earnest in their intention to grant to our co-religionists, their new subjects, complete political equality, as they did to their old Jewish subjects, it is already evident that they will not be able to keep away for a long time from the anti-Semitic pressure of the Greek population of Salonika who consider this the right time to annihilate their Jewish competitors. Although it has naturally become quieter and more peaceful in Salonika than in the first few months after the conquest, the Jews of Salonika see themselves exposed to all kinds of persecutions and spiteful acts. The highest Hellenic state officials, like Konfiuges, the authorized representative of the government, admit it regretfully by a shrug of their shoulders. One of the pet ways of oppression is the transferring of the market day to the Sabbath. so that those Jewish merchants and traders of the new Hellenic territory who up to that time have remained faithful to their religion, have the choice only between violating their religion, their economic ruin or emigration. And the Jewish emigration from these parts is actually assuming great proportions.

The Jews which Roumania has gained by receiving Dobrudsha from Bulgaria will surely fare worse. It is true prominent Jews and Jewish organizations of the entire world, among which the Order of B'nai B'rith has been among the foremost and energetic, have betimes raised their voices in favor of these brethren of our people; it is true, the Italian statesman Luzzatti has especially attempted to introduce favorable action; it is true, the English and the American governments have repeatedly manifested their intention to insist upon a strict maintenance of the designations of the Berlin treaty in regard to equal religious rights in the Balkan lands But all this will apparently not save the heretofore free Jews of Dobrudsha from suffering the same persecution as their Roumanian brethren. For it is already reported that the Roumanian minister of the interior has given notice that a single Jewish congregation only is permitted to exist in the village communities of the Dobrudsha, that the acquiring of land by the Jews in the Dobrudsha will likely be limited and that the Jews of the new province will be allowed to send two deputies only to the Roumanian parliament and not the number corresponding to their population. So we must live to witness how the political status of the Jews grows worse and it is a question whether anything can be succesfully undertaken against it.

The course of the Balkan wars has not remained without serious consequences also for the inner life of our order. In a peculiar and sad manner it has brought the danger of disruption into its ranks. Not that lodges in the Balkan lands were ruined by the loss of members or of money—a kind fate has protected us against that. But the political revolutions have turned the heads of our brethren in a strange way. When Bulgaria, after the first war in which she was so successful, grew so extraordinarily in extent and political significance then our Bulgarian lodge brethren felt all at once as though the role which they heretofore played in the District of the Orient had become too insignificant for the eminent rank of their country. Because Bulgaria has, so to say, freed her Macedonian children from the Turkish yoke, it seems that our Bulgarian B'nai B'rith entertained the feeling that they should also free themselves in some way in their district and decided to free themselves from the Turkish Grand Lodge, and because Bulgaria united with the rest of the western Balkan lands as "the first among her equals," our Bulgarian brethren evidently believed that the time had come for them to construct a block of buildings together with the Hellenic and Servian lodges, if not in opposition to the Grand Lodge of Constantinople, at any rate without it, and they consider it the proper thing for them to assume the leadership of this new B'nai B'rith union in the Balkans by establishing in Bulgaria a Grand Lodge of their own. They have taken steps hastily, perhaps too hastily, to attain this aim, and they seem determined to persist in this dangerous way.

But subsequent events have completely demonstrated the fallacy of their ideas and their undertaking. If our Bulgarian brethren wish to model their ideas after the political events, they must now not only relinquish their longing for a district of their own, but logically they must even ask for the expulsion of the Servian and Greek lodges from our Oriental District. This consequence shows plainly enough the bad mistake of their hasty desire. Through our dispersion in Goluth and the usual border lines of different lands we Jews are divided enough, we surely need not think of wider separations in consequence of the political quarrels of our momentary home countries. And this is one of the basic thoughts and part of the glorious work of our sublime Order in striving to unite our people in all countries, to keep our brethren together and to inspire them to follow Jewish aims unitedly. In diverse great and strong states a division into districts may be unavoidable for reasons of organization. But when in a conglomeration of little states, which those of the Balkan are, in spite of the results of the Balkan war, each one, in consequence of accidental political conditions, claims the right to establish lodge districts of their own, then the beautiful thought and the future of our order in this respect are at an end. Heaven guard us against it. We were and are so happy with the united forces in the Grand Lodge of the Orient, forces which otherwise were shivered into pieces which our immortal and never-to-be-forgotten Bergel has succeeded in bringing together with great hardships, that we will not permit any one to take them away from us. We are sure that the attempt of our Bulgarian brethren will today meet in Greece and Servia as well as in all the lodges of our district with the same condemnation as it finds here in Constantinople, and we surely hope that the Executive Committee, who can have no greater desire in their hearts than the preservation of our work, will decide in the same negative sense. But our confidence is not yet extinguished that even before this decision our Bulgarian brethren will see the error of their way and will continue to work with us in harmony and love under the authority of our District Grand Lodge, just as they did before.

The relief work which the Jewish organizations united in the "union of associations," had arranged in favor of the Balkan Jews who suffered from the war is nearing its close. All the refugees who were in Constantinople have been forwarded to their homes in which work our brethren—and foremost among them our Aron Barzilai—represent the best force. The Grand Commission which existed here at the Grand Rabbinate has now been disbanded, but we were entrusted with the liquidation of the last things in Turkish territory. Upon the inducement of the delegate of the "union," Dr. Kahn, who was here a short time ago to take the last measures, our brother's Niego and Dr. Markus went to Gallipoli, Tshorlu and Adrianople to study there the conditions once more and they brought back the last positive propositions. In the meantime the last and perhaps the most important relief work is being prepared in many places of the Balkans and this is the establishing of loan funds, in which our Grand Lodge will probably participate strongly with the remaining relief funds. In Constantinople the loan fund is about ready and the by-laws have been adopted. Our honored president has been chosen as manager of this peoples' bank and of the seven directors four are our local lodge brethren. Our lodge will undoubtedly have influence upon the management of this important institution. Three thousand francs of the funds of our Grand Lodge were recently sent to Serbia Lodge, in Belgrade, for the war sufferers there, and 1,000 francs will shortly go to Adrianople for similar purposes. The fact that late aid is coming through our intervention will surely contribute to the honor of our order in the Orient.

The fight against the traffic in girls will soon begin with renewed vigor. Your correspondent has enjoyed the prerogative of meeting in conference with the president of the German Committee appointed for a similar purpose in Berlin, our brother Maretzki and other prominent brethren, and to have explicit talks concerning this question, to determine with them the important principles for the activity in Constantinople and to receive positive promises of moral and material aid from them for our work. We hope that the Executive Committee will also lend us a helping hand, so that we can entertain the hope for success.

The District of the Orient has again enlarged its circle by the founding of a new lodge. It is the "Aben Ezra Lodge in Rhodus."

Constantinople Lodge has again energetically opened its new season. Its first act was to work in favor of the Jewish Institute for the Blind, which work was stimulated by the presence of Dr. Nathanson, of Jerusalem, the manager of this institution. The work consisted of getting the names of a large number of our members upon the membership list of this institution, which assures it a regular annual income of 600 francs from this city.

Our lodge members derived great pleasure from the arrival of our prominent brother, the new United States ambassador in Turkey, Henry Morgenthau. A delegation of the Grand Lodge, consisting of three brethren, went to the American legation accompanied by our Brother Yudelsohn, where they were received by Mr. Morgenthau in a very hearty manner and assured of his lively interest in, and his love for the order. He promised to give his aid to local Jewish affairs and said that the lodge may expect his visit in a short time, and he offered in an amiable way to assume the patronage of the lodge festival of this year.

JEWS' GIFT OF AN AEROPLANE.

The Jews of Haifa, Palestine, are to present an aeroplane to be named "Israel" to the Turkish government as an expression of gratitude for generous treatment.

ANNUAL MEETING OF JEWISH CHAUTAUQUA SOCIETY.

The twentieth annual assembly of the Jewish Chautauqua Society was opened at the auditorium of Rodeph Sholem Temple at Philadelphia on Dec. 25, 1913 Delegates representing more than 100 Jewish communities were present. After the opening prayer, which was offered by Rev. Dr. Samuel Friedman, the president of the society, Mr. Perry Frankel, read his annual message in which he outlined the activities of the organization during the past year. He was followed by Chancellor Dr. Bercovitz, who spoke of the motives that prompted the organization of the society and reciting its growth until it has become one of the important Jewish organizations of the world. After an address of welcome on behalf of the congregation by Mr. Albert Wolf, the exercises were closed with prayer and benediction by Rabbi Marvin Nathan.

Following the session, an informal reception was held under the auspices of the Rodeph Sholem sisterhood.

The Friday morning session was held at the B. F. Teller Memorial Building, and in the afternoon the Dropsie College was the place of meeting.

In the evening the delegates assembled at the Beth Israel Congregation Temple, and Rabbi M. Nathan preached a special sermon on "Light of the Law."

The special feature of the morning session was a special model class that studied the lesson of Passover, which, however, brought forth criticism from Dr. Cyrus Adler, who opposed the advisability of teaching by comparison in the religious schools.

On Saturday morning the anniversary sermon was preached by Rabbi L. J. Kopald of Buffalo at the Rodeph Sholem Temple, and the services were conducted by Rabbi E. Mayer.

On Saturday afternoon Chancellor and Mrs. H. Bercovitz, Vice Chancellor and Mrs. Wm. Rosenau, and President and Mrs. P. Frankel were at home to the delegates. In the evening there was a social gathering and a reception at the St. James Hotel.

At the afternoon session on Sunday Prof. Eugene Lehman of Yale spoke on "Jewish Ethics." In the morning Miss H. Nathan conducted a model assembly exercise.

Sunday evening was devoted to the topic of Jewish farming. An address was delivered by Mr. L. G. Robinson. manager of the Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society.

Monday morning's session was devoted to the correspondence school features of the society. Dr. J. H. Greenstone of Graetz College was the principal speaker, his subject being "The Synagogue and Public Worship."

In the afternoon the delegates were entertained by the Philadelphia members with an auto ride, seeing different points of interest and instruction throughout the city.

The summer school symposium was the topic of discussion on Monday evening at the Temple Keneseth Israel. Mr. Israel Cowen, ex-president of the society, presided and delivered the address of welcome. Hon. Simon Wolf of Washington delivered the principal address and was followed by Dr. Abram Simon of Washington, Dr. W. Fineschreiber of Memphis and by Rabbi Dr. Geo. Solomon of Savannah. A musical program was arranged for the evening.

COMMUNICATED.

Editor B'nai B'rith News:

With reference to Jewish colonels of militia regiments, I have two additional to furnish, which are in my mind at this time.

Colonel L. M. Oppenheimer of Texas was colonel of the Second Texas Volunteers during the Spanish-American war. Colonel Louis Herzberg of Alabama was colonel of the Third Regiment, Alabama National Guard, several years ago.

While he is not a colonel of a regiment yet, I know that it will be of interest to you to know that in this state a former president of the Seventh District, I. O. B. B., Captain Leon Schwarz. has been for years one of Alabama's most active military officers. Captain Schwarz has served for more than twenty years in the Alabama militia and the volunteer troops furnished by this state during the Spanish-American war, and is one of the most widely and favorably known of the state militiamen. Very few have held a commission longer than he has.

Yours fraternally,
HERBERT U. FEIBELMAN.

Speeches of Wendell P. Stafford (Arthur F. Stone, St. Johnsbury, Vt., Publishers.)

This is one of the few books of speeches that compensate the reader by valuable instruction and delightful impressions. Among the twenty-seven speeches which this book contains there is not one that makes dull reading. They are almost all masterpieces of oratory, they express lofty poetic thought in simple diction and deep and beautiful sentiments in flowing graceful sentences. Even the speeches delivered on certain occasions and in certain places, which are, so to say, local in their character, have something in them to inspire general interest, to impress and to inspire.

Take for instance the first speech in the book, "Sons in Exile," delivered before the Brooklyn Society of Vermonters. This speech is the shortest in the whole collection, but it contains a wealth of exquisite beauty. With this speech he can not fail to rouse in every soul of the sons of Vermont who dwell in the distance, love and loyalty for their native state. He speaks so softly and so touchingly of the memories of childhood, of the green hills, of the forests and the flowers, of the bursting leaves and buds, and of the homes and firesides of Vermont that the hearts of the children of Vermont must be deeply thrilled and lifted by a common pride in the state of their birth, and how tenderly impressive are the words of his peroration to this short speech.

And as the reader proceeds with the perusal of the book he finds that the author is a philosopher and a thinker, an historian and an economist, a patriot, and a citizen free from prejudice and a lover of humanity. He has original thoughts and he expresses them in an original manner. In his speech "Lincoln and His Times," a centennial address delivered before the Lawyers' Club of Buffalo, New York, in 1909, he gives utterance to the following striking words: "The state is not made out of men. It is made out of man. It is made out of his faith, his aspiration, his courage, his devotion. It is man himself magnified, transfigured. The nation has a being of its own. It has its own conscience and its own ideal. We do not make our ideals—our ideals make us. America did not choose the great doctrine of equal rights; that immortal truth chose America. It has molded her from beginning; it will mold her unto the end, or, if it cannot it will cast her off with the wreckage and refuse of the past and take up some other nation that is worthy." These are powerful words indeed! And of such caliber is the entire book. In his speech, "The Lawyer," this earnest and profound speaker shows that he can also be a jolly good fellow. He can tell a good entertaining story and handles an anecdote with skill and tact. This speech is brim full of highly interesting and amusing little humorous tales and mirth-provoking recitals.

Mr. Stafford has often proven his friendship for the Jews. On several occasions he addressed Jewish audiences and he has always shown himself to be a strong defender of our claims and advocate of our rights. His speeches "Israel's Ideal of Justice," and "Russia and the Jews," the first delivered at a banquet of the B'nai B'rith in Washington in 1910, and the second at the mass meeting in Washington in 1906, do full justice to the Jew, his history and his life. He shows that he understands the Jewish spirit and fully demonstrates his sincere indignation over the inhuman treatment from which so many of our people are suffering even today.

We could quote passages from these two speeches which would fully bear out and support our statement but we prefer to leave it to the reader to judge for himself. We do not hesitate to say that the reader will find the entire book a rare treat, something out of the regular run of this kind of literature.

Our Modern Debt to Israel, by Edward Chauncey Baldwin, Ph. D. (Sherman French & Company, Boston, Publishers).

It is a well-known fact that since the time of the Reformation Biblical exegesis, the interpretation of the Hebrew Scriptures, flourished in the Christian world almost as well as in the midst of the Jewish people. The Jews boast of a galaxy of brilliant and profound interpreters of their Bible. They have Rashi, Ibn Ezra, the Kimhis, Moses Mendelssohn, Zunz, Rapoport, Krochmol, S. D. Luzzato, Sachs, Fuerst Geiger and Graetz. All these are indeed names of great luster and fame. But the Christians, too, muster with pride a list of names of which they have a right to be proud. Such names as Reuchlin, the founder of modern Hebrew science, Martin Luther, Melauchton, Calvin, Cardinal Xiemens, Brian Walton and others, are stars of the first magnitude.

Most of the last great Jewish exegets lived during the first periods of the Jewish Reform Movement. Since their time it seems that the study of the Bible and Biblical literature has been on the decline among the Jews. The Jews completely neglected their own Bible and left its interpretation entirely to Christian theologians and scholars. It seems to be true what has often been said in our days, that Jewish literature, especially Biblical exegesis, is now given more scientific attention among Christians than among Jews. The author of this book almost substantiates this accusation against the Jewish people of our time. The author is assistant professor of English Literature at the University of Illinois, he is not a theologian or a teacher of religion or of Biblical literature, and yet, how well versed he is in the Hebrew Scriptures, how deeply he penetrates into the spirit of our Bible, how truly his mind embraces the full knowledge of the vast domain of Biblical literature, how deeply he enters into the life and ethical mission of the Jewish prophets, and into the position and functions of the Jewish priests! How well he understands the messages of Israel's sages, the significance of Israel in the modern world and the value of the Hebrew law! It is indeed a delight to read his thoughts and to follow his ideas. In all his interpretations and deductions he is brilliant, and entirely free from prejudice, which is rarely the case with other Christian interpreters of the Hebrew Bible.

The contents of the first chapter of his book, "The Literature of Israel," Professor Baldwin sets forth in an address delivered before the Chicago B'nai B'rith lodges. He delighted his audience with his ingenious interpretations of Biblical passages, his liberal sympathetic assertions concerning the modern Jew, the richness of his knowledge and the greatness of his scholarly attainments. This address was published in 1912 in the September number of the "B'nai B'rith News" and was read with pleasure by the many readers of our journal.

We cheerfully recommend this book to all who love liberal thought, profound scholarship, sincere seeking of truth and honest love of humanity.

Stage Caricatures

A prominent Chicago preacher protests against the stage's manner of caricaturing the clergy. He says the typical stage minister "is a pale, sickly fellow, who will not ask his landlady for a pinch of sugar for fear of his own voice." It is quite true that the stage's caricaturing of preachers is along such absurd lines, but it is the same with some others beside preachers. Jewish people have for a long time complained of the grotesque and by no manner characteristic representations of the Jew on the stage. But there is another class of people who, we think, have equally as good ground for protesting as the clergyman and the Jew, and that is the newspaper worker.

Did you ever try to fit into your conception of a reporter the creature depicted for one upon the stage, generally a precocious upstart with a cigarette in his mouth, a pencil in one hand and a paper pad in the other? Clyde Fitch seemed never happier than thus caricaturing reporters, although no one had a better opportunity than Mr. Fitch for knowing that this came about as far as possible from a real description. Reporters who approach people for interviews with pencil and paper in hand are about as scarce as the detective who, before starting out on a still hunt for a crafty fugitive, first bedecks himself with numerous badges of his authority, belts a row of pistols about him and sticks a Bowie knife in his teeth. Similarly, the average reporter is not a chest-sunken, anemic fop, but an ordinary ablebodied young man with two strong arms and two good legs, and a mind as sound as most sane men have. The chief antagonism to idiotic stage caricaturing should come, though, not from those misrepresented, but from the better sponsors of the stage, those who care to hold it up to be a worthy standard of its art.—Omaha (Neb.) Bee.

THE JEW OF LESSING AND OF SHAKESPEARE.

(By Edward A. Wagener of Oklahoma.)

Through the centuries, like the vein of metallic ore through successive geological strata, runs the record of a people without a country, without a banner, without a government, yet a people with one genius, one law, and one God.

As auriferous veins that enrich different formations are due to volcanic fires, so the Hebrews in their dispersion have benefited the countries whither they have been driven by national convulsions, or by the flames of persecution. By their thrift and sobriety, their obedience to law and their zeal for education, they have always strengthened their inhospitable and alien homes.

To this people the most enlightened nations of the present day are indebted for their religion, their morals, and much of their material wealth. In return therefor, what has been their reward? In medieval Europe, confiscation of their property because they dared to thrive amidst the dissolute bankruptcy of Christian nobles; in England, massacre because they presumed to a deeper knowledge than that possessed by the brutal Norman; in Spain, the rack of Torquemada and banishment, because they fearlessly proclaimed liberal views in theology; along the Rhine, death, for escaping by their sanitary code, the pestilence that decimated their filthy and debauched Christian neighbors—everywhere, in fact, until the partial triumph of secular ideas over religious prejudice, they suffered insult, cruelty and wrong!

The comprehensive literature of the Jews touched all hearts, and their "prophets, transfigured saints and martyrs brave," were venerated throughout Christendom, while they themselves were for generations persecuted with an energy equaled only by the zeal with which their God was worshiped.

The imagination of Dore has pictured the legendary Wandering Jew in his everlasting penance for his alleged cruelty to the Savior when He bore the cross along the via Dolorosa to Calvary. Wherever he journeys, be it through the forest or on the sea, this traditional Jew is haunted by the mild yet reproachful gaze of the thorn-crowned Lord. His doom is the symbol of the fate of his race—pursued by its Nemesis—the stigma of having rejected and judicially murdered the Messiah.

In Nathan, the Wise, Lessing has drawn a type of the exceptional Israelite, who has risen, despite persecution, to the serene height of universal tolerance, whence he looks down upon the rolling mists that envelop and darken less lofty minds.

In Shylock, Shakespeare has personified the narrow minded Jew in whom oppression has produced natural effect—whom it has enraged but has not subdued. Nathan, the wealthy merchant of Jerusalem, under the tolerant rule of the chivalric Saladin, is the social peer of Oriental princes. Shylock the crabbed usurer of Venice, prefers the hatred of his fellow merchants on the Rialto, to their friendship. If they spurn him, and spit upon him, in return he scorns them, and with "a patient shrug" continues to heap up his gains. But within him burns the true Arabian vindictiveness—waiting for an opportunity "to catch his enemy upon the hip," and "feed fat the ancient grudge he bears him."

Lessing has portrayed an ideal Jew, in whose character are combined the faith of Abraham, the regal generosity of Solomon, and the scholastic acumen of Maimonides. Shakespeare has depicted the actual Jew whom he saw bartering in the streets of London, or chafing under the humiliations heaped upon him during those rough but merry times.

Both the Jew of Jerusalem and of Venice are true representatives of their race in the intensity of their family feeling. Nathan elevates that feeling above his creed, while Shylock smothers it beneath his prejudice and hate. Shylock would more willingly see his Jessica dead than wedded to a Christian. But Nathan will consent even to the union of his darling Recha with the Knight Templar, who was "born and bred his dearest foe."

Although Nathan is ready to discuss with the Dervise, Al Hafi, the profoundest questions in theology, yet he is not a mere mystic; he is a man of the world. He is equally ready to answer Saladin's ingenious question as to the rival religions or to negotiate a mercantile loan.

Shylock's detestation of the Christians does not prevent him from trading with them, although his feelings are not very different from those of Isaac of York in "Ivanhoe," toward the Norman baron whose prospectus for a loan was a threat of broiling upon a gridiron. Persecution has seared and hardened, instead of chastening his haughty spirit. To Bassanio's invitation to dine, he answers: "I will buy with you, sell with you. * * * but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you." He will not bate one jot of his ceremonial law—the welcome barrier between him and the accursed Gentile. When anticipating the dishonor of Antonio's bond Shylock lays bare his nature and motives by gleefully exclaiming, "the villainy you teach me I will execute." And he prepares to carry out the letter of the bond as relentlessly as Judith smote off the head of Holofernes or as the prophet hewed in pieces the priests of Baal. Shylock is utterly broken hearted when compelled to give up half his fortune to the apostate Jessica; but Nathan thankfully adopts a Christian orphan with the words, "O Lord, of seven thou grantest me one again," even after his wife and seven goodly sons have been slaughtered by the Crusaders.

Lessing's Nathan is cosmopolitan while clinging to his faith. With clear and tranquil insight, he sees that any one of the three religions—Christian, Mohammedan or Jewish may be perverted so as to generate bigotry and hypocrisy, or that any one of them is capable of nourishing virtue and human love. The keynote of his tolerant character is given in his words to the fanatical young Templar, "Despise my people with all your heart. Neither of us chooses his people. Are we our people? What does 'people' mean? Is a Jew Jew, is a Christian Christian, rather than a man?" Nathan's allegorical rebuke to the Sultan's challenge to name the best religion, anticipates the time when bigotry shall be swallowed up in fraternity and when the test of the true religion shall be the power of love.

The Jew does not live merely in history and literature, or in the sublime and lasting systems of the great Lawgiver and Prophet. He is still living, everywhere a potent factor in the evolution of modern society. In the financial world, the Hebrew is now as all-powerful as when Nathan's purse was the treasury of Saladin.

Fortunately the Jewish future will tend to develop Nathans rather than Shylocks. Both social and political ostracism is nearly at an end.

Who shall say that the sceptor is forever departed and that the chapter of Jewish glory is brought to a close? Whether the Chosen People coalesce with other nations, or whether they remain encamped on foreign soil, or once more gather in a commonwealth of their own, their prosperity and their happiness will depend on the care with which they exterpate the sordid spirit of a Shylock, and cherish the magnanimous virtues of a Nathan the Wise.—American Jewish Review.

A JEWISH LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

The whole desperate force of Russia's judicial system is at present engaged in an effort to incite an ignorant and degraded population to the murder of Jews within that barbarous land. The plan is to convict a Jew of having slain a Russian lad and get his blood for use in a religious ceremony.

Great Britain could have delivered no more withering rebuke to the Czar than has been done by announcing at this critical hour the elevation of a Jew, Sir Rufus Isaacs, to the exalted post of Lord Chief Justice of England. No formal protest through diplomatic channels, no petitions signed by tens of thousands of Englishmen would have conveyed to the Czar and the world such sharp and unequivocal disapproval of Russia's disgraceful persecution of a great race.

So perfect is the machinery of despotism in Russia that the common people of this generation may never even learn that Jews are among the most trusted, distinguished and brilliant men and women of other lands. The Czar's plan of government is intended to keep the masses without knowledge and without hope, possessed of none but those dark passions which St. Petersburg may rouse at will to serve its own despicable ends.

Sir Rufus Isaacs has become Lord Chief Justice of England because no theory of promotion which recognizes worth could bar him from it. Americans view his elevation as a gratifying evidence that the spirit of religious and racial tolerance and fair play shows no sign of weakening in Great Britain. Upon the constant safeguarding of this spirit depends the validity of a people's claim to real civilization.—Philadelphia Telegram.

THE NEW CRUSADE.

A new Crusade is upon us. The old Crusades had for their object the deliverance of the Holy Land from the Mohammedans. What the ultimate outcome was is well known to students of history. For a while a Latin kingdom was established in Jerusalem. But in the end Asia was lost to Christianity and the Ottoman Turk was entrenched in Europe. It is true in our days the Mohammedan domain in Europe has been reduced to a narrow strip of land holding and protecting the city of Constantine. But the war that led to that issue was plainly and unmistakably of the land grabbing variety; though priests may have incited the soldiery in the name of the Cross, there was absent all religious glamour and that romanticism which makes the medieval Crusades interesting examples of religious motive force. We Jews have an interest in our own in those Holy Wars of by-gone days. On the road to wrest the Sepulchre from the Saracen, the Crusaders found an infidel nearer home in the hapless and helpless Jew. We know the tale of whole Jewish communities in the Rhenish provinces decimated, and to this day we mourn the stout-hearted martyrs who with their own hand killed their wives and daughters to save them from an ignominy worse than death. The old Crusades brought us death and misery as a by-the-way affair. This "eighth" Crusade which is upon us is a direct onslaught upon the Jew, and the consequences whether immediate or future are terrible to contemplate.

We knew when the double verdict left the hands of the Kiev jury acquitting Beilis and at the same time condemning Beilis' people that an ominous sequel would be forthcoming. How the verdict was manufactured the authorities alone know. The government may and may not have wanted Beilis proclaimed guilty; it is possible that in the last moment their courage failed them and that in the face of a universal protest they feared to go the whole length. But one thing is now certain. The government is eminently satisfied with the stigma upon the Jewish race and the Jewish religion. It was not Beilis, but it was a Jew that killed the lad and the manner of the murder indicates a blood sacrifice. That is what the verdict means to the Czar and his minister of justice. And in this spirit the lie once propagated is suffered to take root in the minds of the populace. From St. Petersburg to Irkutsk in the ice fields of Siberia ignorant priests are spreading the libel, and from pulpits goes forth the call to vengeance.

Religion is a potent factor. It should be so. The world is the better for the belief in God and goodness. But religion when turned into bigotry and fanaticism and the hatred of the stranger is a baneful thing. All the emotions that stir the human soul are a source of danger when unbridled by reason. Religious revivalism has been known to lead men and women astray into paths dark and disastrous. As in politics, so in religion, the demagogue is abroad, the man with an ulterior motive who to further his own ends is unscrupulous enough to arouse the baser instincts and to fan the flames of class or race hatred. The experience of mankind has been that in the end the mischievous machinations recoil upon their perpetrators. But in the meanwhile incalculable damage is done. This is, of course, a type of Christianity that means the gospel of love and goodwill, that is tolerant of other religions which are allowed to appeal to their votaries in a manner suitable to them and which pursue a goal ultimately not much different though the road thereto may be of another kind. But in the East of Europe Christianity is bound up with so much that is crude and base that when a wave of religious revival sweeps the land the outcome is neither religious nor righteous.

We know full well that religion there is but a tool in the hands of a reactionary government. The truly pious and religious must be ashamed of the unholy alliance of politics and religious fanaticism and bigotry. But the alliance is there and the preachment of ignorant popes and the audiences recruited from the cream of society. The cream of society! After all the masses are much maligned. Whatever of honesty and sturdy morals there still are in that benighted land will be found in the peasantry and in the laboring classes. Whatsoever goes by the name of society, is immersed in the pursuit of gain and pleasure. Society is cynical in Russia. With a veneer of refinement, it is barbarous below the surface. From the circles of society comes the boycott in Poland now spreading beyond its confines. From them comes the economic warfare waged against the Jewish small traders. From them comes the onslaught on the Jewish religion.

What is to be our weapon in this new Crusade? We shall in the first place as of old pray to the God of Israel to pour forth His spirit of true piety upon the misguided Russian people and direct them once more to the paths of right thinking and right acting, that the blind may be made to see and the erring made to realize that they are engaged in a course of action which spells disaster to themselves. In the second place we shall appeal to public opinion We shall continue to repudiate the brazen lies of our enemies. We shall restate our position, our faith, our ethical doctrine. We shall point to our great and noble history and to our religious literature. We shall work assiduously to open the treasures of our literature to all who with honesty of purpose would peruse them. We have nothing to hide and nothing to fear. On our side there shall be the light if they persist to walk in darkness. On our side God and the right—and the issue in the end will be, must be our vindication, our lasting victory.

JEWISH EDUCATION.

The paramount importance of Jewish education in the sum of Jewish endeavor is admitted by all who have at heart the preservation of the Jewish identity. Where differences of opinion will assert themselves, the question will turn upon the amount and the method. We have, it is true, capable boards of Jewish education with all the modern machinery and such perfection as will be imparted to them by bureaucratized organization of one form or another. We have also experts on Jewish education, Jewish educators by profession, who combine a knowledge of the theory of education according to most approved psychological doctrine with practical acquaintance with all the phases, difficulties and perplexities of educating the Jewish child. Nevertheless, a lay opinion may not be out of place on a subject which concerns the welfare of our children and the stability of Jewish institutions.

How much of Jewish education can be imparted will depend largely upon local conditions. It may be taken for granted that all parents have a desire to give their children a maximum of Jewish education. But it is often a question of where to get the time. The child is overburdened with school work and homework and extra lessons. The Jewish child must be fitted to take its place in the civic and economical and social life. Education is the way to the business career or the professions just as it is the door to citizenship and to good society. All of which is important and all of which we could not with impunity impair in the least. Now, on the top of it or by the side of it, we would have our children learn and value their Jewish antecedents and associations. There is unquestionably a time limit which cannot be ignored. Some of us put up with an hour or two in the week for religious instruction; others insist on two or three sessions. Whether the hours thus snatched away from recuperation or play may not work havoc with the child's health is a matter for each parent to decide. All that we wish to call attention to here is the fact that the time limit is not of our own creation or volition; it is imposed by the environment. What is possible in Russia or Palestine may not be workable in America. The time limit given, a curtailment of the subjects of study follows of necessity. The time limit operates with a tyranny which few will escape; all the rest which partakes of the nature of doctrine or dogma is of subordinate moment. Whether the knowledge of the Hebrew language is desirable or not, the supreme question is, Is there time for it? For we are not dealing here with individual opinions or party slogans. Each opinion is entitled to a hearing when enunciated with conviction and force of argument. The question of desirability may fitly be left to the individual to grapple with. But the difficulty of the time limit is general and inexorable in present conditions.

As to method, there is bound to be much variety. A certain measure of it depends upon the point of view or the angle of vision from which the nature of the object to be obtained is conceived. So much will remain disputed territory upon which we would not venture. Different interpretations of Judaism exist and between them there can be established a truce, an attitude which will make for mutual tolerance and forbearance, but no more should be expected. Each theory should be allowed to work itself out. The future alone will tell which was right and which was wrong. But there are also methodical differences of a purely pedagogic kind. Educational methods vary. Fads and fashions will make themselves manifest. But if the experienced teacher is allowed to say the final word, the truth will come out that method is but a subsidiary matter and that efficacy is of primary moment. It makes after all but little difference as to the manner in which results are secured, provided that the child learns the lesson and learns it well. No teacher of consequence will tie himself down to a single method. He will try all and in the end make a new combination which will be neither the one nor the other. He will not waste time on an academic question He will study the concrete class before him, nay, the individual child And with a view to that child he will use the best means of conveying information and making it permanent in the child's memory. Yes, the real object is not even to convey information as to instil in the child a love for Judaism, to build up in its heart and soul the Jewish consciousness. So long as that is accomplished, it matters little how it is done.

But whatever differences as to amount and method, we must welcome all honest endeavors to foster Jewish education and to provide the facilities and instrumentalities. It would be invidious for us to discriminate between one agency or another. All are laudable. All are doing great and noble work. Each and every one has a field of labor which none will take away from it. There is no room for competition. There is so much to be done that no one agency can do it all. Sunday Schools and Talmud Torahs, congregational schools and the much maligned Heder, Kehillah boards and Chautauqua circles, all have their functions, all are doing efficacious work, all are entitled to our serious attention and support. We have reason to congratulate ourselves upon the achievements of the last two decades. There has been much shifting of position and much searching of hearts. Problems undreamt of have presented themselves. The cry for Jewish education comes from the out-of-the-way nooks and corners, from the isolated country town and farm. Sometimes the cry is pathetic. The parents lament the difficulty of providing a Jewish education for their children. Let that cry not go unheeded. And let us be thankful to the organization that will come to the rescue no matter what its label or watchword. The watchword which is universal is a Jewish education for every Jewish child in the country, whether much or little, whether by one method or another.

BOYCOTT OF JEWISH DOCTORS.

The quesion of the anti-Semitism that prevails in the Vienna hospitals has been raised in the Austrian Parliament. In several hospitals (among them the Elizabeth hospital, which has a Jewish ward endowed by the Rothschild family), no Jews have received appointments for several years, while from others Jewish doctors are being systematically driven out. The most flagrant case is that of the Emperor Francis Joseph Hospital, where there is a children's ward, founded and endowed by two Jewish philanthropists at a cost of some millions of crowns. The hostility to the Jews on the medical staff there is so intense that there are separate dining rooms for Jews and Christians, a "Christian bowling alley" and a "Jewish billiard room." There is also a tennis court, but the time table is so arranged that Jews and non-Jews never meet at the game.

ANTI-JEWISH PROPAGANDA IN BUCHAREST.

The Bucharest anti-Semites have succeeded in carrying on their propaganda to the extent of creating a pogrom panic in the city. The excitement of the mob at the last anti-Jewish meeting attained threatening dimensions, especially against the Order of B'nai B'rith, which the Jew-baiters described as an institution dangerous to the state. Military patrols were called out to maintain order, and the police surrounded the hall at which the meeting was held. After the proceedings the crowd broke the police cordon, and began to plunder the house of a Jewish doctor. Mounted patrols, however, dispersed the rioters, who, nevertheless, succeeded in inflicting severe injuries on a Christian child which they took for a Jewish boy. The Government has ordered the provincial prefects to maintain order.

The Jassy anti-Semites have held another meeting at which they formulated demands for the exclusion of Jews from the army, the establishment of a control of all foreign Jews arriving in Roumania, the prohibition of Jewish meetings and the introduction of further economic measures against our coreligionists. The meeting also wired to the King protesting against any concessions to Jews.

ROUMANIAN KING TO AID JEWS.

Monarch Sees Condition of Race in His Country Is Untenable.

According to dispatches from Bucharest, King Charles of Roumania recognizes that the condition of the Jews in his country is untenable and has resolved to alleviate it.

His majesty informed the leader of the Jewish movement that he had reached this decision owing to the fact that many Jewish soldiers participated in the recent Balkan war. As a constitutional monarch, however, he said he must first come to an understanding on the subject with the legislative bodies.

The question of the persecution of the Jews in Roumania, of whom there are about 270,000 among the population of 7,250,000, has given rise to discussions in various parliaments of Europe and in congress at Washington. On the last occasion on which it was brought forward in the Austrian parliament, on Dec. 17, Count Von Berchthold, the foreign minister, said there was no likelihood of foreign powers taking any direct action in the matter, which was regarded as purely a domestic one for Roumania.

THE JEWISH QUESTION IN ROUMANIA.

The Austrian Foreign Minister's Statement.

The full text is now available of the statement made by Count Berchtold, Austrian Minister of foreign affairs, at the sitting of the Hungarian Delegation on Dec. 17, 1913, in reply to the interpellation of Count Michael Karolyi.

Count Berchtold said: "In matters which concern Article 44 of the Berlin Treaty all the powers who were signatories to the treaty can only effectively intervene by united action. I do not think that such a step can be brought about, and I am of opinion that notwithstanding the sympathy which everybody must feel for the cause of religious equality, we have no interest in taking the initiative in the matter. I may further remark that I have no knowledge of any such initiative on the part of the English government. The English government has not approached us on the subject. I also very much doubt whether the international treatment of this question would benefit the Jews of Roumaina, for the Roumanian government regards it as being exclusively an internal affair of Roumania. I request the delegation to take note of my statement."

Count Michael Karolyi said that he was not prepared to take notice of the minister's reply. He regretted that Austria was unwilling to take the initiative in the matter, which as a neighbor they were more competent to do than were other signatories to the treaty.

The delegation voted by an overwhelming majority to take note of Count Berchtold's declaration..

RESTRICTIVE BILL REPORTED TO CONGRESS.

A hearing was granted by the Immigration Committee of the House of Representatives on Dec. 12 to representatives of various Jewish organizations to present arguments against the literacy clause in the pending immigration bills. Hon. Simon Wolf of Washington appeared for the B'nai B'rith Order, Mr. A. I. Elkus for the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and Mr. C. L. Sulzberger for the American Jewish Committee. Notwithstanding the arguments advanced, the committee reported the bill without amendment.

ITALY TREASURES JEWS OF RHODES.

The Duke d'Abruzzi, cousin of the Italian King, who recently visited the island of Rhodes, which was taken from Turkey by Italy, received in audience a Jewish deputation and delivered an address to them. The Duke praised the Jews in general, and declared that the Turkish Jews who have come, through the fortune of war, under Italian rule, could rest assured that their position would certainly not be worse than before the transfer. Wherever Italy rules, the Duke said, there is no room for race hatred.

LORD MILNER PRAISES JEWS.

At the dedication of the headquarters of the Jewish Lads' Brigade held in Aldsgate recently Lord Milner formerly High Commissioner for South Africa, delivered an address in which he praised the patriotism of the English Jews, and told of the distinction won by Jews in the South African war. Leopold Rothschild presided at the exercises.

WORLD INDEBTED TO JEWS FOR ITS MORALITY.

At a meeting of the Menorah Society of Cornell University, President J. G. Schurman of Cornell delivered an address. He said:

I am glad to welcome the Menorah Society in Cornell, not alone because it makes us conscious of the great contribution of Judaism to civilization, but because it is particularly fitting in this university. We would be false to our own ideals if we allowed ourselves to become victims of particularism.

That is the comprehensive note of the university. We are glad with this comprehensive spirit to have this society to remind us what Judaism has contributed to the world and to teach the younger generation the great ideals which have played such a great and wonderful part in the history of the world.

The university stands for morality. This is the contribution which this people has made and the great thing for which the world is striving. Our science, our history, our art, our literature and our mathematics are the contributions of the Greeks and are all right, but we must have morality or we are barbarians.

There is another thing which we must have in our civilization and that is law and order. The people who developed this on a large scale were the Romans. It spread from them to all parts of the world and is still used. This was the Roman contribution to modern civilization. No one who has been a student of history will say that sufficient attention has not been given to what the Greeks and Romans stood for.

This other element cannot be dissociated with civilization, however. As Greece stands for art and Rome stands for law and order, so Jerusalem stands for morality and so it occupies an exalted position in history. This is the distinguishing note which runs throughout every verse and chapter of the Bible.

The Menorah Society comes to the university with a challenge and defies us to ignore to our peril that which Judaism has contributed to civilization and which we have derived from it. We have derived our religion from this, and that spirit of Puritanism which was so closely connected with the settlement of the new world.

RECEPTION TO MEMBERS OF THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF B'NAI B'RITH AT SAN FRANCISCO IN 1915.

A committee of San Francisco members of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith has taken initial steps toward preparing a reception and entertainment for their brethren from every part of the world, who will assemble in San Francisco in 1915, at the convention of the Constitution Grand Lodge, the supreme body of the Order, which is to be held during the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

The 1915 convention will bring to San Francisco leading Jews from every part of the civilized world. The Constitution Grand Lodge embraces subordinate lodges in the United States, Canada, England, Germany, Denmark, Switzerland, Austro-Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria, Servia, Turkey, Asia Minor, Palestine and Egypt.

Details for the 1915 convention will be arranged at a meeting of the executive committee of the Constitution Grand Lodge to be held in Chicago in January.

The local committee in charge of the entertainment of the 1915 delegates has had several meetings and elaborate plans are being considered.

"The convention will bring leading Jews from every part of the world to San Francisco in 1915," said I. J. Aschheim, secretary of the local arrangement committee. "The most vital issues concerning the welfare of the Jewish people throughout the world will be discussed by these delegates. There will be about 120 delegates and we are planning to entertain them in fitting style. Already a per capita tax has been levied upon the members of District Grand Lodge No. 4, including the western lodges, to defray entertainment expenses."

A NEW JEWISH ACADEMICIAN.

M. Raphael George Levy has been elected a member of the Academy of Political Sciences. He is one of the most distinguished economists who have ever entered the Institute of France. M.Levy is a son of Benjamin Levy, who was inspector-general of public education, and a nephew of the celebrated financier, Bamberger, and the renowned Prof. Michel Breal. He closely identifies himself with Judaism, being a member of the Central Consistory of French Jews.

THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

(By Rev. Archibald Ross, D. D.)

It is a matter of congratulation that efforts are being made through the Anti-Defamation League of America to discourage, and if possible stay the vile practice of caricaturing the language and methods of a people who have done so much for the elevation of human nature in the world. It is inconceivable that any earnest thinking mind can resort to a system of badinage regarding the race that has given us the gist of our civilization in the Bible. And moreover, considering that the great majority of scholars are for holding intact the accuracy and grandeur of the text of the Old Testament as in many respects superior to the New, it may well awaken our conceptions as to the mighty trend that lies before us in this revelation. Magnanimity is a rare jewel today; we run shy of her, and consequently are lacking in vim and manhood.

The matter has a double significance when we consider the future in its far-reaching possibilities. While the name of Christianity is used, and has been used for centuries as a shield for the paternalism of governments and orgies of politicians, with its heterogeneous display of war, rapine and crime—the tendency today to shake off superstition through the education of the people, will work changes so mighty and eventful that the Hebrew Record will be looked upon with clearer acumen and more respect. Regarding the New Testament, all along through the centuries the great difficulty lay in the way of separating the valid and pure metal from the dross and superstition pressing upon the old fathers and works. The matter is not yet settled—our keenest thinkers running off for shelter to other fields—while Christianity has largely fallen on one side to mariolatry, as on a bed of roses; and on the other side to a passive adherence, and to vaudeville as a text book in embellishing its perplexing theses. Whatever of allegory may remain in the Scripture, it is evident that the aspirations of the human heart are quickened and revivified by the terse and majestic reasoning of the prophets, singers and lawgivers specified in the Hebrew text. This cannot be denied. Yet this much can truly be said: There is encouragement, yes and salvation for all honest, truth seeking people. We need not be afraid. Let us preach the doctrine of brotherhood without delay. It will be better for ourselves and our homes, better for our coming children. Hatred will disappear. The Kingdom of God will be realized more and more in the heart of humanity, while physical suffering will be largely eliminated.

Then, again, as we divest ourselves of unhealthy prejudices, we will see new fields of health and enjoyment opening before us. Distempers of body as well as of mind are often hastened through the truculent respirings of certain cities. English history alone offers a large field of suffering in this direction. And in America we need but mention the name of the late good Mayor Gaynor. The bullet of Gallagher certainly affected the Mayor physically, and impaired his mental health. But beside this, the uncalled for stabs of harsh critics touched him profoundly and he fell as it were smothered to death under an avalanche of the bitterest calumny.

In this hour of vantage it will be well to open up avenues for the better acquaintanceship of thinking minds, both Jew and Gentile. We say thinking minds—for it must be admitted that there are so many of our people who will not take time to think, who rise to a certain level in the moral atmosphere, and there they stay, and carry their prejudices with them to the grave. There is so much unnecessary isolation. We are reticent, when we should be open and above board. In man's moral capitol there is a large area left for rejoicing. And to look at it rightly, the labors of the Anti-Defamation League will result in a system where sociability and pleasure will have their just demands. The end of the world is not yet, as we religionists affirm; but now, when education and privilege are in the path of all, we need not waste time by aping the conceits of fashion, but rather strive, with a little close thinking, to find out the debt we owe to each other. The light is already breaking, and ecclesiasticism and superstition cannot prevent it. The public school, with its noble ENDOWMENT, will foster the claim more and more. But this ENDOWMENT taken away, or tampered with, our country's grandeur will ultimately vanish, and our race sink into the lowest serfdom.

It is not a pleasing thought that so many writers in touching upon themes of public interest strive to be evasive—shirking the real stamina of the question. There is nothing simpler, in our investigation of the public school question than the fact that our young scholars are offspring of Jews, Christians, Buddhists. Mahometans, and many other cults. Does not reason tell us that where there is such variety—for the happiness and content of all—religious teaching should not be favored in the public school? Ecclesiasts here and there are doing all they can to force religious teaching in the school. Our Roman Catholic brethren forced the Bible out. That was all right. But now they and others are striving to force it in again. When ecclesiasticism presses down the screws, she presses with a vengeance. And, as she says that she never changes, then we must plainly tell her that the public school is one of the strongest fences that we have put up to keep back that horrid wave of medievalism that has dwarfed the world for centuries. Let the fathers and mothers think of this. Let them teach the qualities of religion in love and obedience to their children from birth to eight or ten years of age, and we will not be crying out for the school to take up that work.

Considering that Mother Nature in her rich investiture kindly wraps us in the robe of illusion, where the full revealing of essence would speedily destroy in the grandeur of its flame, it will behoove us to think well and carefully regarding this wondrous environment. It will pay us to be humble, to cultivate discretion. Our moral astigmatism is partly generated in the feeling that we think we know things thoroughly. The conception is fallacious. The lesson that we are learning, and in which we are to advance, is the lesson of clean, healthy progress. The Infinite Being constantly knocking at the door of our hearts, is the one indelible fact that we may all know, and to know well is the great secret of living.—American Citizen.

WHAT PINDELL MAY MEAN.

The President has told the members of the Senate Foreign Relations committee that unless the nomination of Pindell of Peoria to be ambassador to Russia is confirmed before the close of the present extraordinary session of Congress, he will send the nomination in as soon as the regular session begins.

This means that Pindell is persona grata to Russia. Indeed, if the Russian statesmen were to express themselves freely and frankly they would probably tell Secretary Bryan that he could send no one to St. Petersburg at the present time that would please them better than Ad Interim Pindell. His appointment means that none of the perplexing diplomatic questions which we have put up to Russia will be pressed for a year at least.

Russia would like nothing better than this. The trade treaty has been abrogated for the purpose of punishing Russia for discriminating against American citizens of the Jewish race. Russia will, therefore, have another year, at least, to flout American passports when carried by Jews, and we shall have no redress. And Russia will have another year, also, in which to perfect an embargo on American goods, unhindered by any trade treaty guaranteeing to our merchants and manufacturers the ordinary rights of international commerce. The appointment of Pindell plays into the hands of Russia as though it had been made for that purpose.

Who shall say that it was not? Who shall say that Wilson is not trying to side-track the Jewish question for a year or more until he has got some other questions out of the way and is not deliberately using Pindell as a stop gap? It would be characteristic of him to use Pindell in this way, for he boasts that he has a single track mind at a time when everybody knows that the transportation business, if not the business of statesmanship, has long outgrown the single track institution, and needs two or even four tracks to meet the pressing demands of expanding commerce.—Boston (Mass.) Morning Herald.

ASKS ACTION IN ROUMANIA CASE.

Conditions arising from alleged discrimination against Jews in Roumania were described as "pitiful" by Representative Chandler of New York before the house foreign affairs committee. He urged a favorable report on his resolution calling upon the signatory powers to the Berlin treaty of 1878 to enforce Roumania's observance of that convention, which promised no discrimination because of creed or race. Secretary Bryan, Mr. Chandler said, was in sympathy with the resolution. The committee took no action.

The First Psalm

Written for the B'nai B'rith News

BY
DR. MAX L. MARGOLIS

Of all the books of the Bible the Psalter is perhaps the best known. The Church has made it its hymn-book. It has appended it in ancient as well as in modern times to the New Testament. The captions of the Psalms in their Latin garb are known far and wide beyond ecclesiastical circles. The Synagogue likewise makes ready use of the Psalter for liturgical purposes. The Psalter shares with the rest of the Bible that singular application to all times and conditions which made the Scriptures universal. But it must not be forgotten that the songs and prayers and meditations of those gifted bards to whom we owe the Psalter centered in the first instance in conditions of a definite period in the life of the Jewish people. It is true, the clue to the definite circumstance or condition is not always on the surface. The phraseology is often too general to lend itself to specific interpretation. Hence it is that scholars are not agreed in locating the greater number of the Psalms, whether they are named or nameless. The first psalm is an example in point.

There is certainly no obscurity as to the meaning. The contents are easily summarized. The happy lot of the godly is contrasted with the unhappy condition of the ungodly. "Godly" and "ungodly" are certainly general terms. They fit our present-day conditions as they are opposite at any time and under and circumstances. We interpret today those terms in a churchly sense. The godly man or the saint is the man who is a regular church-goer. We Jews have the same conception. We speak of a piety which manifests itself in the thumbing of the prayer book. Not that such practice is to be made light of. But it is not always that an inward piety goes hand in hand with the outward expression. Being a godly man in the Scriptural sense is a very difficult matter. It means outward piety, but also and especially the inward variety. It denotes conformity to established custom, but primarily righteous conduct. Religious consecration is something vastly different from mere sanctimoniousness. There is a mimicry of saintliness which may betoken quite the reverse. The saint of the first psalm finds his delight in the laws of the Lord in which he mediates day and night. If we give these words their highest interpretation, we are face to face with a man who in all his walks of life, throughout the daily routine of his avocation, in his business activity and in his domestic relation, at all times has the divine law before his mental vision and in the innermost of his being, who in any and all of the various problems that life brings consults the will of God as expressed in His law and acts accordingly. Yet the words may be taken literally. We have known the Jewish saint, whose sole occupation is with the law of the Lord, who by day and by night studies the ancient books, who scarcely indulges in the ordinary pursuits of life, who gives scant attention to the wants of the body. Such men are necessary in all religious communities. We of the ordinary run of mankind cannot be like them if we would. The business of life could not be carried on if all were to forsake the world and fly from it into the bosom of the law. We specialize nowadays. We do not regard it as the business of everybody to be or to play the scholar. Even religion is with us a specialty. We leave it to our ministers to exemplify it as well as to teach it. Yet we recognize the need. We want the scholar to be in our midst. We want the saint secluded in his house of study to embody the ideal for us that we may gaze at it from a distance. We may take it that the men who made the law their sole occupation were few and far between even in the days of the psalmist. We may also take it for granted that their lot measured by earthly or worldly standards was by no means happy. Of course, theirs was an inward contentment which certainly marks the highest happiness. Happy is the man that day in and day out studies the law—happy from a higher point of view. The beautification which religion bestows is of a different kind from the humdrum happiness which we mortals crave and for the sake of which we labor.

The saint is abnormal. We recognize his merits. We sing his praises. But we would not be like him. We sometimes look down upon him. He is often exposed to taunt and ridicule. He suffers at the hand of the men of the world, the scornful. His aloofness from the world makes him the butt of the frivolous. The majority of the sons and daughters of Adam are given to amusement. When the day's task is over, the night is spent in laughter and merriment. These are general conditions. But in the time of the psalmist there was a particular touch to the situation. The sinners and the scorners and the wicked who were the abomination of the saints were men and women, Jews and Jewesses who affected foreign modes of life and culture. It is true, even this feature has its analogue at all times and specifically in our own time. But the psalmist addressed himself to the conditions of his day. The people were divided into Hellenists and men after the type of Mattathias and his league of the pious who abhorred the foreigner and his mode of life. The clash between the innate Jewish genius and the foreign culture was most acute in those days. Yet it would be presumptuous to limit the psalm to the situation as it presented itself in the period preceding the great revolt. The language of the psalm is not specific enough for that. We would be begging the question if we were to speak with certainty and nail the first psalm down to the Maccabean period. For be it remembered, the sin is an old one just as it was repeated again and again aftertimes. The scorner and the true Jew were old enemies. The prophets contended with the men of scorn just as much as the psalmists. The aristocrats of Jerusalem were much the same in the days of Isaiah as in the days of Nehemiah or in the times of Mattathias. The fashions changed, but the mimicry of foreign civilization was always there. Now it was Babylon and Memphis that furnished the models, now it was Antioch and Athens. The twenty-eighth chapter of Isaiah may be pronounced a parallel to the first psalm. The drunkards of Samaria were probably no worse than the high livers of our own day. Nor were the men of scorn and the poetasters of Jerusalem upon whom the prophet pours out his wrath different from the writers of our times who make light of virtues and laugh at the humdrum moralities. The wiseacres were there too who dabbled in philosophy and in glib language, made vice attractive, who called evil good and good evil. Nor is the judgment of which the psalmist speaks different from the judgment which the prophet announced. Neither prophet nor psalmist allude to the doom which later theologians placed in another life. Individual judgment was no concern of the Scriptural writers. The fate of the Individual soul interested them but little. What was to them of supreme moment was the fate of the nation. They hoped and longed for a vindication of Israel as against the inimical world by which the nation was surrounded. But the nation itself was to be purified. An internal regeneration born of an internal conflict was to precede. A day, they hoped, was to come upon which the world would comprehend the difference that obtains between him that serves God and him that serves the world. The sinner and scorner shall have no endurance when the day of reckoning comes.

Thus it is made clear that while the first psalm must of necessity have been the product of a definite situation, that situation baffles identification. It baffles identification not so much because of the general terms employed, but for the reason that the situation always existed in Israel. Yes, it is still with us to-day. That is why we still turn to the ancient song of Beatitude for guidance and comfort. The positive tone of the psalm strengthens and encourages the wavering. We still hold to its ideal. We are still imbued with its hope. We have with us the scorners in abundance, the weak Jews who are a prey to novelty, who are ashamed of their identity, who would deny it if they could, who slink out by the backdoor, who betray us and desert us. We also have a sprinkling of the meek and unassuming Jews who delight in the inherited faith, the faith in the efficacy of the Jewish culture, of the Jewish law, of the Jewish outlook into life. Happy is the Jew who sitteth not in the seat of the scornful, who makes the law, the Jewish book, the Jewish literature, the standard of this life. There will be a day of reckoning. There will be a day of purification, of regeneration. Born of the stress of a particular situation, the psalm has seized upon an eternal truth. There may be wisdom in Edom, but there is no Torah there. And by the Torah the Jew is to be saved, saved for his own truth, saved for his own salvation, saved that the world may be saved through him. No wonder the world still clings to the beatitude of the first psalm. So much the more reason for us Jews to cling to the message Blessed is the Jewish saint.

A JEWISH PEOPLE'S BANK IN BULGARIA.

A Jewish People's Bank, Limited, has lately been established in Rustchuk. The share-capital amounts to 250,000 francs. All the shareholders are Zionists. The bank, which is of a purely commercial character, will serve greatly to strengthen the economic situation of the Jewish population of Bulgaria.

Conditions In Russia

Beilis is acquitted by the court of Kieff. But Russia, arraigned at the judgment bar of the world, is found guilty; guilty of attempting to brand the stigma of a medieval superstition upon a race as deserving of fair treatment as any other in the empire. The indictment of four thousand pages, drawn up, it is said, with the approval and encouragement of the Czar, had for its primary purpose, not the conviction of the brickmaker's bookkeeper of the murder of the boy, but the establishment of the blood accusation which has served for centuries as an excuse for the pogroms. There were days when the name of Beilis was hardly mentioned in the courtroom while the prosecution labored to prove to the peasant jury that the number of the wounds was seven times seven, or some multiple of thirteen, and that they were inflicted on those parts of the body from which, according to the Talmud and Cabala, the soul flowed out with the blood.

The chief support of the accusation was a book said to have been written by an unknown monk "Neophyte," who is said to have been converted from Judaism, and who since his conversion had read that somebody else had been told that Christian blood is used in all the principal Jewish rites. According to this "authority," the blood drawn from the veins of Christian boys is used for annointing babes at circumcision and put into the mouth of the dying Jew; it is mixed with the Passover bread and Purim cakes, and sprinkled in the form of ashes upon the boiled eggs eaten by the bridal couple.

Other "evidence" in the case was the story told by Apion and quoted by Josephus of a Greek prisoner found by Antiochus Epiphanes in one of the temples on the taking of Jerusalem in the second century B. C. The prisoner asserted that he was being fattened by the Jews for sacrifice, but had not yet become plump enough.

Father Pranaitis, a Catholic priest from Turkestan and star witness of the state, expressed his belief that there was more witchcraft in the twentieth century than in the Middle Ages, but that owing to the unfortunate abolition of torture it was more difficult to get Jews to confess it now than when the Inquisition was in power.

It must be borne in mind that this accusation is the most abhorrent to a Jew of any that can be brought against him, for his religion requires him to abstain from blood, and he will not eat any meat that has not been killed under the supervision of the rabbi in such a way as to drain it of all blood. The Old Testament gives evidence of the hard and continuous fight of the prophets and priests against the practice of the human sacrifice common among their neighbors. The same charge was brought against the early Christians and with much more excuse, for a spy attending one of their secret services and hearing it stated that the cup of which they partook contained human blood, might well have interpreted the language literally; in fact, an orthodox Christian would have insisted that it should be taken literally.

But religion is only a cloak for the persecution of the Jews in Russia. The real motives are economic and political. The Jews are shrewder and better educated than the Russian peasants and no doubt often get the better of them in a financial way. Many Jews are to be found in the ranks of the revolutionists plotting the overthrow of the autocracy, and with good reason.

The lot of the Jew in Russia is becoming harder to bear than ever. The present Minister of Education, Kasso, is making energetic efforts to shut them out from higher education. In St. Petersburg and Moscow the proportion of Jewish to non-Jewish students must not exceed 3 per cent; in other cities, 5 per cent; and even within the Pale of Settlement to which most of the Jews are restricted, they are not allowed to exceed 10 per cent. Minister Kasso, as we have explained in The Independent, has crippled the secondary schools by prohibiting the students from using the libraries for outside reading, and the universities are falling into decay. The number of students in Odessa University has fallen within the last few years from 5000 to 2000. Many of the young men and women, deprived of university facilities in Russia, have been going to Germany for their education. Berlin had 645 Russian students last semester. But this opportunity has now been shut off, for Berlin has closed its doors to Russian students, and other German universities have followed its example.

The censorship of the press is more stringent under the so-called constitutional government than under the old regime. During the first nine months of the present year the fines imposed on the press amounted to $53,500. For commenting on the Beilis case the government has confiscated twenty-four newspapers and four pamphlets, suppressed two newspapers and put four editors in prison.

About the middle of last September the eminent Danish author, George Brandes, took out a passport for Russia and asked the Russian Consul in Copenhagen to visê it. The consul declined to do so until Brandes should obtain permission from the Russian Government to enter the empire. The Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs then made formal application, through its representative in St. Petersburg, for the necessary permit. The Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs replied that Mr. Brandes could not be permitted to visit Russia for the reason that he had shown a feeling of hostility to the country, and had written "sharply critical articles" about it for the Danish newspapers. The tone of the Russian minister's reply was so emphatic and uncompromising as to leave no room for further negotiation, and George Brandes, one of the most distinguished essayists and critics in Europe, must henceforth be regarded as an "undesirable."

There are many more in the same class, so far as Russia is concerned, but none so eminent, perhaps, as he. The Russian Government expelled Joseph Pennell, the well-known artist, from Kieff, in the late 80's, and in 1892 it sent out or forced out Poultney Bigelow and Frederick Remington. In 1901, it arrested George Kennan, in St. Petersburg, and sent him under guard to the German frontier. Upon his arrival in London Mr. Kennan wrote Mr. Sipiagin, the Russian Minister of the Interior, offering to report immediately to the Russian police at the frontier station of Wirballen, and come back to St. Petersburg under arrest if His Excellency would grant him a fifteen minute interview. The minister, however, made no reply. Mr. Kennan's book, "Siberia and the Exile System," has been under the ban of the censorship for nearly twenty years, and about a month ago it was formally condemned by the St. Petersburg Chamber of Justice, which ordered that all obtainable copies of it be destroyed.

The Russian Government would show more wisdom if, instead of expelling or excluding foreign critics, it would strive to remove the evils to which the critics have called attention. The Czar does not better his reputation nor strengthen his position by closing his doors to one of the best known men of letters in Europe. Brandes, who is now seventy-one years of age, has written three books on the great northern empire, "Impressions of Russia," in two series, and "Impressions of Poland." None of them can be properly described as hostile to the country or its people.

This, then, is a plain statement of conditions in Russia at the present day, the press muzzled, the universities ruined, distinguished foreigners excluded, the judges of the Viborg Court of Appeals imprisoned in St. Petersburg for defending the constitution of Finland, and the Jews imprisoned in the Pale, deprived of their property, officially accused of cannibalistic practices, and in daily peril of their lives from an ignorant populace whose race hatred and superstition is fostered by the Government.—The Independent, New York.

NEWS FROM LONDON

BY OUR CORRESPONDENT DR. M. EPSTEIN

London, 21st December, 1913.

There is a sort of lull in our activities here. Possibly it denotes a smooth working of all the communal machinery, and your optimist would apply the adage "No news is good news," or "Happy is the nation without a history." But there is another side to the picture. The lull may possibly be the quiet of a deserted market place, where no one comes and not even the cocks do crow. Who shall say? Yet one or two incidents do go far to indicate something of our condition. The other day there was a meeting at the Chief Rabbi's house to consider whether a Jewish Peace Society should be formed. Other religious bodies had their Peace Societies, why not the Jews also? The movement certainly deserves all support. Are not Jews among the foremost in demanding peace, in praying for peace, in greeting each other (so to say) in terms of peace? How much the Hebrew word Shalom can convey! But more than this. It is asserted in some quarters, Shalom and all that it indicates notwithstanding that the Jews are among the chiefest of war-mongers. Hence an additional reason for having in England a Jewish Peace Society. A meeting was called; invitations to attend were issued to a goodly number of the community. What was the result? One was reminded of the old fable of the mountain and the mouse. We understand that some ten people put in an appearance at that meeting. But then a Minyan suffices.

Are we to conclude that the object of the meeting fell wide of its mark, That could hardly have been the case. The press blessed it in drawing attention to it. Perhaps there are too many societies for the community to support. It is not so much a matter of money as of persons and of time. It becomes a physical impossibility to attend to everything, with here a meeting and there a meeting. Moreover enthusiasm cannot be engendered in a limitless degree. But on the other hand, it may be sheer apathy on the part of English Jews, and the stress of daily avocations. Whatever the cause, so much is certain—that the keenness and enthusiasm that tell of life are hardly seen, and only apathy and stagnation are met with.

If the creator of a new Jewish Utopia were to arise in our midst, might it not be possible that he would make a suggestion which for simplicity could hardly be surpassed? No doubt on pure religious grounds we must make an allowance for differences in our midst. They have been; they exist; they will continue to be. Have we not had Pharisees and Sadducees, Rabbanists and Karaites, Chassidim and Mitnagdim, Orthodox and Reformers? In the religious sphere, therefore, we must have our bethels, great and small; we must agree to tolerate each others minhagim and practices. But outside of purely religious matters there is a wide field of Jewish interest including political, social, economic and other matters affecting Jews as a whole, affecting one set of Jews (say in Russia or Roumania) from the standpoint of another set (say in England or in America). There is the passport question; the question of Shechita; the attitude of Jews to peace and what not. Our Utopian, viewing all these tendencies would surely suggest that though we must agree to differ on purely religious grounds and there be content to tolerate difference and groups, here we might well unite into one body. And what body more broad, more sympathetic in its outlook, more complete in its world-wide organization than our own Order?

Let us apply this to the Anglo-Jewish community. Here are bodies whose name is Legion, doing all manner of work, some the happy hunting ground of one family or clique, others of another. And so on throughout. Why should not all of them combine together under the bright shining light of the Menorah for common work? Enthusiasm kindles enthusiasm. "And everyone sayeth to his brother, Be of good courage." Imagine such a Jewish Utopia. A Peace Society is determined upon. Not ten people would come but ten times ten. The Lodge would be their inspiration; the motto of the order their guiding star.

Or take another case. A prominent question before Jews the world over is that of the establishment of Jewish university in Jerusalem. Our intellect is held to be organized in "the Maccabaeans." Once brilliant in its very being, doing noble things, it now not even dreams of them. However, a requisition is sent by one of its more serious members to have this question thrashed out. What place more fitting for just this topic than the Maccabaean circle? In due course a meeting is summoned. Its composition was indicative of much. The majority of those present hailed from the East End of London,—as might have been expected. Bring up a matter of ideals, stir the imagination with questions of Jewish culture, and the young people from the East End are with you with heart and soul and might. That was to be expected then. There were a few from the West End, a mere handful. Of actual Maccabaeans in the company there were a dozen. Thus, it would seem that the interest of the Maccabaeans, the professional men of Anglo-Jewry, for this matter which is one for all Jews, is not very keen. Our imaginary Utopia would have them all Brethren of the Lodge, brought under the educative influence of its initiation ceremony and of the keenness which springs from the friendly rivalry of brothers in a good cause.

But it was of a Utopia we spoke. Realities are so different. For better or for worse, however, realities are our environment as yet. At least the Lodge in London exists. As long as it is there, these Utopian aims may one day be realized. For the present it pursues the even tenor of its way, and at its January meeting it will witness a change of officers. There is a healthy clause in its constitution which limits office holders to a period of one year, saving only the secretaries who may continue for two years. New men get a turn at shouldering responsibilities, the older men assisting. It is too early as yet to say on whom the choice of the Lodge will fall. But a word of recognition is due to one who has done splendid service to the Lodge as Honorary Secretary. His thoroughness, his methodical habits, his keen desire to have everything working smoothly deserve all praise. Mr. Coleman P. Hyman has certainly done his work exceedingly well and the satisfaction he has derived from it, quite apart from any appreciation on the part of his fellow members, must have been his best reward. His method and system will certainly be of help to his successor, whoever he may be.

One or two curious things have happened here of late. Every year on the Sunday in Chanuka a military service for Jewish regulars and volunteers in His Majesty's forces are held at one or other of our synagogues. There have been twenty of them hitherto, and it was felt from the first that Chanuka was the appropriate season for an essembly for such a purpose. No doubt it was the memory of the Maccabaean warriors that inspired the twenty sermons and moved the twenty congregations, growing in numbers from year to year. This year an untoward event happened. The 25th of Kislev and the 25th of December were very near to each other. Sunday next, the Sunday in Chanuka week, would normally have been the day for the special military service. But Sunday next, following so close after Christmas, is somewhat inconvenient for the Officers and others, as many people go out of town for the holidays. Here was a fix. Abandon the Chanuka military service? Certainly not.. Is there an alternative then? Yes. Hold it on the Sunday before Chanuka. So the Chanuka military service this year, its 21st, was celebrated before Chanuka. It does not, of course, much matter. But it has a humorous side.

The other occurrence is serious. For a good many years the Jewish Lads' Brigade has had no home of its very own. Through the generosity of Mr. Max Bonn, one of our public-spirited young men with money, it has now been provided with a building for its accommodation, containing at the same time a Boys' Club which had grown up in the vicinity. The idea was splendid, and its execution was carried out in fine style. Nay more. The structure was to serve the common cause of the neighbourhood, regardless of race or creed. All might come to use it. But the bricks and mortar must have a name. One was chosen that would give no indication of its Jewish origin. It was suggested that the place be known as Camperdown House. Very rightly, as some people think, the Jewish Chronicle took up a firm attitude on the matter and rebuked the promoters of the scheme for their choice of label. Why not Goldsmid House—in memory of the late Colonel Goldsmid, who was the father of the Jewish Lads' Brigade. Very properly the Jewis Chronicle urged that the place could be as undenominational as it chose under the style of Goldsmid House as under that of Camperdown House. A good many people were pleased with the independent attitude of our Jewish paper, more especially that it was on the right line.

And here we are reminded of human imperfection. Right as was the attitude of the Jewish Chronicle on this particular question, there is a strong body of opinion that it is not always so. Whenever a matter of views arises, then there must surely be toleration. But when it is a matter of courtesy, then disappointment must ensue when, expecting it, one does not find it. Recently a new Society was established in London for the purpose of stirring up interest in Palestine. It holds Drawing Room meetings which have been fairly successful; and it has been instrumental in making a goodly number of people acquainted with affairs in the Holy Land. The Society is not a Zionist Society as such—rightly or wrongly so. The editor of the Jewish Chronicle was invited to several of its meetings and notably to the one held a week or two ago, at the Chief Rabbi's house. He came and he reported the meeting. Certainly the Society is grateful to him for that. But he placed the report under the heading "Zionism." Now as a matter of courtesy, he might have had some regard to the wishes of the Society in the matter. It is beside the mark to consider whether these wishes were justified or not. There they were, and one does expect common courtesy from a paper of standing, to say nothing of a Jewish paper. But then that paper is in the position of a monopoly holder and the editor knows it. In the fairy tale pride came before a fall; and even the Anglo-Jewish worm will turn. To our American brethren all this may be entertaining.

The Congregation of British Jews, whose beautiful synagogue is situated in Upper Berkeley Street, have taken unto themselves an additional minister. Both the present occupants of the pulpit are getting on in years, and they require an assistant. The Rev. Morris Joseph who has made for himself an especial niche among the Anglo-Jewish ministers of today is not without honour in the United States, where there is a general chorus in praise of his excellent book Judaism as Creed and Life. Mr. Joseph is a scholar and a gentleman. Both he and his colleague, the Rev. Isidore Harris, of the Jewish Year Book fame, were trained for the ministry under orthodox auspices (or what goes under that name with us). In order to make provision for a supply of ministers for themselves, the Upper Berkeley Street congregation have established a Ministers' training fund, with the aid of which many young men have undergone a course of study in Jewish theology. The last holder was Mr. Vivian Simmons, a son of the late Rev. Laurence M. Simmons, of Manchester. In his late father Mr. Simmons has a model of all that a Jewish Minister should be, and doubtless the memory of his father's work will be an inspiration to him in his own at Berkeley Street. For he has been chosen Assistant Minister to Mr. Joseph and Mr. Harris, and so far as human vision reaches, this will be a life-long connection between minister and congregation. From one point of view it is an event in the history of the community when a new minister is appointed; it is so in a special degree when a minister is appointed at Berkeley Street. In the words of Lord Lytton's novel, "What will he do with it?"

Every minister may make or mar the history of his congregation and the corporate life of its members. Above all else the minister may do much to further or retard religious education. And we in England are in a bad case with regard to Jewish education. Our children die for lack of knowledge and our teachers cannot help them much. Some say we have no teachers worth mentioning. There may be truth in this. We do not attempt to train our teachers, (except in a very amateurish way), nor do we pay them adequately. The result is chaos. Sowing the wind, we reap the whirlwind. And curious to relate, such is the apathy, or let us call it, the thoughtlessness of our leaders, that instead of our ministers being requested to give themselves up to this, a vital matter for the future of Judaism in this country, they are told off to visit prisons and hospitals. This is undoubtedly good work, but what should we say of the governors of a city if they sent the bakers to make horse-shoes and let the people starve? Yet such is the policy of Anglo-Jewry in this respect. In all other countries of the diaspora a Jewish minister or rabbi is also a teacher, and not of the adults only. He teaches the boys and girls, and he aims at a maximum. In England we are content with a minimum.

The whole problem of Jewish religious education in England, though very difficult, is very pressing. The Lodge did wisely in discussing it at one of its recent meetings. Above all we require a recognition of the ills we are subject to, and the possible methods of remedying them. A discussion at the Lodge brings out different points of view and tends to clear thinking on the subject. Though directly the Lodge may not as yet be able to bring direct influence to bear on this question in a practical shape, indirectly it may contribute no small share to bring about an improvement. But even a practical influence ought not to be excluded. Practical influence is in this capitalistic age of ours usually obtained in return for money grants. Why should not the Lodge make money grants to educational bodies on certain conditions? The answer is, it must have the money. And to have the money it needs a large flock of members. Q. E. D.

Of larger Jewish questions we have heard but little during the last month. Unostentatiously things are settling down in the Balkans once more. What the re-arrangement will bring for the Jews it is impossible to foresee. Still, we have an assurance from Sir Edward Grey, and doubtless if Parliament were sitting there might be a likelihood of getting an expression of opinion in the House of Commons. Presumably a question in the House would receive more favourable consideration that the interpolation in the Hungarian Delegation on 17 December, 1913, by Count Karolyi, who asked the Foreign Minister whether he would invite the Powers to take common action with the object of putting into force the clauses of the Berlin Treaty dealing with the citizenship of Jews in Roumania. Count Berchtold gave a very cold reply: it was not in the interest of Austria-Hungary to take the initiative in this matter. Apart from this we hear nothing from Bulgaria, nothing from Greece, nothing from Servia. Possibly there is nothing to tell. Possibly events are brewing there and all may end in the victory of liberal ideas. Sooner or later these must triumph. In any event the year 1914 may bring with it many changes for Jews in the Balkans, and in the interests of humanity—because they are men not specially because they are Jews—it is to be hoped that the changes will satisfy the highest canons of twentieth century political thought.

POWERS WILL NOT INTERFERE WITH ROUMANIA.

Replying in the Hungarian Parliament to the suggestion that the Powers who were parties to the Berlin Treaty take joint action to obtain equality of treatment for the Jews in Roumania, the Minister of Foreign Affairs for Austro-Hungary stated that he did not believe the Powers could be induced to take such action, that Austro-Hungary's interest in the matter would not justify her in taking the initiative and he doubted whether the raising of the question internationally would be of benefit to the Roumanian Jews, as the latter government held the matter to be a strictly domestic affair.

PRESS COMMENTS

ON THE

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

SALT LAKE CITY (UTAH) NEWS.

We are in receipt of a circular announcing the formation of an Anti-Defamation League, with headquarters in Chicago.

The league is founded under the auspices of the Hebrew Order of B'nai B'rith, and its mission will be to bring about the abatement of the defamation of the Jews. For this purpose it will place Jewish literature in public libraries; engage the services of lecturers and publicists to bring Jewish subjects before school children, university students, and the general public, and refute through the newspapers every article that may place the Jews in a false light.

Special attention will be paid to dramatic representations, vaudeville stunts and moving pictures in which the Jews are presented in offensive roles. It is proposed to secure legislation providing for the appointment of a board of state censors, and where the passage of such a statute cannot be attained, similar relief will be sought from the various municipalities by securing the enactment of appropriate ordinances. The league will endeavor to secure the passage of laws, making it unlawful for any hostelry, directly or indirectly, to publish, circulate, issue, display, post or mail any written or printed communication, notice or advertisement to the effect that any of the accommodations of such places shall be refused, withheld, or denied to any person on account of his creed.

We are in full accord with the general purposes of this league. In a country which very aptly has been called a melting pot, because in it white citizens from all parts of the world mingle and form one great community, there should be no attempt by representatives of one nationality, or race, to caricature those of another. It is not only bad taste. It is retarding the process of assimilation and is, therefore, detrimental to the very purpose for which, in the divine providence, the American nation was destined to become the crucible in which the great brotherhood of man should finally take form.

And yet it is done every day; not as a lesson by which to profit, in which case it might be beneficial, but for the amusement of the vulgar.

We believe, however, that an Anti-Defamation league could profitably be made large enough to take in all nationalities. It could teach a general lesson, just as well as confining itself to one people. The very exclusiveness of the league may render its work difficult. But every good American citizen will wish it success, for there is strenuous work ahead for such an organization. And it deserves success, provided it will confine itself to the object outlined and not reach out for political supremacy.—

THE PITTSBURGH PRESS.

The sympathy of all right-thinking people will greet the new organization calling itself by the above title. The Anti-Defamation league has not come too soon. There has been a vast amount of misrepresentation of that large and exceedingly worthy class of citizens, the Jews. They are not the only class which has undergone habitual disparagement in thoughtless, flippant, and even unprincipled fiction, theatrical productions, etc. Not long ago another very numerous body of citizens felt obliged to organize for protection from habitual stage slander. The Jew has not suffered alone, but he has suffered most.

The venting of ignorant, frivolous (sometimes malicious) racial and religious prejudices through comic papers, class publications, theaters, moving picture films and other mediums has become a habit the extent of which we do not as a nation fully realize. On the ground simply of the human wrong and injustice that it inflicts it is utterly deplorable.

Without respect to nationality or creed fair-minded men and women will unite in support of any and every measure within reason which promises to put an end to this systematic and unceasing detraction of multitudes of innocent and unoffending persons. That it does incalculable and deep seated harm by keeping alive, and stirring up, various class prejudices, hardly need be said. It thus tends to divide into hostile groups a nation which should be absolutely one. Society and government find the difficulty of a great variety of problems increased by this state of affairs. Where class spirit is fomented, there is always a danger of class government—the greatest danger that can threaten a republic. The ignorant and malicious slanderer of this or that class of citizens is a public enemy of the worst order.

It is not the purpose of the Anti-Defamation league, which is organized under the auspices of the Order of B'nai B'rith, to attempt to suppress innocent and good natured character sketches. It is gross and malicious caricatures, tending to wound the Jew and excite hatred of him, that the league will make war upon by every means at its command. It is a war which righteous public opinion will sanction. Defamation of the Jew, to whom our civilization is so heavy a debtor, has become a blot upon the land, which should be wiped out by appeals to the sentiment of fair-play, reinforced by legislation in whatever form practicable.

BAKER CITY (ORE.) DEMOCRAT.

The world's sympathy has been aroused for Jews in Russia, says the Journal. The trial and acquittal of Mendel Beilis, at Kiev on a charge of ritual murder accentuated the unfortunate condition of a people hounded by prejudice and persecuted by cruelty. Civilized people everywhere protested against an attempt to legally murder a man and to brand his co-religionists with infamy.

The Russian plot failed largely because of indignation it stirred in the United Sates. Americans feel keen satisfaction in the part they played against Russian intolerance. Therefore it is a good time for Americans to take stock of themselevs.

The Anti-Defamation league has been organized, with headquarters in Chicago. Its object is to eradicate the defamation of Jewish people by appeals to reason, justice and conscience. Its ultimate purpose is to secure equal justice and fair treatment to all citizens alike, and to put an end to unjust discrimination against and ridicule of any sect or body of citizens. Its membership includes representative Jews throughout the United States and Canada.

The league asks the support and co-operation of all broad minded men and women, regardless of creed. Its activities will be largely educational, with the purpose of giving the public a true understanding of the Jew and Judaism. The Jews themselves will be impressed with their responsibilities as citizens.

This is an opportune time for the league to begin its campaign for equal justice.

BUFFALO NEWS.

The Order of B'nai B'rith has organized a league called "Anti-Defamation." The purpose of it is to bring about an abatement of discrimination against Jews. The league will furnish libraries with lists of books on Jewish subjects. It will engage the services of prominent persons, regardless of religion, to deliver lectures on Jewish subjects. It will spread literature that gives a true understanding of the Jews and Judaism, and it will aid in safeguarding the mind of the growing child against prejudice and will wage war to remove textbooks which tend to create a prejudice.

Whether much good will be done in that way remains to be seen. The world is moving with respect to the Jew and that citizen gains in general respect and in protection of law in nearly all countries. If Russia is still barbarous, even infamous in her treatment of the Jew, she is less cruel than formerly and is beginning to respond to a world opinion that is growing in favor of justice to all, whether Jew or Gentile, bond or free.

The estimate of the Jew in almost any community is formed, largely, by conduct of the Jews in each community and since they are as a rule found to be highly industrious and thrifty and patriotic and intelligent, whatever prejudice may have existed generations ago in America, at least, is very largely dissipated.

One does not hear the question raised when a Jew is a candidate for public office. Neither is there the least social obstacle in their recognition as members of society, in accordance with their worth and station and circumsances, like any other class of citizen.

Still the league may be of service in pushing home all the time the merits of the Jew as an answer to the criticism or the prejudice that may be found on occasion and that lies in the mouth of the thoughtless.

The league recognizes that the main aid to its purpose is the Jew himself and says that he must keep his house in order, so that complaints of the league may be justified when they protest against unfair treatment.

BUFFALO ENQUIRER.

In very moderate terms, the Jewish Anti-Defamation league of America puts forth its first proclamation of its principles and purposes.

Briefly stated, the Anti-Defamation league "aims by organized effort to bring about the abatement of the defamation of the Jew and ultimately to put an end to unfair discrimination against all citizens."

The league's proposed activities include a campaign of education relating to Jewish ethics, customs, history, religion and philosophy as well as effort to diminish misrepresentation of the Jew in moving pictures, on the stage and in the press.

The Anti-Defamation league's announcement makes plain that it will ask and urge nothing but fair play. In its campaign it will have the support of all lovers of the square deal.

ALBANY ARGUS.

The Argus has received from the Anti-Defamation League of America a circular setting forth the objects sought to be accomplished by that recently formed organization, the executive committee of which is composed of prominent Jews of almost every leading city in the United States, and asking the co-operation of the press in the attainment of its objects. All the best newspapers of the country will heartily lend their co-operation to this movement, the main purpose of which is to put a stop to the defamation of Jews through scurrilous caricatures, misrepresentations in plays and moving pictures, and articles in publications that present the Jew in a false and unworthy light.

It is a sad reflection on the people of this country, where democracy and religious tolerance are supposed to prevail, that such a movement was necessary, and yet the defamers of the Jews constitute but a small proportion of the people of the United States. So bitter have been the attacks of this minority, however, that the formation of this league has been justified. The Jews have not been the only ones to suffer from insulting caricatures and other forms of defamation, but perhaps they have suffered the most.

It is hardly necessary to say a little good natured humor in regard to racial characteristics is resented neither by the Jews nor by any other people, but it is very easy to overstep the bounds of propriety in this direction.

We gather from the league's circular that it proposes to proceed in moderation and that one of its purposes will be to disseminate literature designed to give the public a true understanding of the Jew and Judaism. "The league is not unmindful," it says, "that upon the Jew himself rests a great burden. We must keep our own house in order so that our complaints may have their greatest justification and effect. We wish to emphasize the fact that in this work good sense and wise tolerance must guide our action. A little excessive pride or lack of perspective may seriously hamper our efforts. We are not complaining of every characterization of the Jew upon the stage, in the moving picture films or in the public press; we simply ask that where the characterization is untrue it be made honest, natural, just and truly representative of the actual social status of the Jew.

Nothing could be fairer. All unprejudiced Americans will extend their sympathy to this movement, and do whatever they can to help accomplish the objects of the league.

ISHPEMING WEEKLY IRON.

One has just been formed in Chicago having for its object the protection of the Jew. It is needed, it should have been formed long ago. The Jews have been ridiculed as a people because of a comparatively few individual characters. Nor should even the malefactors be described as Jews any more than should other wrong doers be called Protestants or Catholics. All this new organization demands is that the Jews be treated fairly, on the same basis as are all other people, and in this they ask for that which is right and just. The officers of the new league are men of high standing throughout the country, able men who are well and favorably known. They are in earnest in the work they are now attempting and they should have the hearty support of every law-abiding citizen, no matter what his nationality or creed.—Ishpeming.

OKLAHOMA CITY TIMES.

A new order has recently been organized which will be known as the "Anti-Defamation League," its purpose being to bring about an abatement of discrimination against Jewish people.

This league proposes to furnish libraries with lists of books on Jewish subjects and engage prominent persons, regardless of their religion, to deliver lectures on similar themes. It will spread literature that gives a true understanding of the Jews and Judaism, and it will aid in safeguarding the mind of the growing child against prejudice and will wage war to remove textbooks which tend to create a prejudice.

Whether much good will be done in that way remains to be seen. The world is moving with respect to the Jew and that citizen gains in general respect and in protection of law in nearly all countries. If Russia is still barbarous, even infamous in her treatment of the Jew, she is less cruel than formerly and is beginning to respond to a world opinion that is growing in favor of justice to all, whether Jew or Gentile, bond or free.

The estimate of the Jew in almost any community is formed largely by conduct of the Jews in each community, and since they are as a rule found to be highly industrious and thrifty and patriotic and intelligent, whatever prejudice may have existed generations ago, in America at least is very largely dissipated.

One does not hear the question raised when a Jew is a candidate for public office. Neither is there the least social obstacle to their recognition as members of society, in accordance with their worth and station and circumstances, like any other class of citizens.

SIOUX CITY TRIBUNE.

The large Jewish population of the United States is aroused over what is called the "constant and ever increasing efforts to traduce the good name of the Jew." The result is the "Anti-Defamation League," organized with headquarters at Chicago, which will attempt to secure equal consideration for Jews with those of any other race.

It has been frequently pointed out that the word Jew as applied to modern peoples refers to a religion rather than a race, and discrimination against Jews is religious persecution.

In Russia where the Beilis trial has happily resulted in an acquittal, this religious persecution is emphasized, and there is grave danger that failing to secure a conviction under the law on the absurd charge of ritualistic murder, other means of persecution may be employed.

The Anti-Defamation League may later extend its operations to countries where the Jews are discriminated against in various ways. In the United States it will seek to prevent unfair characterization on the stage, in moving pictures and in publications which create prejudice.

NEW ORLEANS TIMES.

Under the auspices of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith the Anti-Defamation League of America recently has been organized "to bring about the abatement of the defamation of the Jew." In a circular just issued the league presents a statement of its principles and an outline of the activities it has planned. "Public and university libraries will be furnished with lists of books," it is explained, "which, in the opinion of the league, tend to show the facts regarding Jewish ethics, customs, history, religion and philosophy. * * * The services of prominent lecturers and publicists, regardless of religious affiliation, will be enlisted for the purpose of delivering lectures on Jewish subjects at universities, public schools and at appropriate gatherings. The league will provide also for the dissemination of literature designed to give the public a true understanding of the Jew and Judaism."

In addition the league proposes to keep careful watch upon theaters and moving picture films to prevent the production of plays giving "an unfair or untrue portrayal of the Jew." It will seek to secure the enactment of state legislation providing for a Board of State Censors, "with a view of preventing the presentation in moving picture theaters of films which are malicious and scurrilous caricatures, or are objectionable in other respects." Toward the close of its circular the league expresses the hope that "all persons, when once convinced of the beneficence of this work, will join with us therein, and that a spirit of sympathy and fellow feeling will commend our purposes to the co-operation of all citizens. * * * We wish to emphasize the fact," it adds, "that in this work good sense and wise tolerance must guide our action. A little excessive pride, or a lack of perspective, may seriously hamper our efforts."

The constant and consistent exercise of "good sense and wise tolerance" will, in our opinion, commend the work of the league to all fair-minded citizens, for liberal minds hold no sympathy for the attempts to provoke prejudice against a race or a faith by defamatory plays or literature. But it may be suggested in all kindness that a movement of this character carried to extremes by counsels of unwisdom or intolerance, might do more harm than good. A supersensitiveness that leads a people or a race to take offense where none is intended, to magnify a portrayal of individual character into an insult to a nation or a faith, may not safely be encouraged. The effort to disarm and to prevent the spread of cruel and groundless prejudices is worthy of hearty support and commendation. But its distortion, by supersensitiveness or intolerance, into an effort to suppress every book or play presenting delineations that might be misconstrued into insults or affronts upon this or that nation, people, race or faith, would deprive our libraries of some of their greatest books and bar from the stage not a few of its masterpieces.

THE AMERICAN CITIZEN.

There has been inaugurated at Chicago under the auspices of the Great Jewish organization of B'nai B'rith Order a league for systematic warfare upon all forms of defamation of Jews. This certainly is a tremendous task, a needful one and one that will keep its promoters very busy. We not only are in favor of the abolishment of the defamation of Jews but of anybody. All defamation is wrong. It seems strange, however, that in a so-called Christian country there should be need of such an organization. While it is operating we wish it abundant success and to that end we would urge that all Jews take part in the fight in addition to other ways by so conducing themselves as to keep beyond the possibility of defamation by even the most prejudiced and unkind of their critics. In this as in everything else we believe that prevention is better than cure.—

JEWISH VOICE.

The Anti-Defamation League is working most successfully through its system and through the wide-awake spirit in every one of its one hundred members. Nothing, needing immediate attention escapes their vigilance.—Jewish Voice.

JEWISH INDEPENDENT.

Cleveland Lodge, Independent Order B'nai B'rith, might benefit greatly by writing to Adolf Kraus of Chicago, international president of the Order and head of the Anti-Defamation League, for some more Anti-Defamation League literature. They seem to need it badly. Postal cards to members announcing Sunday night's open meeting mentioned the fact that there would be a "surprise." Well, there was. In fact, there were two surprises. One was a "Hebrew comedian" without the "Hebrew comedian" makeup, and the other was a rendition of "The Rosary." Pretty fair Chanukah festival that, for a Jewish lodge.—Jewish Independent.

JEWS ONLY ARE PERMANENT.

In a recent lecture on immigration delivered at the University of California, Prof. Carleton H. Parker made the following statement: "The only nationality which is consistently coming to America for religious and political freedom are the Jews. Others are what are known as the 'birds of passage,' that is, they come here for but a short time to acquire some end which they have in view. This is nearly always to earn a small amount of money with which they may return to their own country to set themselves up as rich men."

KING CHARLES OF ROUMANIA AND HIS JEWISH SUBJECTS.

The professed desire of King Charles of Roumania to remove the ban of legal restrictions from the Roumanian Jews may mean much, or it may mean little. We would fain hope the former; judging the future by the past, however, we cannot but fear the latter.

So far as the treatment of the Jew is concerned, there is no more hideous stain on the escutcheon of latter day civilization than that which Roumania has placed upon it. In "Darkest Russia" the race has not suffered more oppression, cruelty, contumely and injustice. More than that, revolting as have been Russia's proscription, intolerance and brutality in dealing with the race, the Russian government has been more honest in its infamy than the Roumanian. Russia has at least eschewed the miserable evasion and the flagrant breaking of faith with other nations touching the Jewish questions that have so damnably marked the Roumanian record.

Under the treaty of Berlin, which recognized Roumania as an independent kingdom, it was required that absolute freedom of worship should b guaranteed all persons living in Roumania, and that no religious belief should constitute a bar to the enjoyment of equal political privileges and rights. The constitution of Roumania had provided that only "Christians can be citizens," and was therefore amended so as to conform to the treaty stipulation. But the amendment proved to be not worth the paper it was written on. Through the enactment of a series of red-tape, temporizing, quibbling, statutes, both the amendment and the treaty obligation were completely nullified; and what with the continued efforts of the Jew-baiters to incite in the non-Jewish population racial and religious prejudice against the Jews, the last condition of the oppressed people, if anything, was worse than their first.

So much was this in evidence that, notwithstanding they had permitted the Berlin treaty to be torn into shreds as respects other provisions, several of the signatories to that pact felt called upon to make Roumania's outrages upon the Jews the subject of diplomatic representation to Bucharest. Even this government, though not a party to the Berlin agreement, protested against those outrages on one occasion. But all representations and protestations were without avail. Roumania continued to defy world sentiment; to flout the dictates of justice, humanity and civilization.

If King Charles is sincere in his profession that he has seen a "new light" as to the disabilities and persecution of his 300,000 Jewish subjects and shall translate his profession into use of his influence with the legislative bodies of Roumania, to clear away the barriers these have erected against the operation of the constitution, Roumania may at last have also turned her face to the morning. To put the religious freedom clause of that instrument into effect, in letter and in spirit, would be, apart from all bearing such action would have on religious intolerance, the first step in righting one of the grossest wrongs that have ever disgraced modern Europe. But King Charles, his solicitude for the downtrodden Roumanian Jews none the less, counsels them to continue to be patient. And as much as we could hope that we are mistaken, we cannot dismiss serious apprehension that the world also will have to be patient—and for a long and weary season. By the token o Roumania's previous arrogant, inhuman and defiant violation of her solemn pledges, we fear that the king's profession is but a mockery of his "desire."—Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch.

WAS COLUMBUS A JEW?

A remarkable statement concerning the origin and race of the great Columbus was made before a San Francisco audience a few days ago by Mr. Ben Schloss, an official of the Commercial Travelers' Congress, who declared that the discoverer of America was a Jew and that his immortal trip across the Atlantic was financed by one of the same race.

History is notoriously inaccurate and has been known to claim its rights only after centuries of error. So it may be with Columbus, who for 400 years has been regarded as an Italian and a native Genoese—the Cristoforo Colombo of legend and monument. Certain it is that recent discoveries in the archives of Spain throw considerable doubt upon the facts hitherto accepted as history, and within the last year many scholars have yielded the statement that the discoverer was in reality Cristobal Colon, the Spanish Marano, a pseudo-Christian of Jewish descent, native of Pontevedra, in Galicia.

The incidents in Columbus' life which support the belief were revealed by two noted Spanish historians, Dr. Celso Garcia de la Riega and Dr. de Horta y Pardo, who spent thirty years at their research studies before announcing the result. They found that when Columbus came from Genoa to Spain, he did, indeed, give Genoa as his birthplace, but there is no record in the Italian city to prove his statement and it is regarded as likely, for many reasons, that the discoverer should wish to conceal his origin. His son, who wrote his father's biography, said Columbus never disclosed his early life even to his wife and children, and contemporaries of the great man openly questioned his own statement that he was a native of Genoa.

This reticence is attributed to the Jewish origin of the discoverer, for at that period Jews were subjected to pitiless oppression in Spain and Portugal. They were known as Nuevos Cristianos, or crypto-Jews, and were compelled to worship in secret. On the day Columbus set sail for the West 300,000 Jews were forced to flee from Spain to avoid imprisonment and torture.

Other facts brought out by the historians were that all of Columbus' family bore Old Testament names not then used by Christians and that the discoverer himself never wrote Italian, but invariably used Latin or Spanish, the latter often in Galician slang.

As for the part played by members of the Hebrew race in fitting out the expedition that was to discover a new continent, the records are more explicit. The historians found that Luis de Santagel, head of an important commercial house in Valencia, loaned Ferdinand and Isabella 17,000 ducats, or $160,000, with which to supply funds to Columbus. Gabriel Sanchez, royal treasurer, and Jean Cabreiro, royal chamberlain, both of Jewish descent, pleaded with the monarchs on behalf of the sailor. Joseph Vecinho, physician in ordinary to King Joan II of Portugal, provided Columbus with Latin translations of astronomical tables, the work of another Jewish scholar, Abraham Zacuto. Isaac Abravanel, a wealthy Hebrew, gave him financial assistance.

Thus it is that history runs. What a fascinating study for the two doctors in the ancient archives at Seville and Madrid! Columbus may have been a Jew; possibly not—the facts are still obscure. They must be accepted for what they are worth, except the one great fact of the will and purpose of the man. That alone cannot be changed by what the historians may find. Jew or Gentile, it is the pride of all the world there was one man to say: "Sail on! Sail on, and on!"—San Francisco (Cal.) Post.

THE RUSSIAN JEW IN AMERICA.

An accepted public school authority says children of Russian Jewish families lead in their class room work, which they pursue with zeal akin to a passion. Though many of the little boys sell papers on the streets and do other odd jobs to help support the families, they are punctual and regular at school. Many fathers and mothers, together with older children, are to be found in the public night schools, grinding away at books denied them in earlier years. Wherever they locate among us these immigrants practice thrift and industry with almost religious fervor, and remarkable success, setting valuable object lessons to those about them.

And these are the people Russia evidently likes to persecute. How is it that as soon as he gets out of Russia into a land of tolerance, of liberty, of equal opportunity regardless of race or color or creed, the Russian Jew rises by his own powers in competition with the very best of all other peoples? How is it that only in Russia he is accused of imaginary crimes? It may be worth while to say in this connection that as a rule American breadlines are not formed extensively, American prisons and asylums not filled with Russian Jews.

Some day perhaps a way may be found to intervene in Russia in behalf, not only of the persecuted Jew, but of civilization itself. It is a poor commentary on what we call the "comity of nations" that it has no remedy for such medieval despotism and intolerant cruelty.—Omaha Bee.

I find the gayest castles in the air that were ever piled far better for comfort and for use than the dungeons in the air that are daily dug and caverned out by grumbling, discontented people.—Emerson.

THE JEW AS A FARMER.

An effort is being made by certain Hebrew relief associations which look after the Jewish immigrants arriving in this country to direct their footsteps toward the farm.

Heretofore they have crowded into already overcrowded cities. They find a means of meager existence in stores and factories and sweat shops, when the country offers them health and happiness and a means of making a comfortable living.

It will be a glad day for not only members of the Jewish race, but for all others alike, when they desert the shop and factory for the harrow and the plow.

The problem is, will the tide of Hebrew immigration that is ever flowing into this country be diverted from the congested cities of the east for the land of promise in the South and West.

National farm schools have been established, and nearly every state in the Union has its agricultural school, where the value of farming is pointed out and the applicant can acquire knowledge of agricultural work.

The Hebrews, although originally a pastoral people, have never in recent centuries been a race of farmers. The persecution to which they have been subjected in the past has forced them to learn to live by their wits rather than by their hands. In some countries they have been expressly prohibited from owning or from cultivating the land. In other countries the constant fear of banishment has deterred them from investing in farms. Up until recently the position of he Hebrew in almost every country of the old world has been so insecure as to render it highly imprudent for him to invest his fortune in any commodity that could not be quickly sold or removed in an emergency.

In the United States it is different. Here the Hebrew can live and die in peace. He is respected and has become a powerful factor in affairs, national and local. Here he is honored for his achievements, and is recognized for his ability. Some of the greatest lawyers, physicians, educators and financiers are members of the Hebrew race.

Should the tide of immigration turn toward the farm, a new field will be opened.

When the Jewish immigrant arrives he feels that he is a stranger in a strange land. It is natural that he should seek members of his own race, especially those who have immigrated from the same country. This is why they gather in cities. When they appreciate the value of the farm they will find the dawn of new prosperity.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

THEY MAKE GOOD AMERICANS.

That the Jews take care of their own people has been demonstrated anew in the erection of the fine communal building on West Morris street, dedicated on Sunday night. It is for the benefit chiefly of the immigrants of the race, a place where they may be educated and made into better Americans than they might otherwise become.

It is very true, as Rabbi Feuerlicht says, that it is not necessary to Americanize a Jew; he comes to this country in order to be an American and the important thing is to make him a good one—a thing best to be accomplished by education.

The Jew adapts himself; he wishes to be American; he wishes to like the country; he does like it because of what it offers him. He makes a good citizen because of his industry, his thrift, his eager interest in affairs.

With education, of course, his citizenship is made the better, and the new communal house is therefore a building of importance to the entire community because its purpose is to make good citizens. It is a valuable addition to our educational institutions.—Indianapolis Star.

THE KING AND QUEEN OF WURTEMBERG AT A JEWISH ORPHANAGE.

A signal honor was paid to the entire Jewish community of Wurtemberg recently on the occasion of the inauguration of the new building of the Jewish Orphanage, "Wilhelmspflege" at Esslingen, for the ceremony was graced by the presence of the King and Queen. Their Majesties attentively followed the religious service and the speeches delivered subsequently thereto, one of the speakers being Dr. Von Habermaas, Minister of State, who tendered the congratulations of the Government. The King personally handed the Karl Olga Medal in silver to Landgerichsrat Dr. Stern, the President, and to Herr Rothschild, the Headmaster of the Orphanage.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., held its annual election on Dec. 28. A keen interest in the result of the election brought to the meeting an unusually large attendance. After the election all of the successful candidates made short speeches.

In accordance with the custom suggested by the Grand Lodge, Horeb Lodge celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Jan. 11, 1914. The members attended divine service at Temple Mishkan Israel, at which Brother Dr. Thorner officiated.

The special entertainment committee of the lodge is arranging for the annual ball to be held on Feb. 18, 1914, and its proceeds will be turned over to the charity fund.

The Intellectual Advancement Committee is planning for the first social meeting to be held on Jan. 25, to which the ladies of the members will be invited, and a pleasing program is being arranged.

WASHINGTON LODGES OF NEW YORK.

An auspicious meeting for the District was held by Washington Lodge No. 19 on Thursday evening, December 4, 1913. The guests of the evening were the members of Zion Lodge No. 2, the officers of District No. 1 and the judges of the contest which is now going on for the best showing among the various Degree Teams of the District.

The meeting was called to order by President Adolph Wals of Washington Lodge, and after the transaction of routine business, the chair was turned over to President Sulzberger of Zion Lodge, who conducted the business meeting for his lodge. The meeting was also graced by the presence of Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, President of District No. 1, Brother Herman Asher, First Vice-President of the District; Sol. Sulzberger, Treasurer of the District; Reginald E. Zunder, Secretary of the District and Maurice P. Davidson, member of the General Committee of the District.

The interesting feature of the evening was the initiation of ten candidates, five for each lodge, by the Degree Team of Washington Lodge. This team held the interest of the candidates and members from start to finish. The members of the Degree Team consisted of Dr. Meyer M. Stark, President; Brother Koffler, Vice-President; M. S. Weeker, Treasurer, and A. G. Lutz, Monitor. The ritual was strictly adhered to and the music was furnished by two members of Zion Lodge, Brothers Wm. J. Falk and Dr. Leo Lieberman.

After the initiation services were concluded, the audience was favored with an address by Brother Rev. Dr. Silverman. The President of the District congratulated both lodges on the spirit which permeated the members and stated that the B'nai B'rith would be a huge success if all the lodges were as energetic and enterprising as Washington and Zion Lodges. Dr. Silverman particularly emphasized the fact that the names of the two lodges typified the present and the past, and that while Judaism has important problems to solve in the present time, yet it carries with it the lessons it has learned in the past.

A collation served after the meeting formed a fitting climax to such an interesting evening. Thanks are due to Brother I. Irving Lipsitch, chairman of the Committee on Intellectual Advancement of the District, for the arrangements whereby the joint meeting was held.

MISHAN LODGE, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Mishan Lodge No. 247 of Kalamazoo, Mich., had a number of successful intellectual advancement meetings during the past year, and the intellectual character and standing of the membership has materially increased.

Through the efforts of a special committee the lodge has eliminated almost entirely picture films from moving picture shows and vaudeville sketches of an objectionable nature. Employment has been secured for a number of unemployed Jews, and the lodge is now at work compiling a Jewish census of the city for the purpose of carrying on the work in a more thorough and systematic manner.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Emes Lodge No. 67 of Springfield, Ill., has arranged a series of lectures on "The Jews of Many Lands." The committee on Intellectual Advancement invited Brother Philip Schlesinger of Roumania, to be the first speaker, and a successful meeting was held on December 21. Brother Schlesinger introduced his subject with a brief historical sketch of the Balkan situation, then spoke of the Roumanian Jews in the Schools, in the Army, in Civil Affairs, and in the Field of Literature. He showed the manner in which Roumania is disregarding the spirit of the Berlin Treaty, by treating the Jews whose families have been living in the country for generations, as aliens. The various disabilities and the spirit of the nation towards our suffering brethren, were described in a vivid, scholarly manner and a clear picture of actual conditions was presented. On January 17, Dr. Leon Beilin will lecture on some phase of Russian Jewish life.

HARMONY LODGE, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

A large gathering of the members of Harmony Lodge, No. 711, I. O. B. B., greeted Charles Hartman, member of Constitution Grand Lodge. Herman Asher, First Vice-President of the District, and Joseph Rosenzweig, chairman of the Finance committee of district grand lodge, No. 1, who paid the lodge an official visit as judges of the degree team contest last evening. Joseph H. Ullman, Past President of District Grand Lodge and members from other B'nai B'rith lodges in this state were also present.

The degree team of the lodge, which is competing for the prize offered by the district for the best degree team, initiated a number of new candidates.

All the officers of the lodge were re-elected for the ensuing year and arrangements are being made for a public installation during the early part of January.

After the meeting the band, under the leadership of Abe L. Kline, gave a concert and made a hit with those assembled. A number of the members have organized a stringed orchestra which will furnish music at the various affairs to be given by the lodge. A luncheon was tendered the visiting Grand Lodge officials at the Algonquin club by the officers of Harmony Lodge.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.

The official visit of Grand President I. M. Golden of District Grand Lodge No. 4 and the Grand Orator, Brother Morris Salzman, was a great event in B'nai B'rith circles of San Diego. The visitors addressed a public meeting on Friday evening, November 28, 1913, which was largely attended. On Sunday afternoon, November 30, a special meeting of Lasker Lodge No. 370 was held, at which a class of candidates was initiated. In the evening a banquet was served the guests, the members of the lodge and their ladies, and this was followed by a ball at which a great throng of friends greeted the visitors.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Louisville Lodge No. 14 of Louisville, Ky., held its annual meeting in the vestry rooms of the Temple on Dec. 16, 1913. The annual election of officers for the ensuing year and delegates to various conventions took place. The work of the lodge for the coming year was outlined through the propaganda committee, and a class of candidates was initiated by the degree team. Dr. Sidney J. Meyers addressed the gathering on "Pace of the Age," touching specifically on social hygiene. Rabbi Jos. Rauch spoke on "Caricaturing the Jew" and among other things said:

"The problem can hardly be solved by an organization. As long as there is a chance to win money and popularity by caricaturing the Jew, there will be found people to sell us. The problem is not limited to the Jew. The non-Jew faces the same question. He has been represented as a villain in literature and the drama. What we, as Jews, object to is unfair and dishonest characterization. I should say that 'The Fine Art of Bankruptcy,' by Montague Glass, has created a very wrong impression, that fifty years will not be long enough to wipe out."

AMATEUR SHOW OF INDIANAPOLIS LODGE.

On Monday evening, December 8, the friends and members of Indianapolis Lodge No. 58, I. O. B. B., enjoyed the annual amateur show and dance at the German House. An old time minstrel show, "Way Down South," took the place of the musical comedies heretofore presented, and was a pronounced success. Though it was a minstrel, the B'nai B'rithers upheld their reputation for originality. The opening scene presented a plantation on the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of the planter and his wife. Soon a boat glides down the river and stops at the plantation landing, where about seventy-five darkies get off to surprise their master. They seat themselves around the place on bales of cotton that appear to be ready for shipment. The following delightful program was then given: 1. Opening Chorus, the Company and the Band. 2. "Uncle Joe Plays a Tune," by Hannah Beatrice Kuper, a young miss of six years, who, amid all the talent of amateurs and professionals, made the decided hit of the evening. 3. "I've Lost My Dog," by Max Siegel. 4. "Floating Down the River," by Isador G. Kohn. 5. "Old Black Joe," by Will Lowenberg. 6. "Mammy Jinny's Jubilee," by Alvin Levy. 7. "Moonlight on the Mississippi," by Charles Karabell. 8. "Kentucky Bage," by Mrs. Louis Traugott. 9. "Mooney, Mooney Man," by Jennie Von Binzer and Mooney Men. 10. "Steamboat Porters," by Selig Joseph and porters. 11. Tolliver & Co., a troupe of professional colored dancers and entertainers. 12. "The Spaniard That Blighted My Life," by Leon J. Bamberger. 13. Cake Walk by the Octoroon Octette and the Finale. Sidney Erdman, another professional, also gave two splendid numbers, which helped make the show the success it was. Nine members of the Indianapolis News Boys Band also took part, furnishing the music on the stage. Dancing followed the performance. Much credit is due Mr. Abe Borinstein, chairman of the amusement committee, which had the play in charge.

ANNUAL BANQUET OF WORCESTER LODGE.

Many notables of the Order attended the second annual degree team contest and banquet of Worcester Lodge No. 600 of Worcester, Mass., on Sunday afternoon and evening, December 21, 1913.

The degree team contest was held in the afternoon and the banquet, at which a banner was presented, in the evening.

The degree team gave an exhibition, which elicited much praise from the judges, Messrs. Chas. Hartman, Herman Asher, and Chas. Rosenzweig, all of New York. The degree team initiated 14 candidates.

At the banquet Mr. A. M. Hillman, chairman of the entertainment committee of the lodge, acted as toastmaster. Hon. Geo. M. Wright, mayor of the city, made a brief address in which he welcomed the visitors. He was followed by Judge A. K. Cohen of the Boston Municipal Court and Second Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 1. Mr. Henry Lasker of Springfield, District Deputy, was the next speaker.

The presentation of the trophy, the banner voted by the District Grand Lodge, was made by Brother Herman Asher of New York, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge. The banner is highly prized by the lodge, particularly for the reason that last year was the first time the degree team of the lodge had the opportunity of participating in the contest.

Mr. M. M. Israel, president of the lodge, expressed the appreciation of the members for the results achieved by the degree team and the excellent showing made by it. Brother C. M. Stern of Albany and Charles Hartman of New York, both Past Grand Presidents of the District, spoke of the work that is being done by the Order in the District.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.

On Sunday afternoon, Nov. 29, 1913, the students of the International Theosophical Society, with headquarters at Point Loma, entertained the visiting Grand Lodge officers of District No. 4, who were on an official visit to the B'nai B'rith lodge in San Diego. Among the guests were Judge I. M. Golden, President of the District Grand Lodge, and Mr. Salzman, of Los Angeles, Acting Grand Orator. Judge Golden delivered an address on the work of the I. O. B. B.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

More than 300 members of Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., attended the meeting of the lodge on Jan. 4, 1914, and tendered a remarkable ovation to its degree team, which initiated a class of nine candidates. The lodge has entered the contest for the Grand Lodge prize to be awarded to the best degree team, and at this meeting the judges of the Grand Lodge were present to witness the work. The degree team preceded its exemplification of the ritual by a drill upon the floor of the lodge, which elicited much applause.

The lodge was honored by the presence of Rev. Dr. Jos. Silverman of New York, President of the District Grand Lodge, who delivered an address upon the meaning and significance of the Menorah. Addresses were also made by Bros. Chas. Hartman, member of the Executive Committee of the Order for District No. 1: Herman Asher, S. Rosenzweig and J. H. Ullman, who spoke upon subjects touching closely upon the welfare of the lodge and the Order. Brother Paul Toft delighted the members with two songs, and the Horeb Lodge orchestra furnished music during the initiation of candidates and rendered several selections during the intermission. The evening closed with a smoker, and refreshments were served.

DANMARK LODGE, COPENHAGEN.

Danmark Lodge No. 712 of Copenhagen, Denmark, reports a successful year. The meetings, especially those at which lectures and addresses were delivered, were attended by from 60 to 80 members, and not always the same ones. The December social meeting consisted of a concert, and the program was prepared by Jewish composers and was participated in by Prof. Fritz and Victor Bendix, royal private singers. Miss Ida Moller and Mr. Brems. The meeting was attended by over 250 ladies and gentlemen. The concert was followed by a supper and the evening was concluded with a dance.

The Toynbee Hall, under the auspices of the lodge, has been moved to new quarters, and among the attractions is a reading room, which is open all day. The lodge gives concerts twice a month in the concert room and is in position to secure the best talent in the city, even from the royal opera, to entertain the public. As many as 500 are present at some of these entertainments.

The schools for the children are continued in the Toynbee Hall rooms, and on several evenings each week lessons e given to adults in elementary teachings.

BIENNIAL CONVENTION OF DISTRICT NO. 3.

For the first time in twelve years the biennial convention of District Grand Lodge No. 3, embracing the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and West Virginia, is to be held in Philadelphia on January 25 and 26 next. The headquarters will be at the Hotel Majestic. The tentative plans provide for a smoker and entertainment on Saturday evening, January 24, at the hotel; a large public meeting on Sunday morning, January 25, at which an address will be delivered by a speaker of national reputation, and a banquet on Sunday evening at the hotel in honor of the visiting delegates.

AUGUSTA, GA.

Obadiah Lodge No. 119 of Augusta, Ga., fittingly celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Sunday, December 7. The guest of honor of the occasion was Rabbi I. E. Marcusson of Charlestown, S. C., Second Vice-President of District No. 5, I. O. B. B. The program of the day was begun in the morning with a regular monthly meeting of the lodge, and officers for the year 1914 were elected. In the evening at Castle Hall the principal exercises of the day were held and were largely attended. President Moses Slusky presided over the meeting and appropriate addresses were delivered by Brother Abram Levy, Dr. Leo Reich and Rabbi Marcusson. The address of Rabbi Marcusson was especially pleasing and made a lasting impression upon the audience. The entire program of the day was well gotten up and reflected great credit upon the lodge.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

MOBILE, ALA.

On Sunday, Dec. 14, 1913, Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 of Mobile, Ala., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day. At the morning session there was much of an interesting and serious nature. At the night session there was a vast outpouring of the members of the Order. The President of the lodge, Mr. M. H. Porchheimer, opened the ceremonies with an address of welcome. A class of new members, 20 in number was then initiated by the degree team of the lodge, headed by Mr. Leon Schwartz, former President of the Grand Lodge. After the ceremonies of initiation there followed "A feast of reason and a flow of soul." An elegant supper was provided, contributed by the ladies of the members of the lodge. Mr. Leon Schwartz was toastmaster and addresses were delivered by Messrs. A. G. Moses, A. D. Block, H. U. Feibelman and others. A song in ancient Hebrew was splendidly rendered by Mr. Harris Rubel.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

Dallas Lodge No. 197 of the I. O. B. B. will hold its next regular meeting Wednesday, Jan.. 14, at the new B'nai B'rith Hall, corner of Ervay and Wood streets. It is expected that the full membership of 300 will be present, as there are 50 candidates for initiation that night. There will also be an informal opening of the new lodge hall and club rooms. The building was especially designed and erected for the Order, and is equipped with lodge room, dance hall, reading room, library and pool hall. It is intended that the B'nai B'rith Hall shall become the center of social activity for its younger and older members.

On Sunday, Jan. 18, at 3 p. m., will take place the institution of the new lodge recently organized among the younger Jewish men of the city. The new lodge starts with a membership of 50. After the installation services an informal reception will be held in the club rooms and refreshments will be served.

During the last week in January an open meeting will be held for the joint celebration of B'nai B'rith Day, the fortieth anniversary of Dallas Lodge No. 197, and the dedication of the New Hall. Among the prominent speakers on this occasion will be Mr. Leon Schwarz of Mobile, Ala., ex-President of the Seventh District. Further announcements will follow.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The joint committee of the New Orleans B'nai B'rith lodges arranged for a gathering of the members of the Order and their families to participate in a Chanukah observance on Dec. 28, 1913, on which occasion an address on the "Feast of Lights" was the conspicuous feature for the elevation and instruction of those present. Rabbi Meyerowitz opened the proceedings with words of greeting, after which the Chanukah lights were lit. Address by Brother Erhart Mayer, secretary of the joint committee, followed, reviewing extensively the events of the Maccabean period. The proceedings were closed with a benediction by Rabbi E. W. Leipziger.

TOLEDO, O.

Toledo Lodge No. 183 of Toledo, O., held an enthusiastic meeting on Dec. 9, 1913, with an unusually large attendance, due to the good natured rivalry for the various offices that were to be filled. A class of candidates was balloted on and 12 new applications were presented. Various committees of the lodge are active in preparation for the convention of the District Grand Lodge to be held in Toledo in May.

In reporting in the last issue of the News the B'nai B'rith Day celebration held under the auspices of the lodge on Nov. 9, the mention of Rabbi David Alexander as having delivered an address on that occasion was inadvertently omitted.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 7, Ophir Auxiliary No. 3, Daughters of the Covenant, and the members of Ophir Lodge No. 21 of San Francisco, held a joint installation of their officers. Interest in the pleasure of the occasion was greatly enhanced by the visit of the officers of the District Grand Lodge and the address of the Grand President, Mr. I. M. Golden.

DISTRICT. NO. 1.

At the annual meeting of Hillel Lodge No. 28 of Brooklyn, N. Y., held on Dec. 14, 1913, the election of officers was held. Mr. Ernst Nathan was honored with the presidency. Mr. Nathan was president some fifty years ago, in which capacity he served for ten years.

The Convention of the District will be held February 1 and 2 at Springfield, Mass. The committee on Convention of Springfield Lodge has arranged to hold the sessions in the Mahogany Room of the new City Hall, and it is expected that the Mayor of the City, the Governor of the State and prominent City officials will attend. It is also expected that a class of fifty candidates will be initiated at the Grand Lodge session.

Various Rabbis of the most prominent Temples and Synagognes throughout the States of New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, are to deliver addresses on the work of the I. O. B. B. during the next few weeks.

* * *

A meeting will be held in Boston, Mass., on January 9, to consider means for increasing the membership in that city.

On the evening of December 3, 1913, Edward Everett Lodge No. 97 held a very interesting intellectual meeting. A debate took place the subject of which was: Resolved that the United States should intervene in Mexico to establish a firm and lasting government. The participants for the affirmative were: Brothers Louis Osterweiss and Henry A. Kaplan. For the negative, M. P. Davidson, and Max Whitelaw. The judges were Bros. Chas. Hartman, member of the Executive Committee, Herman Asher, First Vice-President of the District, and I. Irving Lipsitch, Chairman of the Committee on Intellectual Advancement who, weighing the arguments on both sides, after due deliberation, awarded the debate to the affirmative.

There is a very interesting contest on within this lodge at the present time; members are vying with each other for the distinguished honor of bringing in the greatest number of members during the year. We are looking for a substantial gain from this lodge.

The Chanukah Ball arranged by the B'nai B'rith Lodges of New York, was held at the Hotel Astor, Wednesday, December 24th. The attendance was large, and the young men and women present expressed the unanimous opinion that the ball was a real social success.

A meeting of the Metropolitan Lodges was held at Pabst Columbus Circle, Monday evening, December 29th, under the auspices of the Committee on Intellectual Advancement. Several hundred members attended. The meeting, which was called to order by the Chairman of the Committee, Bro. I. Irving Lipsitch, was devoted primarily to the initiation of 20 candidates into several of the lodges. The Degree Team, under the leadership of Mr. I. Fromberg of Maccabee Lodge, included Prof. Eugene Lehman, Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein and William Asher. Chanukah candles were lit with proper ceremonies by Rev. Schlarger of Manhattan Lodge, Cantor of Temple Emanu-El, and an eloquent address on the ideals of Judaism and the I. O. B. B. was delivered by Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, President of the District.

Zion Lodge held an entertainment and open meeting at Temple Beth-El, attended by members and their ladies and friends, which was enjoyed by all who were present.

Washington Lodge No. 19 is making elaborate preparations for installation of officers on January 15th and for the celebration of its Sixtieth Anniversary on February 21st (eve of Washington's birthday) at Hotel Ansonia. It is planned to gather a large charity fund by voluntary contribution of the members, each contributing member, regardless of the amount of his donation, to receive a ticket for himself and lady for the festivities, which includes a musical, ball and banquet. An energetic committee, under the leadership of Bro. Adolph Wald, retiring President, and Bro. Dr. M. M. Stark, President-elect, is making a canvass of the members for subscription.

The Chanukah celebration of the Sunday School maintained by Maccabee Lodge No. 71 was held on Sunday afternoon, December 28th 1913. The children of the school participated and addresses were delivered by Mrs. Lesterburger, the principal, and Bro. Abraham Koch, the Superintendent. The school has now a membership of 120 of the poorest children in Harlem.

On January 20th, 1914, Maccabee Lodge will hold its public installation of Officers which will be followed by an entertainment and informal Dance. The Metropolitan Lodges have been invited to attend. The Annual Ball of the Lodge will be held on Lincoln's Birthday eve at the Hotel Bretton Hall, and the Officers and General Committee of District No. 1 have been asked to attend.

A public installation of the newly elected officers of Worcester Lodge No. 600 of Worcester, Mass., was held on Jan. 13, 1914, to which prominent speakers were invited to attend and deliver addresses. The lodge has also arranged for a lecture to be held on Jan. 27 next, on which occasion Rev. Dr. Allyn K. Foster will address the lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

At the annual meeting of Cleveland Lodge No 16 of Cleveland, Ohio, held in December, in addition to the election of officers, the election of delegates to the District Grand Lodge convention, to be held in Toledo in May, and nominations for the Constitution Grand Lodge delegates to the convention of the Order, to be held in San Francisco, was held. The lodge has enjoyed a most active year of prosperity, its meetings were well attended and much enthusiasm was the rule.

The ladies were specially invited, and they attended liberally the open meeting of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 of Cleveland, Ohio, on Sunday evening, Dec. 28, 1913. A musical and vocal program was carried out and at the conclusion refreshments were served.

Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 of Indianapolis, Ind., held a special meeting on Dec. 29, 1913, on which occasion a class of 25 new members was initiated.

A well attended meeting of Missouri Lodge No. 22 of St. Louis was held on Sunday, December 21, 1913, at which a large class of candidates was initiated and reports of committees upon matters of importance were received.

One of the largest and best attended meetings in the history of Cleveland Lodge No. 16 of Cleveland, Ohio, was held on Sunday, December 14, 1913. Mr. Alfred A. Benesch, secretary of the lodge for the past ten years, resigned his office and was honored by the election to the office of vice-president. A number of candidates were initiated and the officers for the ensuing term as well as the delegates to the District Grand Lodge and Constitution Grand Lodge conventions were elected.

In the death of Mr. Jacob Trost, Cincinnati Lodge No. 4 of Cincinnati, Ohio, lost a well and favorably known member. Mr. Trost was active in B'nai B'rith circles, having held the office of President of the District Grand Lodge.

The annual dinner of Toledo Lodge No. 183 of Toledo, Ohio, will take place the last of January. Some of the Grand Lodge officers will be present.

DISTRICT NO. 3.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of Homestead Lodge of the B'nai B'rith held its annual meeting on Sunday, December 14, 1913, at which the election of officers was held. The committee on entertainment is planning to arrange for a card party the latter part of January.

The children of the I. O. B. B. Sabbath school of New Castle, Pa., gave a playlet on Dec. 21, 1913, which was largely attended by the parents and friends. The school is under the charge of Mrs. M. Feuchtwanger and under direct supervision of Rabbi J. Leonard Levy.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

At the annual meeting of Rainier Lodge No. 627 of Seattle, Wash., the election of officers took place, and Mr. Herbert A. Schoenfeld was re-elected president. Brother Schoenfeld was commended for his services to the lodge during the past year and was presented with a beautiful loving cup by his admiring friends.

Brother Herbert A. Schoenfeld, as president of Rainier Lodge No. 627 of Seattle, Wash., submitted a very able message to the lodge at the close of his term, dealing with the various activities during the past year.

Rainier Lodge No. 627 of Seattle, Wash., entered at a smoker on Dec. 8, 1913, in honor of Tacoma Lodge No. 741 of Tacoma, Wash. About 150 members attended and the affair was a success, due mainly to the efforts of the special committee. Following the program, which contained varied numbers, a class of 20 candidates was initiated, after which refreshments and cigars were enjoyed.

Tacoma Lodge No. 741 of Tacoma, Wash., is arranging for a ball and entertainment to be held on Jan. 18 next.

An informal dancing party was given on Dec. 16, 1913, at the B'nai B'rith hall by Abraham Geiger Lodge No. 423 of Spokane, Wash. The affair proved a complete success. The lodge has inaugurated the social feature after its business meetings, which consists of musical and other entertainments. The attendance is growing steadily and the membership is increasing.

The social committee of B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421 of Salt Lake City, Utah, presented an amateur road show on Jan. 8, 1914.

At the December meeting of Tacoma Lodge No. 741 of Tacoma, Wash., the officers for the ensuing term were elected. The special committee of the lodge charged with arranging entertainments and social meetings is at work arranging for the first annual ball to be held in the Masonic Temple on January 15 next.

Oakland Lodge No. 252 of Oakland, Cal., celebrated the 38th anniversary of its existence on Nov. 28, 1913. Two of the original charter members, Brothers H. Davis and M. H. Coffee, attended the celebration.

At the annual meeting of Hildesheimer Lodge No. 503 of Seatle, Wash., the officers for the ensuing term were elected. The installation is expected to be held in the early part of January and will be a public affair. A class of five candidates was initiated at the meeting.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

The new B'nai B'rith lodge that was instituted on November 30, 1913, at Winston-Salem, N. C., is to be known as Aaron Lodge No. 747.

At the regular meeting of Charlotte Lodge No. 733 of Charlotte, N. C., held on Sunday, Jan. 4, the officers were installed by Rabbi Meyerberg of Goldsboro, N. C. After the installation ceremonies a gold medal was presented to Brother D. B. Paul, the retiring presdent, in recognition of his faithful services as the first president of the lodge. This was followed with short addresses and the serving of refreshments by the ladies.

District Grand Lodge No. 5 will hold its annual meeting at Atlanta, Ga., on March 29-31, 1914, the occasion being the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Hebrew Orphans' Home of that city.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238 of Grand Rapids, Mich., appointed an entertainment committee immediately after the installation of officers, for the purpose of instilling more life and greater fraternal spirit in the lodge. The committee already arranged for a social meeting held on the 5th inst., and is now planning for the annual ball, to be held on Jan. 27.

Memorial services were held by Grand Prairie Lodge No. 281 of Champaign, Ill., in memory of deceased Brother Jonas Bing, on Sunday, Jan. 4, 1914.

At a meeting of Saskatoon Lodge No. 739 of Saskatoon, Sask., held on Dec. 30, 1913, two candidates were initiated. The lodge is doing good work in securing new members and keeping them interested.

Pisgah and Nebo Lodges of Detroit, Mich., were consolidated on December 9, 1913. Past President Brother Adolph Freund acted on behalf of the President of the district. It is hoped that one strong lodge will be the result of the action.

The annual meeting of Ramah Lodge No. 33 of Chicago was held on December 11, 1913, with an attendance of over 100 members. The officers for the ensuing term as well as delegates to the District Grand Lodge and Constitution

Grand Lodge conventions were elected. Fifty-eight applications for membership were reported upon and elected. An additional 15 new candidates were proposed. Reports of the officers show the lodge in excellent condition, both from the standpoint of membership and finances. The Secretary's report showed that during the year the lodge disbursed for benevolent, charitable, educational and social purposes more than $3,300. Brother A. H. Fromenson, secretary of the National Farm School, delivered an address on the work of the National Farm School, which was well received. At the conclusion of the meeting refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

At a meeting of Mesaba Lodge No. 673 of Virginia, Minn., held on January 4, 1914, Mr. H. L. Slobin of the State University of Minnesota delivered an address.

Mr. Hiram Frankel of St. Paul has been delegated to pay an official visit to Calumet Lodge No. 502 of Houghton, Mich., on January 25 and assist in the celebration of B'nai B'rith Day by that lodge.

David Fish Lodge No. 130 of Chicago held its annual meeting on December 16, 1913, which was largely attended. After the election of a large number of candidates and the election of officers and delegates for the ensuing year, Dr. T. Schanfarber delivered an address on "Chanukah and Its Lessons," which was received with marked approval.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Herzl Lodge No. 608 of Dallas, Texas, gave its annual Chanukah ball on Jan. 7, 1914.

The second of the series of joint meetings of the B'nai B'rith lodges of New Orleans was held on Dec. 3, 1913, under the auspices of the Joint Committee. The speaker of the evening was Brother Sol Wexler, who was introduced by the chairman. Mr. Archibald A. Marx. Mr. Wexler took for his subject the currency bill then pending in Congress, pointing out the objectionable features contained therein.

SOL. EHRMAN.

"The Memory of the Righteous Is a Blessing."

Joseph Lodge No. 73, I. O. B. B., has, in recent years, had many serious losses from the ranks of its membership, but the loss of no member has affected us more deeply than that of Brother Sol Ehrman. He was always faithful in his devotion to the lodge and to its interests. His character was above reproach and his words of counsel were always heard with respect.

Death has taken him, but it has not robbed us of the services he so freely gave. While memory lingers he will live in the minds of his brethren.

Deeply do we sympathize with his loved ones and to them extend the fraternal hand of friendship, and in "benevolence, brotherly love and harmony" Joseph Lodge No. 73 extends its deepest sympathy to the bereaved family of our departed brother.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy published in the B'nai B'rith News and an engrossed copy be sent to his surviving family.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

It seems now that the plan adopted by District Grand Lodge No. 4 at the Special Session, held in the month of September, which aimed at winding up the endowment system of the District and removing what threatened to become a malignant growth, is a great success. At this writing all but seventy endowment members have surrendered their beneficiary certificates and agreed to accept their pro rata of B. B. Hall Association stock. Those still outstanding will probably come in within the next month or two, as they prefer to wait and make sure whether the rates of assessment to be adopted at the regular session, for the remainder of the endowment members, will be in accord with their ideas. The most remarkable feature of the acquiescence on the part of the members is the fact that those holding out are of the younger class, while all the aged members have almost to a man, handed in their certificates.

B'NAI B'RITH DINNER.

Under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council representing the Chicago lodges, a dinner was held at the La Salle Hotel on Thursday evening, December 18, 1913, which was attended by over 200 members. Hon. Julian W. Mack, Judge of the United States Circuit Court, was the principal speaker, who delivered an address on the subject, "Dispensing Charity—the Old and the Modern Way." Short talks were also delivered by Madame Pevsner of Palestine, reviewing the work of the Bezalel School; Mr. Henry Horwitz, president of the International Menorah Society, who spoke upon the work of the Menorah circles in the various colleges and universities; Mr. A. H. Fromenson, secretary of the National Farm School, who concluded the speech making by giving a short synopsis of the aims and objects of the National Farm School and its effort to inculcate a desire on the part of Jews to engage in agriculture.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Under the auspices of Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238 of Grand Rapids, Mich, a social meeting was held at the Association of Commerce Cafe on Jan. 5, 1914. The special feature of the occasion was a debate on "Woman's Suffrage." Dr. J. J. Fabian argued in favor of votes for women, while Jos. S. Hart and Henry Houseman advocated the negative side. The debate was somewhat heated and the speakers gave all sorts of reasons for and against the grant of suffrage. After the main addresses the question was further discussed by Messrs. Adolph Friedman, Gus A. Wolf, U. S. Silber and S. G. Braudy. At the conclusion of the debate the judges retired to consider and returned with a decision against the suffrage.

FUNERAL OF JONAS BING.

The funeral of late Brother Jonas Bing of Urbana, Ill., a charter member of Grand Prairie Lodge No. 281, was held on Dec. 28, 1913. Brother Bing died at the ripe age of 77 years, after having lived in Urbana for more than 50 years.

The services were conducted by Rev. Louis Mann of Cincinnati and the remains were laid to rest in the Jewish section of Mt. Hope cemetery. Urbana Lodge of the Masons conducted the services at the grave. The funeral was attended by many out-of-town friends and relatives and members of the lodges with which he was affiliated. Brother Bing's acquaintanceship was widespread and his friends were legion.

SOME B'NAI B'RITH FAMILY.

Brother N. Paul of Charlotte, N. C., a member of Charlotte Lodge No. 733 of that city, has the distinction of possessing a real B'nai B'rith family. His son, D. B. Paul, is the monitor of Charlotte lodge; his oldest son, A. A. Paul, is vice-president of Asheville Lodge of Asheville, N. C.; another son, W. J. Paul, is the secretary of Charlotte Lodge; his son-in-law, M. Kirschbaum, is president of Charlotte Lodge; another son-in-law, J. Lamb, is trustee of Charlotte Lodge. Can this record be broken?

RESOLUTION BEATEN.

A resolution introduced in the Duma by a constitutional Democratic deputy, looking to the extension of equal rights before the law to all Russian subjects, has been defeated by a two-to-one vote. The proposed extension of rights would have included the Jews, of course, but the mover of the resolution laid emphasis upon the subordination of the peasants. Yet, he declared, it was a peasant jury of Kiev that had saved Russia from disgrace. Why should "the last bureaucratic population whose political fanaticism directed religious fanaticism against the Jews," enjoy a position of superiority? The remark is a significant and authoritative explanation of Anti-Semitic persecution and the pogrom. The Jews in Russia are politically the most oppressed class in Russia, while culturally they are the most advanced. Naturally, therefore, they are the most determined opponents of the Czardom and the tyrannic bureaucracy; naturally, also, the latter, through its "Black Hundreds," and even the courts and the prosecuting officers, manifests its hostility by keeping alive, and stirring up, hatreds born in ignorance against the class from whose enlightenment it has most to fear. Religious and political persecutions in Russia come from one source, they are always instigated from above.—Amsterdam (N. Y.) Sentinel.

B'NAI B'RITH LADIES' AUXILIARIES.

(Address by Miss Esther Epstein at the B'nai B'rith Day Celebration held in Omaha, Nov. 16, 1913.)

We are assembled here this evening to commemorate the foundation of the great B'nai B'rith Order, and to review the things we have done and left undone; and then, to announce what we are doing, and our intentions for the future.

In accepting the invitation to say a few words on this occasion, in behalf of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the William McKinley Lodge, I wish first of all, to tell you how happy and proud we are that our Auxiliary, while still in its infancy, is now recognized as being part and parcel of this grand organism. To participate in this annual celebration—the first one that brings us into the public light as a factor in promoting the ideals of B'nai B'rithdom—this participation, I would say, does us proud. Personally I am thankful for the honor bestowed upon me to represent our lodge before you, and to give expression to our sentiments.

This, perhaps, is all I can do, for it lies beyond me to add anything to that which has been so eloquently uttered by the speakers preceding me—men possessed of capabilities far greater than my own, to rehearse the achievements of the B'nai B'rith. However, I shall attempt, in my own humble way, to outline briefly for you, the founding of the Ladies' Auxiliary, its purposes, and its accomplishments.

The idea of giving life to such a body was first conceived in the minds of several members of William McKinley Lodge; and they accordingly, selected fifteen young women to promote the project. It met with encouraging favor among those to whose care was entrusted the maturing of this infant prodigy; and thus it was, that at the first meeting plans were immediately laid, and a committee set to work to draft a constitution.

The preamble of that instrument embodies the very essence of the life of our organization, for it teaches that "We, the Jewish young ladies of Omaha, for the purpose of bringing about a closer association between the various circles of the Jewish young women of this city and for the further purpose of elevating them intellectually and socially, and for the further purpose of promoting the obligations of the I. O. B. B. and such other worthy institutions, or causes, as shall arise, have organized this club, which shall be known as the Ladies' Auxiliary of the William McKinley Lodge, No. 521."

From an organization with a membership of fifteen, we have rapidly grown to one of over one hundred, in the comparatively short period of our existence.

We have endeavored faithfully to live up to the ideals outlined in our preamble, and although we have not yet reached the goal toward which we are striving, we feel that we have, through strict adherence to its sound precepts, accomplished much for which we have reason to be proud.

I am fully convinced that, as a result of our efforts, there exists now a closer association between the various circles of Jewish young women, brought about principally by interesting them in all matters of Jewish concern. Although our club is by no means one of social tendencies, we have, through the medium of joint programs together with the William McKinley Lodge, endeavored—and not without success—to elevate the social and intellectual standards of our members; at no time, however, forgetting the prime purpose of our foundation, namely: "To promote the obligations of the I. O. B. B., and such other worthy institutions or causes as shall arise."

As a noteworthy instance of what we have done—and hope that God may ever preserve in us the power to perform—we point back to our work in the spring of this year, when many of our co-religionists suffered from the ravages of the tornado visited upon our city. At that time the Auxiliary was not yet a year old; nevertheless, it was possible for us to raise, through individual contributions from our members, the sum of $93, which we contributed to the general fund for relief of the tornado sufferers, and which our afflicted co-religionists shared alike with others. In addition to this, a Charity Ball, for whose success the William McKinley Lodge is entitled to equal credit—placed at our disposal, the magnificent sum of $300, which was also applied to the same good end. Let me assure you, we are happy to know that we can lend a hand to "unite Israelites in the work of promoting their highest interests and those of humanity."

At the present time, our efforts are directed toward a project which we hope will enable us to provide goodly support to those institutions that breathe the generous philanthropy of B'nai B'rith.

As for the future, we feel that it holds much in store for us. We are bending every effort, conjointly with William McKinley Lodge toward the establishment of a permanent home for both organizations, plans for which are meeting with enthusiastic encouragement from every source. This should prove of untold assistance to us in bringing together the younger generaion and preserving the broad influence of our work. I am sure that I echo the sentiments of every member of our organization when I tell you that we hope to point with pride, before another annual celebration brings us together, toward the attainment of this, our cherished ideal. The future glows with promise. We feel that there can be no obstacles to the achievement of our ambitions. In short, we hope that all there is in us will respond to assist the William McKinley Lodge in advancing the noble purposes of the Order.

THE LITERACY TEST FOR IMMIGRANTS.

It is expected that the immigration bill will be reported to the House of Representatives today. It emerges from the bosom of the committee the same or much the same measure on which President Taft wrote "Veto, I forbid," because it subjected immigrants to a literacy test.

The desirability and the value of immigrants, moral or economic, cannot be so determined. It is enough to say of a criterion so absurd that it would have shut out from the United States such a man as the father of Abraham Lincoln. Thomas Lincoln did learn under the patient tuition of Nancy Hanks, his wife, to make some sort of hieroglyphics politely assumed to be his signature; but he was one of a great body of illiterates in whose arms and loins lay the future of the West.

Keep out, as far as human sagacity will do it, the criminal, the crazed, the diseased, the defective. Will, energy, industry, honesty, these are not dependent on spelling out aloud or sprawling a few words with a pen. The United States is swamped with words. Men, women and children who can work and save; these are always needed, and no pedantry of Congress should keep them cooling their heels at the gates.—New York Sun.

THE SITUATION IN ROUMANIA.

defense, and the cursed parasite raises its head.

The Jews demand their naturalization in bulk!

After they have soiled our country by introducing all kinds of bad habits; after they have calumnied us in the eyes of Europe and named our fatherland the Roumanian inferno, they wish to become citizens of this inferno.

Nearly the entire commerce and industry are in their hands and the richest products of a part of the Roumanian soil, raised by the tears and the blood of our ancestors are devoured by the Jews.

The sole branches of activity of which we must remain masters are: political independence, commerce and industry, and nearly all agriculture, and all of these the dirty insects wish to get into their power.

We must not permit them to do it, Roumanian Brothers; if we remain indifferent and passive our beloved country faces destruction.

Let us fight energetically and if necessary let us drive these intruding beasts beyond the borders, these beasts whom we have in all parts.

So that in the first place the Roumanian peasant gains safety and the stranger be accursed forever.

Because of the Jews who abuse our hospitality, the Ligua Culturala appeals to you warmly, and begs of you, Roumanian Brothers, to attend in great numbers the meeting of the Nationalists which will take place Monday morning at 10 o'clock in the hall of the Communal Park, and we will let those who are at the head of the State know that the time has not yet come to recognize these strangers who detest our nation and do not even understand the language of the country. Roumanian Citizens! We will let them understand that it is not good to take away by force the gains from our children to give them away to dogs.

Zionism and Nationalism

Address Delivered by Mr. Jacob H. Schiff of New York Before the Menorah Society of the City College of New York.

With the growth into manhood of the offspring of our co-religionists who have come here in the two closing decades of the last century—a large number of this younger element having been born on the soil—there is brought into being an American Israel, to whom, of necessity, must come the responsibility to determine the position which the Jew shall hereafter occupy in this great nation, both politically and socially. Aye, I go further, and feel I am justified in giving it as my conviction, that to the rising generation of American Jews, and more particularly to those now growing into manhood, will without doubt accrue Jewish world-leadership. Because of this grave responsibility, which cannot be shirked, it is very important that we learn clearly to understand what the Jew should be in his native land, what position he needs to take in his relation to his co-religionists in other countries all over the globe.

Until thirty or forty years ago the Jewish population of the world, taking the various countries each by itself, excepting Russia and some of the Slavic countries, was comparatively small. Only with the beginning of oppression and persecution, mainly in Russia and Roumania, which first became so greatly intensified in the early eighties and has since so rapidly grown, the Jewish masses in these countries became compelled to seek other abodes and new homes and thus began what might be termed a Jewish "voelkerwanderung" or exodus, the end of which is not yet, resulting in the large increase of the Jewish population of almost every civilized country. To our own country, so hospitable to the stranger coming to its door, more than to any other land, our persecuted co-religionists turned their way, and as a consequence against a Jewish population of 250,000 thirty years ago, there now dwell in the United States likely more than 2,000,000 of our people.

Thus Zionism had its inception and proceeded on its path of propaganda among the Jews in every country of the diaspora. We know how it has spread like wildfire—how it took hold of the Jew of every shade of belief and unbelief, how it brought under its banner old and young—and we may concede how it awoke anew Jewish consciousness and self-respect. I am not a Zionist, if the term is used to designate the Jew as a national separatist among the nations of the world, or even if it intends to form him into a people independent of the faith of his ancestors, but I do not wish for a moment to belittle the unifying force Zionism has proved to possess to a certain degree, the value of which as a temporary expedient and kept within certain bounds should not be under-estimated.

It has proved to the Gentile world that the Jew has not lost his self-respect; it has recalled to a far-reaching extent the Jew unto himself; it has possibly more than anything else could have done shown him the value of his own heritage. It has quickened the efforts to rehabilitate Palestine, and even if it cannot—as is neither practicable nor desirable—re-establish there a Jewish state, it is at least effectively leading in the reclamation of the land of our birth from the slough and degradation into which it and the great part of its population had fallen.

I have often asked myself how I could best explain to myself and to others why it is a paradox for the American Jew—as it is for the Jew of every country where civic rights are willingly and freely accorded to him—to proclaim himself a Jewish Nationalist; that is to say, one of a nation that in actuality does not now exist, but which it is proposed to re-establish. I know very well how to give this explanation to myself, for I feel it innermost why as an American, though a good Jew I seek to be, I cannot be a Jewish Nationalist. This being so, I shall quote from another, whose definition of what determines being of nationality, I have found to be the most expressive of what I wish to say in this respect. I refer to Dr. Lugwig Haas, a Jewish deputy in the German Reichstag, who in an address spoke of the claim made by Zionists that "nationality feeling" consisted in the living consciousness of a common ancestry, of the belonging together and in the belief of a common future. If this were correct, then there could be no such thing as a feeling of American nationality.

For where is there a nation in which there can properly exist a lesser feeling of common ancestry than in America, whose sires have come from the peoples of the entire earth? And notwithstanding this, they are all Americans and have their feeling of a common nationality. For what makes more than anything else for the feeling of nationality is a common culture. Culture and literature are two different things, and while as Jews we do have the heritage of a great literature, a present common culture we do not possess, notwithstanding what claims to the contrary may be made. We are Jews of German, French, or Anglo-Saxon culture, according to the culture of the nation among whom we live, of whom we have become part and parcel.

We and our children join gladly, aye, ardently in the beautiful national hymn, "Our country 'tis of thee, of thee we sing," and this we want to be a true and not an empty utterance on our part. Common language determines nationality; the love of the country in which we live, and in which lies the future of our children creates the understanding and feeling of national belonging. If then, as I believe and have already said, the common language more than anything else determines the feeling of national belonging, then, if we wish to be part and parcel of a Jewish nation in the remaking, we should, even in the countries of the diaspora, return to the use of the Hebrew language, and such an effort, we all know, would—as it should—fail miserably.

Nothing else than his religion has enabled the Jew to survive so many other peoples, more numerous and mightier than he, and to maintain his existence among those who in all ages have sought to destroy him. The Zionist doctrine which alike welcomes believer and absolute unbeliever into a Jewish nation intended to be established anew, would without doubt lead to the destruction of the very nation which the Zionist movement wishes to call into being, for with this doctrine carried into effect, Jew and Judaism would together become extinct.

With all the attachment that we may feel for Palestine, and the willingness we should show to aid by every means, in its cultural and material rehabilitation, it is high time, that we, as Americans, do not permit the further tightening of the strings with which the Jewish Nationalists endeavor to tie us to a proposed political entity foreign to our desires and with which we can have no sympathy. Because I seek to be a Jew who respects himself and the spirit of his faith, I feel it incumbent upon myself to hoist the danger signal and to warn you younger men, in whose hands lies the future of the American Jew, not to be tempted by the siren-song of the Jewish Nationalist who, ready as he is even to welcome a Judaism without the Jewish faith, is sure, if we permit him to prevail to engulf us into dangers which sooner or later will cost us dear, if not leading to our extinguishment.

Minutes of the Meeting of the Executive Committee, I. O. B. B. Held at Chicago, Ill., January 18, 1914

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Order was held in the city of Chicago, Ill., on above date. The meeting was called to order by President Adolf Kraus at 2:00 p. m., at his residence, 4518 Drexel blvd.

The following were in attendance: President, Adolf Kraus; ex-President, Simon Wolf; First Vice President, Lucius L. Solomons; Treasurer, Jacob Furth; members of the Executive Committee, Charles Hartman, Philip Stein and Joseph Hirsh; and the Secretary. In addition to the foregoing the following were also in attendance: Sig Livingston, member of the Court of Appeals of the Order and Chairman of the Executive Board of the Anti-Defamation League; Harry Simon, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2; and Sylvan E. Hess, President of District Grand Lodge No. 6.

Excuses were presented from Brothers Jacob Singer, Dr. E. N. Calisch, Dr. Berthold Timendorfer, Dr. Adolphe Stern, Adalbert Skall and J. Niego.

The minutes of the preceding meeting held on Jan. 6, 1913, as printed and distributed to the members of the Executive Committee, were approved as printed.

Telegrams conveying greetings to the Executive Committee were presented from the following lodges: Mishan Lodge, Kalamazoo, Mich.; Dacotah Lodge, Grand Forks, N. D.; Winnipeg Lodge, Winnipeg, Canada; Lake Cities Lodge, Ft. William, Ont.; Nebraska Lodge, Omaha, Neb.; Lincoln City Lodge, Lincoln, Neb.; Julius Houseman Lodge, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Fox River Lodge, Appleton, Wis.; Chippewa Valley Lodge, Eau Claire, Wis.; Saskatoon Lodge, Saskatoon, Canada; Danville Lodge, Danville, Ill.; Emes Lodge, Springfield, Ill.; Bay City Lodge, Bay City, Mich.; Grand Prairie Lodge, Champaign, Ill.; Sioux City Lodge, Sioux City, Iowa; Gilead Lodge, Milwaukee, Wis.; Mesaba Lodge, Virginia, Minn.; Burlington Lodge, Burlington, Iowa, Minnesota Lodge, St. Paul, Minn., and Isaac Lodge, Milwaukee, Wis. Verbal greetings were also extended by the Secretary on behalf of the Chicago lodges.

The Secretary submitted financial statement for the year 1913 as follows:

Balance on hand of all funds, last account	$35,682.44
Receipts from all sources during the year	40,283.45
Total	$75,965,89
Disbursements as per vouchers	$35,782.74
Balance on hand of all funds	$40,183.15

Brother Jacob Furth, as treasurer, submitted report corroborating the figures presented by the Secretary, showing that the balance of the fund in his possession amounted to $40,183.15, and suggested the advisability of increasing the bond of the treasurer. It was thereupon resolved that the treasurer's bond be increased to the sum of $40,000.00.

The privilege of the floor was granted to Brother Harry Simon, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, who then addressed the Executive Committee on propaganda work inaugurated by District Grand Lodge No. 2 and results achieved thereby; advocating in his remarks the necessity of paying official visits at frequent periods to the lodges in the District, and requesting for an increased appropriation by the Executive Committee for propaganda purposes in the District, so as to enable the District to fully carry out its plan. Consideration of the request was ordered laid over until the allotment of propaganda funds to all the Districts will be considered.

Like privilege was granted to Brother Sylvan E. Hess of St. Paul, President of District Grand Lodge No. 6, who addressed the Executive Committee, strongly supporting the proposition emanating from ex-President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, Brother Leon Schwarz of Mobile, Ala., with reference to annual conferences by the presidents of the American Districts and the attendance of the presidents of the American Districts at the meetings of the Executive Committee of the Order; further suggesting the advisability of the establishment of a clearing house, which is to gather the reports of the various District Grand Lodges, their General Committees, and prepare extracts of the same reviewing the activities of the various Districts and transmit such extracts in bulletin form to the members of the General Committees of the American Districts. In this connection the Advisory Committee, to whom was referred for consideration the subject matters of annual conferences of presidents of the various District Grand Lodges and the attendance of the presidents of the District Grand Lodges at the meetings of the Executive Committee, reported that the first proposition, namely: —the annual conferences of presidents of District Grand Lodges, being outside of the jurisdiction of the Executive Committee, be not considered, and recommending that with reference to the second proposition, the attendance of the presidents of the District Grand Lodges at the meetings of the Executive Committee, be referred with a favorable recommendation to the Constitution Grand Lodge convention. It was thereupon moved by Brother Philip Stein that the recommendations of the Advisory Committee be adopted and that the Advisory Committee be requested to frame the requisite law covering the subject matter for submission to the Constitution Grand Lodge at its next convention. Motion was adopted.

The suggestion with reference to the establishment of a clearing house for the dissemination of activities of the Districts was laid on the table.

The question of designating the time of holding the convention of the Constitution Grand Lodge at San Francisco in the year 1915 was then taken up for consideration. After a full discussion of the subject matter it was moved by Brother Simon Wolf that May 9th, being the second Sunday of the month in the year 1915,, be designated as the opening day of the convention. Motion was adopted. It was further moved by Brother Philip Stein that the First Vice-President of the Order, Brother Lucius L. Solomons, of San Francisco, be appointed a special committee with power to appoint such assistants as he may deem necessary from among the members of the Order resident in San Francisco, with full power to arrange all details, such as place of meeting, hotel arrangements, transportation facilities, etc., in connection with the convention, and that in the event of it being found necessary to do so, Brother Solomons in conjunction with the President of the Order be authorized to change the date of opening the convention to any subsequent day after May 9, 1915. Motion was adopted.

The Secretary was then instructed that upon receipt of report from Brother Solomons with reference to the arrangements for the convention to issue the necessary circulars to the District Grand Lodges acquainting them of arrangements made.

The subject of preparing and publishing propaganda literature was then brought up for discussion by Brother Simon Wolf, and after full discussion with reference to the character of the literature to be published it was moved by Brother Wolf that the Advisory Committee be requested to cause the preparation and publication of suitable literature to be used for propaganda purposes in the American Districts. Motion was adopted.

Brother Simon Wolf, as resident member of the Executive Committee at Washington, D. C., submitted the following report:

Report of Simon Wolf, Resident Member of the Executive Committee at Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen:—

I have the honor herewith to submit the annual report. After the report of last year had been transmitted, important matters affecting the future of immigration transpired, notably the passing by Congress of a new immigration bill containing the literacy test. The Order in conjunction with the Board of Delegates and the American Jewish Committee, and kindred organizations, did all they possibly could to prevent the enactment into law of this bill, notably on account of the literacy test, although there were other objectionable features which were not so material and so commanding in importance as that. A hearing to those in favor and in opposition to the bill was given by President Taft in the East Room of the White House. A largé aggregation was present, representing individual and associated thought. One minute of time was alloted to me, and I sententiously said, "One of our ancient sages when confronted by a heathen with a knife in his hand, who threatened to kill the sage unless he could tell him what there was in religion while he (the heathen) was standing on one foot, gave as his answer: 'Love thy neighbor as thyself.'" President Taft applauded very heartily this sentiment, and practically gave an indication of what he thought of the situation. I was privileged shortly before this, to discuss the immigration question at greater length at the anniversary exercises of the Order in New York City at Temple Beth El, and in the presence of President Taft, and on that occasion President Taft paid a unique and most gratifying public tribute to the Jewish people, and their services to the country at large, particularly in upholding law and order and individual rights. President Taft's masterly address ought to be carefully preserved and distributed. I have been paying particular attention to the importance of adequately preserving the right of asylum for the religious and political refugees under our immigration laws, literate or illiterate, for a wholly inadequate and practically valueless supposed exemption in the immigration bill, based on an English precedent which proved quite nugatory has misled many persons in this respect. Investigation has also been made into the subject of Jewish illiteracy abroad, which, while not yet quite completed, indicate that correct in suggesting that approximately the government immigration records are 20 per cent of Jewish immigrants would be excluded by the reading test of the Dillingham-Burnett bill. Similarly, it was largely due to efforts of the Order in conjunction with other organizations, that the Conference Report on the Immigration Bill was recommitted by both Houses of Congress, with instructions to strike out the objectionable "certificate of character" provision for immigrants, which would have barred out substantially all religious and political refugees, whom their home countries wanted to persecute by arbitrarily denying such certificates to them. But it was quite doubtful after the hearing whether the President would veto the bill or not, and it is the opinion of all those interested that had it not been for the stand taken by that sterling official and sincere American, the Honorable Charles Nagel, then Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the bill would have finally been signed by President Taft. The veto message was written by Secretary Nagel, as is well known, and it was by a vote lacking but a few of the legal two-thirds majority that the bill was finally defeated.

At the regular session during the early part of December I in conjunction with representatives of other organizations, appeared before the Committee on Immigration, waiting for fifteen hours to have a hearing and at two o'clock in the morning, I finally succeeded in making a clear and comprehensive statement of our wishes, but I fear that the report of the majority of the committee as submitted to the House of Representatives will be enacted into a law, the only possible hope that it will not become such being that President Wilson may follow the noble example of President Taft, and veto it on account of the literacy test, but this is something entirely speculative and cannot be stated with any degree of certainty.

A statistical exhibit of the appeal cases of immigration marked appendix "A" gives an intelligent showing of what has been done in preventing deportation of individuals and families, which but for the intervention of the Order, the representative of the Board of Delegates, and the National Council of Immigration, would have been unquestionably deported.

The number of appeals exceeded that of last year, and naturally the number of deportations was somewhat larger, though the net result of admissions, when taking into account the changing of the Bureau into the Department of Labor, and the time necessary for the officers of the new department to get into harness, does not show a material difference as to admissions.

Some very remarkable cases have thus been cared for, and the system now in vogue, as far as the Department of Labor being restrained by the certificates of the Marine Hospital Doctors, is a matter of the deepest concern. Some of these certificates are absolutely laughable, ridiculous and perfunctory. We are happy to state that the Department is taking a very humane view of the situation and is trying to remedy this condition. It is not a single instance, but many that have come under my observation, that make a radical change an absolute necessity. Some months ago a woman with four children came to Baltimore to join her husband living in Washington, D. C. The children were certified for ring-worm of the scalp. There was no accommodation for them in Baltimore. We then secured hospital treatment in Washington, with the result that these certified children, with the record of the Marine Hospital Service stating that it would take a year or more for them to be cured, that is to say, three of the children, were discharged within a week, having no ringworm at all. Fresh air and good healthy food soon restored them to a normal condition. The fourth child is still detained, but will be discharged within a few days. That is a sample. Some time ago a man, his wife and two children came to Baltimore. Members of the family were well except the father, who is a carpenter by trade, thirty-four years of age, and who was afflicted with a skin disease from childhood, not contagious. The Marine Hospital and Special Board of Inquiry made the bold assertion that this skin disease would prevent the man from earning a living, and yet he had paid his own passage and made good money in the land of his birth, notwithstanding this skin disease. The Bureau of Immigration took the same view, and fortunately for the service and for humanity, the Assistant Secretary, the Honorable Louis E. Post, took the humane view of the situation and admitted the family. And in another instance, and which is simply one of many, an immigrant boy of seventeen had been certified as "poor physique" and "likely to become a public charge" notwithstanding there were relatives in a distant city able to care for him, was ordered deported after two appeals had been filed and the case had been reopened. Senators and members were interested in the case, but there seemed to be no hope for thè boy, but I took the matter up, acting as the representative of all the societies, and notwithstanding the strenuous opposition succeeded in having the boy landed.

The important recommendations submitted by us, jointly, with the Board of Delegates and the American Jewish Committee, and some separately by us, and the Industrial Removal Office and the Galveston Bureau, are printed in Vol. 41 of the National Immigration Commission Reports, just issued by the Government, and strongly influenced the Commission in its recommendations of administrative reforms in the interest of the immigrants.

At the close of President Taft's administration a bill creating the Department of Labor was rushed through Congress. No sane American, no lover of his country and of that great class of American citizens who have aided so materially in the welfare of the Nation, can object to having labor cared for in an intelligent and humane manner, and the only objection to the bill was that it placed immigration in the same Department, and the friends of both were apprehensive that the consolidation of these two important factors in our national life, might clash and prove inimical. The fears and apprehension, however, have proven groundless, for, as far as immigration is concerned, under the control of the present head of the Department of Labor, the Honorable William B. Wilson, and his able assistants, Mr. Post, Mr. Densmore, and the Commissioner-General of Immigration, Mr. Caminetti, an intelligent, reasonable and humane position has been taken, and the Bureau of Immigration while authorized by law to take the initiative in its proceedings, has nevertheless been controlled by the wise discretion of its superiors, although so far as we can truthfully say that injustice has been avoided as far as it was possible for the Bureau to control it. Blaine and criticism time and again have been hurled at the Bureau and some of its officials at the port of entry, which after thorough investigation and mature reflection has proven groundless, for many of its decisions are unfortunately based on the medical certificate which is perfunctory. The certificates as to the alien having hernia, poor physique, senile, and likely to become a public charge, are so constant and numerous, that they fail in their intended effect, for the officials of the Department to a large extent, as far as in their power lies, disregard them.

Again it is necessary to call the attention of the different communities to see to it that the immigrant applies for citizenship as speedily as possible, and follows it up by taking out the final papers. In a number of cases where relatives asked for the admission of aliens and who guaranteed that they would not become public charges the admission was made impossible owing to the fact that these relatives had been eight, ten and fifteen years in the United States, and had not become citizens thereof. The only way to prove interest in and for the United States is to become a citizen and take his share of responsibility and glory, and especially in the rural districts an extraordinary large percentage of aliens, including even Jews, have been shown to have failed to have themselves naturalized.

As usual, letters of thanks and congratulation from the individuals relieved, as well as from relatives of the immigrant, have been received, and it is a satisfaction at least, to know that the work is appreciated. Among them all none was so pleasing to me as a telegram received on my recent birthday from a Russian family who had been admitted owing to my intercession—the family now being located in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Attention should also be called to a very important decision just rendered by the United States Supreme Court in the so-called Luria case, conducted by Mr. Louis Marshall for the defendant, information regarding which case ought to be most widely disseminated, in order to protect many naturalized citizens. In this case, a recent Federal statute has now been held to be constitutional, which establishes a presumption of fraud, warranting cancellation of naturalization certificates, where the person naturalized leaves the United States within five years after naturalization for his original land of nativity or any other, and remain away for some time. In the Luria case, defendant left the United States more than four years after naturalization, and went to South Africa, armed with an American passport, which he tried to renew after its expiration, his country of birth having been Russia. Despite his efforts to prove that his physician had ordered him to go to South Africa for the sake of his impaired health and that he intended to remain an American citizen and to return to the United States, it was held that this statute created an effective presumption, without further proof that his original naturalization had been fraudulent by reason of his lack of alleged intention then to reside permanently in the United States. Under such a statute, it is most important for naturalized citizens to know what risks they run, if they leave the United States for an extended absence within five years after naturalization, yet none of the daily or weekly papers seem to have given any particular attention even to this case. This matter is intimately connected with the subject of naturalized citizens residing in Jerusalem, who are there for educational and philanthropic purposes which has again been the subject of correspondence between the Order, the Board of Delegates and the State Department. The latest information from that quarter is that the matter is being promptly gone over and a solution satisfactory to all parties concerned is expected in the near future.

The reading of the Bible in the Public Schools has been given a great deal of attention. Representatives of the Order at Atlanta, Ga., notably Dr. David Marx, have won a splendid triumph, assisted by leading ministers of other faiths, in preventing the reading of the Bible in the Public Schools. This same action having also been taken in Portland, Oregon. During the summer my attention was called to the impending fight in North Carolina where the reading of the Bible in the Public Schools was to be incorporated in the constitution of that state. A letter from the Chief Justice of North Carolina, Walter Clark had appeared in some of the North Carolina papers. I immediately corresponded with him and he asked for aid and support on the part of our co-religionists to prevent what he called a disaster and a shame to the State. Steps were taken immediately to enlist some of the leading citizens of North Carolina, members of the Order of B'nai B'rith, as well as members of the Board of Delegates, chief among them being Mr. Lionel Weil, President of District Grand Lodge No. 5; Mr. Marcus Jacobi, of Wilmington, N. C., ex-president of District No. 5; Mr. Henry Weil, of Goldsboro, N. C.; Mr. David Stern, of Greensboro, N. C., and Rabbi Kornfeld, of Raleigh, N. C.—all of whom appeared before the legislative body when in convention assembled and made splendid arguments to prevent the enactment into law the said amendment. In a letter from Judge Clark after the defeat of this matter, he writes that too much credit cannot be given to the splendid aid that had been recuited for him, and that North Carolina would always be indebted to the representative of the Order resident in Washington for the prompt and efficient action. Judge Clark's letter is a model and deserves to be handed down to future generations, and although already printed in the B'nai B'rith News, should be made part of this report. It was a great triumph, especially in a state that was last to recognize the political rights of the Jew, and where it needs a great deal of education before the citizens recognize the equal right of all and to stand firmly for the dis-establishment of Church and State.

There has been a great deal of correspondence on the part of numerous applicants, either for office or for release from imprisonment, with the usual result heretofore achieved.

The Order, as well as the Board of Delegates, acting in a subordinate capacity, did all in its power to aid the sufferers in the Balken States. Also the question of the rights of the Roumanian Jews, which were more and more imperiled by the Balkan War and the right of the Jews in the Balkan States likewise was brought to the attention of the State Department, and received courteous recognition, and the State Department did all it possibly could, under the circumstances, and would cheerfully have done more had it been in its power to do so.

Acting as a representative of the Order I have actively participated in arousing public opinion against the outrageous ritual murder charge embraced in the recent Beilis prosecution at Kief, and addressed a large Washington mass-meeting of protest regarding it, and used other efforts to carry the message of civilization on this subject into benighted Russia. Fortunately, even a Russian peasant jury found itself compelled to do justice to the humble, persecuted Jew.

The fact having been made known that in the Public Schools of the City of Washington, the teachers addressed the children on the subject of prohibition, and permitted lecturers on prohibition to appear before these children, a correspondence took place between the then President of the Board of Education and myself, which led to prompt investigation and to the stopping in future of a like course. While the Order does not intrude in the province of liquor traffic, yet it considers the abridging of personal rights as an infraction and intrusion on American citizenship.

Respectfully submitted.

SIMON WOLF.

The report was received with expressions of approval, whereupon it was moved by Brother Lucius L. Solomons that the report of Brother Simon Wolf be accepted and published in the minutes of the Executive Committee. Motion prevailed. It was thereupon suggested by Brother Simon Wolf that that part of the report relating to the Luryea case containing an important decision in the United States Supreme Court with reference to the cancelation of naturaliz-

THE KEHILLAH

BY PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph.D.

IV.

The spiritual life of the ghetto is a factor, just as important as the political and economic status. Modern Jewish history is characterized by the disappearance of both the spiritual and the physical ghetto. We all know in a general way that up to modern times education among Jews was limited to their religious literature. In eastern Europe, in northern Africa and Asia, this is still largely the case. It is advisable, however, that we study this question from the point of view of individual facts. Up to the end of the eighteenth century we find all congregational documents, including the minutes, written in Yiddish. The congregation of Berlin used Yiddish until about 1800. When, in 1789, a law was issued in Prussia requiring that the Jews keep their books in German, the congregation of Berlin petitioned against this regulation as imposing a hardship on the majority of the Jewish business men. Social organizations in Berlin, like the Magine Reim, organized originally as an orthodox club, in opposition to the liberal "Gesellschaft der Freunde," kept its books in Yiddish until 1812, when the law gave to the Jews the rights of citizens. The condition of secular culture is perhaps best illustrated by the fact that Baron Nathan de Rothschild, the founder of the English branch of the house, and grandfather of the present Lord Rothschild, when he was still living in Manchester, where he settled in 1797, wrote a note to a friend in London, asking him to reserve a room for himself and his bookkeeper, written in Yiddish. The little slip of paper is characteristic in many ways. To-day a man of his standing would telegraph to a hotel to reserve for him two rooms. No German merchant of today would write in Yiddish. And yet Nathan Rothschild was the real brains of the firm, as William von Humboldt describes him, "a man who has only one talent, that of making money." It is true that Meyer Amschel Rothschild was not a man possessed of such wealth, as we usually connect with this name. The real prominence of the house began after Meyer Amschel's death, with the great opportunities opened for banking in Frankfort after Waterloo. At any rate he was a rich man, being the banker of various German sovereigns, and certainly in a position to give his children a first class education. Yet the knowledge of the country's vernacular was merely a luxury. It was therefore not employed, unless needed, just as in our case, of one who would have to write a French letter. For the masses such an education was out of the question. As late as 1794 the rabbi of Frankfurt am Main, Phineas Horowitz, prohibited the establishment of a school in which the Jewish children were to be taught secular subjects.

This being the case in a large city, one can easily imagine how conditions were in small towns, where the educational facilities of the non-Jewish population were also of a very limited order. When the elector of Mayence, in 1782, ordered an investigation into the condition of the Jews, with the purpose of improving their secular education, he learned that there were very few grown people who could read and write the vernacular. Michael Creizenach, later on a noted pedagogue and author, who was born in Mayence in 1789, was sixteen years old before he learned to read and write German. Herz Homberg, born in Lieben, a suburb of Prague, in 1759, tells us that, while at the age of seventeen he was considered a marvelous Talmudic scholar, he did not know even the German alphabet, and awakening to a desire for secular education, he had to learn it stealthily, because as a student of the Yeshibah at Glogau, Silesia, he would have lost the support given to him, if it had become known that he wasted his time on such a heretical occupation.

This case brings us right home. Emperor Joseph II, succeeding his bigoted mother, Maria Theresia, in 1780, gave right from the start his attention to the Jewish question. His so-called "Toleranzedikt" is largely overestimated by those who speak of history without knowledge of the sources. There was no thought of removing the most oppressive disabilities from which the Jews suffered. The ghetto remained, the restriction of the number of marriages, the disability of holding public office, and the exclusion from quite a number of occupations, and even from the right of holding rural estate. The only substantial relief was the abolition of the so-called yellow badge, and of the Jew-toll. The latter, however, was even maintained under a different form, inasmuch as a Jew coming to a place where residence was prohibited to Jews had to apply to the police for a permit of temporary residence, for which he had to pay a fee, so that the only difference was that he was relieved from paying toll at a toll gate through which he passed, at which, up to the time of Joseph II, a tariff was posted, showing the toll to be paid for horses, cattle, sheep, swine and Jews. The one important reform of Joseph II, however, was the principle that Jews should be treated as human beings, while his mother considered them a nuisance. The most important expression of this principle was the encouragement of secular education. The Jews should be admitted to all institutions of learning, which, as the emperor states, was never expressly prohibited, and they should establish schools of their own for primary education, and where this was not feasible, should be admitted to public schools, if we may apply this term to the school system of those days. Large congregations and cultured communities complied with this system at once. Thus we have Jewish schools opened in Prague, in Triest and in Pressburg, in 1782. In most of the other congregations the Heder still continues to exist, the children going in the afternoon for a few hours to a Christian teacher, or, in exceptional cases, receiving instruction in the elementary branches by the Jewish teacher who conducted the Heder, and in very, very rare exceptions, being placed in the charge of private tutors.

The generation, therefore, which I might term the generation of my grandfather, consisting of people born around 1800, had some meager secular education. They had learned to read and to write, though they were unable to write anything that might claim literary merit. We must not forget, however, that Meyer Amschel Rothschild, a man whose business brought him in contact with sovereigns, could not write a grammatically and orthographically correct letter, and that the Christian neighbors of my grandfather had a large proportion of illiterates, and that even those of them who had received a school education barely could do more than scribble an intelligible note. In the case of the Jews the religious attitude introduced an additional difficulty. Ezekiel Landau, who was chief rabbi of Prague when Joseph II issued his "Toleranzedikt," denounces not merely secular learning, but even a methodical Hebrew education. One Joseph Hirsch, rabbi of Margonin, now part of the province of Posen, says boastfully in a book which he published in 1779 at Leghorn, "I have not studied the books of the philosophers, for their teachings are windy, and whatever good may be found in them has been said long ago in the Talmud." A similar view is expressed by Rabbi Saul Loewenstamm of Amsterdam, in a preface to an apologetic work by Judah Horwitz, of Wilna, published in Amsterdam, 1766: "It is well known," says the rabbi, "that from the time that I entered upon my office, I have kept away the feet of the people who harken to my voice from the path of the so-called philosophical scholars, and works written on such subjects, for the good that might be found in them is an infinitesimally small proportion of the heretical teachings over which sinners will stumble, while the righteous will walk only in the law of God." Saul Loewenstamm was the brother of Hirschel Lewin, (Jewish family names were then still shifting), rabbi of London, and afterwards of Berlin, who died in 1800, and was the father of the chief rabbi of London, Solomon Herschell, who held office until his death in 1842, and, while born in London, had never acquired the knowledge of the English language.

Seeing such a specimen in the case of people who enjoyed the advantage of living in centers of culture, we must not wonder that people living in provincial towns, where the schoolmaster, usually a retired sergeant, knew no more than to read and to write, possessed only a modicum of education. One might say, as a general rule, that the men in our country who were contemporaries of Solomon Herschell could just sign their name in German characters and write the address of a letter. The women, whose education was more neglected, because their destination was to become wives and mothers, as a rule, did not even know this. They had, perhaps, learned to read and to write German, but, having no use for it in later years, forgot it as completely as our high school graduates forget the periphrastic conjugation or the use of logarithms.

Exceptions existed in the case of the few who studied for a profession. The only profession practically available was that of medicine, and even this was restricted to the ghetto, because even a doctor was bound by the restrictions on residence, and because the canonical law, issued in the thirteenth century, which prohibited Jewish physicians from treating Christian patients, was still in force, although it was often more honored in the breach than in the observance. The legal profession was closed to the Jews because they could not hold office under the state, and even in order to practice law one had to obtain a special permit, which surely would never have been given to a Jew, as he also would not have obtained a license as a pharmacist unless it was for practice in the ghetto. To study at a university merely for the sake of obtaining a higher education was out of the question because, in spite of the popular prejudice alluded to before, more than 99 per cent of the Jews were so poor that they were only too glad when their boys were old enough to help in business. In addition, real culture to them was merely the study of the Torah. Secular study was just as a mechanical trade, or business experience—some way of earning a livelihood. As the best proof I shall quote the case of Baruch (1778-1813) and Judah Jeiteles (1783-1843), the sons of a doctor of Prague, who were profound Talmudic scholars and prolific Hebrew authors.

The study of the Talmud, therefore, was still the only curriculum for boys who had outgrown the primary education of the Heder. Every congregation of any consequence maintained a Yeshibah. It was usually an obligation entered into by the congregation upon the election of a rabbi. The congregation pledged itself to maintain a stipulated number of students so that the rabbi had a class to teach. The maintenance consisted in free meals, though charitable persons occasionally furnished such a boy free lodging too. The limitation agreed upon at the election of the rabbi was not always strictly maintained. A poor boy drifted into town, and either found somebody who helped him, or he starved. My father, who was a student at the Yeshibah of Rabbi Baer Oppenheim in Eibenschuetz about 1830, told me that when he arrived there he was assigned free meals on four days a week. The free meals consisted of a breakfast, which meant coffee, or rather a chickory concoction with a roll, a noon meal, which hardly was too rich, and a piece of rye bread which served for supper. On the other three days he had to help himself the best he could. As early as 1756 an attempt was made by the government to regulate these conditions through an order that Yeshibahs should only be maintained in six large congregations. The law failed in accomplishing its object. A rabbi wanted disciples, and the congregation wanted the distinction of a renowned seat of Talmudic learning. It often happened that members of the congregation who were learned and in a position to devote their time to such work, maintained Yeshibahs of their own. Some of these men survived until my days, although their Yeshibahs had long been abandoned. A very prominent representative of this class was Moses Katz Wannefried, in Prossnitz, whose Yeshibah the famous preacher Adolph Jellinek attended. Another more prominent case was that of Aaron Kornfeld in Jenikau, Bohemia, who died in 1881, and as long as young men were willing to study under him, kept a Yeshibah, while he lived in fairly comfortable circumstances as a distiller. His nephew, the son of his brother, Moses, already nicknamed Moritz, was Sigmund Kornfeld, a banker in Budapest, raised to a Hungarian baronetcy and peerage in 1909. It is needless to say that Baron Kornfeld had not the ambition to continue the Yeshibah which his grandfather, Marcus Baer, a favorite disciple of Ezekiel Landau, had founded. Things changed, chiefly through the events of 1848. A few Yeshibahs may have survived in the fifties, as I know from the case of Rabbi Solomon Quetsch, first in Leipnik, and afterwards in his native city of Nikolsburg, where he died in 1855, but when I arrived in Nikolsburg to enter the Gymnasium in 1868, the Yeshibah, which thirty years before, in the days of my father, numbered three hundred students, had completely disappeared. Its remnants existed in three or four Talmudists, who gave private lessons to a dozen of students of the Gymnasium after school hours. All of them have gone long ago to their eternal reward, and I doubt very much whether Talmudic instruction could be had in Nikolsburg now for love or money unless the rabbi would be willing to give it.

I. O. B. B. MEETS MENORAH OBJECTS.

To the American Hebrew:

One of the most interesting questions discussed at the recent convention of the Intercollegiate Menorah Association was that of spreading the Menorah idea among Jewish college graduates. The purpose is to organize the alumni of the various univeristies into Menorah societies.

The plan, indeed, has much to commend it; yet, none the less, we are reminded of the wholesome advice offered a few months ago by the American Hebrew to the effect that one of the needs of American Jewry is the organization of a society, the purpose of which would be to prevent the organization of new societies.

Without opposing the Menorah plan, the writer wishes to state that a number of recent college graduates have been rather surprised to find that an institution already exists which satisfies nearly all the needs that could be filled by the proposed new organization. That institution is the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith. The B'nai B'rith is firmly established, is truly international, and has a splendid record of achievement behind it. Recognizing this fact, a few college alumni have recently been working on a project for attracting more of the graduates into the Order, with the purpose of raising this institution to its highest degree of efficiency. It would be a matter of deep regret if another society would be formed at this time with an object not identical, but certainly similar to, that of the B'nai B'rith.

The Order is not what it is popularly supposed to be. It is no longer a benefit or insurance organization. As stated in the preamble of its constitution, its mission is that "of uniting Israelites in the work of promoting their highest interests and those of humanity; of developing and elevating mental and moral character of the people of our faith; of inculcating the purest principles of philanthropy, honor and patriotism, of supporting science and art, of alleviating the wants of the poor and needy, etc."

Surely there is but little that the graduate Menorah societies could accomplish that could not be done as well or better through machinery already existing. If a need for a new organization exists at all, that need springs from a desire to form a sort of Jewish Graduates' Club that would lay more emphasis, perhaps, on Jewish culture, than on social life. Commendable as this desire may be, I venture to express the opinion that the need could be met better through the B'nai B'rith than through the Intercollegiate Menorah Association.

In conclusion, let me repeat that I am not opposing the Menorah plan. I am seeking to call the attention of undergraduates to the fact that some recent graduates have unexpectedly found their needs fully satisfied in the B'nai B'rith, and they believe that their successors will, if a careful investigation be made, meet with a similar experience.

JEWISH CHAUTAUQUA SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Jewish Chautauqua Society, held the past week, reports were presented showing the increased activity and usefulness of the society. The report of the Twentieth Anniversary Assembly evidenced the fact that it was the most successful in the history of the society. There was an attendance of over eighty delegates, not including visitors and speakers. Invitations were received and presented from several communities for the next Assembly, which has been left for final decision at a subsequent meeting.

The Secretary presented reports of the work in the colonies of South Jersey and North Dakota, showing the increased interest in this department of work.

The report of the Correspondence School, which was presented by the dean of the faculty. Dr. William Rosenau showed the enrollment of students to date, eighty-one. Five courses of study are now being arranged in printed form and applications for registration are being daily received.

The report and outline of the work for the Summer Schools in the various universities was presented by the Chancellor, Dr. Henry Berkowitz, and was decided, owing to the remarkable success of this work in the three universities of the south last year, that it be continued and extended in some of the eastern universities.

Upon the request of a number of committees, the Secretary will soon make a tour to a number of cities.

The First Lodge of England I.O.B.B.

Fourth Annual Report
1913-5673-4.

Adopted at the Annual General Meeting of Members, Held on Sunday, January 18, 1914—5674

The Council has pleasure in submitting the fourth annual report of the work of the lodge:

Installation and Presidential Address.

The honorary officers for the year were elected at the annual meeting on January 19, 1913, and were installed on February 16. On that occasion Bro. Dr. Snowman delivered a presidential address. He summarized the aims of the lodge by stating that it desired to foster an independence of thought, to cultivate an appreciation of new problems and new situations, to oppose despotic management of communal interests, and to infuse into all Jewish undertakings a spirit of real brotherhood. It should, however, be the duty of brethren to disseminate the views developed in the lodge by debate and discussion, to spread abroad the reasons for their adoption, and to endeavor to secure a strong body of opinion in their favor. The lodge should, for the present, eschew any active designs in the sphere of public affairs, though it should formulate policies and press their adoption on those who possessed the machinery for carrying them out.

The President emphasized the importance of securing a great accession of membership in order that the lodge might become a vitalizing influence and an effective force. He suggested that it was unnecessary to limit the membership only to those possessing some record of achievements, but that entrance should be afforded to those who brought with them promise for the future and the potentiality of becoming valuable factors for promoting the cause of the Order. It was nevertheless important that the roll of members should include active workers on all communal bodies, in order to help to concentrate every Jewish movement in this country within the circle of the lodge for the purpose of discussion and criticism in the light of the established aims of the Order. Any point of view established in the lodge must be permitted to gain the intelligent sympathy of members, and particularly of those who carried its advocacy into the councils of the organizations dealing with special matters. Institutions could thus be influenced by raising efforts from within them to shape their policies along the lines of B'nai B'rith principles. With the growth of the Order in this country, it would no longer be necessary to work merely through isolated groups of members. It would then be justifiable to act in a corporate capacity and, when circumstances demanded such a course, institutions could be approached by deputations, and the views of the lodge could be laid before them and their adoption urged.

Meetings During the Year.

There were nine meetings of the lodge during the year, and the Council met on twelve occasions.

Visiting Members.

From time to time, during the period under notice, members of the Order from various parts of the world have visited the lodge, including representatives from Berlin, Copenhagen, Frankfort-on-Maine, and Winnipeg, and visitors have been welcomed from the lodge at Manchester. Visits have also been paid by brethren to other lodges. These visits have helped to promote that spirit of brotherhood which is one of the cardinal principles of the Order.

Special Meeting of Welcome to the Chief Rabbi.

On June 15, 1913, a special meeting was held in honor of the Chief Rabbi, Bro. Joseph H. Hertz, a member of the Jacob Lodge, Syracuse, N. Y. The Chief Rabbi, who was greeted by addresses from the President and Vice-President, received a most enthusiastic welcome from the members, which Dr. Hertz cordially acknowledged.

Grand Lodge.

The Grand Lodge celebrated its seventieth anniversary during the year, and a resolution of congratulation was adopted on this occasion. A grant of £5 was made to the funds of Grand Lodge and the sum of £[illegible] was voted for the Balkan Relief Fund raised by Grand Lodge.

Palestine.

At the July meeting an interesting and instructive address on Palestine was delivered by Bro. M. E. Lange, embodying observations made during his recent [illegible] in the Holy Land. The lodge [illegible] had under consideration the position of the Yemenite Jews who have emigrated to Palestine, and a sum of £5 was voted towards the fund being raised for their relief.

Publicity Sub-Committee.

At the suggestion of Grand Lodge, the Council appointed a publicity sub-committee, consisting of Brothers M. Epstein, A. Kahn, M. Myers and S. Rosenbaum, to take note of anti-Semitic utterances which may appear in current publications and to draw the attention of the publishers thereto.

Appointment of Hon. Archivist.

Steps have been taken to secure the proper preservation of all documents relating to the lodge. The sub-committee which considered the matter originally broached by Bro. Hirschfeld, recommended the appointment of a new honorary officer to be known as the Archivist (to be eligible for re-election from year to year), who should have custody of and compile and retain an inventory of all documents detailed in the sub-committee's report. This recommendation was adopted in principle, and Bro. Hirschfeld was asked to discharge the duties of Archivist as long as possible under the constitution.

Social Functions.

On Sunday, March 23, a Purim Conversazione was held at the Wharncliffe Rooms. The function was largely attended and proved a brilliant success, which was mainly due to the efforts of the Honorable General Secretary. The lodge meeting of May 18 was preceded by a house dinner, and on Saturday, December 27, well-attended Chanukah Conversazione was held.

Aliens' Legal Aid Committee.

The agreement with the Board of deputies in regard to this conjoint committee has been renewed for a period of three years. The following were elected as representatives of the lodge for one year. Brothers H. Bentwitch, C. Duschinsky, M. Epstein, B. J. Friend, M. Gaster and J. Snowman. As evidence of the practical value of this committee's work, it may be stated that during the year 430 individual appeals were conducted by the Solicitor (Bro. I. Landau), and of these 305 were successful.

Matters Arising Out of the Balkan War.

Communications were received from the Grand President of the Order, Bro. Hon. A. Kraus, in regard to the position of the Jews residing in territory then about to be ceded to Roumania. The lodge was urged to take such action as seemed appropriate in order to safeguard the civil and political rights of the Jews concerned. The matter was discussed at length and a memorandum was sent in reply, giving a resume of negotiations conducted in this country. The substance of the memorandum is as follows:

"On January 24, 1913, the Jewish Chronicle published autograph letters addressed to the editor by the Bulgarian and Greek peace delegates, containing formal pledges on behalf of their governments that the Jews in the conquered territories would receive full civil and religious rights.

"At the end of February the Bulgarian Jews memorialized their government on the position of the Jews in territory likely to be ceded to Roumania.

"In March, the conjoint committee of the Board of Deputies and the Anglo-Jewish Association published correspondence with the British Foreign Office on the same subject. Sir Edward Grey had stated that 'though the grievances of the Jews will be borne in mind, the present moment, when the great powers are so fully occupied with the war and its complications, is hardly one when the question can be raised by His Majesty's government with any prospects of success.'

"In reply to a question in the House of Commons by Sir Philip Magnus, Sir Edward Grey said that he could not make statements concerning transfers of territory, without prejudicing negotiations then proceeding, but he added that the principles advocated by Sir Philip's question were 'such as will command general sympathy.'

"On March 21 the Roumanian minister in London addressed to the Jewish Chronicle letters containing assurances that the inhabitants of regions to be ceded to Roumania, 'whether of Jewish or other nationalities,' would enjoy 'the full political and civil rights they now have, as subjects of another country.'"

Meanwhile several members of the Council, in their individual capacity, but after consultation in council, brought the subject forward in influential quarters, and were able to arouse the interest of the press and members of Parliament in favor of the Roumanian Jews.

The Grand Lodge of Constantinople and the lodge at Salonica have been occupied during the year in endeavors to maintain the claims of the Salonican Jews, in view of the political changes occurring in their city. Representations were made from Salonica to the London lodge to press forward these claims. The Council was, however, assured that the matter was engaging the active attention of the Conjoint Foreign Committee, and was the subject of pending negotiations.

The Appointment of Marriage Secretaries of Synagogues in England.

This subject, having been brought forward by Bro. A. Kahn, a sub-committee was appointed to report thereon. The report indicates how the registration of Jewish marriages is regulated, and shows that the law assigns to the President of the Board of Deputies the duty of certifying the Secretaries of synagogues in England of persons professing the Jewish religion as functionaries for the registration of Jewish marriages. The only question which the board is called upon to consider in connection with an application for a certificate to the Registrar-General is whether the synagogue is or is not a synagogue in England of persons professing the Jewish religion. The report refers to a case wherein a synagogue applied to the Board of Deputies for the certification of its Secretary, and it was infomed that a preliminary certificate from the two Dayanim who were temporarily performing the functions of the Chief Rabbi was required before it could grant the certification.

The Dayanim, however, acting in accordance with precedent, before granting this preliminary certificate, required a series of resolutions to be passed by the synagogue, the effect of which would be to cause it to surrender its independence. The congregation, which was founded as a synagogue, independent of the jurisdiction of the Chief Rabbi, refused to entertain these conditions and is consequently still without a Marriage Secretary.

The sub-committee was of opinion that the "Board of Deputies, though, of course, at liberty to consult any authority it pleases in order to enable it to come to a decision as to whether or not a synagogue complies with the terms of the act of Parliament, is acting ultra vires in introducing a third party into relationship with the synagogue making application, and is further guilty of a gross abuse of the act of Parliament from which it derives its powers, in acting as an accessory to an ecclesiastical authority which imposes as the price of its certificate the surrender of the independence of the synagogue."

The lodge, which is still watching the matter, is meanwhile unanimously of opinion that steps should be taken to ensure that in future the action of the Board of Deputies is in accordance with section 30 of the Act of 1836, the object of which was to facilitate the registration of Jewish marriages, and not to establish a Jewish church.

Royal Commission on Divorce.

Arising from a motion submitted by Bro. Rubinstein, a sub-committee has been appointed to deal with the Jewish aspect of this matter, and has been engaged thereon during the year. A report is in preparation for submission to the Council of the lodge.

Retiring Officers.

The lodge desires to express its gratitude to the retiring President and the other honorary officers, and is particularly indebted to the Honorary General Secretary for arduous labors during the past two years, and for his devoted service to the interests of the lodge.

J. SNOWMAN, President.
1st January, 1914—5674.

AFGHANISTAN AS A LAND OF REFUGE.

The frequent expulsion of the Jews from Asiatic Russia last year compelled many of them to emigrate to Afghanistan. Recent reports from this territory northwest of India state that their position there is satisfactory, and the Jewish settlers attribute their good treatment to English influence. But if they attempt to re-cross the Russian frontier for trading purposes, they are reminded of their Jewish religion. The Jews in Afghanistan are very religious, and their love for Palestine is intense.

Our greatest glory is not in never failing but in rising every time we fall.—Goldsmith.

PRESENTATION OF TESTIMONIAL TO HERBERT SCHOENFELD

Appreciation of the work of Brother Herbert Schoenfeld as president of Rainier Lodge No 627 of Seattle, Wash., was crystallized in the substantial form of a silver cup, which was presented to him at the annual meeting of the lodge.

Brother Schoenfeld has devoted a great deal of his time during the past two years in the promotion of the lodge's interest, and due to his efforts the membership of the lodge was more than doubled.

Under his leadership the lodge has secured good results in the combatting of the white slave traffickers and has gone deeply into the immigration problem that will confront the Pacific Coast with the canal opening, and has delved into every phase of matters affecting the Jewish people.

The ceremony of presenting the cup to the president was attended by an address of appreciation delivered by Rabbi Koch of the Seattle congregation.

RELIGIOUS SCHOOL EXHIBIT.

One of the features of the recent convention of the Jewish Religious Education Association of Ohio, at Columbus, was the religious school exhibit of the Department of Synagogue and School Extension, conducted by the Director Rabbi, George Zepin of Cincinnati.

The exhibit consisted of models and objects used in Bible teaching, selected pictures, and reference books on special subjects relating to religious pedagogy. The reference books, an unusually interesting collection, comprised selected volumes on the following topics:

Education; the New Psychology and Child Study; Religious Pedagogy; History of Sunday School; Modern Sunday School Methods; Teacher Training; Educational Method; Handwork in School; Sunday School Buildings; Use of Stories and Games.

As a result of the exhibit, the association appropriated $100 for the purchase of models and stereopticon slides to constitute a permanent traveling loan exhibit for the use of the congregations represented in its membership.

A RUSSIAN MUNICIPALITY PLEADS FOR JEWS.

The Libau municipality has sent a deputation headed by the mayor, to the governor at Mitau to plead in the interest of commerce against the expulsion of many Jews from Griva and other places, despite the exceedingly cold weather and the proofs presented by the Jews of their prolonged residence in the province. The Griva authorities recently began a crusade against the Jews, expelling many of them and demanding from them all kinds of documents, including their marriage certificates. Even the Jewish recruits summoned from the neighboring places to the Griva commission were not allowed to lodge in the townlet. Many of them appeared one morning before the commission after the roll had been called, and were fined three hundred roubles each. The explanation that they were not allowed to sleep in the townlet was of no avail.

Many Jews are also being expelled from Saratoff, Voronez and the peasants' property round Lodz.

WOES OF ROUMANIAN JEWS.

The following civil disabilities may be enumerated as surrounding the Roumanian Jews:

Jews may not own land, live or do business in villages, or hire out as laborers upon farms.

Jews may not be employed in the railroad, postal, telephone or telegraph service.

Jews may not practice law nor be clerks to lawyers.

Jews may practice medicine, but are not admitted as internes in hospitals maintained by the government, nor on medical staffs.

Jews operating factories may have in their employ Jewish workers to the number of but one-third of the total number of their employes.

Jews are taxed for the support of all schools, but cannot be admitted to them until all Christians have been accommodated, and then only on payment of tuition fees.

Jews may not teach in public schools or hold chairs in higher institutions of learning.

Jews must serve in the army, may not rise above the ranks.

Jews may not bid on government contracts.

Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 8, Germany

District Grand Lodge No. 8 held its annual convention in the city of Berlin on November 22, 23 and 24, 1913. The following officers were elected: Timendorfer, Grand President; Jesselsohn, First Vice-President; Kuznitzky, Second Vice-President: Stein, Grand Treasurer; Goldschmidt, Grand Secretary.

Among the many important questions which the convention treated were the following, which are of general interest:

An Emergency Fund was created by an annual per capita tax of 1 mark. This fund is to be under the management of the Grand Lodge. The manner in which to raise the necessary amount to be paid over to the Grand Lodge is left to the Lodges. The fund is to bear the name of Adolf Kraus Fund.

A motion to establish a B'nai B'rith Day was adopted.

A motion to publish a history of the Order for the seventy-fifth jubilee of the Order was referred to the General Committee.

A motion to relieve members in bankruptcy from the payment of the per capita tax was defeated.

Action on the motion concerning mixed marriages was postponed until the next Grand Lodge Convention.

The following questions were referred to the General Committee:

A motion regarding the procedure of the Court of Honor. A thesis on the duty of the Grand Lodge to adjust its work of organization to the demands and necessities which result from the fact that the German Jews are concentrating in the big cities.

A thesis stating that concerted action in the present life of the German Jews can only be accomplished by working in harmony with the ideals of the Order and in order to be assured that all concerted action, especially in socio-political work, is carried out in the sense of the ideals of the Order, it is necessary that the brethren in arranging social foundations should entrust the management of such institutions to the Grand Lodge.

Action on the question of admitting women to membership in the lodges was indefinitely postponed.

A thesis stating that it is necessary for the Lodges to accumulate sinking funds large enough to be able to defray the expenses of their institutions from the interest of their funds and a motion that the sum of 4,500 marks of the budget passed by the General Committee should be devoted to the emigration and colonization of distressed eastern coreligionists were also referred to the General Committee.

REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT OF DISTRICT NO. 8, GERMANY.

We quote the following, which is of general interest to our members, from the important message submitted by President Brother B. Timendorfer, to the last convention of District No. 8, held in the month of November, 1913:

The financial reform problem was solved at the last session of the Grand Lodge in a generous manner. The financial report of the Grand Lodge for the year 1913 shows a surplus in the Grand Lodge fund as well as in the central fund.

Moneys received by the Grand Lodge as dues from the individual lodges are generally disbursed for the benefit of the lodges. The following sums were disbursed by the Grand Lodge in the interest of the lodges during 1912:

Lectures in the lodges	900.00M
Care of the sick	7874.04 "
Contributions to lodges in aid of their widows and orphans	6520.00 "
Visits to the lodges	2353.70 "
Printing	3189.43 "

The Grand Lodge has now 445 members, among whom are 126 representatives.

The question of creating the Emergency Fund should be treated carefully and quietly. The President of the Order, Brother Kraus, whom we all respect and love, has never concealed the fact that the creation of such an Emergency Fund is one of his pet desires for the purpose of demonstrating the unity of the Order all over the world. The wish of such a man must not remain unheeded in the German District, especially when the basic thought of the Emergency Fund is in every way sympathetic, namely the thought of being able to render quick help in sudden great misfortunes, following the approved principle that the one who gives quickly gives double. For this reason the difficulties in the way of the realization of this thought must be overcome. We must make it possible without disrupting our cordial relations with the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden. When the collections were being made for the Balkan sufferers the Hilfsverein wrote to the Grand Lodge, under date of May 8, 1912:

"In the future the Hilfsverein will undertake all collections made necessary by a catastrophe, together with the Grand Lodge, or at least if the Grand Lodge should see fit not to sign such a call, after a previous understanding with the Grand Lodge."

I greet with satisfaction the plan submitted to me by the President of Berthold Auerbach Lodge, Brother Rosenbaum of Berlin, according to which plan an initiation should take place once a year in which sons of living and dead brethren exclusively should be initiated. The first of these initiations to take place in the month of February 1914. The President of Berthold Auerbach Lodge will surely have no objection if other lodges should take up his idea. The President of the District recommends this plan.

During your President's administration forty-seven new lodges were installed in Germany and he strongly pleads for an energetic propaganda in order to complete the round number of fifty lodges.

During the last term Behrend Lehman Lodge, Henry Jones Lodge, Frankfurt Lodge and Rheinland Lodge celebrated their twenty-fifth, Muenchen Lodge its fifteenth, and Dahlberg Lodge, Ostpreussische Lodge, Maimonides Lodge, Saar Lodge and Herder Lodge, tenth anniversaries.

The total membership of the Order in Germany was, in 1908, 7,351; in 1909, 7,565; in 1910, 7,915. At the end of 1911 it was 8,323 and at the end of 1912, 8,610.

The funds of the German lodges amounted at the end of 1911 to 2,200,172.43 M., and at the close of 1912 to 2,374,212.57 M.

Funds under the management of the Grand Lodge: End of 1911, 186,178.72 M; end of 1912, 348,210.78 M.

Sixteen lodges reported the establishment of new institutions in the different social fields. The rest of the lodges have been building up their old institutions.

The Ladies' Society of the Berlin lodges has continued the work of taking care of poor Jewish women in confinement and has maintained a Home for Mothers and Children.

The four Berlin lodges created a center in Berlin for the care of children.

Saxonia Lodge of Chemnitz, August Lamey Lodge of Mannheim and Maimonides Lodge of Nuernberg have opened a retreat for children under school age and arranged for instruction to help children of school age in their studies.

The vacation colonies institutions have increased their activities.

Rhenus Lodge of Mainz and August-Lamey Lodge have extended their work in the field of charity.

The lodges in Glogau, Mainz, Mannheim, Worms, Thorn and Muenchen have established youth associations; Saxonia Lodge has arranged home evenings for young Jewish girls, and Frankfurt Lodge has established a home for working girls with room for sixty inmates.

The Grand Lodge has maintained a home for Jewish nurses.

Duesseldorf Lodge has established a station for nurses and Borussia Lodge has enlarged the nurse station which it had formerly established.

The Raphael Kosch Lodge has appointed an investigation commission for the advancement of handicraft among the Jews in the province of Posen. An investigation undertaken by such a commission has resulted in finding 300 Jewish masters of crafts in the province of Posen, who give work to 135 assistants and 63 apprentices. It will be the aim of this investigation commission to induce more Jewish boys to learn trades and to place them with Jewish masters.

The Solomon Munk Lodge has established a library containing scientific works, general literature and belle-letters for the use of its members and their families.

The Frankfurt Lodge has added a third Toynbee hall to the two existing in Berlin and Munich.

Twenty-six new labor bureaus were added this season to the forty-one old ones, so that there are now sixty-seven such offices doing good work.

In addition to the 23,600 Marks which the Grand Lodge collected for the Balkan Jews, the lodges contributed during the fall of 1911, 7,565 Marks for the benefit of the Jews who suffered from the fire at Balat, near Constantinople, and 46,218.20 Marks were received by the Grand Lodge on the occasion of the Jewish massacres in Morocco.

The Timendorfer foundation has begun operations. Two young Jewish scholars were helped to the extent of 1,600 Marks.

Our relations with the other great Jewish institutions are very cordial.

From different sides came requests to us to play the peacemakers in the controversies of the various parties in the midst of German Jewry. We have invariably declined the honor, for we are convinced that the Order can avoid trouble by remaining neutral only to all outside conflicts. The Order must make no enemies. Its existence depends upon its neutrality. The adherents of all the different religious and political parties must find a place in the Order.

IMMIGRANTS AND EDUCATION.

Representative William S. Vare, of Philadelphia, recently pointed out that in the schools of his city the children of immigrants frequently won the first prizes. His appointments to Annapolis and West Point are always made the object of competitive examinations, and usually the son of an immigrant is the victor.

The interesting point made by Mr. Vare is now supported by the statement of Commissioner of Education Claxton, who says:

"The least illiterate of our population are the native-born children of foreign parents. Illiteracy among the children of native-born parents is three times as great as that among native-born children of foreign parents."

Could there be any better refutation of the theory that the literacy test proposed by the immigration bill would exclude undesirable immigrants and admit only desirables? There is scarcely a school teacher in the country who cannot testify to the eagerness of the children of immigrants for knowledge. These children are taught in their homes that education has a commercial value; that it can be turned to account later on in life; that they must utilize to the utmost the opportunities for knowledge presented to them in the classroom.

While some of our old stock American children are gazing out of the window, dreaming of the baseball games that are to be played, the children of foreign-born parents frequently can be found studying hard, with a craving for information that will fit them for the actual work of life.

It would be poor national economy to turn healthy white immigrants back from our ports simply because they cannot read or write. Most of them realize what they have lost in having had no opportunities for education in their own country, and they inculcate in the minds of their children the realization of the inestimable benefit of education. Some of our finest stock would be lost to us if the literacy test ever became effective.—Washington Post.

COMMUNICATED.

Editor B'nai B'rith News:

About a year and a half ago, a certain Jew by the name of L. B. Katchen, of the city of Calgary, was sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of five years on a charge of cattle stealing. Prominent Jews in that city were absolutely certain that Mr. Katchen was innocent, and, since his sentence, everything was done to have this man freed, but without any results. The matter was taken up by the Calgary people with us here at the time, and the writer took it up with one of the prominent Jews in the city of Montreal, asking him to make a trip to Ottawa, and see what could be done. The trip was made, but it was impossible to get this man freed.

I am glad to inform you that, since the organization of a B'nai B'rith in this city, we had the matter up under our auspices, and our secretary, Mr. B. M. Goldman, is now in receipt of a telegram from Ottawa to the effect that Mr. Katchen has been freed, and we are certainly happy to have been instrumental in freeing an innocent man.

With fraternal greetings, I am

Sincerely yours,
A. H. GOLDBERG.
Edmonton, Can. President.

AN ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE.

Under the auspices of the Order of B'nai B'rith in America a league was a few weeks ago formed for the purpose of bringing about an abatement of the defamation of the Jew and ultimately to put an end to unfair discrimination against all citizens. * * * In most cases, as is to be expected, the league has discovered that these lapses from good manners into unseemly prejudices have been much more the result of want of thought than want of heart. As soon as the league has called attention to the matter an apology and promise of an amendment have been forthcoming. * * * Carried on with discretion and due regard for all circumstances, the league ought to do great good for the Jewish people in the United States. It is at least evidence of the fact that the Jew does not intend to sit down and suffer every insult hurled at him uncomplainingly. That is a first step towards commanding respect for any people. In this country the Board of Deputies charged itself with like work and on occasions has succeeded well.—London Jewish World.

MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE ORDER.

The annual meeting of the Executive Committee of the Order was held in the city of Chicago on Sunday, January 18, and Monday, January 19, 1914. The opening session was held at the residence of the President of the Order, and the Monday sessions took place at the La Salle Hotel.

In addition to the members of the Executive Committee, all of whom, with the exception of Brothers Jacob Singer and Dr. E. N. Calisch, were present, Brother Sylvan E. Hess of St. Paul, President of District Grand Lodge No. 6; Brother Harry Simon, of St. Louis, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, and Brother Sig Livingston, member of the Court of Appeals and chairman of the Anti-Defamation League, were in attendance.

At the Monday session, Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburg addressed the Executive Committee on the subject of Synagogue and Sabbath School extension work. He was followed by Brother A. H. Fromenson, managing secretary of the National Farm School, who addressed the Executive Committee on the work of the school and solicited the endorsement of the Order.

RACE PREJUDICE.

On Sunday afternoon, Jan. 18, 1914, a symposium on race prejudice was held at the Republican Club in New York. Among the speakers was Dr. Samuel Schulman of Temple Beth El, who in the course of his remarks said:

"I doubt whether the America of today occupies the lofty plane of idealism on which our forefathers stood. Prejudice is laziness of thinking, a too speedy generalization, a short cut of the mind. It is natural to have prejudices, but it is not ethical. In race prejudice, we find prejudice in its lowest form, because it is based on purely physical grounds.

"If the term 'brotherhood' is to mean anything, it must not mean the extermination of those who do not look alike and think alike. The individuality of brothers must be respected. We must recognize the fact that 'humanity' does not mean uniformity, but it does mean unity. Much of race prejudice is only a coarse cloak for ordinary selfishness.

"America is the hope of the human race. Here, for the first time in history, a nation formed itself, not on racial or ecclesiastical grounds. American democracy is based on a faith in the potentialities of man. As Americans, let us not be so hasty in dogmatizing about other races. Let us judge all men by their individual merit. Why should a son or daughter of Judaism not have access to all circles of culture? Race prejudice, if not stamped out, will lead to class prejudice and the undermining of American institutions."

JEWS IN CROATIA DEMAND EQUALITY OF RIGHTS.

The Jews in Croatia are of opinion that the time has arrived when they should be placed on the same footing, in respect to civil and political rights, as the other inhabitants of the province. A conference of delegates of Jews in Croatia and Slavonia was held recently at Koros, at which their demands were formulated. In particular they ask for the repeal of the Law of 1907, so that henceforth conversions from other religions to Judaism shall be valid legally.

News From The Orient

By Our Correspondent, DR. ISRAEL AUERBACH, Constantinople

The life of the Ottoman Jews is slowly returning to its usual course, the more the political situation becomes quieter and firmer. Although on account of the question of the possession of the Aegean Islands all danger of war complications between Turkey and Greece are not yet entirely excluded, a peaceful development of the present conditions is more to be counted upon. Business is again improving and trade seeks to adjust itself to the newly developed conditions. Turkey proceeds resolutely to bring about the reforms which she needs. In Syria the appointment of native officials who have the command of the language of the country, has been earnestly undertaken; the Armenian question in Anatolia will be settled with the assistance of the European Powers. The fighting force of Turkey on land and on water is experiencing a decided renovation. This is evidenced by the appointment of the German military mission, by the purchase of a great warship and by the appointment of Enver Bey, the national hero of new Turkey, as Minister of War, who has taken occasion, a few days after assuming his office, to assure the Chief Rabbi that he was much impressed by the brave behavior of the Jewish soldiers in the last war.

The question of the parliamentary elections is now also becoming an actuality and the Jews in Turkey must, like the rest of the nationalities, think of securing for themselves an adequate and appropriate representation in the chamber. It will hardly be necessary for us to fight to attain it. Therefore the Jews will this time again proceed separated from the Greeks and Armenians, who are involved in a fierce fight with the Government about these parliamentary elections. The government of the Young Turks seems to be openly in our favor. and so is the "Union and Progress" party, which is now stronger than ever before in the country. The political representative of the Osman Jewry, the Hahambashi, received the promise from the leading statesmen that the Jews shall still have the same number of representatives as they had in the former chambers, although their number has been greatly reduced. It will be a question of finding the right persons for it only. Although there is rather a profusion of candidates than a deficiency, and it seems as if there will be sharp competition in the capital among the candidates and their followers, there are today no men of upright Jewish sentiment and of statesmanlike views among them. Moreover, this time it will be of less importance as to who the Jewish representatives will be, for it appears that in the future the Turkish Parliament compared with other political factors, will have less significance in Turkish state life than may have been expected in the beginning of the constitutional era. The country is really not yet ripe for a democratic government, and the few strong young Turkish leaders particularly govern it according to their own will entirely. Naturally we cannot remain indifferent to the question whether there will be found in the Turkish chamber energetic defenders of our people or not, in case the Jews are attacked there, as it happened in the first session.

The Palestine problem is constantly becoming more complicated. Even if on one side Turkey is bracing up and reforming itself, the different alliances among the European Powers for the purpose of limiting their economic spheres of interest in Asiatic Turkey give on the other side, cause for serious thought. It looks almost like a project for future partition, and just in Palestine three different spheres of interest seem to meet, the British on the south, the French on the north, which are now apparently strengthened through new posts and railroad concessions in Palestine, and the German sphere, which rests [illegible] colonies, banking and protection of Protestant interests in the country. Between these come the great Arabian endeavors and the efforts of the Central Government of Constantinople to again bring the land of Syria by peaceful means close to itself, in stronger connection than before. In truth, no man knows to whom Palestine will belong in the future politically, and the Jews of the country are doing well to work with all their might for it that it shall belong to them at least economically and culturally. The entire Jewry [illegible] acknowledged the justification of these endeavors and the Alliance Israelite Universelle has done it at all times, as it appears from an important speech of its General Secretary, Mr. Bigart.

A very great step in this direction was the recent abolition of the so-called "Red Ticket," which signified a sort of prohibition against the Jews immigrating into Palestine. For many years presentations were made to the Turkish Government for this abolition, and it is a symptom of the present very favorable relation of the Jews with the political factors that the Habambashi succeeded.

But at the same time the quarrel which has been precipitated in Palestine on account of the question of the main language of instruction in the Jewisb schools, threatens to become a real danger for the Jewish cause in the country. On the one side it would be very regrettable if the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden, which has created such a grand school work in the last decade, should cease or diminish further activity there on account of the conflict. On the other side, it must be designated as a misfortune that non-Jewish factors like the German and the Osmanic local and state officials, have been drawn into this purely Jewish question. The conflict regarding the question whether the Hebrew or the German tongue should be the main organ of instruction should by no means degenerate into a fight about German or Osmanic interests; it should not even have the appearance of doing such a thing. The Jewish progress in Palestine needs the well meaning neutrality of all powers as much as it needs that of the Turkish Government and internal strife about language questions threatens to our detriment to remove this neutrality. Even the Jews in Germany have to stand attacks on account of this Palestinian controversy, and it would be much worse if the slightest shadow of a political aspect, which is not free from objection, were to fall upon Osmanic Jews on account of it. There is therefore nothing better to wish for than that this press controversy may not extend further, but will be speedily discontinued, and that peace may soon reign among the warring parties. The lodges should be first on hand to work in this direction. The proposition of the lodge of Salonika to District Grand Lodge No. 11, to undertake a peaceful settlement, will surely meet with sympathy everywhere within our Order and will awaken the wish for the success of this proposal. Harmony and brotherhood, the basic principles of our Order, are not to reign inside of the Order only, but they should be brought to the Jewry in general and the restorers of peace in this hard and dangerous conflict would therefore be the bringers of blessings to all Israel, in the full sense of our Order.

It is an interesting coincidence that just at the time when a conflict is being carried on in Palestine on account of the Hebrew language, an institute comes into public view in which the Hebrew language is the exclusive vehicle of instruction, and which has to thank our Order for its existence. It is the Kindergarten which was founded by Brother Seelenfreund and is maintained in Balat, the Jewish quarter of Constantinople, jointly by District Grand Lodge No. 11 and the Hilfsverein der Duetschen Juden. On the occasion of the feast of Hanukah, the manager, Mrs. Dr. Auerbach, arranged a school festival which was at the same time intended to be a dedicatory celebration. It was indeed a brilliant affair, which showed that the institute which affords a happy youth and a moral training to more than 150 poor children, who otherwise would be doomed to life on the street, is in the best way of a prosperous development. The invited guests were the Chief Rabbi, the Grand Lodge, the lodge members, the Hilfsverein Committee, the Balat Congregation and the local school commission. The Rabbi delivered a lengthy address, in the name of the Hahambashi, in which he explained the aims of the institution and gave praise to the Order B'nai B'rith and the Hilfsverein for their work in the interest of culture. Then the children came forward, which aroused the highest interest and brought tears of emotion to the eyes of the audience. A child of six years lighted the Hanukah lamp, reciting the usual blessing. Songs were then rendered by the little ones, which were followed by the main numbers of the program. A living Hanukah lamp, formed of eight children, a playlet entitled "Hanukah at Grandmothers," and a living picture, "Matityahu blesses his sons." New songs by the children closed the exercises. The splendidly artistic manner which the little actors displayed, as well as the ready masterly way in which they manifested their knowledge of the Hebrew language—for all texts were without exception composed in neo-Hebrew—earned for them extraordinary applause. The walls of the school room were decorated exclusively with the hand works of the pupils of the kindergarten. The many mothers of the children, who were present, were very happy with what they saw and full of admiration for that which was accomplished in the short time of six months of the existence of the institution. About one-fourth of the number of the children took active part in the performances. We, here in the Orient, can only renew our heartfelt thanks on this occasion to the American brethren who helped by their liberality to maintain and build up the foundation of Brother Seelenfreund. A committee was definitely appointed for the management of the school and consists of the brethren Niego, Markus, Auerbach, Franko and Wellish.

The winter season which has just started has brought new life into Constantinople Lodge, No. 678. Two very interesting lectures were delivered, "The Economic Condition of the Jews of Constantinople from the Oldest Times to the Present," by Mr. Abraham Galante, and "Portugal," by the Portuguese Consul General of our city.

THE LIFE OF A BEN B'RITH

Address Delivered by Rabbi Abr. Nowak at the B'nai B'rith Day Celebration of Louisville Lodge No. 14 of Louisville, Ky.

Life is an adventure. And the life of a Ben B'rith is an adventure, brave and strong—an adventure of guiding ideals, burning faith and willing sacrifice. And the greatest adventure ever attempted and undertaken was the adventure of Abraham, the patriarch, the father of the B'nai B'rith.

The Bible tells us that Abraham was three score and fifteen years old when the unmistakable call of God came sharply and clearly to his attentive ear. "Get thee out of thy country, and out of thy birthplace, and from thy father's house"—the familiar hills, the whispering brooks, the accustomed sky, the loving hands, the quiet walks—thine for seventy-five years—get thee out of it—and the family ties and the familiar language—tear thyself away from it, yea sever thyself from the house of thy childhood, from the city of thy youth, from the land of thy manhood. And betake thyself unto the land I will show thee—over rocky mountains and rugged valleys, past desolate deserts and downy meadows—and there were no railways nor ferryboats—unto a far-off and distant land, of a strong and harsh tongue.

What a sacrifice! To leave all behind! To start life anew at the age of seventy-five and in a strange country! Like some radiant flower plucked from its native soil and transplanted in some foreign sod. Surely this was severe enough a test to tax every ounce of faith that Abraham had. But Abraham was undaunted! In his hand gripped fast his wanderer's staff and with his eye directed on his ideal, he broke away from his old environment, sacrificing all—yea, fame, fortune and future—and struck out for the new lands where his ideals planted in a richer soil and more congenial atmosphere might the more readily, the more beautifully bud and blossom.

Abraham, the father of the B'nai B'rith, was of all things a man of ideals, and what is more, a man who had faith in his ideals, who had faith in the ultimate realization of his ideals, even, even at the cost of personal sacrifice.

This was the adventure of the father of the B'nai B'rith. In it is revealed the three essentials and conditions of the life of a Ben B'rith—guiding ideals, burning faith, willing sacrifice.

The life of a Ben B'rith is an adventure guided by some ideal or ideals. This is probably the first essential and condition of the life of a Ben B'rith. It is the duty of every man, no matter what his calling or profession, no matter what his walk in life might be, to possess an ideal. And by my argument a' fortiori, it is the duty of every Ben B'rith to pattern and fashion his life's adventure after the adventure of Abraham, the Patriarch—to consecrate his life to a relentless struggle after an ideal. As we have seen, Abraham, the father of the B'nai B'rith, was an idealist, par excellence. He was the champion of monotheism, the torch-bearer of religious truth, the prince of hospitality, the knight-errant of peace, the advocate of justice. And when Abraham found an ideal, he laid fast hold on it, and made it his guiding star throughout life— and whither it would lead him,—even in the mouth of the fiery furnace, under the flashing sword, into strange countries,—there would he follow bravely, courageously, confidently.

Possessing an ideal, then, is the first essential of the life of a Ben B'rith—some lofty thought, some great truth, some noble cause towards which to journey as the goal of one's life. It matters not what the particular specific ideal may be—in what terms it may be expressed, in what sphere of action it may lie—so long as there is an ideal at the core of it at all, so long as there is some journey, some adventure towards a far and distant land. And it is a duty incumbent upon every Jew, to become a Ben B'rith—to fasten oneself to some lofty Jewish ideal, some great Jewish truth, some noble Jewish cause. In the words of the philosopher Emerson, "Hitch thy wagon to a star." Think high and you will never fall low.

The second condition and essential of the life of a Ben B'rith is belief, conviction, faith. Some one defined faith as the conviction of something which cannot be seen. As for example, conviction that the light of religious truth will burn forever and in the end of days, illuminate the whole universe; conviction that truth, righteousness, love, brotherhood, peace, will ultimately reign supreme and cover the earth with a mantle of glory as the blue heavens above. This is faith. Some call it the sixth sense of man—the sense of the invisible.

But upon closer analysis, Faith is more than mere belief, more than mere conviction—it is a power, a force directed in a positive direction. It is animated belief, if you will. Kinetic, not static. it is a longing and desiring of the heart, a yearning and hankering of the soul. after that which is not—yet confident it will be.

Faith, if we may use the comparison, may be likened to the steam in a steam engine. The engine is the ideal, drawing nearer, ever nearer to its goal. And faith is the steam driven on the ideal in its course. Without steam, the engine is valueless. So, likewise, the ideal without faith is fruitless.

In the words of Carlyle, "Belief is great, life-giving. The history of a nation becomes fruitful, soul-elevating, great, so soon as it believes. A man lives by believing something. not by debating and arguing about many things."

Faith is therefore power. Conviction of something which is invisible is a force, which has kept humanity moving steadily upwards, nearer ever nearer to its goal. It is the men of belief who have made the progress of the world; it is the men of faith who have founded religions, who have discovered new continents, who have mastered the water and conquered the air. It is the Ben B'rith type of man, who, like an Abraham, would go a-journeying to distant lands which they could but glimpse at with the eye of faith, convinced however that at the end they would see them with the eye of flesh.

But to have ideals, and ever talk of them, and never seriously attempt to realize them is vain, futile and foolish. Such people are sentimentalists. They love to be supine on their back from morn to eve, ventilating their views, expressing their likes and dislikes and lamenting and bemoaning the present conditions; they would say, Politics is graft, business is swindle, society is foppish, religion is hypocrisy; and longingly wish for this to be so and this to be so. Sentimentalists! To society of little use!

What society demands is men of sacrifice, men of resolution and devotion, men of self-denial.

What society demands is the Abrahamic man—the man of moral courage and strength of mind.

What society demands is the Ben B'rith—the man of ideals, the man of faith, the man of sacrifice.

This is the life of a Ben B'rith.

B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children, Erie, Pa.

REPORT OF BUILDING COMMITTEE.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 20, 1914.

To the President and Members of District Grand Lodge No. 3, I. O. B. B.

Gentlemen: The buildings of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children at Fairview, Erie, Pennsylvania, are now in the course of erection. Ground was broken on September 30, 1913. The buildings that are being erected are a central kitchen and two cottages and pantries. The kitchen is ready for roofing; one of the cottages is built up to the second floor, and the other cottage about half way to the second floor. The contract for the buildings requires the contractor to have the buildings completed by June 15, 1914. From present indications they will be completed and ready for occupancy by that time.

The erection of the buildings has been delayed by reason of the Building Committee first planning to erect three cottages to accommodate ninety children, but on account of the bids being higher than the Building Committee felt justified to allot, it had the plans modified and new bids requested to erect two cottages to accommodate sixty children. The first bids were opened on July 15, 1913, and ranged from $69,796.00 to $84,360.00; the second bids were opened on August 25, 1913 and ranged from $33,500.00 to $82,000.00. The contract was first awarded to the lowest bidder, but as he was unable to comply with the requirements, it was later awarded to the next lowest bidder, the Liebel-Binney Construction Co., of Erie, Pennsylvania, at $39,000, and with extras, $40,963, and it is this company that is now erecting the buildings.

The buildings as planned are of the English type, solid brick, tapestry and wide bond exterior, stone trimmings, slate roofs and concrete foundations. They will consist of two cottages, each two stories high, with gable roofs, and a central kitchen·double present requirements. The cottages will each contain, on the first floor, a spacious dining and living room, front hall, teachers' room and toilet, and on the second floor two dormitories, a lavatory with showers and toilets, a matron's room and adjoining bath room, and in the gables two rooms and bath room. The basements will contain play rooms, boiler room, laundry, storage rooms, etc. The buildings are of beautiful design and planned to be very substantial.

Each of the cottages at the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society contain accommodations for thirty children, and have separate kitchens and heating boilers. In planning our cottages we had in view the utmost economy of maintenance under the cottage plan, and we adopted the central kitchen idea with separate pantries intervening between the cottages and the kitchen. The economy of this plan can readily be seen, as we will have but one cooking and boiler plant for the two cottages, and when the unit is completed, by the addition of two cottages, one kitchen and one boiler plant for the four cottages, accommodating one hundred and twenty children, instead of a separate kitchen and heating plant for each cottage accommodating only thirty children, as under the plan of the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society. The idea of the cottage plan is fully maintained by each of the cottages and pantries being separate and apart from the other with the exception of the kitchen.

When the new buildings are completed they will have accommodations for sixty children. Considering the territorial extent of District No. 3 and its population, leaving out of consideration the cities in the district that have their own orphan asylums, and the fact that we not only purpose to admit orphans but friendless children, which the present established Jewish orphan asylums in the district do not, it will not be long after we dedicate the new buildings until they will be filled to their capacity, even with the utmost exercise of caution of admittance. The plans are so designed that two cottages can be added to the present buildings without disturbing the buildings now being erected. Of course, it would have been more economical, from a building standpoint, to have erected the entire unit of four cottages and a central kitchen at one time, but the buildings that are being erected, when filled, will demonstrate to the District the unquestioned necessity of the institution, and thus invite support that will make it an easy task to secure the funds to erect the additional cottages and complete the first unit.

The money available for the erection of the buildings is barely sufficient to pay 50 per cent of the present contract. Aside from the contract there probably will be an additional expenditure, including architect fees, of four or five thousand dollars. It behooves the Lodges and the various communities throughout the District, which will be benefited by the institution, to furnish the additional money required to the present building fund to pay for the buildings and the other necessary items incidental thereto without the necessity of having any debt on the buildings when they are completed. It should not be a very difficult task if proper effort is made to raise the funds to have the institution free of all indebtedness when it is dedicated.

Fraternally yours,
A. T. Sunstein,
Chairman Building Committee.

REPORT OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Erie, Pa., January 17, 1914.

To the President and Delegates of the District Grand Lodge, No. 3, I. O. B. B.:

Gentlemen—Following the instructions of this honorable body in convention assembled in Atlantic City, N. J., in January, 1912, the board of directors of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3 elected by that board assembled in Erie on May 5, 1912, and elected the following temporary officers:

Mr. Morris Schaffner, President.
Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger, Vice President.
Mr. Theodore Landsberg, Secretary.
Mr. Isadore Simon, Treasurer.

Feeling the necessity of instituting a temporary Home by reason of the many applicants, a committee was appointed to establish the same at once. Acting thereon, the undersigned begs to submit the work of that committee up to the present time.

After a careful examination of the various buildings suitable for such a purpose the committee leased a brick building in Avonia, Erie county, Pa. This was not only acceptable by reason of its suitableness for the purpose, but also on account of its contiguity to the farm on which the permanent buildings were to be erected.

By the first of the following July your committee reported the temporary building ready for occupancy, and on the 4th it was formally dedicated in the presence of officers of the Grand Lodge and almost the entire Jewish population of the city of Erie. We also accepted on that day three applicants who had previously been accepted.

On the same day the board of directors met and elected the following permanent officers:

Mr. Isador Sobel, President.
Mr. Max Rothschild, Vice President.
Mrs. E. P. Marks, Secretary.
Mr. Isadore Simon, Treasurer.

At a meeting of the board of directors held on October 22, 1912, the following were appointed as a building committee:

Mr. A. J. Sunstein, chairman.
Mr. Marcus Feuchtwanger.
Mr. Theodore Landsberg.
Dr. B. S. Pollak.
Mr. Morris Schaffner.
Mr. Isadore Simon.
Mr. Isadore Sobel.

A committee was appointed to visit institutions of a similar nature throughout the country, also with power to select an architect, draft plans and specifications for the permanent Home. The modern Home at Pleasantville, N. Y., and others were visited. This committee selected Mr. Harry Allan Jacobs of New York City as architect, whose experince in this kind of work was the cause of his selection.

Respectfully submitted,
M. Schaffner,
President Board of Directors.
Attest: Theodore Landsberg, Secretary.

REPORT OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS.

Erie, Pa., January 22, 1914.

To the President, Officers and Delegates of Grand Lodge, No. 3, I. O. B. B., in Convention Assembled:

Brothers—You can hardly appreciate my feeling as I stand here before you this day in my official capacity as President of the Board of Governors of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3. It seems almost like a dream to me, and, I am satisfied, to many of you likewise. For it is but a few years ago and but a few short conventions ago that the question of a permanent charity was agreed upon after many, many years of passing of resolutions and appointing committees. So that to-day, when in the regular order of business a report is requested from the President of the Board of Governors of the Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children, if it were possible to call back to our midst many former representatives of Grand Lodge Conventions, these veterans would hardly believe that they were attending a B'nai B'rith Convention of District No.3, in which the report of a full fledged orphanage was being read by its President. Yet the fact remains that a charity, full of life, is in active operation, that an orphanage has been created, that nineteen children, offsprings of Jewish parents, are being sheltered, clothed and fed in the name and under the auspices of our District Grand Lodge. Therefore it is with the greatest pleasure and satisfaction that I enumerate for your information, in connection with the first annual report, which every contributor and member of our Order has received, what further has been accomplished.

Those of you who received a copy of the first annual report of our Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children will recall that we account for the activities of the institution from July 1, 1912, to July 1, 1913, and that at the end of the first year nine hundred and seventy-nine individuals, lodges and societies contributed to the maintenance fund amounting to $11,313.10, which also includes the per capita tax. Also that during that same period there has been contributed to the building fund from individuals, lodges and societies about $22,000. Surely such an amount of contributions from a small membership was astonishing even to the most optimistic, and those who had long been connected with our Order could hardly realize that the membership of our Order would respond so liberally and so cheerfully to the call of the orphan and friendless child.

From July 1, 1913, to January 5, 1914, the end of the second quarter of the second year, six hundred and fifty-two individuals, lodges and societies have paid their annual contributions to the maintenance fund, the total sum being $6,995.25, which also includes the per capita tax. This shows a splendid increase over the first year's payments. It also shows that our friends residing in cities having an orphanage of their own recognize the greater significance and the wider scope of our institution, with a continuance of this sympathy and support of the people of our large Jewish centers, the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children or District No. 3 will take its place among the greatest institutions of its kind in the country.

The inmates of the Home have not been increased during the past two quarters, for our present nineteen charges take up every available inch of room in the temporary home. Healthier more cheerful, more satisfied and contented children do not reside in any institution of this kind, nor, I may say, in homes whose guardians are the children's own fathers and mothers. The members of this District, rallying to the cry of the orphan and friendless child, have certainly met a long felt want.

Those who have visited the temporary home go away feeling that their connection with this institution is one of the greatest pleasures that they have ever experienced. The education of the children is not being neglected in any particular. They attend regularly the public school, and I am pleased to report that they stand among the highest in their classes. During the first year out of four prizes awarded in the public school in Avonia one of them was received by one of our boys. This year six prizes were awarded to the three boys and to the three girls respectively who stood the highest of our children in school. There was great rivalry for these prizes, and it produced splendid results. One of our friends from McKeesport also awarded the boy who stood the highest in public school and at home a gold signet ring and the girl who stood the highest a gold bracelet. These prizes were awarded to the children on Chanuka in the Temple at Erie during the Chanuka exercises, in which the inmates of our home participated together with the children of the membership of our own Temple. There was no distinction made in the observance of the Chanuka festival in Erie and it was certainly a delightful scene and very gratifying to all who attended on that occasion.

The religious training of our children has thus far been under the care of the matron who has conducted the work with the advice and assistance of Rabbi Currick chairman of our Committee on Education and Religion. The committee is now arranging for the engagement of a graduate of one of our teachers' institutes to take charge of the work and organize the religious life of the home.

I may also mention here that in the dietetics of the home consideration is given to the fact that they all come from orthodox Jewish homes and the food at the home is strictly Kosher.

One of the fortunate happenings in the conduct of our home is that our matron Miss Eichenbaum appears to be naturally fitted for the position that she occupies. The children have grown to love her and in turn she has grown to love the children. Truly she is a mother to them and encouraged by the good people of the city of Erie, splendid results are being accomplished.

The government and control of our institution, in accordance with our laws and by-laws, are in the hands of the board of fifty-one governors, twelve of whom are residents of the city of Erie. In these twelve the immediate charge and control of the institution is vested and from the results attained in every particular, even though myself a resident of the city of Erie and a member of the local board, I would be committing an injustice if I did not thus publicly make mention of the great interest manifested by the governors residing in the city of Erie and of the time and labor they have given to further the best interest of our institution. I am satisfied that you, my brothers, representing this Grand Lodge, must concur with this statement which I make without fear of being contradicted, that never before has an orphanage and home for friendless children in so short a space of time met with such gratifying results as you and I must agree greets us in the establishment of our own charity.

It is our hope that on or before June 15, 1914, we will be able to occupy our permanent home. The building committee, under the leadership of Mr. A. J. Sunstein, have labored with the interest of our institution at heart to produce buildings that will be a credit to the cottage plan system which has been adopted as the system of our Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children.

To conclude, I must again refer to the fact that after years and years of passing resolutions, and after years and years of reports of committees on a permanent charity, District No. 3 has placed itself on record, firmly and solidly and within a short space of time, almost within the time of two conventions, has organized and put into life one of the finest of all charities, an institution for the protection, guidance and control of Jewish boys and girls. To the rank and file of the membership of this district, the officers and members of the General Committee of this district, the Board of Governors of the Orphanage and the Local Board who come in closest touch with the government of the institution, I express my deep and heartfelt thanks, for without the hearty assistance of each and every one above enumerated, whatever little I may have added in my official capacity, I certainly could not have aided in the great work that has been done.

Respectfully submitted,
Isador Sobel,
President Board of Governors.

ORIENTAL JEWS IN NEW YORK.

Recent influx of Oriental Jews has brought up the number of those living in the city of New York to 15,000. They have formed a federation for the purpose of forming a community. They are divided into six language groups, the bulk of them speaking Ladino, a considerable number Greek and Arabic, and the remaining, about 500, Turkish and Persian.

Our very progress, which is our peculiar glory, consists in at once losing and learning the past, in gaining fresh stations from which to take a wiser retrospect and become more deeply aware of the treasures we have used—James Martineau.

WHAT THE ORDER STANDS FOR.

Reports of the activities of the Districts have reached the principal office of the Order. and as usual will be published in book form.

It is not in a boastful spirit that the Order chronicles its services to the Jewish people and to Judaism. Hospitals and orphanages, homes for the destitute and feeble-minded, settlement centers and employment bureaus, from the Pacific to the Atlantic and from Berlin to Jassy, offer monumental evidence of a charitable activity requiring an outlay of vast sums and just as rich in its beneficent results. The mutual benefit feature which characterized the Order a generation ago has been eliminated. We stand today solely and simply for helpfulness to our less fortunate brethren whom our united organization has made its wards. Our philanthropic activities large and widely ramified as they are today are destined to be still farther enlarged as our membership grows and the support becomes commensurate with the cry for help. We are furthermore proud of our record of political service. We are not a political organization. We do not meddle with the politics of the countries in which we have taken root. We have no votes to command or barter away. Our members range themselves on the side of this or that party as their individual conscience dictates to them. Whatever of politics we are engaged in is done in the open and solely with the object of doing away with discriminations against our people. We are the foes of narrow restrictionism in immigration policy. We conduct a legitimate campaign on behalf of our brethren who flee to this land of the free from religious persecution. The Jews are devoted to every land under whose protecting flag they live. We hold in this land high American citizenship and we refuse to suffer it to be tarnished by Muscovite discriminations against American citizens who are of our faith. The [illegible] status of our brethren in Roumania has been our concern. We have [illegible] off a similar fate from the Jews in the Balkan states after the cessation of the war and the re[illegible] of the territory formerly held by the Ottoman empire. So long as there are Jews in physical misery we stand ready to alleviate distress. So long as there is economic evil we will [illegible] a helping hand. So long as there [illegible] brother held in legal bondage we will raise our voice in dignified protest. The care of the sick and of the fatherless, befriending the wanderer who is cast upon our shores, the release of those held in bondage, all these are old Jewish duties, varieties of Jewish philanthropy, which it behooves us as a Jewish organization to foster and to take up as our special burden.

International we are, but only in the sense that all Jewry in the dispersion is an object of our care and our protection to the utmost of our ability. We combine with our legitimate interest in the brethren of the convenant a lofty patriotism, which none will dare to question. We furthermore refrain from meddling with the party questions within Judaism. We stand for the Jewish people as a whole and for Judaism as a whole; sectional and sectarian differences are wiped out in the Lodge. If there is any organization which by its constitution and the line of its activities is fitted to act as the peacemaker in Jewry, it is ours. We emphasize the things that unite, the Convenant which is for us all. We are jealous of the fair name of the Jew. If there be Jewish miscreants, we desire to have them punished. But we must be convinced that they have had a just deal. We combat all manner of injustice to the Jew rooted in mere prejudice, and we summon all right-minded citizens to exterminate from the land all defamers of Jew and Judaism no matter in what form and no matter in what spirit. We are too well acquainted with the consequences fraught as they are with danger and we would put an end to malicious defamation at the source.

Our chiefest glory is that we are a democratic body. As if indeed in this democratic country with its free institutions there were room for an organization like ours constituted and governed in any manner but the democratic. In Lodge and Grand Lodge the executive officers are the true representatives of the voice of the rank and file. The Lodge has been the training school for our leaders who have risen from the ranks and have never been imposed from above. We live in peace and amity with other organizations, lay and ecclesiastic, having aims parallel with ours. There is plenty of work for all. But we choose to do our work in our own way. We have behind us a membership large and influential, loyal and Jewish to the core. We have the record of a long and useful service to the cause of the Jew. We constitute a force for consolidation and co-operation such as no Jew can brush aside. There may be indifferent and lukewarm Jews without, but few, if any, will be found in our ranks. Our appeal goes forth to all classes of Jews. We strive to be entitled to the respect and allegiance of the business man and the professional, of layman and rabbi, of learned and unlearned. In the language of the aged priest who defied the apostates of his day, we say, whosoever is zealous for the law, and maintaineth the Covenant, let him follow us.

THE COMPLETION OF THE BIBLE TRANSLATION.

In the early days of last month there was held in the city of New York the concluding session of the Board of Bible Editors. For a period covering nearly seven years did these seven men, chosen from the East and the West, representing the Jewish Publication Society of America and the Central Conference of American Rabbis, rabbis of renown and scholars connected with the three leading schools of Jewish learning, labor in protracted sessions to give to the English speaking Jews a new version of the Scriptures. The event was fittingly celebrated at a dinner which the Jews of the metropolis tendered to that noble body of scholars. It is indeed an event which it is the duty of all Jews and Jewish organizations to take cognizance of and to record with a special pride.

An undertaking in which party lines have so successfully been wiped out is itself a source of congratulation. The Bible has naturally been the battleground of denominational and sectarian strife. It is to be expected that differences of opinion will arise involving points of view diametrically opposed to each other. Yet for all that, conflicts, if at all they at any time arose, were apparently smoothed over, or else the work would not have reached this auspicious conclusion. We know not how and in what manner differences were composed. Seven men could not always be in agreement. There must have been diverse views. There may have been clashes. But apparently there must have prevailed a willingness to give and take. By this time presumably the differences are forgotten. Individual points may have been carried by majority vote or in any other manner according with parliamentary usage. But the entire Board assumes responsibility for the finished work. And all is well that ends well.

What characterizes this new translation which will add lustre to the Publication Society's record is in the first place the quality of the work. For that is guaranteed by the eminent names of the gentlemen composing the Board. Some of them are ripe in years and in literary achievement; and the youngest among them are known for their scholarly work which is of the highest character. In the second instance the version represents a co-operative effort. The best efforts in Jewish literature have been corporate. In the present case, we are told, the Board worked over a manuscript prepared in the incredibly short time of a twelve month by one of their own number who was designed as Editor-in-chief. In sessions lasting each time ten days and more mooted points were gone over after careful preparation on the part of all the members of the Board. Thus a double effect was produced. The criticism of friendly colleagues removed personal predilections without at the same time impairing the uniformity of the work which in the nature of circumstances could only be secured by the work of one pen. All the members of the Board are satisfied that their individuality shall be merged in the common product and that henceforth the translation shall be known not by the one or the other name of the eminent editors but by the publication concern which must be credited with the work's inception as well as with its issuance.

American Jewry may be proud of the fact that it harbors within it a body of scholars competent to produce so difficult a piece of work. The difficulties of Bible translation are of old standing. The anniversary of translation of the Seventy was celebrated annually in the city of Alexandria where it was produced. But in the sequel it proved a snare to Greek Jewry. The doctors in Palestine looked askance at it. The day on which it was concluded was likened to the day on which the golden calf was fashioned. Other translations took its place which were eulogized by the rabbis. In subsequent periods the Scriptures were translated into many tongues. The avowed purpose of all was to bring the sacred Books down to the people in their vernacular. We are the People of the Book. And the Book was not to remain a sealed Book to those unfamiliar with the original. The present translation is to serve a like aim. It shall stimulate an interest in the Book of books. There will be no excuse for ignorance on the plea of the lack of an adequate version which has striven to combine fidelity to the Jewish spirit with a mode of expression which shall take its rank by the side of the two great English translations celebrated for their dignity of style.

We congratulate the Board of Editors upon the successful completion of an arduous labor. We congratulate the Publication Society of America upon the realization of a long cherished endeavor. We remember with gratitude the noble Jew who has lavishly given of his means to make the publication a possibility. Others will follow suit, as indeed already several benefactors have made substantial donations. The smallest contribution will be welcomed. Let every Jew in this country feel that he has been a factor in the production of this great work which must redound to the credit of us all. After the Jewish Encyclopedia, it is America that has now bestowed upon English speaking Jewry another monumental work, the Jewish Scriptures in an English translation done by Jews for Jews.

"THE AUCTIONEER."

A signed communication in one of the daily papers voicing a protest against the "Auctioneer" as played by David Warfield to crowded houses in the City of Chicago for several weeks, proves the advisability, if not the necessity, of the Anti-Defamation League.

A protest which is the result of oversensitiveness, or which is based upon narrow, insufficient grounds, does more injury than good, for in such cases it does not appeal to the sense of justice which is present in most persons, especially in this country, and minimizes the force of protests based upon just grounds. It is to be hoped that those of our people who have, or think they have grievances, of the nature in question, will, before giving public expression to them, submit them to the League for its investigation and consideration.

The part of the play which doubtless aroused the indignation of the critic is the scene in the first act where Levy, the Auctioneer, sprinkles water on a lot of clothing, sets fire to some charcoal, blows the smoke on the wet clothing, and then places over all a sign reading "Damaged by Fire."

Of course, if this were all of the play the impression of Levy would not be a creditable one; but Levy in the Auctioneer, or Levy in real life, is not a perfect human being, nor are there many such, whether their names be Levy or Olsen or Murphy or Perkins. Neither the author who conceived Levy, nor Warfield who personifies him intended to present a perfect human being. Any attempt to have done so in either case would have resulted in failure. But in the being who is represented by Levy, the Auctioneer, we see a noble human soul, with his human, not Jewish, imperfections, and we love him notwithstanding.

Of all the vast throng of people who saw the Auctioneer, we dare say there was not one whose eyes were not dimmed with tears—tears of sympathy for the suffering auctioneer, tears of love for his struggles, his affectionate solicitude for his wife, his love for the adopted daughter of another faith, his heroic gentleness, his proud yet humble devotion to honor, his nobility of soul in the most trying crises, his gentle forgiveness, even of the brother who ruined him.

What an object lesson to those who despise the sight of a poor Jewish peddler on the street, to see, in the play, the once rich Levy, bearded, hungry, peddling toys in the streets of New York, and with proud though humble dignity turning his back upon proffered assistance! May not the contempt of those who have so regarded him, be softened when next they see a Jewish peddler, by the thought that in that humble breast may beat the noble heart of another Levy?

Anti-semitism will not be encouraged by the Auctioneer. On the contrary the influence of the play will tend to displace such sentiment by a more sympathetic understanding of the Jew; for those who have been accustomed to seeing only his imperfections and to account their possessor as ugly and despicable, accordingly, will have beheld in Levy, the Auctioneer, those things that attune the heart to the music of brotherhood, and point so surely for their source, to the Father of us all.

HENRY GREENEBAUM.

The death of Henry Greenebaum, while it came in the nature of a shock, did not surprise me, for when I saw him recently he gave every indication of a very sick man. His death severs a strong cord of sincere friendship and removes one who was a great factor in the development of Jewish life in the Northwest, and especially in Chicago. As my recollection goes, he was the founder and dominant factor in the creating of District Grand Lodge No. 6. His energy and disinterested zeal were at all times prominent in behalf of his co-religionists, as well as in behalf of all other nationalities and creeds. He was a patriotic, sincere American, a strong exemplar of American citizenship, and it will be a long time before another Henry Greenebaum materializes for the betterment and uplift of humanity. Many of the best men and women of Chicago and their children have been benefited by his noble example and by his exemplary conduct, and I hope and trust that his memory will be as enduring as his works were educational and influential.

I. O. B. B. EDUCATIONAL BOARD.

A year of excellent work on the part of the I. O. B. B. Educational Board, couducted under the auspices of the lodges of the order in Allegheny county, Pa., came to a conclusion with the end of the past year.

The aim of the board is, among other things, to provide instruction in Jewish ideals and the Jewish religion for the Jewish inmates of the various public institutions of correction in and near Allegheny county. At present the work is being confined to the instruction of the boys at the Industrial Home of Allegheny County, at Warrendale, where the boys are met every Sunday afternoon by Mr. Robert Davidson, who is now in charge of the work at this institution as the representative of the Educational Board. Mr. Davidson deals not only with the boys themselves, but also with their parents and the homes from which the boys come. The results attained have been ever more satisfactory and successful. The work already done is surely such as to command the support of every member of the order.

At the annual meeting of the Educational Board, held recently, a representative from every lodge in Allegheny county was present and the election of officers for the ensuing year was held.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI EL LODGE AT DALLAS, TEXAS.

On Sunday afternoon, January 18, at B'nai B'rith Hall, of Dallas, there was instituted B'nai El Lodge, the youngest and newest lodge in the district, composed of forty of the younger men of Dallas.

This new lodge was the outcome of the work of Bros. H. S. Seheline and Max Philipson of Dallas Lodge 197, and of Grand President Arthur L. Kramer, by whom the lodge was instituted.

This lodge bids fair to become one of the largest in the district, as its members are composed chiefly of young men who are fired with the ambition and enthusiasm to promote the aims and objects of the order. About 100 members of Dallas Lodge 197 were present at the institution ceremony and participated in same. The lecture to the newly elected members was delivered by Victor H. Hexter, a member of Dallas Lodge, and special invocation was offered by Rabbi Wm. H. Greenburg of Temple Emanuel.

Grand President Arthur L. Kramer installed the first officers of B'nai El Lodge.

SIR RUFUS ISAACS MADE A PEER

Sir Rufus Isaacs, who was created a baron, will henceforth be known as Lord Reading, after the name of the town from which he was sent to Parliament in 1914.

By the conferment of a peerage on Lord Reading the number of the members of the Jewish community in the Upper House is again raised to four—two on either side of the House. Although two other peerages conferred on Jews became extinct, the number of Jewish members of the House of Lords has never exceeded this figure. There are now and have been previously other peers either of Jewish birth or bearing Jewish names. Lord Burnham, for instance, who celebrated his eightieth birthday, recently, was born Levy; Lord Herschell, the son of a Lord Chancellor, is the grandson of a Polish Jew. Lord Ludlow is the representative of the Anglo-Sephardi family of Lopes, of which his cousin, Sir Henry Lopes, is the head. Among others, Viscount Goschen, Viscount Milner, and the four peers of the Baring family are said, more or less remotely, to be of Jewish origin, but no satisfactory evidence in support of these statements has hitherto been produced.

Of peers of Jewish birth or origin in the past the outstanding case is that of Lord Beaconsfield. The first English peer of Jewish blood was Lord Eardley, the son of Sampson Gideon, the Anglo-Jewish magnate of the middle of the eighteenth century, who loomed so large in the history of Anglo-Jewry and of England.

IMMIGRANT BILL PASSED BY HOUSE.

The Burnett immigration bill calling for a literacy test for applicants to admission to the United States was passed by the House on Feb. 4 by a vote of 241 to 126.

All proposed amendments relating to the exclusion of Asiatic immigrants previously had been eliminated.

What Literacy Test Includes.

As the bill passed, it provides that every immigrant admitted to the United States must be able to read "the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish." It prescribes the method of testing immigrants, providing that each applicant for admission must read a slip on which are printed between thirty and forty words.

In its present form this measure passed the House and the Senate in the last Congress, but was vetoed by President Taft. A similar bill was vetoed during President Cleveland's second administration. The supporters of the bill are confident that it will again pass the Senate, although President Wilson has let it be known that he does not approve the literacy test.

CZAR HONORS JEWS AS WELL AS JEW HATERS.

The Czar has bestowed the title of Commercial Councillor on M. David Wissotzky. M. G. Rosenbloom obtained the Order of St. Stanislav (second class), and MM. K. Gunzburg and I. Davidson the Order of St. Stanislav (third class). More rapid, however, has been the rise of our enemies. In addition to the promotion of M. Chaplinsky, M. Vipper, the Public Prosecutor in the Beilis case, who only a month ago became a State Councillor, has been raised to the rank of Actual State Councillor. M. Boldireff, the chairman of the court, was recommended for promotion. Procurator Lashkareff received the St. Anne Order (first class), M. Moshkevitch the St. Vladimir Order (fourth class), and the Assistant Minister of Justice, M. Verevkin, the St. Vladimir Order (second class). All these legal personages were associated with the Beilis case.

Annual Convention of District No. 1.

District Grand Lodge No. 1 convened in annual session at Springfield, Mass., Feb. 1st and 2nd, 1914, at the Municipal Auditorium, with over 100 delegates in attendance.

The convention had its opening on Saturday evening, and a reception for the delegates and visiting guests was held in the Hotel Kimball, but the sessions of the convention did not begin until Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

The day began with a chime concert played at the Municipal Tower, and among other songs the Hatikvah was played.

The convention was formally opened with prayer by Rabbi Samuel Price of Springfield. Mayor John A. Dennison delivered the address of welcome, to which Dr. Jos. Silverman, the President of the Grand Lodge, made a fitting reply.

The presentation of a gavel to the President of the District by the children of the Congregation Beth-El was a feature of the morning session. The children's recitations and the President's reply to them were in the Hebrew language.

Appointments of special committees to whom were referred all reports of the officers and standing committees were then made.

The President then read his message, which was well received. He strongly supported the work of the Anti-Defamation League, which has for its object the eradication of offensive caricaturing of the Jews, and among other things to prevent by means of moving picture films the bringing of the name of the Jew into disrepute.

With regard to the pending immigration bill, President Silverman recommended the adoption of resolutions advocating the substitution of a clause exempting all aliens who shall prove to the proper immigration officials that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by discriminatory or oppressive laws or regulations.

Regarding the observance of religious holidays, the President in his message said:

"Whilst there may be some differences of opinion regarding certain movements in Israel, all can unite upon the greatest movement of all, the propagation and preservation of our faith. The B'nai B'rith, while it stands for patriotism, philanthropy, and the encouragement of science and art, stands above all things, for Judaism. Let us, therefore, in the coming year, continue the innovation that has been successfully introduced and recognized through the lodge activity, the principles and practice of our sacred faith."

The election of officers for the ensuing year took place before adjournment for luncheon, and the result of the election was as follows:

President, Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, of New York.

First Vice-President, Herman Asher, of New York.

Second Vice-President, Hon. Abr. K. Cohen, of Boston.

Treasurer, Sol Sulzberger, of New York.

Secretary, Reginald E. Zunder, of New York.

Sergeant-at-Arms, Herman Schallek, of New York.

Class Initiation.

In the afternoon a special meeting of Springfield Lodge was held, which was largely attended. Delegates from the lodges of Worcester, Boston and other surrounding cities were present. The special order of business was the initiation of a class of 35 candidates by the degree team of the lodge. The work was done in a most impressive manner, and at the conclusion of the ceremonies Past President Jos. H. Ullman, of New Haven, presented the lodge with a set of marble tablets of the law, won by the lodge for having shown the best percentage of net gain in its membership for the year 1913. Various prizes were then distributed among the members of Springfield Lodge for efforts in increasing the membership of the lodge.

At the conclusion of the meeting the delegates and members of Springfield Lodge and all those who participated in the initiation assembled upon the steps of the Auditorium where a photograph was taken.

The convention then re-assembled, and the first order of business was the presentation of the report of the Secretary and Treasurer, showing a net increase of 140 with a membership of 4,179 at the close of the year.

After the various reports were presented and referred to the committees, the President introduced Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, Secretary of the Order, who was delegated to represent the Executive Committee at the convention. In his talk he reviewed the work of the Order during the past year in all the various Districts and closed his remarks with an appeal for more intense Judaism and a closer brotherhood of man.

Banquet At Hotel Kimball.

Sunday's activity came to a fitting climax with a banquet tendered at the Hotel Kimball to the delegates and visiting guests, in which over 300 took part. The menu was served according to the Jewish dietary laws. Brother Henry Lasker presided as toastmaster, and was introduced by Brother Paul Kramer, President of Springfield Lodge.

Mr. Josiah Dearborn, City Solicitor, welcomed the Jews to the city in the absence of the Mayor. Toasts were also responded to by Brothers Jos. H. Ullman, Chas. M. Stern, Abr. K. Cohen. Herman and A. B. Seelenfreund.

A silver loving cup was presented to Brother Henry Lasker by the President of Springfield Lodge, Brother Paul Kramer. In his presentation speech he expressed the sincere affection and esteem which the Jews of Springfield and the members of the lodge feel for Brother Lasker. Mr. Lasker replied, expressing thanks and appreciation for the honor conferred upon him. Responses to toasts were then further indulged in and short addresses were delivered by Past President Chas. Hartman, Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters, Col. Harry Cutler, and Hon. Chas. W. Bosworth. The principal address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Jos. Silverman on the subject, "The B'nai B'rith." He roused the audience with his oration, depicting the rise of the Jewish people.

At a late hour the banquet was brought to a close with the singing of America by the entire audience.

Monday Morning's Session.

Monday morning's session was replete with interesting reports of the General Committee, the Governors of the Home for Aged and Infirm at Yonkers, and the Board of Endowment Trustees.

The special committee appointed to consider the recommendation of President Silverman, with reference to the Immigration Bill, now pending before the Congress of the United States, which contains a drastic literacy test, tending to restrict immigration begs to report and recommend for adoption by this Grand Lodge the following resolutions:

RESOLVED, That District Grand Lodge No. 1, Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, in Convention Assembled, is opposed to the literacy test of the Immigration Bill, now pending before Congress, as economically and ethically inimical to the best interests and traditions of our country.

RESOLVED, That in the event that a bill containing a literacy test is passed, it should contain a provision substantially as follows:

"That the following classes or persons shall be exempt from the operation of the literacy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the proper immigration officer, or to the Secretary of Labor, that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts, or by discriminatory or oppressive laws or regulations."

Be it further resolved that this Convention hereby unanimously designates Past President of the District, Col. Harry Cutler, of Providence, and Hon. Simon Wolf of Washington, D. C., member of the Executive Committee of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, to appear and respectfully present our objections to the drastic literacy test, to the President of the United States, the proper committees of the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives, and the representatives in Congress from the States of New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine and Vermont, urging them to do

The Nation's Rage

By Dr. Max L. Margolis

WRITTEN FOR THE B'NAI B'RITH NEWS.

The world as at present constituted is certainly dominated by keen competition among individuals and by strife and warfare among the nations. It is an unedifying, sad spectacle. Wars are waged in the open. But the clash of arms is only the last link in a chain of conflicts forged far in advance. The overt encounter in the battlefield is the sequel to secret plots, insidious intrigues, movements and counter-movements and schemes hatched in the dark. The amity in which the nations live with one another is often of the most deceiving character. Shrewdness and trickery are dignified by the name of foresight. Trust in the other nation's honest intention is repaid with treachery. Nations bare their swords ostensibly for honor, but in truth for aggrandizement at the expense of neighbors, for land grabbing, for the world's markets. Little nations are exploited by the mighty ones. Hard bargains are driven with them, loans are made to them at exorbitant rates of interest such as would shame the most unscrupulous money lenders. The nations rage. They are constantly plotting. The kings and counsellors of the earth are met together. Beneath the suave diplomacy is the ill concealed clatter of arms. While the chancellories talk peace, the war offices are mapping out plans of aggression to the minutest detail. The horses are harnessed, and the spears are furbished; the battle array is well nigh drawn up.

Amidst the din of battle the still small voice of peace is heard. Peace movements and peace societies abound, but their power is at present minimal. They partake of an individual character. There are individual men and women who are for peace. But they are for the most part outside the cabinets. .Internationalism is the creed of the minority. A pamphlet has just reached me pleading for a world conscience. A dreaming architect has designed plans for an international world center, a City International. A site is contemplated in Belgium, in Switzerland, on the Riviera, near the Eternal City, at San Stefano, even on the coast of New Jersey, anywhere except there where the first vision of peace among nations presented itself to the eye of a Jewish prophet. We who are believers in the divine promises, we Jews who first proclaimed the message of the cessation of warfare, hold fast to the hope that out of Jerusalem shall come forth the word that will spell universal peace. Over against the vain plots of the mighty kings of the earth there is the world plan willed by God from the beginning and issuing in the establishment of the Kingdom of God on Mount Zion in the end of days.

We Jews are accused of seeking world dominion. "Ask of Me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Anti-Semitism has seized upon certain Scriptural expressions to spread the accusation that we Jews are international plotters whose sole purpose is to be scattered over the earth and in our various abodes to sow the seeds of rebellion against the established nations, to dominate everywhere commercially, financially, intellectually. And conversely there are among ourselves teachers of Judaism who proclaim the dispersion to be ordained by God for the spread of internationalism. Neither the one nor the other is true. Our reputed power is vastly exaggerated. The money market which for a time was in the hands of a Jewish family has long passed out of their control. It is a brazen lie that the Jewry of the world has a preconcerted plan to dominate the nations. The gaze is fastened upon the few financiers. The deeper observer sees everywhere the Jewish masses overwhelmed by misery and living in squalor, a prey to every whim and mood of the majority. Nor is the vision of peace bound up with the breaking up of national entities or with the mongrelizing of races.

The true peace will rather consist in a federated humanity. Federation, not centralization is the goal. Federal Switzerland does not work as a destroyer of nationality and national culture. Just as the family is the biological unit of the race, so is the nation the natural unit of a federated humanity. Neither the earth nor the human race is uniform. Both environment and primeval racial differentiation make for segregation, for individuality. Both operate in the production of distinct types of culture. To the end of days, notwithstanding Esperantists, the human race will speak a variety of tongues. The progress of the world is in the line of multiplied variety. Even in religion the trend of things betokens a multiplication of sects small or large.

Unity is not uniformity. Uniformity is a mechanical, artificial creation. Unity is conceivable side by side with variety. What the world is groping after is a sense of unity amidst the differences that obtain. We are averse to the socialistic state if for no other reason than because it contemplates the destruction of the family. We are equally averse to a misconceived ideal of internationalization which would do away with national demarcation. What we aim at is the prophetic goal. Each nation from its own place can worship God in its own way. The forms must at all times be different. But let there be recognized by all votaries of the religions of mankind that all of them have a common goal and that whether in one form or another all are spreading the knowledge of God and goodness.

Warfare must cease. Exploitation must come to an end. Mankind, recognizing in Israel's message the highest expression of culture and religion, shall some day learn to live with each other in true amity. When mankind will make pilgrimage to the holy mountain, a universal truce of peace will be the inevitable concomitant. Let then the nations cease raging and squabbling. There is much to know beside the science of war. The arts of peace shall have their fanes. Let us unite in waging war with squalor and poverty and the pests that wreak havoc. Let each speck of earth be turned into a paradise. Let the dwellers thereon be perfected in physique, in stature, in well-being. Let vice be eradicated from the earth. Let greed be done away with. Friendly rivalry shall succeed ignoble competition. Let all manner of corruption cease. Politics shall be purified. At present we are beset by dark superstitions and crude idolatries. On the holy mountain shall be established the model community which shall serve as a pattern and exemplar. The pure worship of God instituted there shall exercise its potent and beneficient influence far and wide.

Such is the vision of Jewish world dominion amidst the raging of the nations. Not for our self-aggrandizement, not for the oppression of others, not for the annihilation of little states and little nations, but to teach the world the lesson that the Messianic blessing is to the salvation of all and to the hurt of none. Our world dominion will be of the spiritual kind. To some extent progress in that direction has been made. The seed scattered in olden times is bearing fruit. The world to-day is partially already converted to the Hebrew truth. In the language of Maimonides, both the founders of Christianity and Islam have paved the way for the King, the Messiah who is to come. The Hebrew Scriptures are the heritage of the civilized world. We still stand out as a body of protestants that the whole of the Hebrew truth has not yet been accepted. For with it we find intermingled much that is obscuring it. And so we pray and hope that the day will come when the whole of the Hebrew truth will become the possession of the world. We shall not be the poorer, but the richer for it. Spiritual truth, when communicated to others, leaves not the possessor thereof himself devoid of it. The teacher is not the less wise because he has taught many. Let the nations rage in blind pursuance of false doctrine. With the Jew is the light and the hope of the world. And we shall hold steadfastly to the ideal of a humanity federated yet distinct, each from its place looking up for light and inspiration to the God of Zion and the prophet-people He has chosen to the end that the world plan might prosper in the end of days.

SERVIAN GOVERNMENT BUILDS SYNAGOGUES.

At a recent meeting the Servian Cabinet decided to build three synagogues, viz., at Monastir, Uskub and Istip. The entire expenses will be defrayed by the state. By this generous action the government intends to show its gratitude to the Jews in Servia for their bravery and patriotism in the last two wars.

Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 3

Philadelphia was host to more than 100 delegates representing District Grand Lodge No. 3 at the biennial convention on Sunday, January 25, 1914.

The District includes the States of Pennsyvania, New Jersey, Delaware and West Virginia, and every section of this territory was represented.

The convention proper was opened on Sunday morning at the Hotel Majestic with a prayer by Rabbi A. J. Brill of Wheeling, W. Va. This was followed by the reading of the annual message of the President, Dr. B. S. Pollok, who reviewed the work of the District during his term and outlined possible activities for the future.

The remainder of the morning session was taken up with the reading of reports of the various officers and standing committees.

The afternoon session was devoted to a discussion of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage at Erie, Pa., based on the annual report presented by Brother Isidor Sobel, Chairman of the Board of Governors. During the afternoon Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, of Chicago, Secretary of the Executive Committee of the Order, who was specially delegated to represent the Order at this convention, delivered an address reviewing the condition of the Jews in many lands and reciting the part played by the Order in helping to alleviate the suffering and the oppression practiced against the Jews in benighted lands. His address was received with much applause and enthusiasm.

Banquet.

In the evening a banquet was held at the Hotel Majestic. Mr. D. Bortin of Philadelphia acted as toastmaster and responses were made by Dr. B. S. Pollok, who spoke of the importance of the B'nai B'rith in the Jewish communal life throughout the world; by Past Grand President Isidor Sobel, who spoke of the work accomplished in the direction of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage at Erie, and appealing for greater interest in this charity of the District; by Brother A. B. Seelenfreund of Chicago, who emphasized the democracy of the Order, advocating a closer union of the Jews; by Hon. Judge S. Strauss of Wilkes-Barre, who spoke of the future of the Order, emphasizing the necessity of combatting the animosity against the Jews; by Hon. Judge Josiah Cohen of Pittsburg, who pleaded for the devotion of all Jews to the highest ideals of Judaism; by Madam Belle Pevsner, who pleaded for the support of Jewish institutions in the holy land. The addresses were eloquent and full of serious thought and awakened in the listeners a desire to accomplish nobler and higher things, aims which the Order has set out to accomplish.

Monday's Session.

Monday was devoted to a discussion of the reports of the officers and the various committees of the Grand Lodge. Report of the Secretary showed the District to be in healthy condition, composed of 40 lodges with a membership of 2,649, and the acquisition of new lodges in various cities throughout the District. The election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Abe Weil, Philadelphia.

First Vice-President, Frederick Jay, Newark.

Second Vice-President, Marcus Feuchtwanger, New Castle.

Treasurer, M. S. Meyerhoff, Philadelphia.

Secretary, Louis Sulzbacher, Braddock.

For Delegates to the Constitution Grand Lodge Convention, to be held in San Francisco in the year 1915, fourteen candidates were nominated, of which number nine were elected as follows: Judge Josiah Cohen, Hon. Jacob Singer, J. D. Coons, M. S. Meyerhoff, Arthur Phillips, Dr. B. S. Pollok, Isidor Sobel, M. Feuchtwanger and Dr. J. Rosenthal.

The newly elected officers were installed by Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, representing the President of the Order, and at the conclusion of the ceremonies he delivered an address on the work of the Anti-Defamation League, the organization founded and being maintained by the Order.

In the closing hours of Monday's session, the convention resolved to undertake the work of providing Jewish instruction for the boys and girls in the various correctional and penal institutions in the District. An appropriation was made and the General Committee was directed to co-operate with other organizations in carrying out this splendid undertaking. Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburg made a brief address commending the convention on this excellent movement. Other interesting features of the convention included the initiation of a class of 20 candidates of Joshua and Har Sinai Lodges of Philadelphia, the initiation being conducted by Past President A. L. Solomon of Pittsburg and A. B. Seelenfreund of Chicago; the presentation of a beautiful B'nai B'rith flag to the convention by Bradford Lodge, the newest lodge in the District, a tribute in the form of resolutions of commendation of Rabbi Abr. Brill of Wheeling, who is about to leave the District to occupy a pulpit in Meridian, Miss.; the institution of an annual B'nai Brith and Memorial Day to be selected by the General Committee, likewise the institution of an annual Orphanage Day in honor of the orphanage at Erie, Pa., and the presentation to Dr. B. S. Pollok, the retiring President, of a handsome testimonial in appreciation of his services to the District, the presentation being made for the Grand Lodge by Brother F. Jay, the newly elected First Vice-President.

Exercises at the Temple.

In the evening a public meeting was held at Temple Adath Jeshurun. Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburg delivered the address on the subject, "The Sons of the Covenant." He outlined the history of the Order and appealed for a greater membership, discussed the important positions the Jews have in present day life, pointed to the history of the Jewish people and the progress made by them by overcoming many obstacles. He emphasized the fact that all selfishness has been eliminated from the Order and that in the future social beneficence will be its only aim.

Rabbi Max D. Klein acted as chairman and a program of musical selections was beautifully carried out.

Concluding Session.

On Tuesday morning the affairs of the Erie Orphanage were discussed. The newly elected Board of Directors of the home held a meeting and discussed the various problems connected with the institution. Plans were formulated for the present buildings, which are in the course of erection.

The next convention of the District Grand Lodge will be held in Erie, Pa., in the month of July in the year 1916.

With a short address by the President of the District followed by an invocation by Rabbi Brill, the convention adjourned sine die.

NEW RESTRICTIONS FOR JEWS.

The Senate has issued a ukase to the various commercial courts to the effect that they are not entitled to admit Jews as sworn attorneys without previous permission from the Minister of Justice.

This means, under present conditions, that no more Jews will be allowed to act in that capacity in Russia, since M. Scheglovitoff is not likely to consider more favorably the candidature of Jewish sworn attorneys in commercial courts than of Jewish barristers in the other courts.

The Minister of Justice has decided to disqualify Jews from acting as private attorneys before justices of the peace.

BEILIS FILMS PROHIBITED.

The London County Council has passed an official embargo upon the film "Mendel Beilis" dealing with the ritual murder case at Kiev, which has been shown in a London theater.

JEWS IN THE TURKISH PARLIAMENT.

Although the number of Jews in the Turkish Empire has decreased by fully 150,000, in consequence of the loss of Macedonia, Tripoli and other provinces, the Young Turk party have decided to allow to the Jews four representatives in the Parliament, which is about to be elected. In the last Parliament there were five Jewish deputies, including one for Salonika, which is now a Greek province. The candidates will be selected by the Jewish communities themselves and the Mohammedans in the constituencies will be asked to vote for the Jewish candidate.

BEILIS GIVEN PALESTINE FARM

Mendel Beilis, recently acquitted of the killing of the Christian boy, Andrew Yushinsky, left Kiev accompanied by his family for Jaffa in Palestine. Baron de Rothschild, who manifested great interest in the trial, has bought a small farm in Palestine for Beilis.

NEWS FROM LONDON

BY OUR CORRESPONDENT DR. M. EPSTEIN

London, January 21, 1914.

At its January meeting in each year the First Lodge of England elects its officers for the ensuing year. It may interest our brethren in America to know upon whom the choice has fallen. As our fourth President we have Brother Augustus Kahn, who served as Vice-President last year. Judging from the occasions when he has taken the chair, the new President will preside over the deliberations of the Lodge with fairness and with firmness. Mr. Kahn is one of His Majesty's inspectors of schools, his specialty being commercial education. For a long time Mr. Kahn has been the foremost authority on the subject in the country and his appointment under the Board of Education was a fitting recognition of his knowledge and ability. But important as his work is as a citizen, it is no less so as a Jew. Mr. Kahn has been Warden of St. John's Wood Synagogue; he is a member of the Council of Jews' College, our one and only seminary for training ministers, and he takes a vast amount of interest in the religious education of the young. Last and not least, the new President is a keen Ben B'rith. He has been a regular attendant at our meetings; he has taken a lively and active interest in the work of the Lodge and he has frequently brought us greetings from Lodges on the continent where he has been a worthy representative of the English B'nai B'rith. His election was an exceedingly popular one and we look forward, one and all, to a prosperous year under his leadership.

For Vice-President we have chosen Brother Simon Rosenbaum, who has been associated with the Lodge from its foundation. We always look to Brother Rosenbaum for sound common sense, and not infrequently it is common sense tempered with some sentiment. His appeal, therefore, is generally effective. Mr. Rosenbaum is an authority on procedure. There are wags who say that he knows more about the procedure of the House of Commons than even Mr. Speaker himself. The jest is not wholly without a basis of reality. The new Vice-President will make an excellent second to the President, and his counsels at the Council will be certain to distinguish his tenure of office.

While the President and Vice-President are old members, the Treasurer, Brother Alexander Rubenstein, is comparatively a newcomer. But it says much for his worth that he has been selected by the Lodge for honours already. Brother Rubenstein is a member whose earnestness and sense of justice give a touch of distinction to his balanced views. To those of us who worked to establish the Lodge Mr. Rubenstein's appointment is most encouraging. We feel certain that with a man like that among those who guide its destinies, its development will be in right channels.

It is no exaggeration to say that in any organization the Secretary is in reality one of the most important functionaries. He is the prime executive officer; on his punctuality and good temper depends the smooth working of the affairs of the body concerned. The Lodge may certainly congratulate itself in having Brother Alfred Benjamin as its Honorary General Secretary. Brother Benjamin may be described in a sentence: he is the impersonation of cheery good will and friendliness. Seldom have we come across a man who so well typifies brotherly love and harmony. His every word, his manner of greeting you, attract you to him at once. He will make a splendid General Secretary. As his colleague in the capacity of Honorary Secretary for Foreign Correspondence, we have Dr. Samuel Daiches, a man who has devoted his life to scholarship. Let no one imagine, however, that he is the average dry-as-dust bookworm. Far from it. Dr. Daiches is a man of the world as well. In short, he tries to realize the old Jewish ideal: Torah and Derech-Erez.

These five then are the honorary officers. They are assisted by a Council of five, which is made up of the following: Brothers Herbert Bentwich, Dr. Moses Gaster, Dr. Hirschfield, Coleman Hyman and Maurice Myers. The composition of the Council is eminently satisfactory. In the two first-named gentlemen we have original founders of the Lodge, both past Presidents, and both with a record of yeoman service in the cause of the Order. The remaining three have a no less satisfactory record of things achieved for the Lodge, only it is shorter. But therein lies the strength of the new Council. We need the old workers and we look to the new ones. That alone is the way in which we shall establish a tradition and an honourable tradition the Lodge must have. Only three other offices remain to be filled. The immediate past President becomes Monitor—a wise provision, seeing that it retains the co-operation of last year's president; and as for the warden and guardian, the new President appoints these on the occasion of his installation. All in all, the crew inspires confidence, and we ought to obtain many new passengers while the good ship is in their charge. Certainly it all seems hopeful.

In an era when women are coming more and more into public life, it is not surprising that the Lodge too should receive their attention. Some of the Lodge ladies, videlicet, some of the members' wives, have put forward the suggestion that the London Lodge should show an enterprising spirit and admit ladies to full membership. They are not content to form an adjunct to the Lodge, a sort of appendage of members' wives, to meet together for unostentatious charity, as is done in Germany. They suggest that they ought to have full membership. One thing emerges from this: that there is a keenness about the Lodge among our women-folk, and this cannot but be a sign of good augury. Whether the demand is timely is another matter. It would be interesting to know whether a similar suggestion has been put forward by the "Daughters of the Covenant" in America, and if it has, what attitude has been adopted towards it. In any event, it is testimony to zeal, and zeal is mostly good.

We see this in our general community. Anglo Jewry is to-day like a blind man groping in the dark. We do not quite know what we want, but we want something. Now we find that our Boys' and Girls' Clubs are not perfect; another time we are dissatisfied with the status of our ministers. Are they to be rabbis or only ministers? Are they doing their proper work being secretaries of their synagogues, visiting hospitals and prisons and attending meetings? Ought they not rather to hold services at our clubs and so make these more Jewish? As though services can make anything more Jewish! For does not the Jewish spirit, like any other spirit, come only in a sort of intangible fashion, come only of its own accord as a result of certain influences, come only like an aroma? You cannot force it. You cannot draw it forth. You cannot impose it from without. It must come of itself. And given the right influences, it will come. Our Boys' Clubs are in a flourishing state; they have a large membership and their tone is good. But if the truth must be told, it is not specifically Jewish. Yet this too will come. The tone of any Working Lad's Club comes from its managers. Make the managers more Jewish and you will obtain the Jewish atmosphere. It is not a matter of services; it is a question of men. The men will be forthcoming and they will be of the right kind.

Nothing is more striking and significant, nothing more hopeful has shown itself here for a long time, than the gradual awakening of a number of thoughtful men to a consciousness of the Jewish destiny. What are the Jews here for? they ask. Surely it cannot be chance. Surely there is something in it; it is a reality. And if so, what is the reality? Everywhere we have our scattered limbs, as one of them put it the other day; we may be said even to have our trunk, dismembered though it is. But (to carry the picture further) we have no heart. We have no spiritual center. We have no latter-day Zion from which should go forth the Law. It is this that we need; it is for this that the idea of a Hebrew University in Jerusalem is so welcome. A revival of the kind is bound to have far-reaching consequences. It used to be said, and not long ago either, that English Jews were hopeless in their density. They would not (or could not) understand. But the lie has been given to the assertion. Very recently a man from whom we should have expected it least laid down the doctrine that in Palestine Jewish educational institutions should have Hebrew as their medium of instruction. We may agree with this or we may differ. The significant fact is that the gentleman in question did not advocate the use of English or some other modern language.

The reception of the Palestine Society is another hopeful sign of the times. It has already over a hundred members, and since the object of the Society is generally to foster interest in Palestine and its life, there are a hundred "righteous" men and women in the world's capital. The Drawing-Room meetings which the Society has arranged are regular, systematic and fairly well attended. It is like scattering seed. It is preparing public opinion. It means an awakening. You may agree with the tendency or you may reject it. But you cannot deny the healthy state of which this revival is a testimony. Accordingly, if our Clubs are not Jewish enough, let us wait. The breath of the Renaissance will reach them too in due course.

So with the question Rabbi v. Minister. Things will right themselves if the revival continues. For one thing we in Anglo-Jewry are fortunate just now. Some people say we lose a number of our young men. But we do not lose all. It is fortunate also that gradually we are getting a new generation of ministers. Some of the provincial towns have recently appointed young men; the metropolitan congregations are doing likewise. Last month the Upper Berkeley St. Synagogue chose a young man as an additional minister; this week St. John's Wood Synagogue has elected a new minister in the person of the Rev. Ephraim Levine, (who is also a member of the Lodge, and to whom we should like to offer our hearty congratulations here). Young men may make mistakes, but they "knew not Joseph." They are not connected with the narrow, and therefore evil, policy of the last decade. They start anew and they possess enthusiasm. It is not unreasonable to expect, therefore, that the question of the Rabbinate will also be solved. If there is a demand there will be a supply. If the community as a whole want Rabbis, Rabbis of the right sort will be forthcoming. Yet it cannot be denied that to have attention drawn to the position of our ministers is useful.

The Lord Chief Justice of England (Sir Rufus Isaacs) was among the recipients of New Year's honours, and, as was generally expected, was raised to the peerage. He will be known in future as Lord Reading (Reading was the constituency he represented in Parliament for a number of years). To celebrate his appointment to the honorable office he holds, the Maccabaeans arranged a dinner, at which a very large number of visitors were present. Prof. Meldola, President of the Maccabaeans, was in the Chair, and the Lord Chief Justice in his reply laid stress on the character of the celebration. It was not to do honour to any particular individual that they had assembled, but rather to rejoice that for the first time in English history a Jew had become the first of His Majesty's judges. It was a tremendous fact that in England a man may rise in the service of his country unhindered by his race or religion. It was his citizenship that mattered; and the recognition of this as a principle in English national life was a stupendous fact in the world's history. His Lordship struck the right note in his speech, as indeed he does in all his speeches in Court, where his popularity seems to grow from day to day.

Lord Reading will himself preside at a forthcoming dinner (on April 27, 1914) which has been arranged to celebrate the twenty-first anniversary of the founding of the Jewish Historical Society of England. The Society has collected and published all manner of records that bear an Anglo-Jewish History; its transactions have received warm commendation from competent authorities, and its work merits encouragement and support. Connected with the Society is the Mocatta Library and Museum, where books and objects of Jewish interest are housed and where in the course of time it is hoped to store all Jewish records, such as congregation Minute books, registers of Mohelim, family genealogies and the like. Already it possesses the collection of notes and memoranda left by Myer Davis, the well-known Jewish antiquarian. It is hoped that the Dinner will be the means of attracting a large number of new members so that the Society may enlarge its activities. It will surely interest our American readers to learn that the Ambassador of the United States has promised to attend and to speak. His theme will be a peculiarly fitting one, fitting the occasion and the speaker.

Of all the advertisement hoardings in town we are invited just now to visit the picture palaces where the tragedy of Beilis is being enacted on the film. It has been asserted that when the announcement was first made Baron Heyking, the Russian Consul-General, brought pressure to bear on the London County Council to withdraw its license for the film. The story may be true; it would not be surprising if the Russian authorities were somewhat alarmed at what people might think of Russia if the films were exhibited. But there is little actual evidence of any interference. As a matter of fact the scenes are being shown, and if Baron Heyking did attempt to get them suppressed, he has certainly not succeeded. But it is in cases of this kind that the Lodge should be on the alert, and if injustice is being done it must use all its efforts to combat it. As a matter of fact during the last year it has appointed a Publicity Sub-Committee to take note of anti-semetic utterances which may appear in current publications and to draw the attention of the publishers to them. On the whole we in England have not much to complain of on that score. But a permanent Publicity Committee may be useful whenever wrong does require to be righted.

Reports of the various standing committees dealing with Propaganda, Intellectual Advancement, and kindred subjects, were presented, discussed and acted upon.

Resolutions of thanks were adopted to his Honor, the Mayor, and Board of Aldermen and Common Council, of the City of Springfield, for the welcome extended and their hospitality in the use of the magnificent Municipal buildings; to the degree team of Springfield Lodge for the exemplification of the ritual at the class initiation; to the members and ladies of Springfield for the courtesies to the convention and for their entertainment of the visitors; and to Brother Sol Sulzberger of New York for long and active service, having been treasurer of the District for 40 years.

The time and place of the next meeting of the Grand Lodge was left to the discretion of the General Committee.

The convention was then adjourned with prayer.

The visiting ladies were entertained by automobile trips on Sunday afternoon and by a dinner in the evening. On Monday afternoon a theater party was given in their honor.

Ball the Closing Event.

The closing event of the annual B'nai B'rith convention for District No. 1 was the great reception and ball held in the Hotel Kimball, and the occasion was a fitting close to the convention. There were some 250 couples present, the ballroom being taxed to its capacity, and the moving crowds with the bright and beautiful gowns of the women made a brilliant spectacle. The reception and ball was given to the visiting delegates by the Springfield lodge. The reception was from 8 to 9 o'clock and dancing was enjoyed from 9 to 2 o'clock. There was a large "welcome" sign, lighted by beautifully-colored electric lights in the ballroom, as well as the seven candlesticks of the Order, also electrically illuminated. During the intermission from 10:30 to 11 o'clock supper was served in the main dining hall, and through the courtesy of Poli and the Goldstein Bros. Amusement Company, an entertainment and cabaret was furnished by theatrical talent.

A JEWISH GOVERNOR IN PALESTINE.

Reports from Constantinople bring the interesting news that Talaat Bey, Minister of the Interior, contemplates the appointment of a Jew as governor of some city in Palestine where the Jewish element preponderates. The Young Turk cabinet has made it clear that it is well disposed towards the Jews.

Minutes of the Meeting of the Executive Committee I.O.B.B.

ation certificates where the person naturalized leaves the United States within five years after naturalization be given wide publicity through the B'nai B'rith News. Suggestion of Brother Wolf was adopted and the Secretary was instructed to attend to the matter.

The following communications were presented:

From District Grand Lodge No. 5:

Under date of Dec. 4, 1913, enclosing copy of communication directed to District Grand Lodge No. 7, requesting to submit to the General Committee of District No. 7 the proposition of having the State of Florida separated from District No. 7 and attached to District No. 5. Communication was ordered referred to the Constitution Grand Lodge convention.

From District Grand Lodge No. 11, the Orient:

Under dates of Dec. 9th and Dec. 16th, 1913, enclosing 2.618 Francs dues to the Constitution Grand Lodge for the District for the years 1911 and 1912, as per statement attached. It was thereupon resolved that this money be turned into the general fund of the Order.

Under date of Dec. 11, 1913, transmitting official communication from Salonika Lodge, Salonika, Greece, requesting to be favored with copies of all reports issued under the auspices of the Executive Committee of the Order and the various District Grand Lodges, also requesting to be favored with photographs and portraits of prominent co-religionists and leading members of the Order. The Secretary was instructed to comply with the request of Salonika Lodge as far as practical.

From the officers of Jeruschalajim Lodge No. 376 of Jerusalem, Palestine, under date of December 18, 1913, on behalf of a number of members of the lodge, American citizens, invoking the intercession of the Executive Committee of the Order at the Department of State to secure for them the protection and rights as American citizens and to have them if possible excluded from the provisions of the law of expatriation. Communication was ordered referred to Brother Simon Wolf with the request that he present the matter to the Department of State.

From [illegible] Bergel Lodge No. 692 of [illegible], Bulgaria, various communications with reference to the establishment of a new District Grand Lodge to be composed of lodges located in Bulgaria. The Secretary presented in connection therewith communication from the officers of District Grand Lodge No. 11, the Orient protesting against it. Resolved to refer those communications to the Constitution Grand Lodge convention.

From Brother [illegible], member of the Executive Committee of the Order representing District No. 11, under date of [illegible], 1913, with reference to the [illegible] of the B'nai B'rith [illegible] for the year 1913. Communication was ordered filed.

From Brother Eli Baruch, president of Cairo Lodge No. 687 of Cairo, Egypt, under date of November 10, 1913, expressing regret that measures for the establishment of a B'nai B'rith Lodge in the city of Paris, France, had to be interrupted owing to his enforced absence from that city, but that efforts will be continued during the coming summer to organize a lodge there. The President in this connection informed the Executive Committee that upon recommendation of the President of District Grand Lodge No. 11, authority was granted to Brother Baruch to take the preliminary measures during a visit to Paris to lay the foundation for a lodge to be instituted in that city. Action of the President was approved.

From Cercle Herzl of Cairo, Egypt, under date of November 10, 1913, advising of the organization of courses in Hebrew and Jewish history and requesting to be favored with 25 copies of the B'nai B'rith News for distribution among members of the Cercle. Request was granted.

From Los Angeles Lodge No. 487 of Los Angeles, Cal., under date of January 3, 1914, respecting the feasibility of publishing and circulating in pamphlet form data setting forth the activities of the Order for distribution among non-members. Ordered filed.

From Mr. A. H. Fromenson, Executive Secretary of the National Farm School, under dates of June 5 and 13, 1913, requesting the privilege of appearing before the Executive Committee to submit to it on behalf of the National Farm School a proposition looking to the recognition of the school by the Order. The President reported that the privilege was granted to Mr. Fromenson.

From Brother Eugene H. Lehman of New York City, under date of November 16, 1913, submitting an outline and plan to increase the membership of the Order and to enhance the efficiency of the Order's work. In this connection the Secretary presented communications from Brothers Charles Hartman, Jacob Singer, and Dr. E. N. Calish, expressing their views on the subject matter. Resolved that as the term of the present administration is drawing to a close, to refer the plan to the next administration.

A recess was then taken until Monday morning, 10:00 o'clock.

January 19, 1914, 10:00 A. M.

Executive Committee reconvened at 10:00 A. M. at the Hotel La Salle on above date.

Communication was presented from Brother Jacob Singer, Second Vice-President of the Order, excusing his absence from the session by reason of sickness. He enclosed his report for the past year, and explained that he was prevented from preparing and submitting it in time owing to his absence from the country. It was moved by Brother Lucius L. Solomons that the report of Brother Singer for the year 1912-1913 be printed in pamphlet form and distributed among the lodges of the Order. Motion prevailed.

Mr. A. H. Fromenson, Executive Secretary of the National Farm School at Doylestown, Pa., was granted the privilege of the floor. In his address to the Executive Committee he dwelt upon the useful activity of the National Farm School and requested that the Executive Committee recommend the school to the favorable consideration of the members of the Order. Resolved that Brother Philip Stein prepare a proper recommendation.

The situation in Roumania was then explained by the President of the Order, who reported that he forwarded the sum of 10,000 Francs to be used in defraying costs in forming the International Committee for the defense of Religious Liberty. Action was approved.

The following communications were then presented:

From Brother Arthur L. Kramer, President of District Grand Lodge No. 7 under date of October 22, 1913, with reference to an annual conference to be held by the Presidents of the American Districts and the attendance of such Presidents at the annual meetings of the Executive Committee. The Secretary was instructed to inform Brother Kramer of action taken by the Executive Committee in the premises.

From Brother Victor Abraham, President of the Court of Appeals of the Order, enclosing a syllabus of cases in the Court of Appeals of the Order, decided since the publication of Ullman's Digest and suggesting the advisability of printing the same.

Resolved that the communication be referred to the Advisory Committee with full power to act.

On motion of Brother Simon Wolf a vote of thanks was extended to Brother Victor Abraham for his services in preparing the digest of cases.

From District Grand Lodge No. 5, advising of efforts in the direction of instituting a B'nai B'rith Lodge in the city of Baltimore and stating that a petition for a charter for such a lodge signed by prominent co-religionists of that city was received by the General Committee of that District and was favorably acted upon and that the institution of the lodge is expected to take place on January 20, 1914. Resolved that the expense involved in the matter of establishing a lodge in Baltimore be met by the Executive Committee and the President was authorized to take the requisite action in the premises.

Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburg was then granted the floor. He addressed the Executive Committee on the work of the Synagogue and School Extension Board under the auspices of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations. He suggested the advisability of interesting the B'nai B'rith lodges and members of the Order in this important work and also pointed out the need of financial assistance to carry on the work in the manner as outlined, and inquired whether any relief in this direction may be obtained from the Order by means of a per capita tax upon all members.

A recess was then taken for lunch.

At the conclusion of the luncheon, in which all the members of the Executive Committee, Dr. J. Leonard Levy, Mrs. Hannah G. Solomon, and the members of the Executive Committee of the Anti-Defamation League resident in Chicago, and Brother Isaac Kuhn of Champaign and Dr. Chas. S. Levi of Milwaukee, and Sylvan E. Hess of St. Paul, participated, a meeting of the Executive Board of the Anti-Defamation League was held, at which a report of the activities of the League since its inception was presented by the Secretary, which was read and received with marked approval.

Monday Afternoon, 2:00 P. M.

The sessions of the Executive Committee were resumed at above hour.

Brother Philip Stein submitted the following statement relative to the National Farm School:

"The Executive Committee of the Constitution Grand Lodge, I. O. B. B., regards the National Farm School as an important factor in the solution of the social, physical and economic problems that confront American Jewry. It, therefore, indorses and approves the work of that school."

The same was adopted and copies of the same ordered transmitted to the lodges of the Order.

The following additional communications were presented:

From Progress Lodge No. 113 of Peoria, Ill., submitting a petition of the lodge to the Executive Committee urging action be taken to bring about a closer union of our co-religionists in Hungary so as to do away with all factional strife among the various bodies of Jewry in Hungary. Communication was ordered filed.

From a special committee of Atlantic City, Lodge No. 494 of Atlantic, City, N. J., under date of June 19, 1913, containing a resolution with reference to the portraying or depicting of any religious class by means of moving pictures in any manner that might invite class and racial hatred, and suggesting the advisability of the Executive Committee of the Order taking necessary steps to secure representation on the National Board of Censorship so as to be in position to eliminate any offensive pictures. Communication was referred to the Anti-Defamation League.

From Brother Isaac E. Marcuson, Chairman of the Propaganda Committee of District Grand Lodge No. 5, on the subject of caricaturing the Jew on the stage and suggesting the lodges of the Order be communicated with, requesting them to enter protest whenever any offense of this character is perpetrated. Communication was referred to the Anti-Defamation League.

From Brother Sylvan E. Hess, President of District Grand Lodge No. 6 under date of November 20, 1913, with reference to the immigration problem and suggesting the advisability of featuring arguments for a liberal immigration policy in the issues of the B'nai B'rith News. The subject matter was referred to the President of the Order for such action as he may deem proper.

From Brother Sylvan E. Hess, under date of December 2, 1913, with reference to the need of literature for use in the District. The subject matter having been already disposed of, communication was ordered filed.

From Brother Archibald A. Marx of New Orleans, under date of December 23, 1913, with reference to rescue work to be inaugurated by the government officials in connection with the efforts made to surpress the white slave traffic and suggesting that an appropriation of $5,000 be voted towards defraying the expense of reclaiming fallen women. It was moved by Brother Joseph Hirsh that an appropriation commensurate with the finances of the Executive Committee be made for the purpose mentioned in the communication of Brother Archibald A. Marx. Motion failed to receive a second.

From Brother Emil Nathan, chairman of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association of Hot Springs, Ark., under dates of January 3 and 9, 1914, submitting an itemized statement of donations, and appropriations made for the erection of the Hospital, from which it is shown that the Building Fund Commitee has made contracts amounting to $86,000, that the subscriptions received amount to $72,200, shortage $13,800 therefore requesting a contribution of $2,500 toward the building fund. It was moved by Brother Charles Hartman that the request of the Leo N. Levi Hospital Association be granted. Motion prevailed.

The President brought to the attention of the Executive Committee the fact that at the meeting of the Board of Trustees of the National Jewish Hospital for Consumptives at Denver, held in Cincinnati in the year 1912, a committee consisting of Messrs. Martin A. Marks, Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy and the President of the Order, was appointed to arrange for a thorough investigation of the affairs and conditions existing at the National Jewish Hospital; that in compliance with such action Brother Dr. Max Biesenthal of Chicago was sent to Denver to fully investigate the affairs of the Hospital, and that Dr. Biesenthal submitted a report covering all the phases of activity of the Hospital and that he reported favorably on the present management, that it is deserving of the support of the public at large.

The President then informed the Executive Committee of action taken in the matter of organizing the Anti-Defamation League under the auspices of the Order, and the appointment of an executive board of almost 150 members, composed of leading members of the Order throughout the country; of measures undertaken to carry out the aims and purposes of the league; that the expense since the formation of the league to the present time was $883.37. It was moved by Brother Jacob Furth that the action of the President of the Order in the matter of creating the Anti-Defamation League be approved and that the expense incurred in connection therewith be authorized and that the President be authorized to defray the expenses of the League until the next meeting of the Executive Committee. Motion was adopted unanimously.

It was thereupon moved by Brother Philip Stein that the Executive Committee express its appreciation to Brother Sig. Livingston, chairman of the executive board of the Anti-Defamation League, for his services and also to District Grand Lodge No. 6 for its action in championing the cause of organization of a League for the suppression of the defamation of the Jew. Motion was adopted unanimously, and the Secretary was instructed to express the thanks in writing.

The Secretary called the attention of the Executive Committee to the necessity of revising and amending some of the organic laws of the Order. On motion of Brother Philip Stein the Advisory Committee was authorized to prepare a codification of the existing laws of the Order and submit such changes and amendments and additions as they may deem proper to the Constitution Grand Lodge at its next convention.

The Secretary informed the Executive Committee of action taken by various District Grand Lodges in the matter of the creation of an emergency trust fund. It was moved by Brother Philip Stein that the Advisory Committee be requested to prepare and draft a law for submission to the Constitution Grand Lodge at its next convention dealing with the creation and operation of an emergency fund. Motion was adopted.

The request of Dr. J. Leonard Levy for a subvention to the Synagogue and School extension work of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations was then discussed. Resolved that the subject matter be referred to the Advisory Committee for a full report at the next meeting of the Executive Committee.

B'NAI B'RITH DAY CELEBRATIONS

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, CANADA.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated on December 28, 1913, by Winnipeg Lodge No. 650 of Winnipeg, Canada. The celebration was a highly successful affair and was held at the Odd Fellows' Hall, which was filled with an eager, attentive audience. Brother Jonas Weil of Minneapolis, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, delivered the principal address, choosing for his subject "Relation of the Order to Judaism." He emphasized the fact that the object of the Order has had an historical evolution, taking a leading part, if not the initiative, in improving the condition of the Jew, mainly through the establishment of philanthropic institutions, and gradually developing until it has become the representative body of Jewry with a purpose to oppose any attempts or attacks against Judaism from within or without.

Brother Weil's address was preceded by a varied and enjoyable program, including the reading of a report of the activity of the ladies' auxiliary. Preceding the speaker of the evening the secretary of the lodge read his annual report containing a resume of the activity of the lodge during the past year.

CORSICANA, TEXAS.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated in Temple Beth El, Corsicana, Tex., on January 15. President M. M. Miller of the local lodge presided over the ceremonies and M. Hirsch delivered the address of welcome. Rabbi M. Faber of Tyler, Tex., delivered a short address, and was followed by Rabbi Goldberg, the newly installed minister. An address by Rabbi Zielonka of El Paso, Tex., followed, and Dr. Faber closed the exercises with an impressive benediction. The affair was a notable one and will be long remembered by all who were present.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

More than 500 people filled the assembly hall of the Y. M. H. A. of Memphis, Tenn., on Sunday evening, January 25, 1914. The occasion was the annual B'nai B'rith Day celebration under the auspices of Memphis Lodge No. 35. Rabbi Leonard J. Rothstein of Alexandria, La., was the principal speaker, and those who heard him enjoyed a rare treat. He selected as his theme, "Why I Am a Ben B'rith." His masterly address was frequently interrupted with generous applause by the audience present. A musical program of vocal and instrumental numbers completed the celebration.

HOUSTON, TEX.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated at Houston, Tex., on Sunday, Jan. 25, 1914, at the Municipal Auditorium. An assemblage of over 600 of Houston's most representative Jews graced the occasion. Mr. S. J. Westheimer called the gathering to order, and after the rendition of a musical program, Mr. Leon Schwarz of Mobile, Ala., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, was introduced as the speaker of the occasion. He chose for his subject "The Order and Its Accomplishments." After an informal reception Mr. Schwarz was accompanied to the Rice Hotel by a number of his friends, where a round table luncheon awaited them. During the afternoon the guest was taken for an auto ride through the city.

VIRGINIA, MINN.

Mesaba Lodge No. 673 of Virginia, Minn., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day on Jan. 4, 1914. The lodge held a meeting in the afternoon, at which a class of nine candidates was initiated. This was followed by the installation of the newly elected officers, Brother Herman Baer performing this function, having been deputized to do so by the President of the District. In the evening a banquet was held at the Ormondo Hotel, which was attended by more than 40 members of the lodge. Following this a public meeting was held in the Moose Hall, at which Prof. H. L. Slobin delivered a lecture on "Judaism and its Deeds" before a large assemblage of Jews and non-Jews. His lecture was well received and was much applauded at its conclusion. The mayor of the city honored the occasion with his presence, welcoming the gathering in well chosen words. The celebration was concluded with a dance, which lasted until the early hours of the morning.

AMOS LODGE, BOSTON, MASS.

On Jan. 9, 1914, B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated under the auspices of Amos Lodge No. 121 of Boston, Mass., at Temple Ohabei Sholom in conjunction with the regular Friday evening services. Considerable publicity has been given to this event, which created much interest and brought a large gathering to the Temple. The guest of honor and principal speaker was Rabbi Dr. Joseph Silverman of Temple Emanuel, New York, President of the District Grand Lodge, who deliverd the address on the subject "The Order and Judaism."

A well attended meeting of the lodge was held on Sunday, Jan. 18, on which occasion the officers for the ensuing year were installed by Judge A. K. Cohen and Brother Henry Lasker, Past President of Springfield Lodge of Springfield, Mass. A number of candidates were initiated by the degree team of Worcester Lodge, which came specially for the occasion and whose work proved to be highly interesting. After the close of the lodge meeting the visitors were entertained with a dinner at the Hotel Essex. The revival in the affairs of Amos Lodge and its activities to further the interests of the Order are due in a great measure to the efforts of Brother Jacob S. Kuhns, and under his guidance and with the co-operation of the new officers the lodge is looking forward to still greater activities during the present year.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated under the auspices of Asheville Lodge No. 714 of Asheville, N. C., on Sunday, January 4, 1914. In the afternoon a regular meeting of the lodge was held, which was largely attended and on which occasion five new members were initiated. In the evening a public meeting at the Temple was held, and despite the inclement weather a large attendance was secured. Mr. H. S. Blumberg of Richmond, Va., Sergeant-at-Arms of District Grand Lodge No. 5, was the guest of honor and delivered an address on the work of the Order, which was much appreciated by all those present. He was introduced by the president of the lodge, Brother R. C. Goldstein, who made an eloquent plea on behalf of the Order. Several vocal selections were rendered before and after the addresses. At the conclusion of the public meeting the members of the lodge and their ladies returned to the lodge quarters, where supper was served. The visiting Grand Lodge officer was again called on for an address, and he responded in a most satisfactory manner, interspersing his remarks with humorous and witty sayings to the delight of all those present. Short addresses were also made by the officers of the lodge, who were fittingly introduced by the toastmaster. Brother R. C. Goldstein, the president of the lodge. As a result of this celebration, and especially of the visit of the Grand Lodge officer, increased enthusiasm in the work of the lodge will surely be manifested.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX,

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated at Temple Beth-El, San Antonio, Tex., under the auspices of Edar Lodge No. 211 and Leo N. Levi Lodge No. 675, of San Antonio, Texas. A large audience was present and enjoyed a well executed musical program and addresses concerning the development of the Order. The principal speaker was Mr. Leon Schwarz of Mobile, Ala., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, who paid much honor and tribute to the Order and reviewed its history. The celebration was closed by Rabbi Marks, after which an informal reception was held.

FT. WORTH, TEX.

On Sunday, Jan. 18, 1914, Isidor Strauss Lodge of Ft. Worth, Tex., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day with appropriate exercises.

About 300 people were present at the Temple when Rabbi George Fox of Ft. Worth spoke the opening prayer. Addresses were delivered by U. M. Simon of Isidor Strauss Lodge, Rabbi Martin Zielonka of El Paso and Grand President Arthur L. Kramer of Dallas.

About 50 members of Dallas Lodge attended the exercises in a body.

JOHN HAY LODGE, FARGO, N. D.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated in a most auspicious manner on December 30, 1913. The festivities began with the annual meeting of the lodge in the afternoon, at which the installation of officers for the ensuing year took place. Brother Jonas Weil of Minneapolis, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, assisted by Brother Hugo Stern, installed the officers.

Dacotah Lodge of Grand Forks, N. D., was represented at the meeting by Brother George Papermaster and Max Rabinovitch, who conveyed the greetings of their lodge.

Following the installation of officers, a class of candidates was initiated by the Degree Team.

Immediately after the meeting all the members and their ladies and the invited guests repaired to the dining room of the hall where an elaborate Kosher banquet was served. The banquet was the result of the untiring efforts of our worthy Brother Lewis Hart, our retiring President. President B. N. Lesk acted as toastmaster at the banquet and the following Brothers responded with toasts in behalf of the Order: Brothers Jonas Weil on behalf of the Grand Lodge, Max Rabinovitch and George Papermaster of Dacotah Lodge, Retiring President Lewis Hart and Sam Field of the local lodge.

It is also worthy of note that the lodge has the constant support of the wives of the brethren. The success of the banquet was in a large measure due to activities of Mrs. Matt Seigel and those who so ably assisted her, and the festive board on B'nai B'rith Day was made happy by the presence of the charming and jovial Mrs. B. N. Lesk, wife of the worthy President.

Following the banquet the guests gathered in the assembly room of the hall and listened to the address given by Brother Jonas Weil. The subject of his address was, "Duty of the Jew to His Brother Jew." In the course of his talk Brother Weil pointed out the responsibility that rests upon every Jew as his brother's keeper. Furthermore, the Order B'nai B'rith, or Sons of the Covenant, was constituted with its principle aim of helping and educating Israelites to the realization of their duties and to facilitate their accomplishments. The address was one of the best heard in the city and was enjoyed by everyone present. Dancing was indulged in at the conclusion of the address.

ALEXANDRIA, LA.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated on Sunday, January 18, 1914, by Rebecca Lodge No. 240, of Alexandria, La., at the Temple in a most elaborate manner. In the afternoon a class of twenty candidates was initiated and this was followed by the installation of the officers for the ensuing year. In the evening a public meeting was held, which was largely attended by members and their friends. Rabbi Emil W. Leipziger of New Orleans had been invited to participate and he delivered a splendid address. Rabbi L. J. Rothstein pronounced the benediction. A number of musical numbers interspersed the program. After the meeting was concluded a banquet was served at the Hotel Bently at which Rabbi Leipziger and Brother E. M. Weil responded to toasts.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Annual B'nai B'rith Day exercises under the auspices of Emanuel Lodge No. 103 and Alabama Lodge No. 299 of Montgomery, Ala., were held on Sunday evening, Jan. 25, 1914, at Temple Beth Or. This was one of the most successful celebrations held in Montgomery in recent years. The attendance was unusually large.

Rabbi B. C. Ehrenreich delivered the invocation, and the opening remarks were made by the chairman, Brother Maurice Strauss. Brother Lionel Weil delivered an address on the subject, "Union Among Jews," and the principal address was delivered by Rabbi Wm. H. Fineschriber of Memphis, who spoke on the subject, "The Larger Loyalty." The remainder of the program consisted of musical and vocal numbers.

B'NAI B'RITH BUILDING.

It has been practically decided by the directors of the B'nai B'rith Building Association of Portland, Ore., to purchase a site on 13th street for a building, in which features will be a gymnasium, library, reading rooms, and lodge rooms.

MILWAUKEE I. O. B. B. COUNCIL CELEBRATES.

B'nai B'rith day was celebrated by the I. O. B. B. Council, of Milwaukee, in a highly satisfactory and edifying manner by a banquet at the Republican House, Thursday evening, January 22. About two hundred and fifty members of Gilead and Isaac Lodges, the two local organizations of the city, gathered to participate in the festivities. The local committee had arranged for an orchestra, and during the evening a number of splendid selections were given.

The speakers for the occasion were Brothers Sig. Livingston and A. B. Seelenfreund, Secretary of the Executive Committee of the Order, of Chicago. Rabbi Grad, of Milwaukee, delivered the closing prayer. On behalf of the Council, Bro. Joseph Hirschberg, a Milwaukee lawyer, stated that the Council was composed of a number of representative members of the two lodges. The Council was organized to do some work for Jewish uplift and general advancement. It had taken upon itself the duties of looking after the immigrants sent to Milwaukee by the Industrial Removal Office, of New York. Through its agency, in conjunction with the New York office, Bro. Godfrey Glicksman had undertaken the work, and with his able assistance the Council had received from the Removal Office about four hundred men since its inception, which was remarkable, considering the size of the city. Bro. Hirschberg stated that the Council would do other work from time to time. He explained its membership, and said that the meetings, held at various restaurants during the noon hour every two weeks, when reports were received and the work was discussed, were well attended. He explained that the committees of different kinds did their work separately from the business transacted at the meetings of the Council.

Bro. Sig. Livingston was then called upon for an address. He delivered a masterly oration, telling how Judas Maccabeus and a handful of men conquered the thousands of trained troops sent against them. He said that the Jewish home and the Jewish idea of their destiny had done much to preserve the race against the persecution which ever assailed it. He dwelt at some length upon the work of the Anti-Defamation League, recently organized in Chicago, and showed how it could be made of tremendous importance to the welfare of American Israel. In fact, Bro. Livingston pointed out instances in connection with the prohibiting of certain objectionable moving picture films, wherein the work of the League was invaluable for the advancement of Jewish interests. In explaining the work of the League he paid a high tribute to its Secretary, Bro. Lewis, formerly of Milwaukee, to whose industry and abilty the League is much indebted. Bro. Livingston ended his address by a very stirring appeal for the young men in American Israel to stand out on the firing line, and to be where the smoke of battle is thickest. It was a dramatic finish to a splendid oration. Bro. Livingston was applauded for several minutes.

Bro. Hirschberg then announced Bro. Seelenfreund, who needed no introduction to members of the I. O. B. B. in this district. Bro. Seelenfreund stated that the individual member of the Lodge could do much for the benefit of the Jewish cause wherever he happened to be, but that the Lodge was the nucleus of such work. He said that we should go to the Lodge with more respect; in fact, it should be the sanctum sanctorum, and that here the ideals and the ideas promulgated for sociological and other advancement should be discussed and acted upon by the whole deliberative body. Bro. Seelenfreund stated that he regretted that there were many Jews who were truckling and bowing to those outside the Faith. That they were playing for social favor, and were even seeking false gods in their efforts to win place and position. He said that this was radically wrong, and that we had to beware of such as these within our ranks as well as those who openly and avowedly were our enemies.

Many of those present went away with a feeling that they could well have listened to several more speakers, and that those who did speak, even though they talked at considerable length, should have continued their remarks. Very often at affairs of this kind there is a surfeit of food and of oratory; but while there was plenty of edibles, and considerable speech-making, most of the members felt that the "talk" part of the program was too short.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

EDMONTON, ALBERTA, CANADA.

The affairs of Edmonton Lodge No. 732 of Edmonton, Canada, are in excellent shape. The lodge has changed its meeting days to Sunday, which is more suitable to its members. The lodge is making a steady growth, initiating candidates at each meeting, and is also paying much attention to the social and intellectual needs of its members. In addition to carrying out the aims and purposes of the Order, the members of the lodge are doing good work in the line of protecting the fair name of the Jew. In a number of instances undesirable news items were kept out from the public press, and a number of editorials on various Jewish questions were published. The lodge is now, through a committee, investigating certain charges made against a certain justice of the peace in the Province, who has been using his office as a means to persecute those who are opposed to him. In general, the lodge through its various committees is alert and keeping in touch with matters of interest to the Jewish cause.

HOUGHTON, MICH.

Brother Hiram D. Frankel of St. Paul, Minn., paid an official visit to Calumet Lodge No. 502, of Houghton, Mich., on January 25, 1914. A regular meeting of the lodge was held in the afternoon at the Temple in Hancock, Mich., at which a public installation of the officers elect was held, and in the evening a public gathering at the Odd Fellows' Hall, Houghton, at which Brother Frankel delivered the principal address. The day's program was concluded with a dance.

As a result of Brother Frankel's visit several applications for membership were secured from prospective candidates residing in the surrounding communities.

Calumet Lodge is very active and has done a great deal to create a wholesome atmosphere for the Jewish citizens of the district. It has handled a number of philanthropic matters, and in connection with the recent economic conditions the lodge had a number of difficult problems which were handled with much tact and good results.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

In conjunction with the installation of its officers, Jehuda Halevi Lodge No. 710 of New Britain, Conn., held a fine entertainment on Jan. 25, 1914, under the auspices of the entertainment committee of the lodge, of which Mr. M. D. Saxe is chairman. He made the welcoming address, speaking of the prosperous condition of the lodge, now entering on its third year, and made optimistic predictions for greater prosperity in the future. He introduced Mr. Jacob Caplan of New Haven, District Deputy, who installed the officers.

Mr. Caplan spoke on the appropriateness of the lodge's caption, "Jehuda Halevi," who was a renowned Hebrew poet and philosopher living in Spain during the eleventh century. Halevi's traits were great and self-sacrificing, and these noble characteristics are embodied in the principles of the B'nai B'rith order today.

Attorney Charles H. Shapiro of Bridgeport, Grand Deputy, delivered some well chosen remarks. Attorney Shapiro complimented the local lodge on its rapid gains and said that it was making a record for new lodges.

The entertainment was replete with pleasing vocal and instrumental solos which were cleverly executed by local talent.

HARMONY LODGE, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Public installation of the officers of Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., was held on Jan. 11, 1914. Col. Harry Cutler of Providence, Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 1, participated in the work and delivered a comprehensive address upon the problems confronting the Jewish people in America. Mr. Jos H Ullman of New Haven, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, spoke of the work of the Order in the New England States. Addresses were also delivered by Rabbi David Levy and Mr. Isaac Moss, the re-elected president of the lodge. A program of vocal and musical numbers was carried out, and at the conclusion of the meeting refreshments were served.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Louisville Lodge No. 14 of Louisville, Ky., held an open meeting on Tuesday evening, Jan. 27, in the assembly hall of Temple Adath Israel. A very enthusiastic crowd, numbering into hundreds, assembled to hear one of the most interesting programs ever provided by the lodge. Rabbi Jos. S. Kornfeld, of Columbus, Ohio, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, was the guest of honor, and the principal speaker of the evening. Mr. Jos. Seligman of Louisville presided as chairman. Rabbi Abr. Nowak and Rabbi Jos. Rauch also made stirring addresses.

Dr. Kornfeld declared the Jew must strive for a removal of unjust discriminations, political, business and social, in all parts of the world.

"Every Jew must so conduct himself before men," he said, "as to acquire respect. Your vote does not count for much. Your representatives will think, not of your political power, but your worth as a man when he has a measure to vote upon.

People seldom convince others of opposite view by argument. But there is no man good enough or bad enough that cannot influence others by his acts.

"America as a nation has done more to break down discrimination against the Jew throughout the world than any other nation. That is because the Jew is better known in America and known to a better advantage."

Dr. Nowak said the present tendency of the race was dissemination. The race must be held together by a great international ideal, he said, and this ideal should comprise brotherly love, benevolence, harmony, light, justice, peace and truth.

Following the speaking a smoker and reception was held.

EMES LODGE, SPRINGFIELD, ILL

Emes Lodge No. 67, of Springfield, Ill., held its second social meeting on Jan. 18, 1914. Dr. Beilin gave a lecture on the Jewish question in Russia, which contained a short survey of the early history of the Jews from the time of their settlement in Russia before the Christian era. Dr. Beilin in his excellent address showed how the Jewish question was really the Russian question, as the Bureaucracy is only attempting to cover up its own shortcomings by making the Jew the scapegoat. The lecture was well appreciated by a large audience and proved so interesting that it was decided to carry on further discussion of the subject at the next meeting.

JORDAN LODGE, NEW YORK.

Brother Wm. Asher, as outgoing president of Jordan Lodge No. 15 of New York City, submitted a printed report of the activities of the lodge during the past year, which has witnessed an increase in the membership of the lodge by the addition of 40 new members to its ranks. The new brethren have been gathered from all walks of life, some of them enjoying most honored reputation in their respective fields. Among them may be mentioned Mr. Eugene Lehman, faculty of Yale University; Rabbi Dr. A. S. Anspacher, Rabbi Dr. H. Pereira Mendes and Hon. Max Grifenhagen, sheriff of New York county. The work of the degree team of the lodge has been a potent force in impressing upon the new members the principals and purposes of the Order.

The entertainment committee of the lodge has done well, and it is due to its efforts that the first auxiliary of the lodge has been organized and the Bowling Club established. Jordan Lodge had a prosperous year to record.

SHREVEPORT, LA.

The annual meeting of Louisiana Lodge No. 107 of Shreveport, La., was held on Jan. 12, 1914, at the Columbia Club. The special order of business was the election of officers for the ensuing year and the election of delegates to the District Grand Lodge convention, which will convene in Shreveport on April 27.

A class of 120 candidates was initiated at the meeting, bringing the membership of the lodge up to 220. Immediately following the election and initiation of the class of candidates, the installation of the newly elected officers was held. A banquet followed, at which addresses were made by Dr. M. P. Jacobson, E. R. Bernstein, I. Barron, B. H. Lichtenstein and H. M. Weil.

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., gave the first of a series of entertainments, planned by its advancement committee. The success of the evening was due entirely to the efforts of the members and friends of the B'nai Ami club of New Haven, who generously volunteered their services in giving their entire minstrel show as it will be rendered at Music hall on February 4, under the auspices of the Annex A. C. The members of Horeb Lodge were highly pleased with the performance, and freely complimented the young men for their work. The following men, aided by the entire chorus of club members, took part in the entertainment: Albert S. Hyatt, Morris Frankel, Ben Bronfin, Fred Lehr, James McGearty, George McDonald, J. R. Shield, David Caplan, and two younger brothers, Thomas Maher, Moe Cohen, Charles B. Cole, Harry Price and C. B. Ziontz.

DAN LODGE NO. 593, CHARLESTON, S. C.

The year 1913 has been a banner year for Dan Lodge. Under the able and vigorous leadership of the President, Brother A. J. Hoffman, assisted by the other officers, the lodge has shown the greatest increase of membership in recent years.

Starting the year with eighty-six members, there was a gain of fourteen, making a total of exactly one hundred members in good standing, with sanguine prospects of more. The Charleston lodge is now in first-class condition, with abundant enthusiasm and interest being shown by practically all the members. The attendance at the regular monthly meetings shows a gradual increase.

At the annual meeting, held at the Tabernacle on Jan. 11, the election of officers for the ensuing year was held as follows: President, C. L. Pearlstine; Vice-President ,W. J. Bernstein; Monitor, A. J. Hoffman; Assistant Monitor, J. Fromberg; Treasurer, David Cohen; Secretary, M. J. Rubin; Warden, E. R. Rosenberg; Guardian, J. Flaum; Trustees, J. Tobish, J. Goldman and K. I. Pearlstine.

As usual, interesting events and problems were discussed by sevreal members, and after the meeting adjourned, a delightful collation was enjoyed by the members. The future growth of the lodge seems now assured, in membership, influence and morale.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

Under the auspices of B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421 of Salt Lake City, Utah, Brother Milton D. Joseph staged the I. O. B. B. road show at the Salt Lake theater on January 8, 1914, which proved to be one of the most pretentious and successful amateur theatrical efforts ever attempted in that city. The program was well balanced and pleased the audience and did much to bring the Order into public favor.

LINCOLN, NEB.

Lincoln City Lodge No. 377 of Lincoln, Neb., held a special meeting on Sunday, Jan. 11, 1914, on which occasion a class of five candidates was initiated. A special invitation had been extended to the members of Nebraska and William McKinley lodges of Omaha, and the degree team of these two lodges was in attendance to perform the initiatory ceremonies. After the close of the work addresses were made by the visiting brothers, namely: Rabbi Frederick Cohn, Isadore Ziegler and Harry Monsky, who reviewed the work of the Order. It was decided at the meeting that the Omaha and Lincoln lodges exchange visits frequently in furtherance of the welfare of the Order.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A series of lectures on the subject of "Social Hygiene" have been delivered in San Francisco under the auspices of the committee of Fifty, representing the local lodges.

On Jan. 14, 1914, Assistant City Attorney Henry H. Hart, delivered a lecture on the subject "Sociological Phases of Sex Hygiene."

On Jan. 21, 1914, Judge A. E. Graupner spoke on "Economic Phases of Sex Hygiene." Both of these lectures were well attended.

LONDON, ENGLAND.

The annual general meeting of London Lodge No. 663 of London, England. was held on Jan. 19, 1914. The following brethren were elected as honorary officers:

President—Brother Augustus Kahn, M. A.

Vice-President—Brother S. Rosenbaum, M. Sc.

Treasurer — Alexander Rubenstein, L. L. B.

Honorary General Secretary—Alfred Benjamin.

Honorary Foreign Secretary, Dr. S. Daiches.

Monitor—Dr. J. Snowman, M. D., M. R. C. P.

Ordinary Members of Council—Brothers Herbert Bentwich, L.L.B., Rev. Dr. M. Gaster, Dr. Hartwig Hirshfeld, Coleman P. Hyman, J. P., F. R. N. S. and Maurice Myers.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

On Wednesday, Jan. 14, 1914, Dallas Lodge No. 197 held its first meeting in the new B'nai B'rith Hall, recently constructed as the home of this lodge.

This meeting was made the occasion of much jollification and congratulations upon the acquisition of the new home and was attended by more than 100 members of the order. Rabbi Martin Zielonka of El Paso was a guest of the lodge for that occasion and delivered an address to 26 candidates who were initiated into the order on that evening.

The degree was conferred by one of the degree teams of Dallas Lodge, and the ceremony was most impressive. Addresses were also made by Grand President Arthur L. Kramer, Rabbi Wm. H. Greenburg and Rabbi Louis Eppstein.

In addition to the Lodge and commodious lodge room, B'nai B'rith Hall has, in conjunction, an excellently furnished library and reading room, a pool and billiard room and many other accessories found in well regulated club quarters. The hall is also used as the headquarters of the Federated Jewish Charities of Dallas.

The membership of Dallas Lodge now numbers 275, and it is hoped to increase this membership to more than 300 before the convention to be held in Shreveport on April 26.

Mr. H. S. Scheline is president of Dallas Lodge and Max Philipson, chairman of the propaganda committee, to both of whom much credit is due for the advancement made by Dallas Lodge.

EDWARD EVERETT LODGE, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Edward Everett Lodge No. 97 held its first meeting of the year, 1914, on Wednesday evening, January 7. The meeting was well attended. A memorial service was held, Brother William B. Ast, presiding. Program:

Address and Kaddish Prayer by Bro. William B. Ast; Violin solo, Cavatina, Raff, by Brother Joseph Nathan, accompanied on the piano by Brother A. De-Young; Baritone Solo, Oratorio, "Oh, Lord Have Mercy," Mendelssohn; Prayer by Bro. Rabbi Dr. Nathan Blechman.

Brother I. Irving Lipsitch, chairman of the Intellectual Advancement Committee, installed the officers for the ensuing term.

Brother Louis Kempner was elected for the third consecutive term as president, which shows in what esteem the brethren of the lodge hold him for his conscientious and indefatigable labors in behalf of the lodge and Order.

GATE CITY LODGE, ATLANTA, GA.

Much activity was manifested by the members of Gate City Lodge No. 144 of Atlanta, Ga., during December, during which month three meetings were held. On Dec. 9 the regular business meeting was well attended, and following this a social was given by the entertainment committee of the lodge at the hall of the Atlanta Home, on Dec. 17, which was largely attended. Owing to the large number of applications for membership, it was thought best to have a special meeting for initiation, which was held on Dec. 28, 1913.

At the social meeting Brother N. Coplan delivered a splendid address on "Young Men and the B'nai B'rith." As a result, a large number of young men present at the affair signified their willingness to affiliate with the lodge.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

UNITAS LODGE, STRASSBURG, CELEBRATES 25th ANNIVERSARY.

Unitas Lodge No. 375 of Strassburg, Alsacia, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary on December 7. All circles of the Jewish population of Strassburg participated in this celebration. The ceremonies were opened by an address by the President of the Lodge, head-teacher, Dr. Grombacher, who expounded the idea of the lodges, fostering of Jewish consciousness and activity in charity. Counselor of Justice Lange gave an epitome of the history of the twenty-five years of the existence of the lodge and stated, in his report of the social activities, that during the last decade the Jewish population of Strassburg has instigated hardly one movement in charity without the initiative and support of the lodge. The Union of Jewish Youths, the Ladies' Association, the Society for Vacation Colonies and the Itinerary Library were all called into existence by the initiative of the lodge, and all benevolent institutions, such as the hospital, the trade school and others have been materially helped by it. Privy Counselor Timendorfer, President of the District Grand Lodge, then spoke, and he was followed by other delegates. Manufacturer Otto Adler brought the greetings of the Consistory and thanked the lodge for its aid in social work. Professor Dreyfuss spoke in the name of the Jewish Congregation of Strassburg and stated that the congregation is indebted to the lodge for the reorganization of the religious instruction. Mrs. Knopf spoke in the name of the Ladies' Association and the Referendary, Dr. Weil for the Union of Jewish Youths.

In the afternoon a banquet took place, which was attended by about 400 persons. They were entertained with addresses on the significance of the day and some theatrical performances. The opening presentation was a play in which the ideals of the lodge were prominently brought into view. The entire celebration was carried out in a dignified manner and left a lasting impression.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

Chippewa Valley Lodge No. 334, of Eau Claire, Wis., held a celebration on Sunday, January 18, 1914. In the afternoon a meeting of the lodge was held, at which the newly elected officers were installed by Brother Chas. L. Aarons of Milwaukee, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge. In the evening the lodge celebrated B'nai B'rith Day, for which previous preparations had been made. There was a good attendance on the part of the members and their families. The program consisted of musical numbers followed by an address by Brother Aarons, and the evening's festivities were brought to a close with a dance. While the field for propaganda work in that district is rather limited and much new material cannot be gained, the lodge has been very much strengthened by the visit of Brother Aarons and the celebration.

WHEELING, W. VA.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by Wheeling Lodge No. 615, of Wheeling, W. Va., on January 11, 1914, at the Eoff Street Temple, which was open to the public. Brother Abr. Brill made the opening prayer and Brother L. B. Stein extended the B'nai B'rith greetings. A poem was then recited entitled "B'nai B'rith Welcome," by Mr. H. Front. Brother B. L. Rosenblum spoke briefly on the subject, "The B'nai B'rith," and he was followed by Rabbi David Lefkowitz of Dayton, Ohio, who delivered an address on "The Higher Loyalties and the B'nai B'rith." Musical and vocal numbers completed the program.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL.

An unusually large attendance marked the ceremonies incident to the installation of the officers of Paradise Lodge No. 237 of San Bernardino, Cal., on Sunday evening, Jan. 11, 1914. District Deputy M. D. Katz acted as the installing officer, and he was assisted by Geo. W. Seldner. After the installation ceremonies, a program of instrumental numbers and impromptu addresses delighted all, and this was followed by the serving of refreshments and an informal dance.

CHICAGO LODGES.

Under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council, representing the Chicago lodges, B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated on Saturday evening, Jan. 17, 1914, at the Hotel La Salle, with a banquet, etc., at which 800 members and their ladies participated. This occasion was honored by the presence of the members of the Executive Committee, to wit: President and Mrs. Adolf Kraus, Hon. and Mrs. Simon Wolf of Washington, First Vice-President Lucius L. Solomons of San Francisco, Treasurer Jacob Furth of St. Louis, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Hartman of New York, Judge and Mrs. Philip Stein of Chicago, Mr. Joseph Hirsh of Vicksburg, who assembled to attend the annual meeting of the Executive Committee. In addition to the foregoing guests of honor, Mr. Sylvan E. Hess of St. Paul, President of District Grand Lodge No. 6; Mr. Harry Simon of St. Louis, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2; Mr. and Mrs. Ben Braun of Milwaukee, the former treasurer of District Grand Lodge No. 6; Mr. Sol Levitan of Madison, Sergeant-at-Arms of the District Grand Lodge; Mr. Isaac Kuhn of Champaign, and the resident members of the general committee of the District Grand Lodge, were in attendance.

Mr. A. B. Seelenfreund, chairman of the Central B'nai B'rith Council, acted as toastmaster. Hon. Alexander A. McCormick, President of the Cook County Board of Commissioners, delivered an address on "Immigration and Its Effect Upon the Country." Mr. McCormick dealt in his address with the many advantages derived from the influx of immigrants, whose labor was instrumental in building the highways of the country and filling the workshops of the various industries.

Mr. McCormick was followed by Hon. Simon Wolf, who delivered the principal address, speaking on the subject of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, tracing in his address the development of the Order since its inception and reviewing its achievements in humanitarian service.

During the banquet a quartet entertained those present with songs. The evening's festivities were concluded with a ball.

The following evening, Sunday, Jan. 18, 1914, a joint meeting of the Chicago lodges was held in honor of the Executive Committee of the Order. For this occasion a class of 246 candidates was secured by the various lodges, of which number 148 were initiated by the degree team of the council, consisting of Brothers William Wilhartz, A. D. Weiner and A. B. Seelenfreund. At the close of the initiation, addresses were delivered by the visiting members of the Executive Committee of the Order, whose remarks on various topics, dealing with the affairs of the Order, were received with marked approval. At the conclusion of the addresses a buffet lunch was served and a social hour was spent.

Special committees had been appointed to meet the various out-of-town guests upon their arrival, escorting them to their respective hotels, and a varied program of entertainments for the gentlemen and their ladies was carried out, consisting of theater parties, private dinners, automobile rides, luncheons and sight-seeing tours through the city.

SASKATOON LODGE.

Saskatoon Lodge No. 739 of Saskatoon, Sask., Canada, is making much progress. Recently under the auspices of the lodge a night school for immigrants was established, and classes are being held twice a week under the guidance of Brother John Feinstein and Mrs. Arthur Rose, each of whom volunteered to take a class.

The subject of an Associated Jewish Charities was brought up at a meeting of the lodge, and a committee appointed to arrange for a public meeting, at which an attempt will be made by the lodge to bring about an Associated Jewish Charities.

Intellectually the lodge is also showing much activity. Recently an entertainment was given, which was largely attended and proved a social success. On January 27 a public installation was held, which was followed by a mock trial, many of the members taking part in the entertainment. The meetings of the lodge are well attended, and the members manifest much interest in the affairs of the lodge.

HILLEL LODGE, BROOKLYN, N. Y

Hillel Lodge No. 28, of Brooklyn, N. Y., celebrated its Golden Jubilee on Sunday, January 4, 1914, at Willoughby Mansion. A sumptuous banquet was served at the conclusion of which a number of addresses were delivered. The President of the District, Brother Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, Treasurer Sol. Sulzberger, and Secretary Reginald E. Zunder were the guests of the lodge. The program was as follows:

Invocation, Rev. Simon R. Cohen; Greetings, M. B. Schmidt; Hillel Lodge No. 28, I. O. B. B., S. N. Rebstock; The Independent Order B'nai B'rith, Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman; Hillel Lodge Fifty Years Ago, Ernst Nathan; The Past, Present and Future of B'nai B'rith, Morris Adler; The Old Guard, Bernhard Schmidt.

Dancing followed the program, the younger generation, which had been invited to partake of the hospitality of the lodge, being present in goodly numbers.

On Friday evening preceding the celebration memorial services were held at Temple Beth Elohim in memory of the departed brethren.

MORITZ LODGE, BRYAN, TEX.

Moritz Lodge No. 715, of Bryan, Tex., held the annual B'nai B'rith Day celebration on Sunday evening, January 11, 1914, at the Temple, which was filled to its capacity.

Beautiful music, reading and recitations were rendered by the wives and daughters of the members of the Order.

The speakers of the evening were Charles L. Sanger of Waco and Rabbi W. Willner of Houston.

Mr. Sanger's address was on B'nai B'rith and its mottoes, "Benevolence, Brotherly Love and Harmony." Rabbi Willner's subject was "Enlightenment," going back to the time of the victorious Maccabees.

The following was the program of the evening: Music, duet, Misses Regina and Rosa Hart; opening address, by President Samuel Levy, who was also chairman; address, Mr. Charles L. Sanger, Waco; reading, Mrs. Samuel Levy; recitation, Miss Regina Hart; music, Miss Rosa Hart; address, Rabbi W. Willner, Houston, "Enlightenment;" song, Miss Mary Kucze, accompanied by Mrs. Julius Levy.

Temple Freda was crowded with its members and families and out-of-town guests, and after the beautiful program, President Samuel Levy invited everyone to the lodge room, where an elegant banquet was enjoyed by all.

DEER CREEK LODGE.

Deer Creek Lodge No. 716, located at Rolling Fork, Miss., observed B'nai B'rith Day and installed the officers for the ensuing year on Jan. 25, 1914. Rabbi Sol L. Kory of Vicksburg, Miss., was the guest of honor of the evening and delivered the address. The organization of this lodge was the result of much work on the part of Rabbi Kory. Surrounding the town of Rolling Fork are many communities each containing a few Jewish families, which were uninfluenced by and were taking no active part in Jewish matters. To interest them in the welfare of Jewry and to bring these scattered co-religionists together the lodge was organized, and as a result more than 30 Jewish families living in various little communities are brought closer together.

MADISON, WIS.

An official visit to King David Lodge No. 641 of Madison, Wis., was paid by Brother Chas. L. Aarons of Milwaukee, Wis., First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, on Sunday, Dec. 14, 1913. A public meeting was held at the Grand Army Hall, and considering the size of the community, the attendance was large, every seat being occupied. The program, consisting of musical and vocal numbers, was rendered, after which an address was delivered by Brother Aarons on the work and aims of the Order. Immediately after the meeting a reception was held, and a social hour was spent. A splendid spirit prevailed and favorable results will no doubt be achieved, due to the visit of Brother Aarons.

DISTRICT NO. 1.

On January 13, Brother Rev. Dr. Maurice Thorner installed the officers of Friendship Lodge No. 695, of Danbury, Conn. After the installation exercises were concluded, a social session was held.

Applications for membership are constantly being received and a healthy increase is anticipated.

On Sunday, January 18, the installation of officers of Ansonia Lodge No. 70 took place before a large assemblage of brethren. A musical program was rendered and the session proved one of the most interesting held in some time.

Brother B. Berman of Horeb Lodge No. 25 installed the officers, giving them a very instructive talk. Brother Charles H. Shapiro, District Deputy for Connecticut, delivered a very pleasing address.

The installation of the officers of Jordan Lodge No. 15 of New York City took place on January 15, 1914, Brother Maurice P. Davidson, a member of the Grand Lodge, acting as installing officer. A large attendance was present, and a number of candidates were initiated. After the meeting refreshments were served at the West End. The newly elected officers have resolved to make the year 1914 an historic one, and a greatly increased membership is looked for. Arrangements have been made by the chairman of the entertainment committee, Brother Jesse Friedlander, for a dance to be held on March 18 at the Ellsmere, and a number of other important social and fraternal gatherings will be held within the next few months.

Among the fall and winter activities of Worcester Lodge No. 600 of Worcester, Mass., we report a lecture on January 27, 1914, by Rev. Dr. Allyn K. Foster. A further lecture has been scheduled for Feb. 24 next, on which occasion Rev. Dr. H. S. Bradley will address the lodge.

Memorial service in honor of late Brother Jos. Kashman, past president of Ararat Lodge No. 13, of Hartford, Conn., was held at a meeting of the lodge of Sunday, January 25, 1914. Rabbi M. Elkin gave the invocation and Rabbi H. W. Ettelson paid a personal tribute to the memory of the departed brother.

DISTRICT NO. 2.

Memorial services were held by Denver Lodge No. 171 of Denver, Colo., on Sunday morning, Jan. 25, 1914. The address was delivered by Brother Jacob J. Lieberman. The meeting was largely attended.

Denver Lodge No. 171, of Denver, Colo., has the following representation in the legal department of the State: Brother Samuel B. Disman is Assistant U. S. Attorney, J. J. Lieberman is Assistant City Attorney, and J. S. Fine is Deputy District Attorney.

Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 of Indianapolis, Ind., installed its newly elected officers on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 18, 1914, and following the installation a banquet was served in their honor.

Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 of Indianapolis, Ind., initiated a large class of candidates on Monday evening, Jan. 26. After the close of the meeting an entertainment and Dutch lunch were arranged in honor of the occasion.

At the B'nai B'rith Day celebration held under the auspices of Barzillai Lodge No. 111 of Lafayette, Ind., Mr. Emil Mayer of St. Louis, Past President of the District Grand Lodge, was the guest of honor. In addition to the address delivered by him, Mr. Stanley Bero, representative of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, also spoke, reviewing the work of the society which he represents.

Rabbi Louis Bernstein of St. Joseph, Mo., delivered an address on Sunday evening, Feb. 1, 1914, at Temple Israel, St. Louis, under the auspices of the social service committee of District Grand Lodge No. 2 and the St. Louis B'nai B'rith lodges. His subject was: "The Modern Trend of Social Service."

DISTRICT NO. 3.

Under the administration of Brother J. H. Rubens, the new president of McKeesport Lodge No. 573, of McKeesport, Pa., active preparations are being made for the raising of funds for the furnishing of one of the cottages of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage of District No. 3, located at Erie, Pa.

A joint meeting of Ezekiel Lodge No. 90 of Newark, N. J., and the Ladies' Auxiliary, was held on January 28, 1914. At the conclusion of the meeting an informal dance was held. The affair was a social success and was instrumental in securing for the lodge ten new candidates. At the regular meeting a class of six candidates was initiated, and this was followed by a report of Brother David Holzner as delegate to the District Grand Lodge convention recently held in Philadelphia.

Under the auspices of Rodef Sholem Lodge No. 139 of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., a committee of six, Brother Jos. D. Coons as chairman, was appointed to take the necessary steps to confer with the city authorities and managers of moving picture theaters to prevent the presentation of objectionable films that tend to defame the Jew.

At the regular meeting of Wheeling Lodge No. 615 of Wheeling, W. Va., held on Sunday morning, January 11, 1914, the officers elected for the ensuing year were installed by Rabbi Abr. Bill, representing the president of District Grand Lodge No. 3.

The ladies' auxiliary of Braddock Lodge No. 516 of Braddock, Pa., held an open meeting on January 14, 1914. The feature of the evening was an address on "Woman" by Gertrude B. Fuller, prominent in the suffrage movement and a speaker of rare ability.

The annual meeting of the ladies' auxiliary of Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672 of Pittsburgh, Pa., was held on January 21, 1914. At this meeting the election of officers took place and the reports of the officers, reviewing the activity of the auxiliary for the past year, was presented. Matters pertaining to the B'nai B'rith orphanage at Erie were discussed.

Braddock Lodge No. 516 of Braddock, Pa., will hold memorial services on Sunday evening, Feb. 22, at Carnegie Hall. Rabbi Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburgh will deliver the memorial address.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

On Tuesday evening, January 13, 1914, Los Angeles Lodge, No. 487, of Los Angeles, Cal., which boasts of a membership of 525, the largest on the Pacific Coast, held a very enthusiastic meeting, at which time the election of officers took place.

One of the most brilliant affairs in Jewish circles given for some time was the first annual ball of Tacoma Lodge, No. 741, of Tacoma, Wash., which was held on January 15, 1914. The "tango" made a hit with the many out-of-town guests present. Light refreshments were served during the evening.

At a meeting of Occidental Lodge, No. 345, of San Francisco, Cal., the officers for the ensuing year were installed by Grand President I. M. Golden and other members of the General Committee.

On January 7, 1914, Ophir Lodge, No. 21, of San Francisco, Cal., acting in conjunction with its auxiliary, Daughters of the Covenant, held a joint installation of their officers. The affair was attended by a large gathering of the members and their ladies. Grand President I. M. Golden installed the officers, assisted by Grand Secretary I. J. Aschheim. The officers of the Ophir Auxiliary were installed by Mr. Arthur W. Jonas, Past President of the lodge, assisted by L. K. Samuels, the President of Ophir Lodge. Miss Y. Marks, retiring President of Ophir Auxiliary, addressed the gathering and short addresses were also made by the officers of the Grand Lodge. Well selected musical numbers interspersed the program and made the evening most enjoyable.

At a special meeting of B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421, of Salt Lake City, Utah, held on December 28, 1913, the election of officers for the ensuing term was held, and at the following meeting, held on January 6 1914 the newly elected officers were installed by District Deputy Henry Cohn.

The Committee of Fifty, representing the B'nai B'rith lodges of San Francisco, held its annual banquet on January 29, 1914 at the Hotel Bellevue. A number of novel features were introduced as entertainment during the affair.

Modin Auxiliary, No. 3, of San Francisco, composed of the wives, daughters and [illegible] of the members of the San Francisco lodges held its third annual [illegible] on Sunday January 11, 1914.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

Plans are being perfected for the annual meeting of the District Grand Lodge, which will convene in Atlanta, Ga., this year, on March 22, 1914. As the Silver Jubilee of the Hebrew Orphans' Home, maintained under the auspices of the Grand Lodge, will be held in conjunction with the convention, the largest attendance in years is expected.

An activity of which Gate City Lodge No. 144 of Atlanta is justly proud is the formation of the Alliance Boys' Club, of which Brother I. Cassett is president.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

The officers of Green Bay Lodge No. 618 of Green Bay, Wis., were installed at the January meeting of the lodge. The lodge is now making plans for the first of a series of informal social evenings to be held on Feb. 16 at the Elks' Hall. Green Bay Lodge has been quite active during the past few months, increasing its membership materially, and its members are manifesting much interest in the affairs of the lodge.

The first informal ball given under the auspices of the ladies' auxiliary of the B'nai B'rith Lodge of Lincoln, Neb., held on Nov. 25, 1913, was a great success. At the regular meeting of the above auxiliary, held on Dec. 28, 1913, Rabbi Max Merritt of Evansville, Ind., delivered a stereopticon lecture on the Holy Land.

As a result of the visit of Brother Hiram D. Frankel of St. Paul to Calumet Lodge No. 502 of Houghton, Mich., several applications for membership have been presented to the lodge, and effort is being made to secure a class of ten to be initiated by the degree team on March 15, 1914.

The meeting of Winnipeg Lodge No. 650, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, on Jan. 15, 1914, was an exceptional event. After a class initiation by the regular degree team, through which eleven new members were added to the roster of the lodge, the regular meeting was closed and the hall was thrown open to the members of the ladies' auxiliary and other friends to listen to a delightful address delivered by Brother Jos. Barandas of New York, who while on a pleasure trip to the city readily responded to an invitation to address the lodge. Brother Barondas delivered the most witty and interesting oration that the members had the chance to listen to for some time. A sincere and appropriate vote of thanks was moved by Brother M. J. Finkelstein, the Vice-President of the Lodge, and was seconded by Brother H. E. Wilder.

Minnesota Lodge No. 157, of St. Paul, held an open and very well attended meeting on January 8, on which occasion the President of the District, Brother Sylvan E. Hess, installed the officers of the lodge. Honorable Julius A. Schmahl, Secretary of State for Minnesota, delivered a splendid address on the Panama Canal, treating on its history and of its efficiency. The meeting was concluded with a ball. The new administration of the lodge is composed almost entirely of newer members and bids fair to have a successful and aggressive term of office.

Under the auspices of the Central B'nai B'rith Council representing the Chicago Lodges, a card party was held on Thursday evening, January 29, at the drill hall of the Masonic Temple, Chicago. More than 300 members and their ladies were in attendance and enjoyed a pleasant evening. Various prizes were distributed, and at the close of the evening refreshments were served.

At a meeting of Julius Houseman Lodge No. 238 of Grand Rapids, Mich., held in January, a class of candidates was initiated and several new propositions were presented. The lodge also held a dancing party on January 27, 1914, on which occasion the ladies of the congregation furnished a supper, and the entire affair proved a great success.

At a regular meeting of Racine Lodge No. 697 of Racine, Wis., held on Wednesday, January 28, 1914, Mr. Chas. L. Aarons of Milwaukee, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, paid an official visit to the lodge, installed the officers for the ensuing year, and also assisted in the initiation of two new members. The attendance was good and the meeting was interesting. Brother Aarons delivered an address on the work of the Order, which was well received.

Covenant Lodge No. 569 of Duluth, Minn., is arranging for a systematic campaign which will include a general canvass of the city, with a view of a large increase in the membership of the lodge. The lodge has in view a local association, namely, an employment bureau to be operated in connection with the Galveston removal work, and it is expected that this will be organized at the earliest possible time under the auspices of the lodge.

A public installation of officers was held by Minneapolis Lodge No. 271 of Minneapolis, Minn., on the evening of January 19, 1914, Past President Brother Jonas Weil acting as installing officer. Following the installation dancing was indulged in, refreshments being served by the ladies of the lodge.

At the last meeting of Council Bluffs Lodge No. 688, held on January 28, 1914, four new applications were presented. In general the lodge is progressing, and it is expected that good results will be shown during the present year.

o

DISTRICT NO. 7.

The eighth annual Chanukah ball given by Herzl Lodge No. 608 of Houston, Tex., held on Jan. 14, 1914, was a big success. During the evening various artists demonstrated several of the new and late dances which were favorably received.

The installation of the newly elected officers of Herzl Lodge No. 608 of Houston, Tex., was held on January 12, 1914, Brother S. J. Westheimer acting as installing officer. The attendance at this meeting was the largest for many months, and an era of activity and prosperity is foreseen by all interested in the lodge.

At the regular meeting of Moritz Lodge No. 715, of Bryan, Tex., held on Sunday, January 18, 1914, the newly elected officers were installed by the District Deputy.

The annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 7 will be held on Sunday, April 26, 1914, at Shreveport, La.

Rabbi Martin Zielonka of El Paso, at the request of Grand President, Arthur L. Kramer, recently made a tour of East Texas and officiated as orator at several celebrations of B'nai B'rith Day.

Dr. Zielonka participated in the first meeting of Dallas Lodge No. 197, held in its new home, B'nai B'rith hall and then delivered addresses at Corsicana, Tyler and Ft. Worth.

Dr. Zielonka is an earnest and eloquent speaker and his masterly address was received with enthusiasm and appreciation wherever it was delivered.

Gulf Lodge, No. 221, of New Orleans, La., held an interesting meeting on Wednesday, January 28, 1914, on which occasion a number of interesting subjects were discussed. The officers for the ensuing term were installed, Past President A. Steg acting as installing officer.

Under the auspices of Zadok Lodge, No. 155, of Selma, Ala., B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated at the Harmony Club on Sunday, February 8, 1914. The program consisted of invocation by Rabbi Abel Hirsch, followed by musical and vocal numbers, and the principal address by Mr. Isidor Shapiro, of Birmingham, Ala.

The employment bureau maintained by the Berlin lodges of the Order B'nai B'rith announces that in the months of October and November it found positions for 588 out of 620 applicants, no charge being made to either employer or employed. Of the persons placed, 267 belonged to different branches of business, 149 were shop assistants and clerks, and 172 artisans. For forty-nine persons were found situations where Sabbath observance was allowed. The bureau maintains a "writing room" for copying work of all kinds, in which many people are given temporary occupation.

o

DISTRICT NO. 11.

Mr. J. Niego, President of the B'nai B'rith Grand Lodge of the Orient, Constantinople, accompanied by Dr. David Markus, representative of the Hilfsverein, proceeded to Adrianople and Salonika to study the Jewish situation and ascertain in what manner relief may be extended to those in need.

The B'nai B'rith Grand Lodge of the Orient, located at Constantinople, is engaged, in collaboration with the Haham Bashi of Turkey, in the collection of all imperial Firmans against the blood libel charge.

RUSSIAN PEASANTS BECOME JEWS.

The Russian authorities have discovered that a number of peasants of the Tersk district have adopted Judaism. A whole sect of converts to Judaism has also been found in the province of Voronez.

MINUTES OF MEETING OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The matter of allotting propaganda funds to the various Districts was then taken up. After full discussion it was moved by Brother Lucius L. Solomons that the sum of $300 be appropriated to each of the American Districts. Motion was adopted. It was then moved by Brother Charles Hartman that the sum of $200 be appropriated as an additional allotment to District No. 1. Motion was lost. It was moved by Brother Lucius L. Solomons that the sum of $200 be appropriated as a special allotment to District No. 2. Motion was lost

The question of forming a District Grand Lodge in Canada was then brought up for discussion by Brother Philip Stein, and it was moved by him that the Advisory Committee be requested to investigate the advisability or need of forming a District Grand Lodge in Canada and to submit full report to the Executive Committee at its next meeting. Motion was adopted.

It was thereupon resolved that propaganda in Canada be continued as heretofore under the auspices of District Grand Lodge No. 6, subject, however, to the supervision of the Advisory Committee and that all expenses in connection with such propaganda be borne by the Executive Committee of the Order.

The awarding of the gold medal to the man or woman, regardless of creed, who had contributed most during the past year to the welfare of the Jewish cause was next taken up. After full discussion it was moved by Brother Simon Wolf that Dr. Adolphe Stern of Bucharest, Roumania, in recognition of his many services, be the recipient of the medal. Motion was adopted by the affirmative votes of all present excepting Brother Lucius L. Solomons. He stated that on the merits he agreed with the other members, but that in his opinion the medal ought not to be voted to any one who is a member of the Executive Committee of the Order, and for that reason only, he votes "No."

Brother Jacob Furth then presented the question of maintaining the office at Washington and advocated an increased allowance for such maintenance. Resolved that the sum of $300 per annum be appropriated as an additional allowance for the maintenance of the office at Washington.

The Secretary then called the attention of the Executive Committee to the B'nai B'rith Kindergarten at Constantinople, informing that he secured subscriptions in the sum of $722 and that there is a balance of $278 unprovided for. It was thereupon moved by Brother Philip Stein that the President of the Order be authorized to furnish out of the funds of the Executive Committee whatever amount may be short to cover the full subscription of $1,000 to the Constantinople Kindergarten. Motion was adopted.

The Secretary then informed the Executive Committee that District No. 1 will hold its convention on February 1 at Springfield, Mass.; that District No. 2 will meet on June 7 at Toledo, O.; that District No. 3 will meet at Philadelphia on January 25; that District No. 4 will meet on February 15 at San Francisco, Cal.; that District No. 5 will meet at Atlanta, Ga., on March 29; District No. 6 will meet on the first Monday in July at a summer resort not yet decided upon; District No. 7 will meet at Shreveport, La., on April 25. It was thereupon resolved that Brother Simon Wolf be delegated to attend the convention of District No. 1 and represent the Executive Committee on that occasion; that Dr. E. N. Calisch attend the sessions of District No. 2; that the Secretary, Brother A. B. Seelenfreund, attend the meeting of District No. 3; that Brother Philip Stein attend the sessions of District No. 5; and that the President of the Order attend the sessions of District No. 7. Owing to the fact that the Constitution Grand Lodge of the Order will meet in San Francisco the coming year no assignment for that District was made.

It was thereupon moved by Brother Jacob Furth that a vote of appreciation and thanks be tendered to the President of the Order, Brother Adolf Kraus, to Brother Philip Stein, to the Central B'nai B'rith Council, to the Chicago lodges of the Order, and to the ladies and members of the Order constituting the various committees for their attention, courtesies and hospitality extended to the members of the Executive Committee during their stay in Chicago. Motion was adopted unanimously.

The President thereupon addressed the meeting and adjourned it sine die.

A. B. SEELENFREUND,
Secretary.

SILVER JUBILEE OF THE HEBREW SHELTERING AND IMMIGRANT AID SOCIETY

The 25th annual meeting of the Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society was held at the auditorium of public school No. 62, New York City, on Feb. 25, 1914. Several thousand persons filled the hall to its capacity and many hundreds had to be turned away.

Among the auditors were many who came from distant cities. It was an appreciative audience, applauding the work of the society and the addresses of the speakers. President Leon Sanders faced a crowded hall when he rose to read his annual message. He received much applause when he alluded to the work of the society and especially when he expressed his sentiments regarding the restriction of immigration.

Speaking of the quality of Jewish immigration at present coming to these shores he said:

"The new immigration has traits that justify the highest praise and gives us the assurance that we have nothing to fear as American citizens from their settlement in this country. Whenever illiteracy is found among them it is due in a majority of cases to the fact that they come from lands where education is not provided, and is even prohibited.

"The Polish boycott is bringing to us men of standing in their communities, who have been ruined by the fierce antagonism of business rivals; skilled workmen whose work has been boycotted by chauvinist Poles; men of education and professional skill, whose fields of activity have been snatched from them by a conspiracy of enemies. I have seen with my own eyes proud heads of households left penniless, sitting in our dining room eating of the bread of affliction with streaming eyes, whose proud boast it had been that the poor once were sheltered by them.

"The blood accusation in Russia is also sending here capable men and women who have severed their connection with a land which harasses and persecutes them, whose children are deprived of educational opportunities. They are future citizens of whom any land may be proud."

President Sanders took exception to the charges that are made against the immigrant in relation to the white slave traffic. On this point he said:

"I am constrained to protest against the white slave alarms that connect the Jewish good name with this nefarious practice. These alarms are sent out with reckless frequency by some of our own co-religionists and are then re-echoed by our enemies. It is cruel to suspect every unaccompanied Jewish immigrant girl as a victim of white slavery, and it is unjust and untrue to charge that Jews are to any large extent interested in this phase of social vice.

"We take no exception to the wise regulations prohibiting the entrance of persons afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases. The criminal and the immoral person should be excluded, but we protest against the classification of men and women as criminals who have been guilty only of protesting against inhuman treatment. There are few Jews excluded on the ground of criminality, but I am firmly convinced that many of them are thus classified because Russia charges the escaped victim with crimes that are not crimes in this country. The man engaged in spreading education, the woman preaching a better social order, the writer denouncing tyranny, ought not to be regarded as a criminal when he reaches this democratic land, which has been built up by the protestants against old-world intolerance, bigotry and governmental tyranny."

His criticism of the Department of Labor, on the question of the admission of the children of naturalized citizens, made a deep impression upon the Secretary of Labor, Hon. Wm. B. Wilson, who sat at the right of the President.

After the disposal of the business of the meeting, the election of directors and members of the Advisory Board, the adoption of amendments to the constitution, President Sanders introduced as the first speaker of the afternoon Secretary of Labor Wilson.

Mr. Wilson spoke of his personal experience as an immigrant coming here from Scotland, expressed his views on immigration, and concluded with a survey of the duties of the Department of Labor in matters of dispute between capital and labor. On immigration he spoke of the good work of the society, and expressed his appreciation of the honor of being invited to address the meeting, but he seemed to be opposed to the admission of immigrants who might lower the high standards of American living. Mr. Wilson is a forceful speaker, well versed in economic problems, especially as they relate to the conflicting interests of capital and labor.

The second speaker was Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, who came into the hall while Secretary Wilson was speaking. Mr. Schiff was greeted by the audience rising and applauding. He was introduced in glowing terms by President Sanders, who said that as a member of the Advisory Board of the Society Mr. Schiff was consulted and interested in every progressive step taken by the institution.

Mr. Schiff regretted that he had not heard all that Secretary Wilson had said, but from what he gathered he wanted to express his approval of nearly all the Secretary had said on the differences between capital and labor, and his disapproval of some of the views expressed by him on immigration.

Mr. Schiff spoke with great feeling, and took occasion several times to express his confidence and approval of the work of the society. He said that he himself had come to this country as an immigrant boy, and it took him three months to find a place for himself, and yet he felt that he had made good anyhow. This remark brought laughter from the audience. Mr. Schiff addressed his further remarks directly to a reply to Secretary Wilson and to the advocates of the literacy test. He said that the present immigration laws were sufficient, and the only thing needed was distribution. He spoke of the Galveston work, and deplored the shortsightedness of the government, which, instead of fostering and stimulating the Galveston work, sought, at least during the previous administration, to put obstacles in the way of the Galveston distribution work.

Mr. Schiff was followed by the Rev. H. Masliansky, who delivered one of his characteristic orations.

Mr. Abraham I. Elkus, one of the directors of the society, was the next speaker. Mr. Elkus confined himself to a dispassionate but convincing argument against the literacy test, which, he said, was no fair test nor an effective test for any purpose. He dwelt more particularly on the assertion of Secretary Wilson regarding the disturbance by the immigrants of the high standard of living. He said that at no time in the history of the world has the standard of living been as high as in the United States during the past fifty years under liberal immigration laws. The immigrants, he argued, had raised the standard, not lowered it.

The Hon. Henry M. Goldfogle, member of Congress, argued against the literacy test and the points made by restrictionists.

In the evening, after the annual meeting had been adjourned, Secretary of Labor Wilson, accompanied by President Leon Sanders and many officers and directors of the society, attended a performance of Schomer's "The Yellow Passport" at Adler's Dewey Theater.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

Address by Mr. Martin A. Marks

At the Annual Dinner of Cleveland Lodge No. 16, I. O. B. B., on Washington's Birthday, February 22, 1914

On Dec. 14th occurred the 114th anniversary of Washington's death. Today is the 182nd anniversary of his birth, and it has been deemed fitting that a few words be said upon this occasion, at a time rich in promise and patriotism and ripe in hallowed memories.

We have become a great and mighty nation, laden with fruits that are golden of the years we have come through. Those years were years of saving that ours might be the harvest. Years when our colonial fathers met and endured all forms of pain and fought a foreign foe and maybe died, that through their death, we, a generation yet unborn, might come to the greatness that we are.

They were content to make their lives but prophecies, that ours might be the utter fulfillment. They were content to go through dark to dawn, that ours might be the day. They were content to be martyrs to the cause of liberty that our feet might be free. They loved principles better than princes—even if brothers to an emperor—and held that character was better than a crown. And so that marvelous march was made from Lexington through the pitiless plain of Valley Forge, on to the deathless day of Yorktown, and we today, in the century new, cannot, must not fail in word or deed of the fulfillment of all for which they fought.

We say of the past—it was good—of the present, it is splendid—and we must say of the future—it shall be sublime!

Washington was dowered in a rare degree with that uncommon gift, called common sense. It is that gift which enables men to look beyond the little agitations of the day to that sure truth to which experience must at last arrive.

It is that mental power which can reach through time a hand to catch the ultimate solution the future holds in store. It has none of that brilliancy which arouses enthusiasm or unnatural fervor. It leads through slow and uncertain paths by well-considered steps to a sure and lasting greatness. It makes each question solved, each duty done, the base and basis of higher achievement.

Washington was not a genius—that is to say—he was not eccentric or impulsive. Others show with greater brilliancy—but his was the way that went without gilt or glitter up to the highest exaltation.

France has a magnificent tomb, carved and gilded, which she has built for a Napoleon. The sentiment of its lettering is vaunting and vain. Its matchless marble is the gift of mercenary motives. He who pauses there thinks of the pomp and splendor of that tomb, a fit monument of the man it so aptly portrays.

Our nation has carved no gilded marble to keep alive the deeds of Washington. More eloquent than carved stone are the grateful heart-throbs of a mighty nation. At the tomb of Napoleon, we admire the marble—at the tomb of Washington, we are awed into silence and reverence for the man. One, led by ambition, went to the glory of Austerlitz and on to the fatal day of Waterloo, and again on to the exile and black and barren rocks of St. Helena. The mighty influence of the other, led by loyalty to his country, had by comparison just begun the day he died. Napoleon's guide was genius. Washington's guide was judgment.

His critics have said of Washington that in no particular was he great. The superficial student might accept that estimate as being true because in no one quality did he greatly excel another. And this was taken as proof that he was great in none. The same logic would conclude that because no one point of the rounded ocean was higher than another, it was neither deep nor vast.

The fault in the philosophy is in concluding that because he was equally great in all things, he was especially great in none. Other men may have possessed in the same degree one of the rare gifts of this wonderful man, but none was found in which they were all so happily combined.

If we look for courage, it was found in him—in the superlative degree. Upon his heart there never fell a shadow of fear. For seven years he was the voluntary mark of English bullets, and that, too, in a war that at first seemed almost hopeless, and when later, in 1798 it seemed almost certain that our frail army should be pitted against the powerful force of France, he stood ready to take the field against the great Napoleon.

In unselfishness of character he was sublime. He left a home of affluence and ease and a fortune behind him, and to the cause of his country gave his energy and for it he risked his life. And from the scant treasury of the land he served, he refused to draw even the meager pay of his rank. Afterwards, when the devotion of that country tendered him a third term, feeling that the Nation was firmly fixed on the map of the world, he declined the offer.

In truth and honor he was the man ideal, from boyhood to old age, he clothed himself in robes of truth and mantels of honor. In patriotism he was without a peer. But one voice could command him—that of his country. But one motive marked every movement of his life—that motive was his country's need.

In executive ability he was slow but unfailing. Others in the frenzy of enthusiasm might leap to conclusion, but he calculated with unerring certainty every step, and from the sure position reached, he never wavered. Lifting a few scattered colonies by force of arms into the altitude of a Republic and planting the face of that Republic toward our present greatness, he attested the excellence of his worth.

In moral and religious life, he was stainless as a star. In thought and speech he had the rare uncommon gift of modesty. But what he spoke and wrote will live forever in the literature of the race.

He it was, above all others, that bid defiance to old forms and powers and planted on this western soil that which has endeared his name, especially to us Jews, the seeds of lasting civil and religious liberty. He builded not for a day, nor a year, but for all coming time, upon the eternal foundation of equality, of right, duty and responsibility. We may well wonder if, keen in vision as he was, he foresaw the grandeur and glory that in a hundred years would mantle the country he gave to the map of the world—the rich and powerful states to be added to the thirteen colonies made out of territory then alien and unexplored.

He never drew a sword except in defense of independence and equality. He never sheathed it in the presence of tyranny. He felt the sting of cold and hunger and ever offered to give up his life that we might have the heritage of being free.

At last the triumph of Yorktown was reached. From our shores tyranny retreated. To us was given the inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Who was to launch the new Ship of State? One name alone was acclaimed by every voice—the name of Washington. The experiments of free people, armed with the sublime right to select the rulers of their choice, was to be put to test and trial. A new flag was to enrich the heavens and command its share of the seas. A new nation has been born to the family of the Earth. The keeping of that flag and the honor and protection of that nation were consigned to Washington, 300,000 miles of territory then, nearly five millions of territory now; three millions of people then, ninety-two millions now! weak and impoverished then—rich and mighty and majestic now. And everywhere and over all floats and flutters the stars and stripes—the flag of the Republic.

Many a one of these States is greater in area than the whole British Isle—many a single state is larger than the whole of France, and some equal to Germany. A half-hundred of these states are blended in this great Republic. But the greatest glory of our people is not our vast domain. Our wealth is not our greatest pride. Our highest honor—our strongest fortress—is the security of the happiness of our homes. That which most of all exalts our people is to sit beside our firesides and in the light of happy faces read the prophecies of all that is to be. It is to live with those we love and feel that they are free. It is to hear the lisp of children's lips and see the old familiar face we love glowing in the firelight. It is to know that from the door of every home, whether cot or palace, climbs the path to highest and most exalted trust. To feel that full upon the face of every boy and girl there falls the light of opportunity—to know that up from every hearth and home there springs the incense of eternal hope.

Navies filled with commerce—the tireless hand of steam and steel dividing fields and forests—the reapers' song amid the ripened grain—the whirl of busy factory wheels mingling music with the whistled tune of him who toils—the leap of children just let out of school; and everywhere the opportunity without money and without price to secure an education; such is the nation that delights to call Washington its founder and father.

As that heritage has been handed down to us, growing better, grander, freer, all the time—so let us transmit it to our children. What the future has in store for us none can tell. What infant blessings are nursing in the lap of years, we cannot guess. What splendid inventions will yet be born in the brain of the future, we do not know—but this we do know, that a life of liberty, energy, culture—is a life of growth. We know—
"The circling sunlight never spanned
A brighter or a better land."

We know we have the broadest valleys, rich in fruit and flowers. Mountains hiding under their mantels the richest minerals and the grandest rivers that ever ran to meet the seas. And here in the West, if we but preserve the virtue of the people and our nation's integrity, we will continue to be the greatest nation of the world.

One by one the despotic powers of the earth are changing into forms like republics. One by one old tyrannies are being trampled under foot and in their stead will rise governments like our own. This century may see a universal freedom for the race—future years may yet realize the poet's dream:

"When the war-drum throbs no longer.
And the battle flags are furled
In the parliament of man and the Federation of the world."

THE POWER IS YOURS—USE IT.

In our article on the first page concerning the country-wide crusade against the 'Hebrew comedian" moving picture abomination, it will be found that two of the pictures mentioned are Lubin productions. Our readers should bear the fact in mind that Lubin is a Jew and that "The Missing Diamond," or "The Lost Diamond," whatever its name may be, also "A Stage Door Flirtation" are both the products of the Lubin concern, in Philadelphia.

Mr. Sperling took the proper course in writing Mr. Lubin personally.

Write Lubin and other producers of the hideous things. Then write or tell your local managers that unless they stop these pictures you will positively refuse to patronize them any longer.

There are plenty of decent respectable places in the city. It is not necessary to spend your money for the purpose of being insulted and libeled.

[illegible] away from these places. There [illegible] other way to bring them to time [illegible] their pocketbooks and make them [illegible].—The Jewish Independent.

THE JEWISH PEOPLE

Some of the Characteristics That Have Made Them Remarkable Among The Nations of the Earth

By JOHN D. BARRY

Every now and then something happens that shows how much of the elemental barbarism remains in our society. A fierce racial prejudice will burst like flame. Someone who, it would seem, ought to know better, will commit a wholly unprovoked act, or say a gratuitously outrageous thing about a race or some member of a race that he fosters ill-feeling against. Of recent years several such incidents have taken place. In themselves they are merely pitiful, far more damaging to those who feel the prejudice than to those it is designed to harm. In a way we are all sharers in the blame. For the prejudice represents a wide-spread social attitude which we passively submit to. If it were disgraceful for any one of us to betray race prejudice there would be no such outbursts.

In the case of prejudice against the Jewish people there is so much wrong-headedness, so much stupidity, that at times it seems absurdly grotesque. Burke used to say that you couldn't indict a nation. In his remark we all recognize the obvious truth. It ought to make us see the folly of indicting a race.

One alleged reason for feeling prejudice against the Jewish people is not without humor. In a frankly competitive world we blame them for possessing the very qualities that make success. Meanwhile we go on cultivating those qualities ourselves. Incidentally, we ignore or we pretend to ignore the qualities that make the Jews supreme in other fields where competition is by no means a distinguished feature, in the many departments of art. So brilliant have the Jews been as artists that it is impossible to survey the great artistic achievements of the past without being profoundly impressed by the extent and the quality of their contributions. In literature, in painting, in sculpture, in singing and in acting, they have given to the world a vast number of great figures. And in the supreme art, the art of living, they have given us the teacher that we regard as the wisest and noblest of all leaders.

There are those who profess to believe that the anti-Semitic feeling is largely due to the sacrifice of Jesus by the Jews. It was unquestionably true that the conservative Jews were opposed to him and wished for his death. But the circumstances could not possibly create a reasonable prejudice against the Jews of today. Besides, it is decidedly questionable whether it has any real relation to the prejudice except as affording an ingenious and an insincere excuse. Once established, whatever may have been the start, prejudice, whether against the Jews or any other people, is hard to eradicate, especially if it indirectly flatters those that give it expression. There are still many who take a certain pitiful self-satisfaction in being able to regard themselves as superior to others. Even in race prejudice they find nourishment for their vanity.

Just as we all suffer for our prejudices, so do those subjected to the prejudice achieve gain. The very obstacles placed in the way of the Jews have tended to preserve and to increase their strength as a people. There is no people on the earth with such solidarity. Even the influences that are now operating to win them from the old religious traditions cannot take from them their racial devotion. Through all their vicissitudes, through their dissipation to the four corners of the earth whenever they can, they get together. They stand as one people. Observe them in a great city. They build there a social world of their own. And wherever they are they show the spirit of enterprise, of self-improvement and of intellectual and moral vigor. When we criticise them for their love of worldly success, we forget the large numbers of poor among them. One reason is that they never allow their poor to be thrust on the mercy of the world. They are far too loyal. In every large city there are great hospitals and homes where the poor of the Jews are gathered and well cared for.

In Boston and New York I have seen impressive illustrations of the well-known love of the Jews for education. Often I used to go down to the settlements largely devoted to newly arrived Jews in this country. It was inspiring to see them in their classes, some of them old, some in middle life, and all eagerly at work. In lecturing on educational subjects I used to be impressed by the eagerness of the Jews in the audiences. It seemed as if all the denials met in the past had given them a fierce appetite for opportunities to learn.

In New York there has lately been an agitation, said to be encouraged by Jews, for the purpose of keeping "The Merchant of Venice" out of the public schools. When I heard of it I was astonished. As a rule the Jewish people are very much interested in this play. It seems to be one of their favorites among the plays of Shakespeare. Not long ago when I was asked to lecture before a Jewish club here in San Francisco it was suggested that my subject be "The Merchant of Venice." There is, however, no doubt that the Jews have excellent reasons for objecting to a type like Shylock being held up as characteristic of their race. Perhaps the recent agitation is in line with a growing feelng that every effort should be made in this country to discourage racial ill-feeling. Many of the Jewish theatrical managers are refusing to allow the caricatures of Jews that used to make audiences laugh to be given in their theaters. The Stage Jew of the past dozen years will soon be exterminated.

In this country, where the Jews have long enjoyed comparative immunity, it is hard for us to conceive of the indignities they are still subjected to in Europe. There is a story told of Tolstoy during a call paid at his house by the Jewish poet, Dolitsky. Just as the poet was about to leave, Tolstoy said: "It isn't safe for you to go out. They are likely to recognize you as a Jew and cause you some trouble." Dolitsky, however, insisted. "Well," said Tolstoy, "the best thing you can do is to imitate a drunken man. Then they will take you for a Russian."

I recently heard of Jewish girl students, going studying in St. Petersburg, being forced to register as prostitutes. On such girls the police have been known to try to force prostitution. Dr. Aaron Aaronsohn, when he was visiting this city, told me that on his return to his native Roumania, after spending many years in Palestine, he was appalled and humiliated by the restrictions and the indignities placed upon the Jews. No wonder that Mary Antin, author of "The Promised Land," when she came as a child to this country from Russia, was astonished and delighted to find that she could really go to school and study and enjoy the privileges of other human beings.

If suffering is good for the individual, it must be good for a race. But there is such a thing as too much suffering. The Jews have already had more than their share. It has unquestionably developed in them, however, qualities of endurance and of courage. Its more harmful effects are occasionally seen in a kind of humility that expresses itself is a subservient manner. But, way down deep, the Jews are not at all subservient. On the contrary, some of them err through pride. This weakness, not unknown to other races, tends to develop in them distinctions of class that, after their experience, they ought to be superior to. Occasionally it causes a Jew to be blind to the richness of his inheritance and to deny his Jewish blood. Such cases are pathetic. On the whole, however, the Jews are exceedingly loyal to one another. Perhaps, under modern conditions, it is unavoidable that they should tend to fall away from the severe practices of the ancient faith and to adopt the views and the habits of the civilization to which they are so intimately bound.

A NEW JEWISH HOSPITAL IN PARIS.

The construction of the new Rothschild hospital, which will form an imposing ensemble and will be a fresh monument to the munificence of the family whose name it bears, is on the point of completion. The old buildings in the Rue Picpus will be retained, but they will serve exclusively as a home for aged Jews.

A JEWISH ALDERMAN IN TORONTO.

For the fi[illegible] many years, a Jew, in the pe[illegible] L. Singer, has been elected an [illegible] Toronto. Mr. Singer is one of [illegible] young lawyers in that city and [illegible] arded as a coming man, both i[illegible] eral and Jewish affairs. His ele[illegible] has been received with great satisf[illegible] by Jews and non-Jews alike.

JEWISH TRANSLATION OF BIBLE COMPLETED.

Many prominent Jews of the country gathered in New York City on February 11th to celebrate the completion of the English version of the Bible written by Jews for Jews. The original purpose was to secure a Bible that shall be representative of the spirit and teachings of all shades of Judaism in this country. To this end a committee of eminent Jewish scholars have labored, and the result of their work was commemorated at a banquet given at the Jewish Theological Seminary, at which Mr. Jacob H. Schiff presided. The chairman of the committee that had charge of this important work is Dr. Cyrus Adler, president of Dropsie College, Philadelphia. His associates on the committee are Solomon Schecher, president of the Jewish Theological Seminary; Dr. Samuel Schulman of Temple Bethel; Kaufman Kohler, president of the Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati; Dr. David Philipson, of Cincinnati; Dr. Joseph Jacobs, professor of English in the Jewish Theological Seminary and editor of the "American Hebrew," and Prof. Max L. Margolis of Dropsie College, who is secretary of the committee and editor-in-chief of the work of translation.

It was twenty-two years ago that the Jewish Publication Society of America decided that the Jews' needs were entitled to a Bible which should tell in simple English the ancient story of the Jews and tell it without even the unconscious Christian coloring of the early translators.

Six years ago the society saw that it was arriving nowhere and the present committee was appointed, the members adopting the plan of meeting for three ten-day sessions a year and circulating the work in the interim. The plan has proved a success and the Jewish Bible is an accomplished fact.

The splendid diction and phraseology of the King James version are largely retained with the addition of whatever improvements in accuracy are to be found in the revised version of 1885.

JEWISH CHAUTAUQUA SOCIETY.

A [illegible] of the [illegible] held [illegible] various activities of the Society were presented which indicated marked development and expansion.

The report of the Correspondence School was presented by the Dean, Dr. William Rosenau, showing the enrollment of eighty-four students and thirteen certificates having been awarded to students who have completed courses. Several students are enrolling in additional courses. Applications for registration are being daily received from Congregations who realize that the need that has long been felt for special professional training to be given to the teachers of Religious Schools, is being supplied by the Chautauqua Society. The course on Ethics is now completed in printed form and advance orders have been received for it. Four other courses of study are also being arranged in printed form. Much interest has been awakened by the production of the two books by Chancellor Berkowitz, The New Education in Religion. This work is the ripened product of thirty years of labor on the part of the author and aims to present a practical mode of applying Pedagogical principles to the specialized field of Jewish Education. The Society is the sole agent for these books and inquiries should be sent to the home office.

The Union of Jewish Literary Societies has extended a cordial invitation to Doctors Berkowitz and Rosenau to take part in the Conference which will be held in New Castle about the middle of June and explain the general Chautauqua movement and Correspondence School.

The outline of the work for the Summer Schools in the various Universities was presented. This movement which was inaugurated by the Chautauqua Society to supply instructors on Jewish themes to the faculties of the various Summer Schools throughout the country has been attended with most gratifying results, in the University of North Carolina, the State Normal College in North Carolina and Summer School of the South at Knoxville, Tenn. and University of Virginia. Upon the urgent solicitation of these Universities the work will be resumed this summer and similar work in Columbia University in New York City and other eastern Universities.

THE KEHILLAH

BY PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph.D.

V.

All intelligent people will agree that Jews are victims of widespread prejudices. Even antisemites who have some degree of fairness left, will admit that Jews do not, and never did kill Christian children to fulfill the requirement of some mystic ritual. Even before the days of bacteriology sensible people knew that the Jews could not have spread the plague by poisoning wells or smearing some salve on the doors of the houses, and that they do not possess a peculiar odor, which miraculously disappears after they have become baptized. One peculiar notion, however, seems ineradicable. Everybody, including some fairminded friends of the Jews, believe that the Jews are rich. Not that I would consider this a disgrace, but for the sake of plain historical truth, I wish to prove that this statement is unfortunately not true. Way back in the early part of the fourteenth century the celebrated rabbinic author, Jacob Ben Asher, presents in his code Orah Hayim, (sec. 242) the following religious question. He was too poor to buy wine for Kiddush, and so he asked his father: Asher Ben Jehiel, also a famous rabbi, who in 1305 had immigrated to Germany from Spain, what he should do. The father declined to answer. He was too strict a legalist to say that wine might be dispensed with in the ceremony of greeting the Sabbath, and had too strong fatherly feeling to demand of his son that he chose the other alternative of doing one day in the week without a meal, in order to comply with the requirements of the Sabbath law. One can easily imagine how poor a man must have been, who did not possess enough money to buy a glass of wine once a week. Nor is it likely that such a case formed a rare exception.

When one has traveled in Russia, as the present writer, and seen the family of a carpenter, in Wilna live in one basement room, partitioned off to serve for two families, or when one has seen the misery in Tunis, or in Constantine, Algeria, where one-third of the population are actually beggars, one feels as if the proverb, "rich as a Jew" were a satire. Even in our own country, however, where conditions are not as bad as they are in the old kingdom of Poland, or in the Barbary states, the economic condition of the large masses of Jews, is far from prosperous. This fact looms up very largely in the question of education. In 1871, when I attended the Gymnasium at Nikolsburg, my father, dissatisfied with the slow progress I had been making in the Talmud class, conducted by the congregation, engaged Reb Shimme as private tutor to give me instruction in Talmud. I received five lessons a week, of two hours each for which Reb Shimme was paid two Gulden (82c) per month. Somewhat later I had outgrown Reb Shimme's instruction, and was placed under the charge of Reb Yossef Knoepfmacher, who gave me three lessons a week, of one hour each, and was paid four Gulden a month. Reb Yossef received as Dayyan (assistant rabbi) of the congregation, a salary of 200 Gulden (eighty-two dollars) per annum, He died in 1909 at the age of ninety-four. How he managed to raise a family of ten children on his salary, to which must be added the salary he received as "Rebbe" of the Neuschul, and whatever perquisites he may have had, and presents which he received, I do not know. I am sure, however, his position was quite comfortable, compared with that of Reb Shimme, who was Shammes at the Reb Nochem Gloser Schul, and at one time Shochet. This economic hardship is also seen in the education of children. A boy in his teens, usually after he was Bar Mitzvah, was sent away from home to a Yeshibah. There he supported himself by free meals (Taeg) which charitable people gave to him. Sometimes he would also receive free lodging, but more often he had to pay this part of his sustenance. The free board was usually limited to a light breakfast, consisting of a cup of chickory decoction, euphemistically called coffee, and a piece of dry bread At noon he received the only solid meal, which changed according to the situation of the family whose hospitality he enjoyed. In the evening he subsisted on a piece of dry bread, which was given to him at noon, and to which charitably disposed and affluent patrons added an apple, or a handful of walnuts. It was exceedingly rare, if it ever occured at all, that a Bochur had seven "Taeg" a week. My father was about twelve years of age, when he was sent to the Yeshibah in Eibenschuetz, where at that time Rabbi Baer Oppenheim, a descendant of the family, best known through the famous court Jew and millionaire, Samuel Oppenheimer (1630-1703), was rabbi. The place was within walking distance from his native town Kanitz, about six miles, or as people used to say, an hour and one half distant. Usually the boy was supposed to go around from house to house, or to secure through a friend free meals. My father had four such days provided for him. Two were given him officially, while two others he received from the respective ladies of the house, without the knowledge of their husbands, who like most of the Jews of that time, spent the week peddling in the country. One day the husband came home unexpectedly, and the little boy of the family, spying the father coming home from a distance, shouted: "Mama send the Bocherlech away, father is coming!" In another instance, he had his regular official meal on a Sabbath with a well-to-do family. The Jewish heart would not allow any poor man to go without a meal on Sabbath, but even this was not always given generously. He had taken his meal on Friday evening with his patrons, and retired after grace was said. Coming home he noticed that he had forgotten his handkerchief. He returned, and found the family still at the table, partaking of roast goose. The boy had his part, and it was not considered necessary that he partake of all the delicacies of the table. Such smallness would not be intelligible, were it not for the economic stress, under which people were living. How a boy managed, when he was fed so poorly on four days, to get over the three days, on which he had no meal to depend on, is hard to conceive. Usually he subsisted on the weekly allowance of a loaf of rye bread, which his father brought to him or sent to him, and we know from Mendelssohn's biography, for instance, that he made notches in his loaf of bread to mark the quantity which he might eat every day. From a later period, about 1834, when my father was student at the Yeshibah in Pohrlitz, he told me the following story. On a day, which was no "Tag" for him because his board was not provided for, a fast day fell. This might have been considered a fortunate incident, had it not been for the evening, when nature demanded her right, after the religious enthusiasm has cooled off. It was on the 17th Tamuz, a long summer day, always at the end of June, or in the early part of July, the fast lasting until complete darkness, about 9 P. M. His cash consisted of one Kreuzer, but in these good olden times one Kreuzer bought nine apples, and on this he made a meal to break the fast.

Similar conditions existed still when I attended Gymnasium, which I entered as a non-resident student, appearing only twice a year for examinations, in 1868, and as a regular student in 1870. Quite a number of out-of-town students were still dependent on the free meal system for their sustenance, and when my father told me of the hardships he had undergone, and I saw the humiliation to which some of my poor fellow students were subjected, I did feel that times had changed for the better, although even those who, as was my case, paid for their board, did not consider themselves entitled to the comforts, which American boys of the poorer classes, consider their birthright.

Of the change in the educational system I have spoken already in a passing way. The first great change came through the policy of Emperor Joseph II, who imbued with the views of Rousseau and Voltaire, encourage secular education among the Jews. It was rare, however, that Jewish boys availed themselves of the privileges granted to them in higher education. Thus the Yeshibah still flourished in the first part of the nineteenth century. The Yeshibah of Nikolsburg, the central seat of learning in the province, and in the country, second only to that of Prague, had an old well-established reputation. Alexander David, court Jew and pioneer of the Brunswick congregation, (1687-1765) left in his will a bequest for ten Talmud students at the Yeshibah of Nikolsburg who should study a chapter of the Mishnah every day, during the year following his death. He left similar bequests for Halberstadt, his native place, and for Frankfort. As he had no personal relations to Nikolsburg, the bequest proves that the city, so remote from Brunswick, had an international reputation. A similar bequest was made by Michael David, Alexander's brother, who occupied a similar position at the court of Hanover, and died in 1758. It would be tempting to follow up the work of Jewish financial magnates of the eighteenth century, as Maecenases of Talmudic learning. As Michael David established a "Klaus" devoted to rabbinic studies in Hanover, so Berent Cohen established such an institution in Hamburg, Lemle Moses Reinganum in Mannheim, Veitel Heine Ephraim, the financial advisor of Frederick the Great, and ancestor of George Ebers, in Berlin, Zacharias Wertheimer in Frankfort a. M., Baerman Faenkel in Fuert, and others in other cities. Most of them have either disappeared or exist under entirely changed conditions. It is also a sad feature of Jewish history that the descendants of most of these magnates have left Judaism. The descendants of Michael David, who according to the stipulations of the founder of the institution, have a seat on the Board of Trustees, are all Christians. Nikolsburg had not such a generous, and wealthy patron, though it undoubtedly has a number of small legacies. It was not very much affected by Emperor Joseph's policy, though some natives of Nikolsburg, like Romeo Seligmann, the physician and friend of Ottilie von Goethe, the daughter-in-law of the great poet, was professor in the medical department of the University of Vienna. Under Mordecai Benet, the greatest rabbi which Nikolsburg had in modern times, who held his office from 1791-1829, no decline in Talmudic studies was noticed. The Yeshibah still numbered as many as 300 students. After his death, and during the tenure of office of his successor, Nehemiah Trebitsch, 1833-1842, the decline was noticeable. The Landesrabbiner denounced secular education as high treason, and in one instance refused to grant a license to a subordinate rabbi, Abraham Neuda, who was reported as a student of German books, but the movement spread. Vienna had in 1826, elected I. N. Mannheimer as preacher. Prague established in 1837, a "Temple fuer Geregelten Gottesdienst." Germany had already about twenty years previously proceeded along the same lines, and the smaller congregations prepared to follow. The young men attending Yeshibah felt that if they wished to secure their career for the future, they must abandon the idea of rabbinic exclusiveness. The Plutocrats, succeeding the Ephraims. Wertheimers, Oppenheimers, etc., who had their sons educated as Talmudists, and selected for their daughters, Talmudic scholars as husbands, had entirely different ideas about education. The less well-to-do classes, followed, and finally, the revolution of 1848 changed the system completely. About that time the congregations established regular schools for primary education. The old-fashioned Melammed who after the regular Hebrew lessons gave a modicum of instruction in the three R's, made room for a regular teacher. The latter was usually a graduate of the Yeshibah, who had acquired education in an autodidactic way, and attended a half year's course at a normal school, or passing an examination before a board of examiners, received a teacher's certificate. Nikolsburg had established its school in 1839, my little Kanitz, in 1852 These teachers, while autodidacts, were very efficient pedagogues, because they had experienced in their own life, the deficiencies of an autodidactic course. They were also supported by the enthusiasm of the population, who expected—and rightly so—from an improved education, a better economic and social future for their children.

This secular culture of the youth could not be without influence on the religious life of the community. The teacher was a far more important personality than the rabbi, and so there was often a strained relation between the two. Even Zunz, at the opening of the Berlin normal school in 1840, spoke enthusiastically of the change of times that had broken the tyranny of the rabbis. He uttered these words in the presence of old rabbi Jacob Joseph Oettinger. Herz Homberg, the most pronounced type of the rationalistic era, following Moses Mendelssohn (1759-1841) proposed in a memoir to the government, that the office of rabbi should be entirely abolished and that the teacher should take his place. The attitude of the rabbis of the old school shall be discussed in the next article.

Situation of the Jews in Russia

Persecution of Jewish Artisans.

Measures of oppression by the government against the Jews of different classes and in different cities have very much increased of late. The police have now begun to close shops belonging to Jewish artisans in accordance with an old regulation that artisans may sell only wares of their own manufacture. As many Jewish artisans sell not only their own products but also goods manufactured by other firms, their shops were suddenly closed. Their goods were confiscated and the owners were brought into the courts.

"Converted" Jewish Students.

All Jewish converts who have accepted Christianity so that they may be admitted to the leading Russian universities will have to go through a rigid examination before they are accepted, according to a statement issued by the Minister of Education, M. Kasso. The minister declared he found such a ruling necessary, in view of the fact that many students are "converted" simply as a means of getting an education and not from conviction.

Jews Expelled from Villages.

The anti-Jewish campaign in the Vistula provinces is becoming more rigorous. Seven hundred and fifty families have been expelled from various villages and communes in the province of Petrika. The Jews have hitherto enjoyed the right of domicile in these places, but the Polish boycotters accuse the Jews of endeavoring to monopolize commerce. The Russian authorities support the Poles in their attitude.

Jews Outside the Pale.

The Prefect of St. Petersburg, Major-General D. V. Dratchevsky, has instructed the police of the capital that the order dated October 9, 1908, on the issue of trade certificates to Jews, has been modified in accordance with the latest interpretation of the Senate. The Governing Senate has ruled that Jewish chemists' and doctors' assistants, dentists, and midwives can only retain their right of residence outside the Pale of Settlement so long as they exercise their special calling.

Outrageous Expulsion of Jews at Yaroslavl, Russia.

The Commissioner of Police at Yaroslavi, M. Dolivo-Dobrovolsky, who was recently transferred to that district from Odessa, is showing himself to be a worthy disciple of the Tolmatcheff school.

He has just ordered the expulsion of an infirm Jewess, aged eighty, who has resided in the locality for the last sixty years and has been maintained by her daughter. He has also expelled a Jewish sausage maker on the extraordinary ground that he has not confined his activity to the preparation of sausages, but has also been in the habit of purchasing meat for their manufacture.

Jews Forced to Buy Anti-Semitic Paper.

The limit in arbitrary government has been reached in Kovno, where by order of M. Griaseff, the Governor of the Province, all semstvos and small burghers within his jurisdiction are obliged to subscribe to the "Litovskaia Russ." The newspaper is the most scurrilously anti-Semitic sheet in the old Polish provinces and at least two-thirds of the small burghers are Jews, who are thus compelled to subscribe to a journal whose very object is the calumniation and villification of their own race.

Jewish Rite Attacked.

The Minister of Justice has announced to the Cabinet of Ministers his intention of preparing a bill prohibiting the Jewish method of slaughtering animals. M. Kokovtsoff and the Auditor-General have expressed their agreement with the principle of the bill, while pointing out the necessity of working out its details carefully, as the abolition of the "basket tax" on meat slaughtered according to Jewish rites would involve a considerable financial outlay from other sources.

No Privileges for Perverts.

The Right in the Duma is drafting an appeal providing that the privileges as regards domicile and admission into educational institutions of converted Jews shall be restricted for the first five years after their renunciation of their faith.

SECRET HISTORY OF RITUAL TRIAL

A Travesty of Justice in Russia---Dastardly Plot Beaten by Lucky Chance

When the Kieff jury acquitted Beiliss, the Russian Press and the Press of the world cried, "Once more the Russian peasant has saved the good name of Russia from eternal disgrace." This is the story of how the jury came to acquit Beiliss. It was told to me by one who sat in court throughout the trial, and after the trial heard it from the lips of one of the jurymen. It is the story of the struggle that went on in the minds of those twelve men throughout the forty weary but fateful days of the trial, of a momentous struggle decided by an accident. It is a story which shows how trifles may make history—when the trifles are handled by determined men. It is a true story, which could not be true outside Russia; it is a story which has not been set out in print before.

Black Hundred Jurors.

When the trial opened eight of the jurymen entered the box with copies of "The Two-Headed Eagle," the organ of the Black Hundreds, in their hands. It represented their determination to convict, which a ninth colleague shared. The Government in selecting the jury had omitted no precaution to secure a conviction. Seven were peasants, each of them the leader of the Black Hundred organization in his village; and they had the further reasons for conviction which tell with peasants. For some it was enough that the Government desired a conviction; for others a conviction was an act of courtesy due to officials who were showing such polite consideration to the jury. The eighth juryman was a notorious leader in the pogroms of 1905. Of the remaining four, one was a Social Democrat. He owed his place to an accident. He was a petty official, and among the petty officials from whom he was chosen was another man of the same name, a member of the Black Hundreds whose vote against Beiliss could be counted on. By a confusion of persons the Socialist X. was picked instead of the Black Hundred X.

A Stubborn Four.

When the reading of the indictment began nine were for conviction, and three for acquittal. The reading of the indictment detached one from the nine. It left no doubt in the mind of one of the seven peasants of Beiliss' innocence. There were now four against eight, four men determined to save Russia from the shame of a conviction. The evidence of the witnesses, the skill of the experts, the craft of the counsel left the eight jurymen unmoved; but by day and by night, every moment that the jury were out of court, the four wrestled, argued, appealed. They wrestled with the eight over meals, they wrestled when the eight desired sleep. For twelve days the struggle lasted without a trace of effect, and so tense became the conflict that the eight asked to be allowed to eat and sleep apart from the four. On the twelfth day the four discovered the first hint of success. One of the peasants ate very little, and instead of sleeping passed the night in praying to God for guidance. He owned some houses in the country to which Jews came in the summer, and he had insisted that, though the Jews who came to him did not shed the blood of Christian boys, other Jews assuredly did. The trial however, shook this naive faith. Still the wavering lasted six days, and it was not until the eighteenth day of the trial that he swung over definitely. The "identification" by Vera Chebervak of the writer Sablonovsky with the lawyer whom she alleged had attempted to bribe her—the one touch of humor in a prolonged tragedy — convinced this peasant that the case against Beiliss was a tissue of lies and absurdities.

Chance of a Letter.

For acquittal there were now five, for conviction seven. To save Beiliss at least six must vote for acquittal. Another juryman must be won over, and the five consulted long and hard how one at least of the seven could be detached. Argument and persuasion were idle; chance and the excessive zeal of the Government for a conviction effected what they failed to do. The pogrom leader on the jury received a letter from his wife. He was a shopkeeper and his wife wrote that, under the stress of Jewish competition, his business was dying in his absence and that unless the trial ended quickly he would be utterly ruined. Such a letter would never have been delivered to a juryman; it was the reference to Jewish competition which induced the officials to allow it to pass. Instead of securing, as was intended, the conviction of Beiliss, it secured his acquittal. The pogrom leader, through the Judge, urged the experts and other witnesses to be brief. He begged his colleagues on the jury to help him cut things short. This anxiety to be away and return to his shop delivered him into the hands of the five.

A Threat of Delay.

The Russian law provides in addition to the twelve ordinary jurymen two reserves. If enough jurymen fall ill to reduce the strength of the jury and the reserves below twelve, then the proceedings are suspended. The sick men are given thirty days in which to recover, and during this period all the other jurymen are kept segregated. If after thirty days there are still not twelve men available the trial has to begin all over again. The five for acquittal took the pogrom leader. They took the pogrom leader apart, and they told him that if he did not swear on the cross that he would vote for the acquittal of Beiliss, and that he would keep his promise secret from his six companions, three of the five would fall ill and remain ill for the full thirty days. To show that they meant business three at once began to manifest the symptoms of a serious malady, and called in a doctor. For two days the pogrom leader held out. In the end he yielded and swore on the cross that he would vote for Beiliss. They were then six to six, and the acquittal of Beiliss was now certain.

Surprise for the Government.

But that was not known to the outside world. The Government, the prosecution, and the Black Hundreds were certain of a conviction; the defense, knowing how the jury had been packed and the trial had been conducted, expected the same result. Every preparation was made for turning the conviction into an impressive demonstration of the victory of reaction. Special services were arranged in the churches for five o'clock, the hour which the President of the Court had timed the case to finish. Crowds thronged the square before the court-house, and incitements to a pogrom had been spread broadcast. Early in the afternoon the Black Hundred men in court left to put on festive costume. At 4:30 the jury left the box. Five o'clock came and they had not returned. That was the first flaw in the official program. It was six o'clock before the jury filed in and pronounced their verdict. But for the accident of dividing the question put to the jury into two parts, not only would Beiliss have been acquitted—the whole ritual murder legend would have been condemned. The pogrom leader had only sworn to acquit Beiliss; and so it came about that, while six voted for and six against the innocence of Beiliss, only five voted that the murder did not take place on the Zaitseff estate against seven who voted that it did.

The Blunder of Excess.

It was hardly the peasants who saved Russia from the shame of convicting Beiliss. Yet in a sense it was something Russian that did. A jury of "intellectuals" could have been got together absolutely certain to convict, proof against any troubling of the conscience, ready both to swear and break the oath. To that the uneducated Russian, even the Black Hundred man, was not equal to. Throughout the Government blundered by excess.

Cossacks Embrace Judaism

The "Semstshina" reports that the number of Cossacks in the Caucasus who have embraced Judaism is increasing and that they remain in the communities as before they were converted to Judaism. In one of these Cossack villages the converts built a magnificent synagogue, where they assemble every Sabbath for worship.

The "Semstshina" further reports that several military commanders relieve these Cossacks from military duty on Jewish holidays and help them with money to be able to eat Kosher. During the progress of the Beilis case thirty-four of these Cossacks sent a friendly telegram to Maklakoff, the defender of Beilis.

Annual Convention of District Grand Lodge No. 4

District Grand Lodge No. 4 held its 51st annual convention at San Francisco beginning on Feb. 15, 1914. Delegates from all the lodges in the District were in attendance.

Prayer was offered by Rabbi Jacob Bloch, and after the roll call of officers and the appointment of standing committees for the convention President Isidor M. Golden read his message, which was an able, comprehensive report reviewing the affairs of the District during the past year. Reports of the Secretary, Treasurer and other officers were read and approved. From the foregoing reports it was shown that the District is in good condition from a financial standpoint as well as from the standpoint of efficiency.

During the Sunday afternoon session memorial services in memory of the deceased brother, Past Grand President David S. Hirschberg, were held. Eulogies were delivered by Past Grand Presidents George Samuels, Abraham Jonas, Otto Irving Wise, G. C. Ringolsky and H. Newburgh, paying tribute to the memory of the deceased and lauding his services, not only to the Order but to Judaism in general.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Morris N. Schneider, Oakland, Cal.; First Vice-President, Harry K. Wolff, San Francisco; Second Vice-President, Harry Newburgh, San Francisco; Treasurer, Joseph L. Goldsmith, San Francisco; Secretary, I. J. Aschheim, San Francisco; Trustees, Edmund Tauszky, Henry Mauser and Milton Meyer; Sergeant-at-Arms, Emil Cohn.

The principal work of the convention during the Monday session was a discussion of the question as to whether Jews with Christian Science affiliation were eligible to membership in the Order. It was decided that such could not join the Order.

By far the most important action was the unanimous approval of every act performed by the General Committee in the carrying out of the plan abolishing the endowment system, adopted at the special session of the Grand Lodge held in September, 1913. The basis taken for the pro rata allotment of stock among the endowment members was approved of by the Grand Lodge as fair and just and as being the only basis that could have been adopted in view of the destruction of the early membership rosters of the District.

Another action of importance was the confirmation of the lease on the Eddy street property. Every provision in that lease was ratified and the general policy pursued by the General Committee in forming the new relationship between the Grand Lodge and the B'nai B'rith Hall Association, or rather its new stockholders, was confirmed.

The following amendments to the general laws were adopted:

General laws known as the "Laws governing the general widows' and orphans' beneficiary fund" were revised to conform to the plan adopted at the special session. The most important changes in the law are the following:

The premiums will be payable to the Secretary of the Grand Lodge direct instead of to the lodge as before.

The rates have been raised in accordance with the calculation made by the actuary.

The General Committee is empowered to levy special assessments if necessary

Beneficiary members must maintain their standing as members of their respective lodges, otherwise they drop from the endowment.

A beneficiary member is entitled to his allotment of shares of Hall Association stock any time he surrenders his certificate.

The law governing the election of representatives to the Grand Lodge was amended, making it clear that the representatives must be elected at the time the election of officers of the lodge is held.

Another amendment stipulates in precise terms that the per capita tax must be paid quarterly in advance.

The committee managing the San Francisco gymnasium, consisting of nine members, will from now on be formed by the appointment of six members by the chair, allowing those six members to choose three additional members from the general membership of the Order in San Francisco.

A resolution was adopted creating a standing committee to be known as Ladies' Auxiliary Deputies. The committee consists of five members for San Francisco and one each for Portland and Spokane, with the authority to the President to appoint additional deputies for each city in which a ladies' auxiliary shall be hereafter organized.

A resolution was adopted that the Grand Lodge sessions be inaugurated by the attendance of the representatives in a body at a Sabbath eve service and that at such service a program planned by the General Committee be followed.

The usual memorial resolution remembering the past presidents who died during the year was adopted with due solemnity.

The sum of $250.00 was appropriated to the Jewish Orphan Home at Los Angeles, Cal.

The matter of securing admission for outside orphans in either of the Jewish orphan asylums of the coast was referred to the General Committee for consideration and report at the next convention.

An amendment offered allowing proxies to be voted at the election of officers was referred to a special committee of five.

The question as to whether the Grand Lodge shall express its approval of the tendency toward a consolidation of lodges was referred to a special committee of five.

Occidental Lodge No. 345 of San Francisco conferred the initiatory degree on a class of candidates during the closing session of the Grand Lodge.

The retiring president, Brother Isidor M. Golden, was presented with a handsome silver service as a token of appreciation of his work as president of the Grand Lodge during the past year.

The convention thereupon adjourned sine die.

CHEVRA KADISHA ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY YEARS OLD.

In the month of April of this year the great Chevra Kadisha of Vienna will celebrate the jubilee of its existence of one hundred and fifty years. A number of festivities and acts of benevolence in harmony with the tendency of the Chevra Kadisha are in preparation. The sude (banquet) of the Chevra, which is always a brilliant social event of Vienna Jewry, will this time take place in the great hall of the Konzert house. The establishment of a Recreation Home in Baden, near Vienna, is one of the most prominent of the contemplated acts of benevolence. The Chevra Kadisha has acquired a house in Baden with a beautiful garden plot and is providing it with the improvements demanded by modern hygienic rules to make it suitable for a Recreation Home, in which impoverished members of the Chevra Kadisha in need of medical treatment and later on also poor sick Jews of Vienna in general shall find temporary recreation and recovery.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE ELECTIONS IN BULGARIA.

Recently the Chamber of Commerce elections took place in Bulgaria. In each of the Boards of Sofia, Burga and Varna, one Jewish member was elected.

THE NEW GERMAN NATURALIZATION LAW.

The naturalization of foreign Jews in Germany is made almost impossible by the new naturalization law, which originally was thought to be of great advantage to foreign Jews. Hundreds of cases are of record where Jews who resided in Germany for more than twenty years were rejected when applying for naturalization. According to the new naturalization law, no one can be naturalized in Germany if one of the other federated governments in the empire opposes the application, and it is generally known that Prussia is hostile to the naturalization of foreign Jews. Before the new law became operative the several states could act in this respect in such manner as they pleased and naturalize anyone they deemed worthy. The situation now has however been radically changed, as it requires unanimous consent of all the federated states to naturalize a foreigner.

JERUSALEM TO BETHLEHEM.

A concession for the construction of a street car line running from Jerusalem to Bethlehem and also for the lighting of Jerusalem by electricity was recently granted by the Turkish government to a French company.

The Good Name of Jew

An Anti-Defamation League

Reprinted from the Jewish Chronicle of London

The wisest of all men said, it is a mere superfluity to observe, many a wise saying. But it is doubtful whether, in the long catalogue of aphorisms and adjurations that are attributed to King Solomon, there is any wiser than that in which he declares that a good name is more to be desired than fine oil. We can leave to the Preachers or Rabbis to draw from this short sentence the homiletic influence of which it is capable. We can leave to them to point out how, between material riches and wealth of character, there is a difference as between the snow which can melt away by sudden changes of temperature and the immovable rock which will withstand the wear and the tear of ages. We can leave to our spiritual guides the more personal application of the words of the son of David in urging what should be the life conduct of the individual. But it is questionable whether Jews as a people are as keen about the good name of Jew as they should be. Whether our people are as diligent and as earnest in defending the Jewish name from the onslaughts of our enemies as they ought to be, is a point of some importance. There is a disposition, an almost traditional dispositon, among Jews to treat attacks upon Jews with a contempt that has become magnified into a national characteristic. It is the disposition by Shakespeare's Shylock, to make of sufferance the badge of all our tribe. It is a question which may be worth examining in preference to reverting for the moment to the subject which has been adumbrated in these columns during the last week or two and to which attention at a later date may be necessary.

It is not to be wondered at, when we come to think about it, that our attitude towards the slanderers of our people takes the form which is here expressed. A people that has lived perforce, or existed perforce, as has the Jewish people for upwards of twenty centuries, would have been either something more or something less than human had it preserved the characteristic of being prepared keenly to resent insult when directed at them from without. The yearning for Sholum in relation to their environment, a state which our people so seldom experienced, was a reason for hesitancy. The desire for a condition of rest which was constantly denied them was why the Jew instinctively preferred to suffer rather than to offend by defending himself against non-Jews. He consequently nurtured himself into believing that he could best treat his enemies with silent contempt. He schooled himself to think that he could effectually act the part of file to their sharp, vituperative teeth. But often he discovered that the teeth had not become blunted, and that they had bitten deeply. It has been the file that has suffered, not the biter. None the less his attitude of sufferance has in all the circumstances been but a natural one. That the Jew has ventured to protest even to the extent that on occasion he has when the assailants of his people waxed utterly unbearable, is at least evidence that the last spark of manliness, of courage, of the power and the desire of self-defense had not been beaten out of our people.

It is, none the less, open to grave doubt whether we Jews have not more than seldom given hostages to our enemies by our attitude. We have treated them with contempt, and they have translated our sentiment into inherent cowardice and unworthy fear. They have thus drawn encouragement from our silence. That which could have been nipped in the bud has hence now and again been allowed to assume the dimensions of a thorny growth the handling of which has, in the end, proved to be difficult and painful. The slight evidences of anti-Semitic sentiment which we have thought it wise and diplomatic to pretend to shut our eyes to, have sometimes developed into set attacks upon Judaism through our leaving them alone. Sometimes, again, these attacks have been dealt with by individuals. Not always, by any means, have they been handled with care and with discretion. Frequently, the defence of our people has been a veritable undoing of our position. There is no necessity to quote many specific instances. They will readily occur to anyone who takes a cursory mental glance over such occurrences even during the last few years. The last few months indeed have revealed at least one case in point. The borders of Cheshire recently issued in an obscure parish magazine some silly twaddle about young Jews who vicar of a Lancashire town near the "walk out", as he termed it, Christian girls in his neighborhood. Some enterprising journalist dug out of the pages of the tiny publication the words of Rev. Mr. Ewbank and dressed them up into "active copy." At once there were letters from individual Jews to the paper which published the "copy." These letters in turn evoked replies frequently couched in language which must have been purposely intended to insult and annoy our people. So the thing grew fast and furious. And, it might have developed into quite a serious campaign against our people in the North Midlands had not the attention of the editor of the paper, which published most of the correspondence, been drawn by the Jewish World in a quasi-official manner to the harm that was being done. Needless to say the campaign was immediately put an end to.

It is upon these lines indeed that our co-religionists in America have ventured a new departure. The B'nai Berith organization, which is a strong and extended body throughout the United States, has formed what it calls an Anti-Defamation League. Its object is to take concerted action against the constant and ever-increasing efforts to traduce the good name of Jew. By organized effort it seeks to bring about the abatement of the defamation of the Jew; and ultimately, as its programme declares, "to put an end to unfair discrimination against all citizens." The method whereby the League is setting to work may be divided into three main heads, educational, vigilant, and legislative. It has thus set itself to endeavour by instructing the public as to the real facts concerning Jews, by lectures and by articles in the press—and especially by taking care that text books which tend to pervert the minds of children and create prejudice against our people shall be carefully watched—to eliminate from the public mind some of the ignorance concerning Jews and Judaism, which is the real basis of the prejudice against our people. The league will further examine closely reports and articles in newspapers, and where the Jew is made to appear in a false and unworthy light it will endeavor to secure correction, either by retraction or by answer. In the legislative sphere the League will try to secure laws so as to prevent the presentation on the stage or at cinematograph shows or otherwise of malicious representations of Jews. It will also work to secure the passing of a law making it illegal for any hotel or summer resort to discriminate against our people a practice which unhappily has been, and is still growing in the United States. In short, the League has taken upon itself the heavy task of being the general watch-dog of American Jewry. The League has been established but a few months, and already it reports considerable good work. In a number of cases offending representations have immediately been withdrawn. In other cases scurrilous articles against our people have been suppressed. In yet other cases glaring differentiations against the Jew have been put an end to. In most instances the League has found that it had but to appeal to the good common sense of the offenders, in order to find that, as was the case with the newspapers above referred to, they were offenders through lack of thought and not through lack of heart. The League has discovered, even during the short time it has been in existence, that in apparently most unlikely cases they had but to invoke the sense of common citizenship in order to obtain fair and right treatment for our people, and secure to them future immunity from scurrility and unfair attack.

Whether such a league is necessary in this country or not, is a question which many persons will answer from many different points of view. To some extent the Board of Deputies fills the part. But only, as compared with the Anti-Defamation League of America, to some extent. It has not anything like its organization nor has it any specific department which particularly charges itself here with such labour as the League is performing. On the other hand we have not in this country experienced the anti-Semitism that unhappily prevails in the United States. No case, speaking from memory, is on record of hotels issuing advertisements announcing that they would not accommodate Jewish guests, as is constantly the case in America. Assuredly no municipality in England has banned the Jew from its precincts as a summer resort as in a number of instances has taken place in America. None the less there are constantly cases, especially in the Press, where a little careful watching on the part of an organized body and a wise and discriminating representation on behalf of the Jewish people might do considerable good. Such advertisements as constantly appear, especially in the suburban papers, in which servants advertising for situations stipulate that they do not desire a place with Jews are not alone offensive to our people and must tend to create and accentuate prejudice against us in those who happen to read them. The cinematograph pictures are frequently showing Jews in an altogether repellant light, and the stage, more especially the variety stage, is constantly offending in the same direction. The reply to this observation which can be well anticipated, that Jews who do not like to see these things need not patronize them is altogether wide of the mark. These things do not effect their damage by being seen by Jews. They really hurt us quite inconsiderably when they are seen by those who should know the facts they distort and can appreciate the scurrility of the misrepresentation. The real damage is done when those to whom they are presented are ignorant of Jews and know them not, and by what they are shown, learn to think of us only in the light in which they see us misrepresented. It is dangerous to leave the defence of the Jewish name when it is publicly assailed to private effort. A public attack should be publicly met, and the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai Berith in America, is an example upon which our people n this country might do worse than mutatis mutandis, shape a similar organization.

It is, of course, true that in some cases an appeal by a public body to stay scurrility and stop abuse would be giving just the satisfaction they crave for to those who, of set purpose, malign and traduce our people. A handful of persons at most are busily engaged just now in this country in producing literature which is, as it is intended to be, not only direly offensive to Jews, but which purposely misrepresents them maliciously to the public. There are magazines in this country which issue by issue contain the most blatant libels concerning our people—libels which would form monuments of ignorance were we not sure that the writers know better than they write, that they believe otherwise, and merely issue the foul and filthy garbage in order to demean Jews in the eyes of their readers. There are papers published and sold more or less readily at numerous bookstalls in this country week by week which traduce with the vilest scurrility men and women in our community whom we honour and respect, and who are honoured and respected wherever they are known. The abuse to which they are subjected is hurled at them only because they are Jews. It is manufactured only for the purpose of doing hurt and injury to the Jewish name. There is one of such journals in particular which allows an ex-member of Parliament with not the most savoury of antecedents persistently to declare that Jews practice the Blood Ritual. Not all Jews, he is, of course, careful always to add, but only some secret and obscure sect; thus following the glorious example of the Priest Pranaitis and his "evidence" in the Beilis trial To appeal to such a person to stop the nuisance would be futile. It would be of no more avail than appealing to the skunk to save our nostrils from the repellant odour which it is its nature to emit. For such creatures the law is the only effectual engine.

Be this as it may. A good name is more precious than fine oil. The maintenance of a good name, inducing a worthy and an honourable and honoured reputation, is a duty that is cast by the very nature of things upon communities as certainly as upon individuals. It is doubtful whether the traditional policy of our people to suffer in silence and to look on with contempt when the good name of Jew has been traduced, is one that, however understandable and even excusable in the circumstances of other days, is justifiable in these. We proudly boast of the material and intellectual progress which our people are enabled to make when they have a fair field and no favour. Let us not forget that a good name is more precious than fine oil and that even more valuable than material and intellectual progress is the maintenance with those among whom we dwell of a fair and unbiased reputation of Judaism and the Jew.

JEWISH ARTS AND CRAFTS.

The first exhibition in America of Jewish arts and crafts was held in New York City on January 12, 1914, and this was followed by similar exhibitions in Baltimore, Chicago and other cities. Thousands of specimens of the work made by the craftsmen at the Bezalel School in Palestine were on exhibition, besides many important sculptures and bas reliefs by Prof. B. Schatz, the principal of the school.

The exhibition has aroused widespread interest among Jews because of the general interest in the movement for the revival of Jewish art which is sweeping over Europe and the Orient.

The Bezalel School, which is housed in one of the most imposing structures in Jerusalem and covers vast grounds, employs Jews as well as immigrants from all over the world, including the United States. The school, which takes its name from the great Hebrew master craftsman of Biblical days, teaches its pupils carpet weaving, tapestry, filigree work, wood carving, copper work, ivory carving, beaten metal work, lace, embroidery, and has besides advanced classes in drawing, painting and sculpture.

Exhibitions of the work of this school have been held in all the leading capitals of Europe. Last year's exhibition in London attracted wide attention.

The establishment of Bezalel School in Palestine is the result of one of those dreams which rarely fall to the lot of any great idealist to realize. Prof. Boris Schatz conceived the idea to lift the poverty stricken Jews in Palestine from dependence and beggary, and encountered many seemingly insuperable obstacles and heart breaking disappointments.

After seven years of work, the school is attended by over 500 men, women and children, and has numerous families and groups doing work in their own homes in the suburbs of the Holy City. The number of applicants for work is enormous.

It is to be noted that the object of the Bezalel School is primarily not to make large profits but to employ the greatest possible number of workers. Hence, the profits are almost immediately devoted to increasing available accommodations.

Bezalel typifies the spirit which is rising in the Holy Land—the spirit which will replace dependence and barrenness by self-reliance and industrial artistic development.

DENIAL BY PADEREWSKI.

Recently charges were circulated in the public press that Mr. Paderewski had contributed a large sum of money to a Polish newspaper in Warsaw, which attacked the Jews. Mr. Paderewski asserts under oath that he has never aided any anti-Jewish paper financially and has sworn to the following affidavit made at El Paso de Robles, Cal., on February 5th:

State of California, County of San Luis Obispo, ss.:

Ignace Jan Paderewski, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

My home is at Morges, in Switzerland. I am temporarily sojourning at the Hot Springs of El Paso de Robles, in California.

During the last year I have been publicly subjected to many unjust charges, which have caused many of my friends indignation and concern. For the satisfaction of those good friends, and for such use as they may make of this affidavit, and to all whom it may concern, I hereby swear and declare:

That I never gave money to any anti-Jewish newspaper whatsoever;

That the establishment of the newspaper of which I am accused of being the founder was absolutely unknown to me, and, in fact, I only heard of its existence for the first time some two months after the date upon which (as I am informed) it was founded;

That I never initiated or supported the boycotting of the Jewish trade in Poland, being entirely out of and not taking any part in active politics in Poland.

(Signed) I. J. PADEREWSKI.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of February, 1914.

News From The Orient

By Our Correspondent, DR. ISRAEL AUERBACH, Constantinople

Conditions in the Balkans are still in a state of instability. The peace agreement between Turkey and Servia has not yet been signed. The relations between Greece and Turkey on the one side and between Bulgaria and her west Balkan neighbors on the other side, are, in spite of the fact that the official peace documents have been signed, anything else than peaceful. On the southern border of Albania there is ferment, it boils in Macedonia, it is noisy on account of the possession of the Aegean Islands which are occupied by the Greeks. And while European diplomacy apparently seems to exert itself to solve all the still disputed questions of importance, like those of Albania and of the islands, and to restore lasting tranquility in the southeast of Europe, new and passionate negotiations are taking place in secret for the purpose of forming new Balkan alliances, which, as it is asserted by the participants, aim to protect the present conditions and to make them durable. But it has gradually reached public knowledge that they are instigated by Russia, like the dangerous Balkan alliance of last year, and are aimed against Turkey, just as the former alliance was, also directly and actively against Bulgaria. Whether this will lead to a new war is doubtful, but in spite of the fearful blows of the previous year all the Balkan lands are still revengeful or thirsty for conquest and pessimism is more justified than the opposite view.

It therefore seems that the sufferings of our Jewish brethren in these inhospitable regions have not yet reached their end. To be sure, we recently rejoiced in the pleasant information that Servia, entirely unlike the shameless attitude of Roumania towards our brethren, has resolved to build synagogues at the expense of the state for the benefit of the Jews living in her newly conquered territories. It is true that more reassuring reports came to us also from Grecian Salonika about the fate of the Jews living there, who are already becoming accustomed to their new conditions. Yet, in the last few days the newspapers teem again with all kinds of disquieting reports concerning our coreligionists. It is stated that in the new Servian territory the Mussulman and the Jewish inhabitants are in great economic distress in consequence of the new rigorous rules of the Servian Government which demand the absolute closing of all business houses on Sunday, and deputations have gone to the capital to plead for alleviation from these ordinances which would cause their complete ruination. It is further reported from Grecian Kawalla and its interior that a great number of Mussulman and Jewish inhabitants were either arrested or driven out from that territory for alleged revolutionary intrigues. This very sad news still remains to be confirmed. But, alas, it corresponds to the general situation of those parts, especially to the war preparations which have again been resumed in those regions. Such persecutions of individual elements generally precede worse and greater events. Let us hope that these forebodings are deceiving and that lasting peace and recovery from the suffered distress will come at last for the entire country and at the same time also for our brethren.

Thanks to the sums of money which were placed at the disposal of our Grand Lodge by the Executive Committee of the Order and which have not yet been exhausted, we were able to contribute all this time to the amelioration of the sufferings which remained from the war in the different Oriental communities. First the Grand Lodge transmitted 100 Turkish pounds to the Salonika Lodge for the Jewish sufferers of Strumnitza, then again a similar sum to the same lodge for the care of war refugees in the city of Salonika. Then it sent through the Smyrna Lodge, 50 pounds to the community of Smyrna, which petitioned the Grand Lodge for aid, for similar purposes, and lastly it has taken 250 Turkish pounds from the remaining money and created a relief fund for the aid of students who were injured in the war and are in need of help. Of this amount 20 pounds were sent to Salonika and 10 pounds donated in the city of Constantinople.

The greatness of the blessing which [illegible] this action is not to be [illegible] by the designated amounts; [illegible] must also be taken into consideration that all other organizations discontinued their relief work some time ago. The Union of Associations no longer exists, the loan funds which it had recommended or resolved to undertake have not yet been started. Under these circumstances the fact that there still exists one organization which is still ready and in a position to render substantial assistance to distressed communities, is being deeply and strongly felt. The readiness to help and the ability to succor shown by our Order has now become almost proverbial in the Balkans and its name like the name of our patriarch Abraham is a name of blessing.

It can therefore be no wonder that wherever our lodges exist they are not only appealed to for benevolence, but they also wield considerable influence upon the entire formation of the communal life. Such is the case in Salonika, according to the reports of our president, who has just returned from his journey thither; this is also the case in Smyrna, it is the same especially in Rhodus, where "Aben Ezra Lodge," which was organized there only a few months ago, has, according to its interesting report, taken in hand the reorganization of the community and believes that it will accomplish the election of a communal council that will be composed entirely of brethren of the lodge, who will administer the affairs of the community according to modern and true Jewish principles.

Our Constantinople Lodge is continuing its activity indefatigably. Thanks to its initiative, a commission representing all the Jewish societies of the city has been established, for the purpose of attending to the poor of the community, especially for the amelioration of the distress on account of the winter. This commission works in the rooms of our lodge. A new very important organization has also originated in the midst of our lodge, the Society of Jewish Physicians, the aim of which is to attend to the maintenance and the reformation of the local hygienic institutions, especially of the Jewish hospital, and to establish a great Jewish clinic in the city as well as an institution for the training of Jewish nurses. The president of this commission, which is of such great necessity for the local conditions, is our brother Dr. Acchiote, and we very readily complied with the request of the commission to be permitted to meet in our lodge rooms. Lodge No. 678 is now making preparations for its annual festival, which is to take place on the 21st of this month and which will be honored by the presence of our brother, S. E. Morgenthau, the new ambassador of the United States of America.

I have already informed you in my previous report of the arrival of this distinguished coreligionist and brother of our order. It only remains for me to add today that his excellency has already gained all the sympathies of the local Jewry by the extraordinary manner in which he manifested his interest in Jewish things and works of public welfare. He made a tour through most of the Jewish schools of the city and is going to continue it until all the Jewish quarters are inspected. Our distinguished brother has also visited Balat and our kindergarten, "Sigmund Bergel," which greatly interested him in every regard. Your correspondent also had the opportunity to talk over matters with his excellency and most particularly about the question of fighting white slavery, and met with a deep understanding and a warm sympathy.

This interest in all the things of the nature of public welfare, especially Jewish welfare, has not been manifested by Mr. Morgenthau alone, but also by his wife and his daughter, who never tire in wandering through the homes and schools of the poor, to find out a possible chance for their benevolent intervention.

In this work they will surely meet the endeavors of the brethren of our lodge. We have many projects in view, but none is nearer to us than the eradication of the poverty which leads to street begging by creating a central fund for the poor and a system of small credits. But in order to attain this great aim many detailed preparations and extensive studies are necessary. The first beginning in this aim was made during the past year by your correspondent and Brother Dr. Bing, who to our regret has left our city, in the form of taking a complete census of the Jewish population of Constantinople, which will now be continued. A special committee of the lodge will work out the results of these statistics and prepare the soil for an elaborate social action.

Our District Grand Lodge has resumed its activity with doubled energy in its own new office. Recently it gave special attention to the following: The above mentioned relief work for the benefit of the war sufferers, the organization of a managing board for the kindergarten; the preliminary work against white slavery, the finishing of the bylaws of District No. 11 and the preparation for the Grand Lodge convention which will take place in the coming summer, and especially the endeavors to establish peace between the Hilfsverein der Deutschen Juden and the Zionistic organizations, whose controversy about the schools of Palestine shows no signs of abatement. Nearly all the lodges of our district have encouraged us by wire in our undertaking and the Roumanian Grand Lodge District No. 1 has joined us in this question. Let us hope that we will succeed in ending this war of brothers, to restore peace between the dispersed hosts of our brethren and to guard thereby the honor and interests of our people.

ANNUAL MEETING OF CENTRAL B'NAI B'RITH COUNCIL OF CHICAGO.

The 7th annual meeting of the Central B'nai B'rith Council of Chicago was held at the Hotel La Salle on Monday, February 16, 1914. Thirty-three members out of a total membership of fifty were present.

The special order of business was the presentation of the reports of the officers and the election of officers for the ensuing year. The President submitted his annual report, reviewing the work of the council during the past year. We cull from his report the following:

B'nai B'rith Free Employment Bureau.

This Bureau has been in operation for more than seven years, and during its existence has accomplished much good. The number of those dependent upon its assistance is continually growing, and the unfavorable economic conditions caused by strikes, lockouts, closing of factories and new labor saving devices have made the work of the Bureau so much harder. Although it is well understood that the incompleteness in the organization and the lack of sufficient funds still leaves many a wish unsatisfied, and that much further effort will be required before the work is done as it should be done, yet the amount of good and blessed work, for which we have to thank the men and women engaged in the work of the Bureau is very great. The results achieved during the many years bespeak for the Bureau our sincere appreciation and as far as possible also our willing co-operation. At a meeting of those having in charge the various employment bureaus in Germany under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith lodges held last year the following resolution was adopted:

"It shall be the duty of all brethren of the German District of the Order B'nai B'rith to apply to the labor bureau of their respective lodges before applying to anybody else, in case a vacancy for help occurs in their business."

This obligation should be assumed also in our city, and in fact should extend beyond the circle of the lodge members to all Chicago Jews. In our day of social feeling and, alas, increasing economic prejudice against the Jew, it is indeed more than a moral obligation to foster the Jewish employment bureau with all our might to enable it to accomplish its fruitful work.

Propaganda.

The results achieved in this direction during the past year have been satisfactory. This is an encouraging feature and leads us to believe that with renewed effort in the line of propaganda, with a better feeling and understanding prevailing, we can look forward to a steady, healthy growth as the objects of the Order and its achievements become more widely known.

Membership.

Considering propaganda efforts to increase the Order's strength, it should be borne in mind that we are less concerned with the numerical strength than with the character and standing of the accessions to our ranks. If these be composed of young men, influenced by those higher principles of our organization which have marked and made possible its growth and success in the past then our future is assured. The affirmative of this proposition is evidenced by the activity manifested by our lodges The era of inactivity and lukewarmness in our cause has passed and given place to a quickening of the true B'nai B'rith spirit.

Dispensing of Charity.

While there are many agencies to dispense alms, relieve suffering and generally aid the poor and needy, the work of the Council in this direction, although very modest in its scope, has proven timely and appropriate. In a large community like ours numerous cases arise where the needy, owing to some rule or custom practiced by the charitable agencies, are refused aid. The wisdom of such rules and regulations is not questioned here. But what of the unfortunates? When a man is in need you cannot relieve him by simply pointing out to him that he is not eligible in accordance with established rules. When one is homeless and hungry he deserves shelter and sustenance, even if he is only a recent arrival within our gates Cases of this character properly come within the sphere of activity of the Council Relief Committee.

We aided a large number of applicants during the past year. We provided board and lodging, furnished medical aid, secured admission to hospitals, furnished small sums wherewith to make their own living, united various members of families, furnished legal aid, assisted in many immigration cases, were instrumental in preventing the deportation of immigrants, and in general gave assistance to many an unfortunate. This practice should not only be continued, but as far as possible be increased in its scope, and we appeal to our lodges generously to furnish us with the required needs.

Conclusion.

The experimental stage in the life of the Council has been passed, and we are now recognized as an active factor in the furtherance of the Order's work. It affords us much satisfaction that the underlying idea of a council has found lodgment and emulation in other cities.

The old generation, our pioneers, are fast passing away. They have done their work manfully and unselfishly; and the young generation must now assume and carry the burden. No matter how favorable the conditions are in the land in which the Jews may live, the blows aimed at the Jew in semi-barbarous countries cast their shadows even on such of us as enjoy the privileges of citizenship under the protection of the law. The Jew of character and culture commands the respect of his neighbor and often occupies a high position. It is men of this standard that we must enlist in our cause to emphasize the ideal more than the material, to bring home to those that look askance at the Order that only an organization like the B'nai B'rith—democratic in its tendencies, yet aristocratic in the character and standing of its members—is well adapted to bring about "Union in Israel."

The reports of the Secretary and Treasurer show a healthy condition as far as financial affairs of the Council are concerned.

The standing committees submitted reports reviewing in detail the efforts in the line of social and intellectual endeavor and propaganda work. The delegates representing the Council on the B'nai B'rith Free Employment Bureau Board submitted a written report, which was received with marked approval, and at the conclusion a vote of thanks was rendered to the members of the board for their services to the bureau.

The election of officers resulted as follows: A. B. Seelenfreund, President: Edward Menkin, Vice-President; Julius M. Kahn, Secretary; Dr. H. I. Davis, Treasurer; members of the Executive Committee, E. S. Glickauf, Martin Emerich, I. Fox, Nathan Silverman. In addition to the foregoing the two ex-presidents of the Council, Brothers Israel Cowen and Edward Sonnenschein, and the chairmen of the standing committees, Brothers Philip Stein, J. J. Gusfield and Adolph D. Weiner, are members of the Executive Committee.

After the discussion of various matters pertaining to the good and welfare of the lodges in the city the meeting adjourned.

ANCIENT CITY DISCOVERED.

Vienna papers report that the ancient Hebrew city, Shechem, has been located by the famous archeologist, Prof. Sellin. Many references to this city are contained in the Bible in connection with Abraham, Jacob and Joseph. It is proposed to pursue excavations on a large scale.

THOUGHTS AND TIDINGS
A REVIEW OF PASSING EVENTS

By
H. ELIASSOF

A Chapter of Modern Jewish History.

The relation of the Jews of the Old World with their American co-religionists was not always as close and as pleasant as we find it now, in the beginning of the twentieth century. For many years the Jews of the Old World withheld their confidence from the endeavors of their brethren in the New World to perpetuate Judaism, to build up Jewish charity and to develop Jewish learning in the country of their adoption. It is only since the closing years of the last century that this unfriendly relation has commenced to undergo a radical change. The Jews of the Old World then began to move closer to their co-religionists of the New World, to gain a better understanding of their Jewish aspirations, and to appreciate their endeavors in the interest of Judaism.

The prejudice of the Jews of the Old World against their American co-religionists was born during the early periods of general Jewish immigration into America. Jewish communal and institutional life was then, so to say, in an embryonic state, for the few Jewish centers were small and far removed from one another. Here and there a movement was inaugurated by a few American Jews with hesitation and uncertainty to concentrate the forces in the interest of Judaism, but they were often doomed to failure on account of the conglomeration of tastes and variety of opinion usual among men thrown together from different parts of the world. These attempts, with their frequent failures, naturally evoked mistrust in the minds of the Jews of the Old World regarding the sincerity of their co-religionists in America and their ability to accomplish anything for the upbuilding of Jewish institutions. Every successive movement inaugurated by the American Jews for the benefit of Judaism and every attempt on their part to create strong and important Jewish centers were considered by the Jews in the Old World unripe and undeserving of the least attention and respect. The Jews of the Old World looked with disdain upon the feeble and vacillating communal life of the American Jews and often said: "The Jewish peddlers in the land of humbug are trying to imitate us in their uncultured life among the Yankees in the wild woods, in the slow villages, lonely farm houses and isolated log cabins, where they have long ago forgotten the little they ever knew of the faith of their fathers, of Jewish charity and Jewish learning. They have neither rabbis nor teachers of religion, and the synagogues which they build, the religious schools which they start, and the charitable institutions which they found are without Jewish foundations, and they therefore can and will not endure." So the Jews of the Old World hastily misjudged and unjustly condemned their co-religionists in the New World. The American Jews then found themselves almost in the position of the two and one-half tribes, Reuben, Gad and half of Manassah, in the time of Joshua, when they built an altar to the God of Israel east of the Jordan, in their new home country far away from the great Jewish center. Their brethren west of the Jordan misunderstood them and met their sincere religious endeavors with mistrust and disapproval.

But conditions in the midst of the American Jews changed after the storm and stress period of 1848. In many of the European countries, especially in Germany and Austria-Hungary, on account of the severe and oppressive measures instituted against the Jews by the reactionary governments, the streams of Jewish emigration swelled and expanded and carried great numbers of Jews across the Atlantic ocean to find liberty and peaceful homes in the North American republic. The Jewish centers in the New World were augmented and strengthened. Many peddlers became wholesale merchants and leading manufacturers. They established strong congregations, built solid synagogues and founded substantial charitable and educational institutions. They engaged some of the best Rabbis and religious teachers from Germany, Austria-Hungary and other countries, men like Doctors Lilienthal, Wise, Adler, Einhorn, Mierzbacher, Kohler, Kohut, Hirsch, Jastrow, Morais, Felsenthal and others, who led their congregations to prominence and influence and helped to raise the hopes of Judaism in America to the highest aspect. The Jews of the Old World could not help but take cognizance of these facts, and their prejudice against their American co-religionsts vanished like snow before the sun. They learned to admire the distinguished characteristics of American Jewish manhood and womanhood, their creative virility, their resourceful enthusiasm and their forceful achievement. They recognized their faithful adherence to Judaism, the stability of their institutions, and they gained confidence in the earnest religious endeavors of the American Jews.

In the year 1882 the great American fraternal organization, the Independent Order B'nai B'rith, entered the gates of the Old World by establishing the first lodge in Germany. In spite of the persistent opposition of the stagnant Jewish aristocracy, the malevolent Jewish assimilationists and the retrogressive Hasidim, the order soon flourished and spread from land to land and from Jewish community to Jewish community. The best men of the Jewry of the Old World joined its ranks and became zealous workers for the Jewish cause. This American Jewish order, whose main principle is to work and watch for the unity of Israel, surely helped in many ways to create concord and harmony between the American Jews and their co-religionists in the Old World; it taught them to join forces in cases of emergency, and to work hand in hand for the relief of their unfortunate brethren who are often overwhelmed by persecution in those parts of the world where darkness still enwraps the people and their rulers still sway with the scepter of tyranny.

The Jewish centers of learning and of Jewish science of the Old World were somewhat slower in banishing their prejudice against the American Jews. Their suspicion and disrespect lasted until the rabbinical colleges and seminaries established by the American Jews, like the Gratz College of Philadelphia, the Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati and the Jewish Theological Seminary of New York, proved their efficiency in the field of higher Jewish education and erudition. Then they, too, dropped their prejudice and commenced to look with favor upon the educational work of the American Jews. Today we see a graduate of the Jewish Seminary of America elevated to the exalted position of Chief Rabbi of Great Britain, and another American rabbi, who was trained in the Cincinnati Hebrew Union College, is occupying the pulpit of the liberal Jewish congregation of London. Some of the leaders of Jewish life and Jewish thought of the Old World have visited America and some are here today on a visit to their American co-religionists, to lecture in the Jewish-American colleges, to learn and to teach, to gain experience and to impart counsel and advice. We have had here the great Jewish thinkers and scholars, Claude G. Montifiore and Israel Abrahams of London, England; Shmaryahu Lewin, the great Jewish political leader, and Nahum Sokolov, the famous Hebrew publicist of Russia, and now we have in our midst Dr. Ignatz Zollschan, the noted anthropologist of Vienna, and Boris Schatz, the celebrated teacher and promoter of Jewish art, of Jerusalem. The American Jews are delighted with the visits of these great Jewish leaders of the Old World and are always ready to extend to them their heartiest and most cordial welcome.

In the onward march of humanity the Jew has always taken his place in the front rank. The progress of the human race is bringing the nations of the wide world closer together, and is building a future when all men will be brothers. The Jews, too, are everywhere closing ranks. The unity of Israel is sure to come, and then the people of Torah will work with invigorated force in the service of humanity and help with greater strength to consummate the sweetest and the highest hopes of the human family.

The Queen of Roumania and the Roumanian Jews.

On the 29th of December, 1913, Elisabeth, Queen of Roumania, or, as she is known in the literary world, "Carmen Sylva," celebrated her seventieth birthday, and a few days before that time anti-Jewish riots were reported from Jassy. It is said that these riots were ordered by the Government, so as to make it appear that the people are opposed to the naturalization of the Jewish soldiers and to the granting of equal rights to the Jews of Roumania, which the Government claims to be willing to do. Elisabeth is an enigma which is hard to solve. She seems to be a dual personality of widely different propensities and traits of character. As Carmen Sylva, the poetic writer and idealist, she overflows with tears and lamentations for the sufferings of humanity, and she carries the "Weltschmerz" as a crown of thorns upon her head. But as Queen she has only a shrug of the shoulders and a shake of the head for the cruel persecution of the Jews within her realm. As Carmen Sylva she lavishes excessive praise upon the Jews and states in her writings that the Jewish people is the finest and the best in the world; that this people will never perish, because it is strong and healthy and fruitful; because its religion is the highest and the only one which is really free from idolatry. But as Queen of Roumania she was never known to have raised her voice against the shameful treatment which the Jews find in her country. The Jews are declared aliens in the land of their birth, and she is silent. They are deprived of the right to work and to earn bread for their suffering wives and innocent children, and she does not utter one solitary word of protest against such barbarity, such cruel injustice and such inhuman procedure. Is it possible that as Carmen Sylva, the writer, she remained the sentimental and soft-hearted German princess, and as Elisabeth, Queen of Roumania, she has become the dehumanized Roumanian like a Bratiano or a Cuza, who relentlessly hate the Jew and are willing to inflict upon him the most cruel persecution and the most inhuman torture? How can she explain otherwise her indifference to the sufferings of the Jews in her kingdom? King Charles of Roumania, her royal husband, poses before the world as a just monarch, and Queen Elisabeth cannot make the world believe that an earnest word of protest from her to the King and a few emphatic hints to the over-patriotic statesmen of her dominion to let up on their poor Jewish victims that the hounding of the Jew is a disgrace to the reigning house of Roumania, would remain without any favorable effect. Her secretary is the Jewish Colonel Brozíner. She is highly pleased wfth his services and yet she listens in silence to the oft-repeated accusation by the Roumanian anti-Semites that the Jew is incapable of rendering faithful services under any circumstances. Surely, the Jews of Roumania had no reason to rejoice on the birthday of either Carmen Sylva or of Queen Elisabeth.

RITUAL MURDER AGAIN.

Notwithstanding the failure of the Russian government to fasten the crime of ritual murder on the Jews in the famous Beiliss case, a dispatch from St. Petersburg reports the arrest of a Jewish tailor of Kiev on a similar charge. It was to be expected that something like this would happen to offset the reaction which the Beiliss farce occasioned. One of the secrets of Russian rule is the ease with which the government officials play on the superstitions and ignorant prejudices of the lower classes, and it has been found always advantageous to foment hatred of the Jews among the Christian population. To us of New England who see on all sides the many fine qualities of those who have been driven out by such Russian oppression, it is inconceivable that a belief in ritual murder should exist in the land of the czar, but the proof of such belief is only too evident in the occasional "pogroms" or massacres in which Jewish lives are sacrificed to Russian greed and hate, Realizing that a failure to convict followed by the approval of the enlightened world is a direct blow to the government system of Russia, it is not strange that once again the cry of ritual murder should be aroused with all its ramifications of class hatred, religious fanaticism and racial animosity.—Lowell (Mass.) FRENCH GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY HONORS JEW.

Mr. M. Paul Helbronner, the originator of mathematical geography, has been awarded the highest gift of the Geographical Society, the great medal of honor for services rendered. The University of Paris has conferred on Mr. Helbronner the degree of Doctor of Sciences.

THE JEWS IN SPAIN.

By Rev. Thos. B. Gregory.

Forty-five years ago the Jews were permitted to return to Spain, the land in which their ancestors had enjoyed, under Arab rule, a glorious period of literary and social activity, but from which they had been banished in the year 1492.

History tells us of few more shameful things than that banishment of the Jews by Isabella. In three short months all "unconverted" Jews were obliged, under penalty of death, to abandon Spanish soil. They were permitted to dispose of their property, but were forbidden to carry either gold or silver away, a ruling which practically robbed them of all that they had. Multitudes were plundered of all that they possessed and then reduced to slavery. Thousands died of famine or plague and thousands more were murdered in cold blood. Weak women, driven from luxuriant homes; children, wrenched from their mother's arms; the aged, the sick, the infirm, perished in droves.

When, at last, childless and broken-hearted, those who had been spared sought to leave the kingdom, they found that the ships had been purposely detained and that there was nothing before them but slavery or apostasy.

And who were the people that were thus brutally treated by the Spanish authorities? They were the intellect and energy of the nation. In the words of the great historian Lecky, "While those around them were groveling in the darkness of besotted ignorance, the Jews were pursuing the path of knowledge, amassing learning and stimulating progress. They were the most skillful physicians, the ablest financiers, the most profound philosophers. They were the chief interpreters to Western Europe of Arabian learning, but their most important service was in sustaining commercial activity. For centuries they were almost its only representatives." They created the banking system; they invented the system of exchange; in a word, they were the life of the business world, not only in Spain, but throughout the continent of Europe.

It is no wonder that the iniquitous transaction cost Spain her national prosperity. She committed national suicide when she expelled the Moors and Jews.

JEWISH CHARITIES.

Renowned throughout the world for their thrift and business acumen, it must never be forgotten that our Hebrew fellow citizens are most generous and charitable in their social relations. This fact is brought out prominently by the report of the Jewish Federation of Charities as given out on Sunday.

Perhaps the most significant item in the report is the splendid showing made by the Jewish Hospital. In five years that admirable institution has quadrupled its capacity. From modest beginnings it has become the foremost center of science combined with human charity in Brooklyn.

The work of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, too, is a record of great progress and splendid achievement. Modeled on the lines of the Y. M. C. A., it has gone ahead in much the same fashion as its prototype, quickened, however, by the fervor of youth and the vigor of unselfish effort.

As was well pointed out at Sunday's meeting the problem of Jewish poverty does not originate here. Its genesis is in the ghettos of Russia and southeastern Europe. Where poverty is endemic and fostered by a despotic government for generations, the human products of such conditions necessarily must be allowed a generation or two to escape from their original environment.

Altogether it can be said without disparagement to other races that the Hebrew in the United States gives more time and thought to his poor than any other race in this country.—Brooklyn (N. Y.) Times.

TO PROTECT JEWISH ANTIQUITIES IN SPAIN.

At a meeting of the Academy of History, which was recently held in Madrid, a commission was appointed for the purpose of searching out the remnants of Jewish history in Spain and to find ways and means for their conservation. The commission will first inspect the still existing houses of the former Ghetto in Toledo, establish their historical value and work out a plan for the preservation of these historical monuments. The president of the Academy of History is Father Fita, who takes a special interest in the history of the Jews in Spain.

PURIM.

The Feast of Lights (Hanukkah) and the Feast of Lots (Purim) are both minor holidays. They are not listed in the ancient catalogue of festivals, for they were late arrivals. The former cannot even boast of biblical mention. For the narrative of the heroic deeds of Judas and his valiant brothers we must turn to the books excluded from the list of sacred writings. The Purim story was admitted after some slight protest. The Scroll of Esther is counted among the Holy Writings. The Mishnah devotes a treatise to the mode of its writing and reading. But whatever the legal aspects, the popularity of the two festivals cannot be gainsaid. Purim had with it quaint customs associated, not the least being certain culinary productions and the frolicsome spirit of mumming. The exchange of gifts with ill-disguised mysteriousness was a source of merriment to young and old. And the poor were not forgotten. For, as the old ghetto lay runs, "Purim bedeut—'geben arme' Leut." It was the ghetto's carnival season, an outlet for the joyous instincts which no amount of ill treatment and persecution could crush.

Ushered in by the Sabbath of Remembrance, Purim was a memorial not merely of a distant Persian persecution made innocuous through the timely intervention of the Jewess in the royal harem, but of many similar events in a long list of our people's trials and tribulations miraculously turned to the very opposite of our enemies' intentions. Purim records in classic form the prototype of all similar anti-Semitic onslaughts upon the Jew. The name is new, but the thing is ancient. Whether in the broad place before the royal palace in Shushan or in the market places of Alexandria or in the streets of some medieval German town and of a modern Russian city, the attacks, the indignities, the calumnies, the motives are all of one and the same pattern. It matters little whether the name of the archfiend be Haman or Apion or Ignatiev, what they share in common is an inveterate hatred of the Jew culminating in carnage and rape. "There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the peoples in all the provinces of the kingdom, and their laws are diverse from those of every people, neither keep they the king's laws; therefore it is not for the king's profit to suffer them." Here we have a model [illegible] catechism. Add the blood [illegible] which apparently had not then yet [illegible] covered, and you have the sum of calumnies from which the Jew has had to suffer again and again. Read the vivid story penned by Mordecai and Esther the queen, and you have a picture of a pogrom set in motion, prepared to all its details, the devilish scheme contrived by a court clique, the couriers conveying the ukase to every nook and corner, the Jewish population panic-stricken, a day of fasting and of prayer proclaimed, the representatives of the Jews using the arts of diplomacy to secure a counter ukase, and the Jewish youth organizing for self defense, "gathering themselves together and standing for their lives."

A generation or so ago it was believed that Purim might be allowed to pass away. Anti-Semites pointed to Jewish revengefulness as the keynote of the day and the Jewish teachers began to be ashamed of it. The Messianic times of peace and goodwill were belived to have set in and there was no occasion to stir up ill feeling and misconception. Forget the evil days of the past, remember them no more. Alas! the dreamers were soon disillusioned. The clock of time which seemed to have struck the hour of brotherly concord was moved back and we found ourselves translated into medieval times, nay into the ancient days of Haman and Amalek. Though we may be willing to forget and forgive the Crusaders and Pan Chmielnitzki, the memories of Kishinev and Byelostock and Odessa are too fresh to be so readily effaced. We cannot forget the cry of the fatherless whom we here in this land had to befriend, to shelter, to rear, because their fathers and mothers had perished at the hands of drunken hooligans led by agents more ruthless than Haman. We are not revengeful. Nor will we give up the hope in the triumph of righteousness and brotherly love. We are for peace. We will bless, though they may curse. Our belief in the inherent humanity of man is unshakable. But we will at the same time prepare at all times "to stand for our lives." The inner consolidation of Jewry is the most efficacious weapon. The strengthening of the ties that bind us together is a citadel of strength. Less of division and more of co-operation is the lesson which the old story teaches and which the new events have once more brought home to us. Yes, we shall remember, remember the covenant of old, remember our duty of loyalty to the cause of the Jew, remember that eternal vigilance is the price of Jewish dispersion. Scattered as we are, indifference and looseness will render us an easy prey, while loyalty and unity of effort will make for security and will prevent the recurrence of all such sad events as is in our peculiar condition incumbent upon us to rehearse and to remember.

HEBRAISM AND JUDAISM.

A conflict between Hebraism and Judaism was lately waged in European Jewry. So we were told recently by an eminent Jew, who is a sober observer of human affairs. He was doubtless thinking of the tangle over the language question in the Haifa school, which squabble, painful as it was to all right-minded Jews, was symptomatic to him of a more far-reaching division than was the fight over a school curriculum.

The thinking student of Jewish history is quite aware of the conflict in question, for it is of long standing. Party alignments and party watchwords are never wholly new. At times a new grouping takes place and new names are coined, but behind the groups and names lurk older divisions. There have always been in the world and in the lives of nations, for instance, conservatives and progressives. Yet at different times different names have been employed. The average man, of course, is never so extreme as is his party, and for that matter a party harbors within it a multitude of varieties. What we call to-day Hebraism and Judaism is tantamount to Nationalism and Ecclesiasticism, and the two have always been with us. We say Ecclesiasticism advisedly. Religionism is not the word, even if the word were well chosen. The fight is on among other peoples likewise. The struggle between Church and State is not so modern as we would think. Among Jews it would seem at first sight as if the two sides were so closely linked together that there could be no question of a conflict. Nevertheless, the conflict exists and has existed.

Certainly with the breaking down of the ghetto the dualism revealed itself to the leaders. The answer of the nineteenth century, of the first half of it which was heir to the eighteenth, was: The Jew is a Jew by virtue of his religion, and Jewish organization must be along religious lines, churchly, ecclesiastical. The Hebrew language, which had long since been named the holy, was tolerated as the language of prayer, and even as such its province was narrowed down to a minimum. It was an extreme position to which the rank and file of the people gave by no means united assent. It was inevitable that at a later date, when a reaction set in, the pendulum should swing to the other extreme. Thus a new type of Jewish loyalty was evolved which, like its predecessor, cut the Gordian knot, proclaimed religion a dead issue and expressed the sum of Jewish endeavor in the terms of a one-sided nationalism. Over against the extremist who stripped off all the attributes of national separatism and clung to the naked religion as the whole of Jewish individuality, there arises now the extremist who banishes religion as a mere matter of private concern and proclaims nationality as the supreme concern with Hebrew as the national language.

The Hebrew language was the lip of Canaan. Hebraism is Canaanism. We have heard a modern Hebrew savant give expression to the thought that Hebraism in its purity manifested itself among the Phoenicians and Carthaginians. In Zidon and Carthage the Hebraic civilization builders wrought unhindered by the voice of prophet. Ahab and Jezebel accordingly were nationalists, Hebraists. Had they been suffered to proceed, Israel might have become a mighty empire. Their efforts were thwarted by the zealous prophet Elijah. He laid the foundation for that prophetic movement which in turn was taken up by the rabbis and which marked the triumph of the Church over the State. Now, whatever one may think of the interpretation of history thus advanced, there can be no doubt that extreme factions of the character indicated did coexist in ancient Israel. They waged an unrelenting war with one another until the State fell and the synagogue organization became heir to State and Temple alike.

There is now no Jewish state, therefore it cannot fall, but there is a Jewish cause which must suffer if dissensions divide us, be the fight concerning the Haifa school, one between Hebraism and Judaism, or, as some claim, merely a language fight between the advocates of Hebrew on the one hand and those of German on the other. What brought on the conflict?

A curriculum for the school was to be selected. The Zionist directors insisted that Hebrew must be the "Umgangssprache" as well as the language of instruction, and that other languages should be taught as special studies only. The German directors took the position that certain studies should be in Hebrew, but that the German language should predominate, because, as they claimed, that in the higher branches, especially the sciences, text books in the Hebrew language have not yet been written.

At a meeting of the directors the Germans outvoted the others. Thereupon the Zionists of the directorate immediately resigned. Some of the Zionist teachers followed suit and the students taking the side of the Zionists, went on a strike. The position of the Zionists was that the school should be a Hebrew school in the full sense of the word. The quarrel grew and the opposing sides became very bitter toward each other.

The Hilfsverein stood as sponsor for the school. Its president, Dr. Paul Nathan, undertook a journey to Palestine in the hope of being able to restore peace and order. For his pains he was rewarded with insults. His lifelong service for the downtrodden of our race was forgotten. His past record, which entitled him to the highest respect from Jews wherever they may dwell, availed him not, for passions were aroused and blows were struck blindly.

Dr. Nathan returned to Berlin, and then, together with James Simon, who is likewise highly esteemed by all who know of him and his work for Judaism. issued and published a proclamation against the Zionists, which, coming from such a source, was a painful surprise to American Jewry. That proclamation should not have been issued. The German Zionists in turn made preparations to call mass meetings in every city in Germany. and so the difference of opinion as to the proper course of study to be adopted in one school in Palestine threatened to become the rock which should split asunder the Jewry of the entire world. And this at a time when all our people should stand shoulder to shoulder in the fight to obtain justice for the downtrodden of our race in those parts of the world where it is still denied them.

To the credit of the leaders in the strife be it recorded that at last they listened to the calm voice and advice of the American directors of the Haifa institute. An agreement as to the curriculum has been reached, peace once more prevails, the school will be opened, provided enough money is subscribed to meet the cost of maintenance. There will be no strife between the advocates of Hebrew or of German as a language of instruction, and Hebraism and Judaism, in so far as they may have been involved in the controversy, will again go lovingly hand in hand in the Orient. For how long we do not know. It will be one of the duties of our Grand Lodge No. 11 to aid in preserving peace, and we are confident it can be depended on to fulfill its duty by trying to unite our people and prevent another outbreak.

Horeb Lodge

President Kraus visited Horeb Lodge in New Haven.

Upon his return, he was asked about his impression of the lodge. Mr. Kraus said: "My visit to Horeb Lodge gave me great satisfaction. I left New Haven feeling that I probably visited the banner lodge of the country. A heavy snow storm held the traffic well tied up. I would not have been surprised if not much more than a quorum had been present at the meeting. Imagine my surprise when I entered the hall and found about 400 members present, a great majority in full dress. Thirty-eight candidates were initiated by the degree team of the lodge. The initiation was well and impressively conducted. The members remained in session until midnight. The overwhelming majority of the members were young men. Many of them university graduates. Of course I could not get acquainted with all of them. As to my judgment of them, I had to depend on first impression, and that was most favorable.

District No. 1 is in the ascendancy. A few such lodges as Horeb Lodge, and nothing can stop that District from being number one in every sense of the word. Much credit for conditions in New Haven is due to Brother Joseph H. Ullman. He is worth his weight in gold, and he is not a lightweight by any means."

DEATH OF JOSEPH S. FELS.

Mr. Joseph Fels, millionaire manufacturer, single tax advocate and philanthropist, died in Philadelphia on February 22, 1914, after a brief illness.

He gained during his lifetime much renown for his agitation on behalf of single tax propaganda throughout the civilized world. He founded the Joseph Fels Fund of America, to which he contributed $25,000 annually and gave a like sum annually to the cause in England, $5,000 in Denmark, $5,000 in Canada and large funds in other countries to further the single tax movement.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger commented upon the death of Mr. Fels editorially as follows:

"Philadelphia will not be alone in mourning the death of Joseph Fels. His was an influence which knew no restricted boundaries; his sympathies were extended to the victims of social injustice in many lands. Mr. Fels was one of those philanthropists whose good deeds began with the very beginnings of his prosperity, when his benevolence had no edge of compulsion or restitution, when its only reward was the consciousness of well doing. Few generous men made less parade of their gifts than he, for his name was known to the world chiefly as the protagonist of a particular economic system, but the sum of his benefactions was very large in proportion to his wealth and in comparison with the largess of those who are heralded to the world's end. His charity began at home. He was just first of all to the workmen whose labor had contributed to his prosperity, and he was liberal in his aid to every worthy cause that came under his observation. Joseph Fels in his life and actions lived up to a tradition of unostentatious giving that represents the highest ideal of humane progress, and his most lasting memorial will be in the hearts of those whose lot he helped to lighten and who knew the sincerity and earnestness of his life-long endeavor to hasten the coming of an era of greater economic justice."

Judge S. Schultz

Mr. S. Schultz, of Vancouver, B. C., for two years serving as president of Samuel Lodge No. 668, I. O. B. B., of that city, and now serving as its monitor, has been honored with the appointment as judge of the County Court, and commenced his official duties on Jan. 2, 1914. His honor, Judge Schultz, is one of the prominent lawyers of Vancouver. Being one of the first Jewish lawyers in that section of the country to be elevated to such a high office, we congratulate him upon his preferment, which we deem a high honor to the Jewish people.

Jews Appointed Trustees of Church Peace Union

Dr. Emil G. Hirsch of Chicago and Borough President Marcus M. Mark of New York are the Jewish representatives on the board of trustees of the new Church Peace Union, endowed with the sum of $2,000,000 by Andrew Carnegie last week.

MILWAUKEE B'NAI B'RITH COUNCIL.

Recently the general manager of the Industrial Removal Office, with headquarters in New York, in commenting on the work of the Central B'nai B'rith Council of Milwaukee, wrote as follows:

"Incidentally it should afford you much pleasure to learn that in the B'nai B'rith Council of Milwaukee we have one of the most effective instruments for the carrying out of our removal work. I never saw such a splendid body of gentlemen on one committee, and to their zeal and co-operation the fine success which the removal work has attained in Milwaukee is entirely due."

A JEWISH M. P. FOR JERUSALEM.

A census of the population of Palestine is being taken with the object of ascertaining whether it is entitled to send another representative to the Chamber of Deputies in Constantinople. Although the enumeration has not yet been completed it appears that the result will be in the affirmative. In this case the Committee of Union and Progress has decided that the additional seat shall be given to a Jew. This would be the first time in the annals of the Ottoman Jewry that the Holy City of Jerusalem will be represented in Parliament by a coreligionist.

OFFICIAL

In the Court of Appeals of the Independent Order of B'NAI B'RITH

B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421, of Salt Lake City, Utah, on behalf of Brothers H. S. Joseph, Moss Woolf, M. H. Desky and Louis Jacobs, beneficiary members thereof, Appellant, vs. District Grand Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B., Respondent.

Appeal No. 102.

SYLLABUS.

1. The Court of Appeals does not take judicial notice of the proceedings of a District Grand Lodge and when an appeal is prosecuted in respect thereto, the matter appealed from in such proceedings must be set forth in the petition or otherwise distinctly appear in the pleadings, and where the contention is that the action of the Lodge results in a misapplication of trust funds, the facts claimed to show such result must be definitely and clearly set forth.
2. Upon an allegation that the act of a District Grand Lodge is in conflict with the Constitution of the District; to sustain such claim, such fact must clearly appear.
3. The Court will not adjudicate upon matters which, if admitted, do not affect the issue.

DECISION.

The Petition herein alleges that at a special meeting of District Grand Lodge No. 4, held September 21st, 1913, there were adopted certain amendments, in violation of law, and the appeal is prosecuted on the following alleged grounds.

1. That the law of the District, Sec. 1, Art. 1, Part IV, requires that amendments shall be submitted to the Committee on Legislation and that this was not complied with, and further that under Art. 1, Part IV, amendments may only be adopted at a regular session, and that such action at a special session is void.
2. That by Sec. 2 of said Article it is provided that amendments shall be read at two separate meetings of a session—and that this was not done respecting the amendments in question.
3. That representatives were permitted to vote as proxy for absent representatives, on the adoption of such amendments.
4. That the amendments, if enforced, would constitute a misapplication of trust funds and violate the Constitution of the United States and the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the Order.

The Petition does not set forth the amendment or more specifically present or identify the subject matter complained of and the Respondent excepts to the Petition and moves to dismiss the Appeal because of such omission.

The Respondents also file an Answer showing the presentation and adoption of certain "Resolutions," referred to in the pleadings as "Amendments," affecting the Endowment laws of the District.

The resolutions so presented being lengthy and fully appearing as an exhibit in the answer are not here repeated, but their general purpose was to terminate the Endowment feature of the Order in District No. 4 upon the beneficiary members surrendering their certificates, in accordance with the propositions embraced in the resolutions, and upon failure thereof to provide for its continuance as to the members remaining therein in accordance with certain plans.

There are quoted in the Petition or Answer certain laws of District No. 4 as follows:

PART IV.

ARTICLE I.

Section 1. Propositions to amend these General Laws or to make additions to any of its "Parts," may emanate from the General Committee, a Subordinate Lodge, or three Representatives of the District Grand Lodge jointly, and shall be made in writing, being written on one side of the paper only. Amendments or additions shall be submitted to the Committee on Legislation, not later than two weeks before the commencement of the Annual Session, for their report; provided, however, that amendments and additions may be introduced during the Session of the Grand Lodge by consent of a majority of the Representatives present.

Sec. 2. Every amendment or addition shall be read in full at not less than two separate meetings of a session before final action thereon is taken.

Sec. 3. A majority of the votes of all the Representatives present in favor of the proposed amendment or addition shall be requisite for its adoption.

PART I.

ARTICLE III.

Sec. 4. Every Lodge shall be entitled to one (1) Representative for its Charter, one (1) additional for every thirty (30) members and one (1) for a fraction of not less than twenty (20). The representation shall be based on the number of members enrolled at the time the election of Representatives takes place. Absent Representatives may authorize any Representative from their Lodge to vote for them upon any matter except the election of officers; such authorization must be in writing, and must be filed with the Grand Secretary.

Sec. 5. Special meetings of the District Grand Lodge may be called at any time by the President, a majority of the General Committee, or upon petition of not less than ten (10) Lodges, located in at least five (5) different places. Such meetings shall be for the transaction of such business only as is specified in the call. The President shall cause notice of such meetings to be issued within ten (10) days after receiving a requisition to convene the Grand Lodge, and the Grand Lodge shall be convened within thirty (30) days after such notice has been issued. Notice shall be sent to each Lodge at least ten (10) days before the meeting.

There is also quoted the following from the Constitution of the Order.

PART II.

ARTICLE V.

Sec. 1. The maintenance of any Endowment system by a District Grand Lodge shall be left entirely to the option of such District Grand Lodge.

ARTICLE IV.

Sec. 2. District Grand Lodges shall enact all laws and regulations for their own government, and all general laws for the Lodges in their District, not in conflict or inconsistent with the organic law of the Order.

Wiener, Block, Hanaw and Abraham, J. J., hold specifically adversely to the first and second grounds of appeal and as to the latter Block holds that appellant is estopped and the others hold expressly that the matter in question was properly before the special session for action, and all hold that it is unnecesary to pass upon the third ground of appeal, it being shown that a sufficient number of affirmative votes were cast for adoption, excluding any votes by proxy, and further hold upon the remaining grounds of appeal, that facts are not shown constituting a misapplication of trust funds.

Coons, Rosenbaum and Seelenfreund J. J. hold that the appeal might be dismissed upon the exceptions, but find generally that no error appears in the record.

Haas J. Holds that the appeal should be dismissed upon the exceptions filed.

Kuznitsky J. holds generally for dismissal of appeal.

Livingston J. holds that the appeal should be sustained on the ground that the legislation in question works a misapplication of trust funds.

For Dismissal of Appeal, J. J. Wiener, District No. 1; Block, District No. 2; Coons, District No. 3; Haas, District No. 5; Hanaw, District No. 7; Kuznitsky, District No. 8; Rosenbaum District, No. 10; Seelenfreund, District No. 11, and Abraham, President of the Court.

For Sustaining Appeal, Livingston J., District No. 6. Wolfe J., District No. 4, having participated in proceedings, refrains from voting.

No opinion received from J. J. Beck, District No. 9.

APPEAL DISMISSED.

FRENCH GOVERNMENT WILL INDEMNIFY MOROCCAN JEWS.

The sum of 5,000,000 francs has just been voted by the French government as indemnities for the victims of the excesses at Fez in 1912. Of this sum 1,000,000 francs will be distributed among the native Jewish population. The Fez Jews had asked for a much larger sum, and even sent a special delegation to Paris to intercede in their behalf, but apparently without success. A commission will now be appointed for the purpose of investigating individual applications.

THE LEO M. FRANK CASE.

The Supreme Court of Georgia Upholds Trial Court in His Conviction.

The Supreme Court of Georgia has confirmed the decision of the lower courts and refused a new trial to Leo M. Frank.

It will be remembered that the presiding judge, in giving his decision on Frank's motion for a new trial, stated that he was not convinced either of the prisoner's guilt or innocence. Christian clergymen, editors, professional men and business men have freely expressed their opinion that Frank did not have a fair trial; that the evidence did not warrant conviction, and that the jury was influenced by racial and religious prejudices.

If the judgment of the court is carried out, it will be the first time in the history of the Southern States that a white man has been executed on the unsupported testimony of a colored man, and in this case that of an ex-convict, a man with a bad criminal record.

A startling development in the case was brought to the surface on February 22d when Albert McKnight, a negro, who gave damaging evidence against Frank at the trial, made affidavit that his evidence was false and that he was induced to swear falsely.

Recently a committee of twenty-five leading Christian citizens of Atlanta has organized and has employed attorneys to unravel this case.

Rabbi David Marks, accompanied by some friends of Frank, called on the condemned man immediately after the Supreme Court's decision was announced and acquainted Mr. Frank with the sad news. When informed that the Supreme Court had sustained the verdict Mr. Frank said: "I do not think I shall be hanged for a crime that I never committed."

The affidavit of the negro retracting his testimony against Frank at the trial is as follows:

"Deponent says that he did not see Mr. Frank at all on April 26th and that his evidence at the trial of Mr. Frank was the result of a plan perfected by R. L. Craven and others to collect the reward offered for the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Mary Phagan.

"Deponent says that he told Mr. R. L. Craven that he did not want to tell any lies on Mr. Frank, but Mr. Craven would tell him to go right ahead and do what he told him to do, and that he would get the reward, and he was weak enough to do as Mr. Craven told him to do.

"Deponent says that he is sorry for all the wrong he has done to Mr. Frank and that he wants this true statement of facts placed in the hands of Mr. L. Z. Rosser, to be used by him with the hope that the same can in some way undo the great wrong he was led to do by the white people he was working with at the store of Beck & Gregg.

"Deponent again says that he did not see Leo M. Frank at any time or place on Saturday, April 26, 1913, and that he will so testify when called upon at any time."

Attorneys for Mr. Frank on February 24th filed in the Supreme Court of Georgia a motion for rehearing of arguments on Frank's appeal for a new trial.

THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT AND RUSSIAN PASSPORTS.

The League of the Rights of Man addressed, through its president, a letter to the Prime Minister of France on the subject of restrictions imposed on French Jews desiring to enter Russia. In his reply the Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs states: "I would be very happy to give a favorable response to your wish, but present circumstances do not appear to me favorable for the Department to modify its former view on this point. Diplomatic representations made by another power on this subject do not warrant us in hoping for the success of intervention on our part. Russia considers the question one of international public rights."

UNIVERSITY RECOGNIZES HEBREW DIPLOMA.

The New York University has recognized the validity of a Hebrew Diploma and has admitted to its engineering faculty a young Jew who obtained his preparatory training in the Hebrew Gymnasium at Jaffa. The student, Moses Menuchin, who is now twenty years old, was brought up in Palestine, and Hebrew is his mother tongue, although he has a fair knowledge of other languages.

Unreligious Moral Instruction

By Dr. Max L. Margolis

WRITTEN FOR THE B'NAI B'RITH NEWS.

Unreligious morality! Morality without religion! Humility and gratitude and all the other virtues without God or with no thought of God! All this is possible, says a certain modern school; and some aver that it is even highly commendable. Nor is it a matter of mere theory. There are schools in which moral instruction is imparted to children with no religious basis whatsoever. Some educators believe that a system of unreligious ethics should be introduced in the public schools. The plea is a simple one: Catholics and Protestants and Jews and infidels differ in their religions and on the subject of religion, but all citizens are agreed that stealing is wrong and truth telling is right and so on. At the outset be it remarked that we have no quarrel with atheist or agnostic or with the unreligious instruction in ethics. But we are supremely concerned with a phenomenon nearer home. There are Jewish parents who believe in Judaism and yet favor unreligious morality. It is to them that the following discussion is addressed.

And to them we say outright: The thing is a contradiction, an impossibility. Spionza long ago constructed a system of ethics without God (the God of religion). He was excommunicated by the synagogue, and he was satisfied that the ban was deserved. For after that event he neither lived a Jewish life nor did he die a Jew; his remains were interred in a Christian cemetery. We do not deny for a moment that he was a highly moral man, nay, of saintly conduct, but he was no Jew. He had cut himself loose from Jewish life and the Jewish hope. In the schools where unreligious morality is taught there is not always that clearly defined position with regard to religion that one would wish for. On the one hand it is maintained that all they desire to inculcate is wrong and right actions, but that each child is free to follow this or that positive religion (or irreligion) in accordance with the parents' choice. In other words, no substitute for religion is attempted. On the other hand, ethics is frequently invested with a religious character, is made a sort of religion, hence a substitute for other (theistic) religions. The latter alternative leaves no room for Judaism supplanted as it is by the ethical religion.

Religion and ethics are, to be sure, intimately related. Yet it is an error to think that religion is in the world simply to be a handmaiden to morality, and that therefore the stronger-minded need no religious fulcrum for their moral conduct. Religion has a purpose of its own. It is inclusive of morality, but it transcends it even as it sanctifies it. Religion links man to an invisible order of things in which God reigns supreme. Agnosticism, the profession that you cannot deny or affirm the existence of God who is Unknowable, is not so recent as is generally believed. New is perhaps the indifference to the Unknowable, new is the attitude which says. We know Him not and so He need not enter into our actions or thoughts. A "learned ignorance" concerning the Deity is of old standing. Maimonides averred that all we can say of God is what He is not, but no one can say what He is. To the biblical thinkers God is past understanding. But religion clings to God be He never so far beyond the ken of our intellect. We must needs speak of Him after the manner of man. The little child who in answer to a college professor's query as to who God is makes reply, God gives me my food and all I want, may not be a philosopher, but it has grasped the concept of gratitude, of dependence, it has religion.

Another error of old standing is that to know what is right will lead to right conduct. Not the intellect but the will is of prime importance. The will to do the right must not be suffered to be atrophied. To stiffen the moral backbone, morality is in need of an anchorage. In Christianity it is afforded by the unique life of the Founder, who is at once the pattern, the exemplar of the perfect life and the leader, the prince and ruler in the kingdom which he came to [illegible] and to usher in. The Christian child is taught to do the right for the sake of Christ, for the love of the [illegible]. In Judaism, the name of God and the name of the Jew are the anchorage of morality. Profanation of the name is the sum of all that should be shunned, consecration of the name of all that should be done. The Jewish child is taught to do the right that the name of God and the fair name of the Jew may be honored. The unreligious moralists recognize the need of similar anchorage. And so they place it in patriotism. Now patriotism, the love of native country, is a sacred duty which all religions teach. But it is one in a series of duties. It would be well to make of patriotism a religion if all our compatriots, those that are of more ancient stock than we are, were to do likewise. One of our unreligious moralists said recently in Chicago that to the ancient Jew patriotism was his religion. Palestine was for him the Holy Land, Jerusalem the Holy City. We in this land, said he, should imitate the Jews in spirit, and not by the letter. We should teach our children to look upon this land as holy and to invest New York and Chicago with the character of religious sanctity. Just imagine, Porcopolis the sacred, Gotham the holy! But even Christian Americans with all their love for their native soil look for inspiration to the far-off Jerusalem on earth made sacred by the footsteps of the Founder or to the heavenly Jerusalem where the risen Lord sitteth at the right hand of the Deity.

Religions cannot be made at the will even of the most gifted. There is an environment and a soil necessary for the manufacture of the article. It may be imported, and no more. The religious founders are few and far between, you may count them on the fingers of one hand. The great thoughts and verities by which mankind lives are correspondingly few. Once they are enunciated, they are the heritage of mankind. But when uttered, they come as the culmination of an historical process into which a definite race in a definite locality with a definite history enters. The religious teacher sums up what is in the race, he gives expression to unexpressed yearnings and cohesion to inarticulate instincts. And once we have made an historic religion our own, we are debtors to historical conditions and in dependence upon a given place in a given time. What is of supreme moment in conduct is not the doing of this or that, but the manner in which it is done. Not the righteous act counts, but the righteous will, the inner rectitude. Otherwise we fall back into the error of what the Christians call "justification by works." What we must impart to our children is first and foremost the inspiration, that warmth which will melt the heart of stone into a heart of flesh. The mere enumeration and classification and differentation of virtues and vices partakes rather of the nature of casuistry. We often hear of strictures upon the casuistry of the Talmud which is after all but legal and no worse than any other system of legal casuistry. The worst casuistry is the moral kind. There can be no quibbling about right and wrong. All the nice lessons about the kinds of lies will avail nothing when the will is weak and the inspiration lacking. Like the teaching of sex hygiene, it often serves to corrupt the innocent, to sophisticate the unsophisticated. All that the child needs is the impulse, the inspiring example, the quickening of the instinct for gratitude and humility and truthfulness and purity.

Let no Jewish parent forget that fear of disgrace is a potent enough deterrent so far as the humdrum vices are concerned. It is true, the children of the best homes go wrong. And so do likewise the best trained. Nevertheless, if we surround our children with a wholesome home influence we may rest content that they will be no worse ethically than we are. But our children must be raised as Jews. For we are addressing Jews who affirm that they wish to remain Jews, albeit they mistakenly believe that they can be moral without being religious. Now there is no blinking the fact that there are varieties of Judaism, enough to choose from. But roughly speaking, whether the terms be adequate or not (they were introduced from without whence also came the rift itself), there are the orthodox and the unorthodox or reformed. What divides them is chiefly the question as to whether the dispersion is to be accepted as a final or a temporary act. Those of the modern school believe that the dispersion is final, ordained by God that the Jews may carry out their mission as teachers of mankind. The "mission" idea is sometimes made light of in the circles of the opponents; but be it remembered that the author of the idea was a Galician Jew who constructed a philosophy of Jewish history after Hegelian pattern. Be that as it may, whether you believe in the kind of "mission" which is preached from reform pulpits or no, some "task" there must be still for Jewry to perform in the world or otherwise it would have long passed out of the world. Both orthodox and unorthodox (to Chamberlain Claude Montefiore is an orthodox Jew) insist on the supreme necessity of maintaining the integrity of the race. The radical Jew who has lost faith in the usefulness of the Jewish people steps down and out, as did Paul of Tarsus. The rule of life for the individual Jew is accordingly so to live as to maintain the race and make it efficacious for the "task" God has imposed upon it. The orthodox believe in a personal Messiah. They may be right in holding to the belief that an inert mass cannot be regenerated by impersonal agencies. Christianity's strength even on the ethical side is that in its center stands a Personality. Let each Jewish father act as if the great spiritual hero (for whose advent in the language of Maimonides Jesus and Mohammed have paved the way) may come from his loins, let each Jewish mother so live as if she were to be the blessed mother of that great Jew who is to come, the Super-Jew who is to sum up in himself the whole of the spiritual work and thought of the race. But whether you patiently labor and wait for the Messianic person or the Messianic era, the Jewish people must be kept alive against that consummation. And Jewish children must be imbued with the duty of loyalty to their race's history and hope. From this point of view, unreligious, un-Jewish moral instruction for Jewish children is treason to the highest cause of the Jew which is at the same time the highest cause of mankind. Just as the family is the biological unit of society, so is the race the necessary unit of mankind. Mongrelized races are not fit to carry on the work of civilization. We need in the world great races of individual character and of great moral stamina. Let not the Jewish "task" or "mission" be cut short by wilful suicide. All self-annihilation is immoral. And so is euthanasia immoral whether administered to individuals or to races. And intermarriage is a species of racial euthanasia.

The only kind of moral instruction for Jewish children is and remains the Jewish one. Create in your children a strong Jewish consciousness, make them to know that they are of Jewish stock and that they are called upon to help in the great work which the Jew has been doing through the centuries, build up in them harmonious characters, and the morality will take care of itself. Shall we who gave a God to the world in these latter days go begging for a new religion? shall some atheist college professor tell us how we may educate our children morally? A thousand times no. For all the new religions are but poor imitations of the old ones. Saint Francis was a weak reproduction of a Palestinian Jew. And the modern saints are not more original. Our eyes and hearts must still remain turned Eastward whence came the light and whence again shall come the law. Let our Jewish orientation be our anchorage in religion and in morals. Then only shall the great work of God prosper through the hand of the Jew.

THE OATH MORE JUDAICO IN CROATIA.

The Provincial Government of Croatia has at length taken steps to abolish the infamous oath More Judaico, which is still imposed on Jews in the Law Courts. To this effect the Government has brought in a Bill in the Diet, and its enactment will give effect to the long expressed wish of the Jews that the oath shall be administered to them in the same manner as it is to Christians.

A NEW TURKISH SENATOR.

According to press reports, the Turkish government intends to appoint Emanuel Effendi Carasso, formerly a deputy for Salonika, as a Senator of the Empire in recognition of his distinguished services to the country. This will make the second Jewish senator in Turkey, the first one being Senator B. Effendi Eskenasy.

A CATHOLIC PRIEST ON ANTI-SEMITISM.

The Bohemian paper "Rozwoj" published a communication from the Catholic priest, Father Alois Svojsik, in which he gives his personal reminiscenses regarding Imperial Counselor Bondy, who died recently in the city of Prague, and in which he comes out very sharply against anti-Semitism. Father Svojsik states in his communication:

"I was a poor young student when one day I was summoned by my teacher and informed that the board of teachers had found me worthy of being chosen to receive a stipend from Mr. Bondy. I presented myself before Mr. Bondy, and after having given him a description of my condition he informed me that his cashier would pay me every month during the time of my study a sum which in my conception was a considerable amount. He expressed no words of admonition nor gave hints that I should be grateful; he only said a few kind, encouraging words and I parted from Mr. Bondy with a joyful heart and a full pocket. From that time, during my days of study in the gymnasium, I visited the house of Bondy, where many poor students like myself received monthly stipends. This one man, an Israelite, was to me through all my life an example of a noble benefactor. Every time temptations came to me to drag me into the whirlpool of rude anti-Semitism, I remembered the man who never asked me to what confession I belonged, what my opinion was, but gave where his help was needed. Inciting anti-Semitism was and is far from me. When the periodical "The Twentieth Century" was offered to me for subscription I forbade the sending of it to me in a letter, from which I take the following extract: "I do not agree with your views and must emphatically repel the manner in which you attack the Jews. I know a number of Jews who are honest fellows.

"I have learned to know Judaism as an important part of the people in the world whose cultural work is to be highly esteemed and I am convinced that the anti-Semitism which you propagate in your paper only keeps many Jews from fitting themselves to the collective body of the people.

"A conflict of ideas carried on with low means does not fit in the frame of a paper which calls itself Christian. The insults often inflicted upon the Catholic are very painful to him, but they do not give him the right to repay in the same coin. Whoever claims the protection of the law for his own confession, should not degrade the confession of others, and certainly not of those out of whose midst came the founder of Christanity.

"I therefore have to decline to subscribe for your paper, for otherwise I would act against my conviction and would become an accessory of your unchristian and uncultured activity."

ANNUAL MEETING OF JEWISH HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The American Jewish Historical Society held its 22d annual meeting on February 22, 1914, at the Dropsie College in Philadelphia. Dr. Cyrus Adler presided. In his annual address, he reviewed the activities of the society and among other things pointed out that the society is dealing with the question whether Christopher Columbus was a Jew, is gathering material of American Jewish interest in foreign archives for investigation and research. A number of interesting papers were presented, among which was the one by Mr. Samuel Oppenheim on "New York and Philadelphia Jews of the Eighteenth Century," the one by Mr. B. H. Hartogensis regarding the "Struggle of the Jews of Maryland for Equal Rights with their Non-Jewish Fellow Citizens," and the one by Mr. Albert Friedenberg, a reply to Prof. Sombart's "The Jew and Capitalism."

At the afternoon session a paper descriptive of the commercial condition of the Jews in the West Indies was presented. Others who read papers were Prof. A. Marx, who spoke of the contributions made by the Jews in the development of banking; Rabbi D. de Sola Pool and Simon Wolf.

A number of necrologies of deceased members were read.

NEWS FROM LONDON

BY OUR CORRESPONDENT DR. M. EPSTEIN

London, February 18, 1914.

At its February meeting the First Lodge of England witnessed the installation of the office-bearers for the year and listened with pleasure to the interesting Presidential address of Brother Augustus Kahn. The President gave a brief history of the Order in Germany, comparing the early vicissitudes of the lodges there with our own. When the London lodge first appeared on the horizon it was received with supercilious taciturnity on the part of the leaders of Anglo-Jewry. The old cry was heard again—there is no need for it; everything that requires doing is being attended to. Curiously enough the same objection appears to have been raised against the order in its early days in Germany. Yet what progress it has to record there! And it is of good augury to the lodge in London. Already its growth has been satisfactory. It numbers in its ranks a goodly number of the younger men of standing in the community. And if its record in the past is not an exceedingly long one, its promise for the future is hopeful. The new President advocated a large increase in membership. That ought to be possible without in any wise lowering the high standard of qualification for admission. Moreover, many practical problems still remain to be carried through and the lodge might begin to face them. The establishment of an additional reading room in the East End for Jewish and Hebrew periodicals would be a boon to the growing intellectual masses in the neighborhood. This is but one possibility. Under the business-like guidance of the new President we are likely to make an attempt to review other possibilities too. The next step will be to carry them out.

On the social side likewise it would be well to lay stress. The Chanuka Soiree was a great success. If the entertainment for Purim prove equally satisfactory, the record will be complete. There is no doubt that the lodge has strengthened social solidarity among its members. It has given us something we lacked before. Even if it had done nothing else, there would thus have been something valuable to its credit. But it has accomplished much beside. There can be no doubt now that the order has taken root in England and that it is likely to spread. This fact must surely be a source of great satisfaction to President Kraus.

One of the most encouraging signs of the times in Anglo-Jewry is the attention that is being given to problems of education, in the largest connotation of the term. The religious education of our children, such as it is, is being kept at as high a standard as is practicable in the present circumstances, and many nurse the hope that in time it will be possible to raise it. The Literary Society movement, akin in essence to your Chautauqua Institution, is flourishing. The number of societies within the Union increases from year to year, and their activities bear witness to the growth of the "intellectual life" in our midst. This is all to the good. But in connection with the revival a very serious question presents itself. A large number of Jewish young men are now to be found at the universities. From time to time we hear of their academic achievements. Then comes a sudden silence. New names loom large in the records. Of the old names we hear no more. Where are these men? Why do they not come forward to help to bear the communal burden? Do we lose them because there is no room for new workers? Are they out of sympathy with the existing order? Does Judaism appeal to them no more? What is the cause?

Our university system in England may be divided into two sections. The first comprises Oxford and Cambridge, our oldest academic bodies, with a common system of training and residence. In the second section we place all the newer universities, from London and Durham, the earliest, to Liverpool, Manchester and Bristol, the newest. It is pretty safe to assert that every British university has some Jewish students. Those in the newer universities, organized as these are on the continental model, and indeed on that of some of the American universities, are able to participate in the general life around them. These students live where they like, either with their families or in lodgings. The university influence in their cases is limited to the university teaching and what social life there is in academic circles. In many cases these influences are strong enough. But a Jewish student at Manchester or Leeds or Sheffield, besides enjoying all that his university has to offer, may also take part in the Jewish life of the town.

——o——

The case is different at Oxford and Cambridge. In these centers the universities dominate the town and there is no Jewish life as such. Consequently unless the Jewish element is organized, the Jewish student will have only the university influence. This is undoubtedly good. But it is not sufficient. It should be supplemented by some specifically Jewish influence. But how organize the Jewish element? When it is remembered that the characteristic of the Oxford or Cambridge training is the tutorial system, the answer to this question is suggested. The root of the tutorial system is personal intercourse between the tutor, the "Don" as he is called, and the pupil. So, if we are to organize the Jewish students at Oxford and Cambridge, it will have to be on the tutorial plan. That is to say, by introducing a personal relationship, a personal bond, between the students and some senior member of the university.

——o——

Cambridge has been fortunate in this respect. Ever since the days when Schechter was there, the Jewish students have had a center where a Jewish atmosphere has predominated and where a strong personality has, magnet-like, attracted all and sundry. Schechter came first. All those who know him will appreciate the power that he wielded and the impression he must have left. After Schechter came Israel Abrahams, who certainly has the fine and rare gift of ingratiating himself into young people's hearts. His house is the Jewish Mecca of Cambridge, and you may find there any Saturday afternoon different types of students (the women students of Girton and Newnham are there, too), often also a distinguished foreigner who is researching in Cambridge, and the "Don's" personality over all. The result is that in the first place you are able to tell what Jewish students, and how many, are in Cambridge; and in the second and more important place, you are able to bring them under some Jewish influence. Besides this, Cambridge is fortunate in having a Jewish resident or two connected with the university. The Perse School has a Jewish House attached to it and, of course, a Jewish head—Mr. J. H. Hersch, who is, by the way, one of the brethren of the London Lodge. All this makes for intensity and the result is seen in the fairly large number of Cambridge men who are found in positions of trust in the community.

——o——

Oxford has been rather unfortunate in this respect. There have been many distinguished Jews at its colleges, but never was there a center there of Jewish life. And this need has had its consequences. Many a Jewish student who might have profited by some Jewish influence during the most impressionable period of his life has thereby become less Jewish, and some have even grown to be anti-Jewish.

——o——

For a long time this problem of Oxford has been in the minds of some, themselves Oxford men, and latterly the fruit of their thought has ripened. It was the Chief Rabbi who took the matter in hand and his energy manifested itself in his collection of a large sum of money for the appointment of some one at Oxford to do what Israel Abrahams is doing at Cambridge. The contributors to the fund were the usual people—the Rothschilds, Claude Montefiore and some others. We believe we are right in asserting that the major part of the foundation is provided by the last named gentleman, who indeed (this is a matter of common knowledge), made possible the Cambridge arrangement. At this university Israel Abrahams is officially connected with the university as Reader in Talmudic. At Oxford the corresponding post has been filled for some years, and one must add, worthily filled, by that excellent scholar, Dr. Cowley. Hence the Oxford appointment will be, to begin with at any rate, a private one, and the name of Mr. Herbert Loewe, a young Cambridge graduate, who has won distinction as a Hebrew scholar, is being mentioned in connection with the appointment. If there is truth in the rumor, not only is Mr. Loewe to be congratulated, but Oxford is to be congratulated still more.

This careful thought for the "Jewish" welfare of the young layman finds its counterpart in the interest shown by the Council of Jews' College (our training school for the ministry) in the general welfare of the budding clergyman. Over and over again opinion in some quarters has been strongly expressed that the college should be removed from London to some quieter locality, preferably Oxford, or Cambridge. The students, so it has been urged, may possibly lose something by ceasing to be in contact with the life of the Jewish community in London; but they must gain by the atmosphere of sound learning which the university towns possess. The question has recently been carefully considered and before long we are to have a report on the matter. That report may prove a turning point in the history of Jews' College.

——o——

So we find concern for the Jewish students at Oxford and concern for Jews' College. We are also concerned just now about our Beth Din. It needs strengthening. Ever since the late Chief Rabbi died a promise has been repeatedly made that it should be strengthened. The problem is now being faced and the question is, how? Are we to draft into the Beth Din one of the numerous rabbis in our midst, whose Russian origin is a guarantee of traditional rabbinic learning? Or are we to give a call to some younger man, trained in England, with qualifications not quite so unimpeachable but with compensating advantages. Or are we to have one of each sort? The inner circle of our leaders who manage these things have not yet decided, but many rumors are in the air. In any event, the appointment or appointments will bring with them changes in communal life and it is to be hoped they will make for improved conditions.

——o——

The mention of appointments brings to mind appointments in the highest quarter—in the service of the state. American readers will know already that there has been some rearrangement of the English cabinet; as a result of which Mr. Herbert Samuel, until recently Postmaster General (with a salary of £2,500 per annum), has become President of the Local Government Board (with a salary of £5,000 per annum). The new appointment is a fit recognition of the excellent work which Mr. Samuel has done at the post office during his four years' tenure of the position, and indeed, he has won golden opinions from all parties. As early as 1831 Lord Macaulay had pointed out that as the points of difference between Christianity and Judaism have nothing to do with a man's fitness to be a magistrate, a legislator or a minister of finance, a Jew might be an excellent Cabinet Minister. In 1831 the argument; in 1914 its illustration in practice. Mr. Samuel is not alone in the promotions. His kinsman, Mr. Edwin Montagu, son of the late Lord Swaythling and brother of the present peer, has been made Financial Secretary to the Treasury, a position of great importance under the Chancellor of the Exchequer (who is our Minister of Finance).

——o——

Across the Channel also it is pleasant to chronicle that honors have been conferred on a Jew. Professor Bergson has been elected a member of the Academie Francaise, being the first Jew to obtain this distinction. It is curious to notice a similarity in the arguments used by the Anti-Semitic press against Bergson's election and those put forward by the opponents of Jewish emancipation in England in the early decades of the last century. Elect a Jew, said the gentry in Paris, and it will mean the triumph of Israel. Was ever nonsense more nonsensical? Imagine all the Jews in the world, imagine the Russian Jews more especially, throwing up their caps in glee at "a triumph of Israel" because Professor Bergson has been elected a member of the French Academy! The picture is too comic. Certainly Jews will rejoice at the election. They will rejoice because in Bergson's election justice scores another victory over prejudice, and all right-minded men will rejoice with them. That Bergson is a Jew of distinction is beside the mark. Bergson was a distinguished Jew before he became an Academician.

But no sooner has justice won victory over wrong than it must gird its loins for another fight. The scene is Russia. The dramatis personæ murderers. We ventured to suggest in these columns that the word Beiliss would one day become a term for certain circumstances in which murder and unjust accusation and foul calumny would all combine. Scarcely has the echo of the Beiliss case died away than another comes to trouble the world with its horrible details and its no less horrible accusations. Our American readers will have heard all about it. In Fastoff, near Kiev, a Jewish boy has been found murdered in a way that suggests the murder of the boy Yuschinsky. In some quarters it has been suggested that the same gang of evil-doers were responsible for both crimes. On the other hand, a second suggestion of ritual murder is feared. Anything, it would seem, is possible in the Holy City of Kiev. For the moment, there is little news of any developments. But all Jews will watch anxiously for the turn of events in the case, lest the lives of our brethren in Russia be imperiled. It is amazing that the ritual murder lie should live on. It is amazing that this relic of a superstition which is worthy only of the Dark Ages should find currency in the Century of Enlightenment.

But in Russia such things are possible. Recently a novel, translated into German from the Swedish, dealt with the psychology underlying the acusation. The author, Aage Madelung, has made a special study of life in Russia and seldom have we read a description of it so full of insight as in Die Gezeichneten. Given an ignorant and brutal peasantry, and superstitious to boot; given an unprincipled villain with a grudge against certain Jews of his acquaintance, the grudge being traceable to his own wicked passions; given the treatment of the Jews by the Russian Government such as we know it today, and you have all the background for raising the ritual murder ghost and for stirring up an anti-Jewish crusade. The author of Die Gezeichneten explains it all very clearly; why it is possible to get such a belief accepted; how it is done; the type of man who does it, and the rest. One or two slips in detail make it evident that the author is not himself a Jew. That only makes his study more valuable in that it removes the possible accusation of prejudice in favor of the Jews. As we read the book we wished that a somewhat shorter version of it (for the story does not much matter) might be translated into English and scattered broadcast in England and America. It would explain a riddle that requires some explanation—how ritual murder might grow up.

JEWS AS SHAREHOLDERS.

Minister's Attack on the Rights of Joint Stock Companies.

At a recent meeting of the Cabinet in St. Petersburg, the Minister of the Interior proposed that joint-stock companies should not be allowed to issue any but ordinary shares, and that the issue of all bearer shares should be forbidden, since by means of the latter the law prohibiting Jews from holding real estate might be circumvented.

M. Kokovtsoff, Minister of Finance, M. Timasheff, Minister of Commerce, and M. Kharitonoff, the Auditor-General, resisted the proposal.

M. Sheglovitoff, Minister of Justice, insisted that while the issue of bearer shares might be permitted, companies should be entitled only to rent, and not to own, real estate.

The matter is to be considered further by the Council of Ministers.

DUMA BARS JEWISH SAILORS.

The Duma Committee has resolved to exclude Jews from being employed on the new steamers which are to ply between Russia and the Balkan States despite the testimony of experts to the capabilities of Jews as sailors.

COMMENT

CHANGE OF HEART.

By the treaty of Berlin in 1870 which constituted the kingdom of Roumania, it was stipulated that in the new realm there was to be no distinction among its citizens because of race or religion. From that day to this that clause of the treaty has been a dead letter. The laws of the land have discriminated against Jewish residents of the kingdom and denied them not merely citizenship rights but many other fundamental human rights. There has been much criticism of this flagrant violation of the treaty, as well as severe censure of the injustice and inhumanity of a course that so brutally persecuted perfectly law abiding and respectable citizens. The situation was considered all the more remarkable on account of the well known humanitarian work of the queen, who is known the world over by her pen name, Carmen Sylva. But all the protests have been unavailing, the condition of Jewish citizens of Roumania has gone from bad to worse. When after the late Balkan war the king of Roumania issued a decree granting certain rights and privileges to the soldiers who had participated in the fighting, a great agitation arose because it was learned that there were so many Jewish soldiers in the army who had in every instance done their full share of the fighting and had endured many hardships. Some way had to be found to prevent these soldiers from participating in the benefits that would come to all good soldiers because of the government decree. Disgraceful as it may seem, it is nevertheless true that to meet the demands of the pin-headed bigots the names of Jewish soldiers were taken off the roster, the explanation given being that they had no place there in the first place.

A London dispatch of Saturday gives the information that the force of unfavorable public opinion has finally reached King Charles and he has come to the conclusion that the existing conditions of the Jews in his country is untenable. He came to this conclusion because he had taken into consideration the fact that so many Jewish soldiers had participated in the Balkan war. He as a constitutional monarch, however, cannot do anything without first coming to an undestanding on the subject with the legislative bodies. It is to be hoped that his attitude is sincere, because it will then be reasonable to anticipate no opposition from the legislative body. Roumania is like enough to Russia to make this latter hope perfectly justifiable. Every great power of Europe, outside of Russia, has at one time or another brought the matter of the treatment of the Jews before the Roumanian government. They did so because of their co-operation in the makin of the treaty of Berlin. Only on December 17, 1913, Count von Barchtold, foreign minister in Austria, made the public statement that in spite of all the pressure that had been brought to bear it was not likely that the powers would take any direct action in the matter. It seems strange that in spite of the famous treaty the powers should have been willing to consider this a purely domestic matter. The past cannot be forgotten, but Roumania may do much to regain the respect of the civilized world by ending the period of injustice and persecution of the 270,000 Jews of its realm and granting them full rights as it is compelled in honor to do under the treaty of Berlin. —Erie Dispatch.

The literary test in the Burnett immigration bill is a step in the wrong direction. Many an honest immigrant comes to this country who is unable to read because he never had a chance to learn, but who becomes a good citizen and his children get the benefits of our educational facilities and become useful citizens and to bar such men is a travesty on justice and a violation of our long continued boast that this country is the asylum for the oppressed. Some of the best citizens in this country cannot read or write and some of the greatest scoundrels are the smartest people. The bill would shut out many an honest man because he is ignorant and let in the incendiary anarchist because he is intelligent.—Louisiana (Mo.) Press Journal.

SHALL WE KEEP OUT FOREIGNERS JUST BECAUSE THEY NEVER HAD A CHANCE?

We wonder how many of the pilgrim fathers could have got by if there had been a literacy test for aliens in 1620 such as is proposed by the Burnett immigration bill, now up in Congress.

We don't know how many of 'em could read; but the colonial records make it very plain that most of 'em couldn't spell.

The Burnett bill would let no foreigner in for keeps unless he (or she) can read 30 words, chosen at random, in some language. Character, willingness to work, eagerness to learn are put aside as not to be counted.

That isn't all. The bill provides that even though the applicant passes the 30-word test, he must be kept out if he believes in or teaches the destruction of private property, anarchy or the overthrow of organized government by force.

The bill doesn't say what kind of property, what kind of anarchy, or what kind of government. It might be private property which ought to be destroyed—as, for instance, gambling machinery, opium joints, lottery tickets, or houses of ill fame. It might be government like Russia's, which can be made serviceable to human liberty only after its forcible overthrow.

None of these shadings are in the bill. It flatly clothes the immigration officials with power to keep out illiterates and all "dangerous" agitators while offering no barriers to the admission of learned and cunning rascals, eager to exploit America's resources and labor.

It may be that immigration, the immigration of worthy aliens, needs to be curbed for a time. It may be that Uncle Sam needs a breathing spell while he assimilates what he has.

But can anything be said in favor of the 30-word reading test? Can we with safety rest our ban on the narrow foundations of this bill?

Up to this time America has spelled opportunity and because of that fact has enriched itself with much of the old world's best blood and brawn.

Do we really now want to draw about us a circle of exclusiveness aimed not merely at the vicious, the defective and the dangerous, but also at the unfortunate, the lowly, the oppressed?

Up from ignorance, up from poverty, have come most of the world's great men, made great by ambition and opportunity.

Let us be careful how we close our door in their face!—Mobile Evening Post.

HELPING THE CZAR.

Steps are under way to make a new commercial treaty with the Czar. Our business interests cry for it, and President Wilson is not the man to say nay to them. He understands full well what is expected of him.

To be sure, the old treaty of 1832 has been abrogated by us. The passport question was the rock on which it was wrecked. Blundering, obstinate Russian officialdom thought it could afford to offend and insult American Jews just as well as Jews born on Russian soil. It was a most stupid mistake. In America, Jews have risen to a position of influence in the world of finance and business. They have become a powerful part of our bourgeois class. Hence their grievance was taken up by so-called public opinion, and the old treaty with Russia was torn up in consequence.

But, all the same, our business men never lost sight of Russia from the point of view of commerce. The export and import trade with that immense territory continued, treaty or no treaty. Only, there were some difficulties to be overcome, difficulties that a proper treaty would easily obviate. That is why negotiations for a new treaty are now under way.

Some way will be found, no doubt, to let prominent Americans of the Jewish race henceforth enter Russia without humiliating them first on account of their race and faith. The Czar's government will swallow that pill, though rather reluctantly. But they expect compensation. And our wily politicians are now making ready to grant it.

The sacrifice they are offering is our Right of Political Asylum. They do not say so in so many words, but their acts betray the whole damnable scheme. The provisions in the Burnett-Dillingham bill against political suspects mean just that, and nothing else.

If that bill becomes law, no man or woman of revolutionary past or even revolutionary belief will ever be allowed to set foot on American soil. Such obnoxious persons will even be deported after slipping through by some chance or oversight. For three whole years the sword of deportation will hang over them. It will be administrative action, too, like the administrative banishment under the Czar. We are progressing in Uncle Sam's land, with our eyes on the St. Petersburg model.

That is the price our business world is willing to pay for the Czar's good will and his paltry concession. That explains the ominous silence of our press as far as this scheme is concerned. The American eagle is muzzled. He must not shriek for freedom's sake. The shades of Kosciusko, of Garibaldi, of Franz Sigel, Carl Schurz and Louis Kossuth must not be conjured up. This country must no longer remain "the haven of refuge for the oppressed of all nations." Oh, no; we must be good friends with the Czar and his army of political spies. We offended them cruelly when we would not let them take a few refugees under the extradition treaty. No more trouble of that sort in future. No embarrassing court proceedings. We ourselves become the "Little Father's" political agents. How pleasant, how obliging!

That is the game our gumshoe politicans are playing in Washington..

Will the American people stand for it?—New York (N. Y.) Call.

JUSTICE FOR RUMANIAN JEWS.

King Carlos of Rumania announces his desire to remove the legal restrictions imposed by his kingdom upon the Jewish population, restrictions which for more than half a century have been imposed in defiance of the specific guarantees of the Treaty of Berlin and in violation of elementary principles of justice and humanity. The King is reported to have reached this conclusion because of the number of Jewish soldiers who participated in the recent Balkan War, his promise of naturalization for these men being in line with a similar extension of justice to Rumanian Jews at the close of the Russo-Turkish War and the liberation of Rumania from the Turkish suzerainty. The King's decision is a first step toward righting a gross injustice which has been a stain upon the Rumanian escutcheon, but as the accomplishment of his purpose must depend upon the co-operation of the Rumanian legislative bodies, heretofore actuated by bitter prejudice against the 300,000 Jewish inhabitants of the country, it is too soon to felicitate the persecuted upon their deliverance. Doubtless the influence of the King will be potent in bringing about results, but although the Rumanian inhumanity to the Jews has been the subject of repeated protests from the European Powers parties to the Berlin Treaty, Rumania has been able in the past to defy or evade the obligation of obedience to the treaty which gave the kingdom its freedom from foreign oppression.

Article XLIV of the Berlin Treaty requires that absolute freedom of worship shall be granted to all persons in Rumania, and that no religious beliefs shall be a bar to the enjoyment of any political rights. Rumania was compelled to amend its constitution in accord with this requirement, it having provided that "only Christians can become citizens," but the subsequent laws passed under pressure granting naturalization to the Jews have been flagrantly evaded and gross discriminations and cruelties have been the lot of the Rumanian Jews. This grievance has been the subject of frequent diplomatic representations, but Rumania has hitherto defied public opinion. Whether it will continue in this stupid policy of persecution will be the measure of the genuineness of its civilization.—Philadelphia (Pa.) Public Ledger.

"RITUAL MURDER" CRY AGAIN.

That the cry of "ritual murder" has again been raised in Russia is scarcely surprising. The government saw to that. The pressure of public opinion forced it to liberate Mendal Beiliss. Bigotry and prejudice disgraced the verdict, through the declaration that murder for ritual purposes was practiced by the Jews. The universal and convincing testimony of high dignitaries of Catholic and Protestant churches and of scholars and historians was wilfully ignored.

The death of another boy has served to revive the old charge. The forces of reaction are again at work with slander and malicious falsehood. Whether they will be strong enough to bring about the conviction with the inevitable resulting massacres remains to be seen. It is the bureaucracy, and the Czar himself who will be on trial.—Boston (Mass.) Morning Herald.

THE B'NAI B'RITH CONVENTION.

The convention of District Grand Lodge, No. 3, of the B'nai B'rith, which will be held in Philadelphia, beginning on Sunday next, will meet under favorable auspices. The order has been making considerable progress in this district in recent years. A new spirit has entered into its councils; the older men coming to realize that a new generation has appeared on the scene with a desire to advance on different lines from those which prevailed in the early days of the organization, when the endowment feature was conspicuous and other items on the program were given a subsidiary position.

There has been a decided change in the view of the functions of the B'nai B'rith. The philanthropic purposes of the order, it is true, were in evidence a half century ago, when a number of important charities, in different parts of the country, were established under its auspices. Some of these—notably that great institution, the Cleveland Orphan asylum—have maintained a direct affiliation with the order ever since. Others have been dissociated from it by reasons of considerations of financial policy. Here, of late, several new institutions have been established under the patronage of the districts. The Leo N. Levi Sanatorium at Hot Springs, Arkansas, is one of these. The B'nai B'rith Orphanage at Erie is an enterprise which has been established by District No. 3 and which will be carried on under its auspices and control.

The influence of the European lodges of the B'nai B'rith upon the order in this country has been a highly beneficial one, for their appeal has been broad and liberal, aiming as it does, not merely at the general welfare of the Jewish people, but quite as much at the promotion of a specific Jewish culture, clearly defined and accentuated. The American lodges practically ignored that phase for many years. Here, recently, and as an indirect result of the methods of the European lodges, a change for the better has been noted. Young and vigorous men have become affiliated with the order, and they, while continuing the good work of the past, have started in to enlarge the scope of the work of the lodges in which they are in the majority. The B'nai B'rith has always been entitled to rank amongst the great fraternal organizations in which dignity and decorum are insisted upon in the conduct of affairs under all circumstances. An honorable history extending over a half century has been replete with good deeds. May the convention about to assemble in Philadelphia keep up the record that has marked the order in the various districts throughout the country.—Jewish Exponent.

B'NAI B'RITH EXCLUDES CHRISTIAN SCIENCE JEWS.

The district grand lodge of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith deserves the congratulations of the entire house of Israel, wheresoever dispersed, for its courageous and consistent attitude towards Christian Science, in denying members of that creed admission into the order. This action, in line with that of other grand lodges in the order, was taken at the annual session of District No. 4 grand lodge last Monday because several Christian Science Jews or Jewish Christian Scientists take your choice as to the proper appellation—had made application for membership into the order, and some of the lodges desired an expression of opinion from the main body.

The Central Conference of American Rabbis and similar bodies among our orthodox brethren struck the keynote of the situation when they solemnly declared that one can not be a Jew and a Christian Scientist at the same time. This means to say that Jewish congregations can not consistently admit non-Jews as members of their institutions; and if there is a lingering doubt in the minds of those who have left the congregation of Israel and the faith of their fathers as to the logic of the situation they are respectfully referred to the rule of the Christian church itself that only those who have severed their connection with other religious organizations are eligible to membership in that body.

It is not our desire to utter harsh or even unkind words about those who have for one reason or another joined the ranks of the apostates. Their conscience shall be their sole judge. But they must simply understand that they have ceased to be Jews as effectively as though they had joined the Roman Catholic church or any other Christian denomination.—Emanuel

Historical Sketch of Washington Lodge No. 19

On February 22, 1854, Washington Lodge was instituted as the nineteenth of the Order of B'nai B'rith. A spirit of progress had led certain members to seek an enlarged field for thought and activity. To every Ben B'rith the supreme duty of loyalty to the faith is followed by the spirit of patriotism and loyalty to the nation; and so Meyer Thalmessinger — "founder and father of Washington Lodge," as many called him, and as he delighted to be known — conceived, with his fellows, an organization of American Jews as a part of the representative international Jewish organization that the B'nai B'rith was destined to become. With the fire and zeal of the patriots of 1776, resolving in their by-laws ever to fittingly celebrate the day which started them on their fraternal path, the career of Washington Lodge was begun with a comradeship and warmth of friendship that sixty years of existence has served but to intensify.

No history, however brief, would be true, that did not first mention Meyer Thalmessinger, who, at the Golden Jubilee, ten years ago, stirred the hearts of everyone present, as he led the procession that began the historic proceedings. None that knew him and saw him round out 50 years of activity, privileged at the end of that long cycle, to lead the organization, as he did at its inception, but felt with him the great joy he showed—a remembrance that will not soon fade and that seems fresh tonight as it then was. Nor would our resume be less accurate, were we to omit mention of the late Moritz Ellinger, the sage thinker, speaker and writer, who, for almost as long a time, presented one of the most remarkable and revered characters in Jewish life. These two men, life-long friends, mounting high in the official councils of the whole Order; poured out their hearts in Washington Lodge, dominated its debates, led in its activities, largely inspired its charities and philanthropies, and carried its repute higher and higher year by year.

The world is so small, after all, that many will recall the families from whom sprung the charter members of Washington Lodge. The memories of the departed are always green in Washington Lodge, and we hold it a privilege to repeat those names on this Anniversary. These were the charter members:

S. Bendicks, Chas. J. Brill, W. Chuck, Dr. L. Elsberg, Abraham Emanuel, Joseph Emanuel, J. S. Erdman, Salomon Emrich, Dr. E. M. Friedlein, Saly Fromkess, A. Gutman, Henry Haas, Martin L. Haas, Solomon Henle, Salomon Herrman, S. Herzfeld, Abraham Heuman, August Hirschbaum, Jonas Hochstadter, Henry Jones, Simon Kahn, Leopold Kaufmann, Julius Lessing, E. Levinger, M. L. Lichtenstein, Adolph Markowitz, Henry May, H. May, L. Mayer, L. Meyers, Caesar Neuman, Gabriel Ries, B. Rotschild, Samuel Schiele, Sigmund Schiele, Dr. Heinrich Schweig, I. Sontheimer, Raphael Springer, James Strauss, Philip Staus, M. Thalmessinger, T. Theobold, Henry Theobold, Leopold Waitzfelder and Mayer Weinschenk.

Some of these names are still represented by sons, grandsons and sons-in-laws, and some of the later accessions like the Wollsteins, Davidsons and Meyers, are names with which to conjure in Washington Lodge. Thoughts of the kindly, benevolent and Humorous Abraham Emanuel and Herman Cantor recur at this late day, though years have passed since they were gathered to their fathers.

The steadfastness of purpose, the intense loyalty, the deep personal interest and determination of the colonists a century and a quarter ago, all seemed re-enacted, in smaller proportion, in Washington Lodge. At first, meetings were held weekly; Jewish problems were keenly discussed; the sessions were enthusiastic beyond description, elections took place every six months, and, above all, an atmosphere was created where friendship overcame strangeness, where, however warm the debates of the sessions, men were comrades, and learned to be better men and truer comrades.

For many years, the conduct of business was solely in German, as some still with us, recall. Later, this gave way to the prevailing tongue, and now, it is a rare occasion when a member feels obliged to ask indulgence while he joins in debate in "die Muttersprache."

Perhaps it is "telling tales out of school," but no truer sidelight on the characters of the founders may be gleaned than from one incident. Of those who became sick, some had need to claim the benefits to which the by-laws entitled them, and others, of course, had not. That there should never be restraint on this score, it was arranged (and for a long time the custom was adhered to) that all members, when ill, had to take their benefits; and then those, more fortunate in a material way than their fellows, quietly returned to the Lodge what they had thus received.

In every District Grand Lodge convention (District No. One embracing New York and New England), in every convention of the entire Order representatives of Washington Lodge, presented or urged the adoption of progressive measures in philanthropy, charity, education and Jewish uplift. It paid great tributes to great men, to the intellectual giants of large heart of whom the Order had not a few, including the lamented Leo. N. Levi. It journeyed in a bitter snowstorm to the grave of Henry Jones, the founder of the Order, a magnificent idealist, whose impress is left for all time on Jewish history in this country; and so, too, it brought relief to his widow; when need overcame her following his death. It sent with all solemnity to the Civil War, James Strauss, one of its members, when that memorable conflict called him to duty with his regiment; its purse was wide open whenever calamity befell, and its delegates from the first misfortune to the terrible days of Kishineff—and later—were in the forefront of those to do practical work of relief for the distressed.

What was first a handful of men has grown to nearly 250. Great strides have been made in charity, philanthropy and education; and the lodge room, in a large metropolitan center, is no longer the "second home" of American Jews as once it was. Yet the "spirit of the fathers" is always with Washington Lodge; and in the minds of its members, as well those who rarely attended its meetings, as those who frequent the lodge room, is the consciousness, that the dreams of Henry Jones, of Meyer Thalmessinger, of Moritz Ellinger, and of the men who labored with them, are being realized.

Spread out now over four continents, welding the Jews all over the globe into one representative organization, resolutely moving to the relief of the persecuted and distressed, always concerned for the mental and moral uplift of the people of our faith, regarded nationally and internationally as the spokesman of the Jews everywhere—the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith has only begun to do its work, to carry the banner of light, of justice and of truth to the far ends of the earth, in the everlasting battle against ignorance, superstition and bigotry.

Inspired by the memories of its preceptors, imbued with the ideals of the Order, and conscious of the need of the continuance and enlargement of its labors, Washington Lodge enters upon its 61st year of existence, looking to an active and earnest board of officers, and to its younger members, to hold high its record, to broaden its activities to their own credit, to the credit of the Lodge and the Order, for the benefit of our distressed brethren, and above all else, to the greater glory of the God of Israel.

THE FIRST BAR MITZVATH OF THE B'NAI B'RITH ORPHANAGE AND HOME FOR FRIENDLESS CHILDREN OF DISTRICT No. 3.

On Saturday morning, February 21st, Louis Weinstein was Bar Mitzvath at the West Eighth Street Temple, Erie, Pa. Louis is the first boy to be Bar Mitzvath from the B'nai B'rith Orphanage and Home for Friendless Children of District No. 3 and acquitted himself splendidly, a credit to himself, Rabbi Currick and the Matron, Miss Eichenbaum.

The services were well attended and was a great inspiration to the boys of the Home to listen to the exercises. Louis received many gifts, among them a beautiful gold watch and chain from the President, Mr. Isador Sobel, a purse from friends. The money being used to start a bank account which may some day prove of service.

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF HOREB LODGE.

Mr. Adolf Kraus, President of the Order, Guest of Honor.

The 60th anniversary of the institution of Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., was held at the Hotel Taft ball room at New Haven on the evening of Feb. 16, 1914. Nearly 500 members of the Order, attired in full dress, were present to witness the initiation of 38 candidates out of a class of 50 secured for that occasion. The degree team of the lodge, the prize winning team of the District, officiated.

The guest and speaker of the evening was Mr. Adolf Kraus of Chicago, President of the Order. The occasion was also honored by the presence of out-of-town officers of the Grand Lodge, namely: Herman Asher of New York, First Vice-President of the District; Hon. Albert Philips, Secretary of State; Mr. I. Lasker, Deputy for Springfield, Mass.; Chas. Shapiro of Bridgeport; Judge Isaac Wolf and Max Adler. Music was furnished by the Horeb Lodge orchestra and a buffet lunch was served after the initiation.

CINCINNATI LODGE NO. 4.

REPORT ON MOVING PICTURE FILMS.

By Isidor Wise, Chairman.

To the President of The Cincinnati Lodge No. 4, I. O. B. B.

A brief investigation of conditions was sufficient to learn that the evils complained of with reference to moving picture theaters and certain obnoxious films can only be remedied at the source of the pollution, that is, the manufacturer of the films. As soon as it can be brought to the understanding of the makers of films that they must observe the rules of ordinary decency as well as business, the trouble will be in a fair way to be remedied, especially the worst features.

The results of the investigation may be summed up as follows:

FIRST: There are two concerns that distribute films in all parts of the land, The General company and the Mutual company. The latter is also known as the Independent company and is the weaker of the two.

SECOND: The General company will not permit the exhibitor to exchange films nor will it permit any selection of films; the theaters are compelled to take what is sent them. The Mutual company, however, will allow a choice of films and will exchange those not desired, but the manager of the theater must take chances on having to show a "repeater" or an old or cheap film in place of the one rejected.

THIRD: Practically all of the stock of the concerns that make and circulate films is owned by Jews; the entire business in fact, is in the hands of Jews and it seems no more than proper that the blame for making and circulating these obnoxious films should be placed where it belongs, on the manufacturer.

FOURTH: The demand for the class of films complained of is very great, particularly in the rural districts and in those sections of the cities where the poorer classes reside. The theaters in the better residential districts do not as a rule show these pictures, even when they are compelled to accept and pay for them, preferring rather to cater to the Jewish patronage although at a sacrifice.

These four points practically cover the matter as far as the general features are concerned. The remedy lies in two points, viz.,

First, to prevent the making of the films, and

Second, in educating people to stay away from theaters that show the obnoxious films.

These two points are the crux of the matter. The first is clearly the work of the Anti-Defamation League directly, while the latter is within the scope of the general organization in a national sense, and of the individual Lodges in the matter of the local work.

As to local work, there is little to be done outside of educating the people to stay away from the places that show obnoxious films, not only on the occasion when the film is shown, but to cut out that particular theater until the manager understands that he must not show pictures of that kind. There is little use in trying to suppress the pictures when they are billed. It not only aggravates the manager but is sure to make him hostile to any attempt to get such pictures off the stage altogether.

If the Anti-Defamation League will make a vigorous campaign against such men as Lubin of Philadelphia, and Selig of Chicago, on the ground that they are Jews and as such are disgracing their people, there is no doubt that the production of obnoxious films can be stopped. Local effort can only second a national movement with any hope of ultimate success and it is up to the Anti-Defamation League to make a personal and aggressive assault on the Jews who are responsible for the films and if necessary compel them to stop the manufacture of such films or read them out of the congregation of Israel. In short, these men must be made to understand that they owe certain obligations to the religion in which they were born, and that they will not be allowed to continue to exploit their own people in the shameless manner they are at present guilty of.

Games and Dancing Enjoyed By the Young Folks.

One of the prettiest and most pleasant events of the holiday was the Washington's Birthday party given Sunday afternoon, Feb. 22, 1914, for the children of the members of Harmony Lodge 711, I. O. B. B. at the handsomely appointed lodge rooms. It was attended by scores of children and their parents and the occasion was indeed a gala event. A fine program of a musical and literary character was rendered as follows.

Grand march, Metropolitan Orchestra.

Chorus, "The Star Spangled Banner."

Recitation, "Washington," Dorothy Volkenstein.

Violin solo, "March Militaire," Alfred Gilman.

Recitation, "America," composed and recited by Harold Moss.

Recitation, "Child's Prayer," Ruth Berger.

Society dances, Harold Moss and Florence Davidson.

Recitation, "Nursery Rhymes," Barnet Shapiro, aged 3.

Recitation, "The Village Blacksmith," Sadie Landis.

After the formal program there were games for the little ones and dancing for the older children. Refreshments were served to all, the children sitting at small tables in the lodge room and to the parents in the ball room.

Abe L. Kline, chairman of the committee was dressed in costume of Uncle Sam and managed the affair in a most excellent manner assisted by the ladies of the committee.

At the close of the entertainment the children marched around the hall singing America. Each child throwing serpentine, red, white and blue paper as they sang. The parents and others present joined in the singing and in throwing the American color serpentine papers, making a most beautiful effect and instilling into the children a feeling of patriotism that will help to make loyal citizens of the future.

The ball room and lodge room was beautifully decorated with streamers of garland and American flags, being very effective and caused considerable comment.

During the afternoon many souvenirs of the occasion were distributed to the children and the guests such as buttons with picture of George Washington with red, white and blue ribbon attached with name of Harmony Lodge in gold letters. Hatchets with American colors inside to be pulled out with a string. Fancy blowers for the little tots with American colors; fancy red, white and blue fans for the girls; each child and guest was presented with a small silk American flag.

The event is one that will be long remembered by all who were present, particularly the children who will always have pleasant recollections of Washington's birthday and Harmony lodge, No. 711, I. O. B. B.

CHARITY BALL OF HOREB LODGE NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The charity ball given by Horeb Lodge No. 25 at the Music Hall on the evening of Feb. 18, 1914, was a notable event. It proved to be one of the most brilliant affairs ever given by the lodge. The hall was attractively decorated with bunting and flowers. A striking effect was produced when the lights were extinguished and colored spot lights were flashed on the dancers.

The grand march started at 9:00 o'clock and was led by the president of the lodge, Mr. S. J. Witz, with Miss Hilda Schram. Dancing was continued until 2:00 o'clock with an intermission, during which a buffet luncheon was served in the dining hall at midnight. The proceeds of the affair will be devoted to charity.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

HOREB LODGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

At the regular meeting of Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., held on Feb. 1, 1914, a class of candidates was initiated by the degree team of the Lodge. Attorney Jacob Caplan delivered an address on the life of William McKinley and Mr. Paul Toft, who delighted the members of the Lodge with his singing on other occasions, was again on the program.

The Lodge was elated with the news of its victory in the degree team contest. Inasmuch as fifteen Lodges have tried for the prize, it is apparent that the Horeb Lodge degree team must have done excellent work to carry off the trophy.

The delegates to the recent convention of the District Grand Lodge, held at Springfield, Mass., submitted reports and related the doings at the convention.

The last big social event of the season was a Horeb Lodge ball, which was held on Feb. 18 at the Music Hall. The proceeds of the ball will be devoted to charitable purposes.

ANSONIA, CONN.

The annual dance of Ansonia Lodge No. 709 of Ansonia, Conn., was held on Feb. 22, 1914, in the Herman Hall and was a very pleasant affair. There was a large attendance. In addition to the members of the lodge and their friends from the four associated towns there were many guests from other cities. Delegations were present from Bridgeport, New Haven, Waterbury lodges and visitors were also in attendance from Norwalk and Worcester, Mass.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

On Monday night, Feb. 23, 1914, Toledo Lodge No. 183 held its annual dinner at the Toledo Commerce Club. The dinner was preceded by the initiation of a class of 40 candidates and about 150 members attended the meeting of the lodge to witness the ceremony. The work was very impressive and was conducted by the degree team of the lodge. The guests of honor were Mr. Harry Simon of St. Louis and Mr. Samuel J. Kornhauser of Cleveland, President and Second Vice-President, respectively, of District Grand Lodge No. 2, who delivered interesting and entertaining addresses. Brother J. Jacobson acted as toastmaster, and besides the guests of honor the following responded entertainingly: Harry Levinson, Rabbi D. Alexander, I. M. Rosenthal, M. Rosenberg and A. G. Robinson.

NEWARK, N. J.

Previous to their leaving for their new home in Trenton, Brother and Mrs. David Holzner were tendered a farewell dinner by the members of Ezekiel Lodge No. 90 of Newark, N. J., of which lodge Mr. Holzner is a Past President and a member for the past 15 years. During the dinner addresses were made by Dr. B. S. Pollok, Past Grand President of the District; Rabbi Solomon Foster, Philip Lindeman, and Franklin Marx. Brother Arthur Phillips acted as toastmaster. Short responses were made also by Brother Fred Jay, Second Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, B. J. Sugarman, President of the lodge, and others.

A handsome testimonial was presented to the guests of honor by the members of the lodge. The presentation address was made by Rabbi Foster. At the close of the dinner dancing was indulged in.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.

The meeting arranged by the St. Louis Lodges at Temple Israel on Feb. 1 1914, was a success from every point of view. Rabbi Louis Bernstein of St. Joseph, Mo., who was the speaker of the evening, delivered an eloquent address on "The New Trend in Social Service."

He told of the work of the committee, of the ideals and the goal which the committee has in mind in undertaking this work. He made a strong plea for social justice and for human service. He was introduced by Mr. Oscar Leo[illegible].

Preceding the lecture a musical and [illegible] program was carried out.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Minneapolis Lodge No. 271, although one of the largest and most active lodges in the district, is planning to make this the most active year in it's history. It is expected in the near future to hold a large celebration at which a class of fifty will be initiated.

At the regular meeting held Monday, Feb. 16, the new Intellectual Advancement committee under the efficient chairmanship of Rabbi David Matt presented its first program, and if this may be taken as a criterion of future programs of the year, Minneapolis lodge will surely have a most successful year as far as intellectual programs are concerned.

The speaker of the evening was Dr. Arthur D. Hirshfelder, head of the Department of Pharmacology and Therapeutics of the University of Minnesota, a recent acquisition to the university faculty and to Minneapolis Jewry. Dr. Hirshfelder is a man of national repute in the medical sciences. His subject was "The Jews and Medicine," and was most enthusiastically received by the large audience of members and their friends which had gathered to hear him.

The lodge was also favored by an unexpected visit from the President of the District, Brother Sylvan E. Hess, of St. Paul, who addressed the lodge in his usual witty manenr.

HOUSTON LODGE, HOUSTON, TEX.

Houston Lodge No. 434, I. O. B. B., held a very interesting meeting on Feb. 19, 1914, at Concordia Club Hall. The meeting was presided over by Jake H. Sam, President, who has a record of having never missed a meeting since his election as President three years ago. A good attendance was present and thirty applicants elected. Delegates elected to the District Grand Lodge Convention to be held at Shreveport, La., April 26, were Sol Schoenmann, H. J. Dannenbaum and Arthur Lyons. Jake H. Sam, alternate. Houston Lodge indorsed Mr. Dannenbaum as a delegate from District Grand Lodge No. 7, to the Constitutional Grand Lodge Convention to be held in San Francisco in 1915. It is the desire of this Lodge and Herzl Lodge No. 608 to have a joint initiation of about seventy-five members in the near future, to be followed by a smoker to take place in Concordia Hall. Louis A. Freed and Jake H. Sam were appointed a committee on arrangements to work in conjunction with Herzl Lodge.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Mr. Harry Simon of St. Louis, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, and Rabbi Jos. S. Kornfeld of Columbus, Ohio, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, were guests of honor at an open meeting held on Feb. 15, 1914, at the Temple, under the auspices of Indianapolis Lodge No. 58 of Indianapolis, Ind.

President Eph. Levin presided and introduced Mr. Simon and Rabbi Kornfeld, who spoke on the great work being done by the Order. Miss Claris Solomons, vocalist, and Raymond Kiser, pianist, gave a musical program during the evening. Following the meeting a reception was held in the vestry rooms and refreshments served. Preceding the meeting a dinner was given at the Indianapolis Club at which Mr. Simon, Rabbi Kornfeld, the present officers and Past Presidents and their wives were guests.

HOMESTEAD, PA.

Homestead Lodge No. 586 of Homestead, Pa., has since its existence accomplished many laudable results. Though the Jewish community is small, the lodge has established a Sabbath school, which it maintains entirely and which has an enrollment of quite a number of pupils under the supervision of a capable staff consisting of a superintendent and five teachers.

The lodge has also materially aided in the movement to erect a synagogue, which is near completion. In the line of social endeavor the lodge has been active and has succeeded in bringing about a better feeling and understanding among the Jewry of that community.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

The largest meeting in the history of Little Rock Lodge No. 158 of Little Rock, Ark., was held on Feb. 9, 1914. A class of 20 from a class of 54 elected candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge. This was followed by the installation of officers and the election of delegates to the District Grand Lodge convention to be held in Shreveport in April. It was decided to call a special meeting, and such a meeting was held on the following Sunday, when a second large class from the elected members was initiated.

The report of the building committee of the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital at Hot Springs, read by Dan Daniel, chairman, was received. Mr. Daniel reported that the hospital will be ready for dedication in April and that at completion it will represent an expenditure of approximately $100,000. None but persons in need of charity will be received when the institution is opened.

A Dutch luncheon was served following the installation and initiation.

ATHENS LODGE, ATHENS, GA.

Although this lodge is barely a year old, it has accomplished much since its institution. Realizing the possibilities of good work to be done in a community containing a college where Jewish students attend in large numbers, plans were formulated by the lodge with a view of inducing the students to enroll as members of the lodge. During the year several affairs were held under the auspices of the lodge, among them a banquet at which Brother C. N. Fiedelson of Savannah, an alumnus of the Georgia State University, was the principal speaker before a large audience at the synagogue. This was followed by a banquet at which the Jewish students were guests. As a result of this aflair a number of applications were received from the students.

The lodge holds two meetings a month, one of which is set aside for literary purposes, and programs have been arranged for these social meetings consisting of reading of papers on the life of some famous co-religionist, a summary of current events, and an open discussion of topics.

Another notable affair of the lodge was held at which Dr. George Solomon, Rabbi of Savannah and Secretary of the District Grand Lodge, was the guest of honor. A banquet was held, to which the students were again invited, and the affair was productive of good results.

Rabbi David Marx of Atlanta also honored the lodge with his presence at a public meeting, where he delivered an address to the Jewish community, with the result that several more students were enrolled as members of the lodge. The lodge increased its membership during the year more than 50 per cent, having gained 20 new members since its institution.

LAFAYETTE, IND.

Despite the cold weather a large and attentive audience assembled at the Temple on Sunday evening, Feb. 8, 1914, to listen to a lecture on Jewish history by Dr. Gotthardt Deutsch of the Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati. This affair was under the auspices of Barzillai Lodge No. 111.

The speaker of the evening was introduced in fitting words by Rabbi A. A. Zinkin.

The speaker took his hearers to the very beginning of Jewish history in Austria, telling them of the hardships and trials under its various rulers and emperors of the Jewish people till at last with education and the banishing of prejudice better times arrived; more freedom of thought and activity was granted them, so that in the present century, most all narrow-mindedness and social ostracism has disappeared and all privileges of citizenship are enjoyed by them.

Dr. Deutsch's lecture was amply and magnificently illustrated by numerous lantern slides, which contributed greatly to the enjoyment of his speech. He also interlarded his talk by many stories apropos to his remarks, so that the listeners were sorry when his address came to an end.

After the lecture a reception was given to the doctor in the vestry room and the ladies of the congregation served a most excellent and substantial lunch.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by Birmingham Lodge No. 368 and Magic City Lodge No. 725 of Birmingham on Feb. 15, 1914. In the afternoon a meeting of Birmingham Lodge was held at the Temple for the initiation of a large class of candidates. The degree team of Magic City Lodge assisted in the ceremonies. The celebration proper was held at the Temple and consisted of a public meeting, beginning at 8 o'clock in the evening. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Isadore Shapiro, who delivered the opening address. The principal address was made by Dr. Samuel Ullman. In addition to the addresses there was a reading by Miss Corrine Steinhardt of Cincinnati and several musical numbers. Refreshments were served at the close of the meeting.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

Jehudah Halevi Lodge No. 710 of New Britain, Conn., is in a flourishing condition and its membership includes practically all of the city's leading Jews. The meetings are as a rule well attended and the members take a keen interest in the welfare of the lodge. That the lodge is growing in popularity and taking its place among the leaders in the social life of the city is apparent from the large patronage its social gatherings receive. The recent ball given by the lodge was one of the red letter events of the season and the committee made every effort to insure its patrons a royal good time.

FAIRMOUNT, W. VA.

There was a large turnout of local Jewish people, as well as visitors from nearby cities, at the installation ceremonies of Fairmount Lodge No. 726 of Fairmount, W. Va., held on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 18, 1914. Hon. Isidor Sobel of Erie, Pa., Past President of District Grand Lodge No. 3, acted as the installing officer. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Sobel and other officers of the Grand Lodge. There were several musical numbers by the Sabbath school children and by others. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served.

STOCKTON, CAL.

Hope Lodge No. 126 of Stockton, Cal., held its 45th anniversary celebration on Feb. 4, 1914. Features of the event, which was unique in many respects, will linger long in the memories of those who were present. The celebration was specially honored by the presence of Brothers M. Morris and D. Morris, formerly of Stockton and now residing in San Francisco. These brothesr are the only surviving charter members of the lodge and they made a special trip from San Francisco to join in the celebration.

A meeting of the lodge was held, at which a class of candidates was initiated. This was followed by a banquet in the evening, at which President A. J. Schragge acted as toastmaster. The principal address was delivered by Mr. M. P. Stein, who dwelt upon the history of the Order since its foundation, laying special stress upon the activity of the European Grand Lodges of the Order. Among those who spoke were I. Stein, M. Coblentz, S. Safferhill, M. Conway and M. Cohn. A short congratulatory speech by Mr. M. G. Woodward, editor of the Stockton Mail, concluded the list of toasts.

SASKATOON, CANADA.

The installation of officers for the ensuing term was held by Saskatoon Lodge No. 739 on Tuesday, Jan. 27, 1914, and was made a public affair. Brother J. Feinstein, Past President of the Lodge, conducted the services. After the conclusion of the ceremonies a mock trial was held. Brother J. Feinstein acted as attorney for the Crown, while Brother J. Schwartzenbein represented the defense. Brother C. C. Tankel served as the accused. The trial was carried on in proper style with judge, jury, witnesses, clerks and bailiffs. Much mirth was created by the addresses of the attorneys and rulings of the court. Altogether the evening was a very enjoyable one.

What Our Lodges Are Doing

KANSAS CITY, KANS.

An auspicious meeting was held by Beth Horon Lodge No. 599 of Kansas City, Kans., on Sunday, Jan. 25, 1914. The guests of honor were Brother Harry Simon of St. Louis, President of District Grand Lodge No. 2, and Brother Jacob L. Lorie of Kansas City. Mo., Past President of the District Grand Lodge. The meeting was presided over by Brother A. Brenner, and after the transaction of routine business the installation of the newly elected officers was held by the President of the District Grand Lodge. A class of candidates was initiated by the degree team composed of members of Kansas City Lodge and of Beth Horon Lodge. After the initiatory services were concluded, a recess was ordered, and in the interim Mincha service was read by Brother Max Levine. At the conclusion of the recess the Lodge was again called to order and an address was delivered by Brother H. Simon on the work of the Order, which was listened to with much attention. He was followed by Brother J. L. Lorie, who reviewed the aims and objects of the Order. The meeting was thereupon closed and Maariv services were then recited by Brother Levine.

FORT SMITH, ARK.

Sunday, Feb. 22, 1914, was a day that will long be remembered in the annals of Fort Smith Lodge No. 306. The occasion was the annual celebration of "B'nai B'rith Day" and the affair was given much prominence by the presence of high officials of the order.

In the afternoon, the regular business session of the Lodge took place when a class of initiation was held under the charge of Rabbi Jos. Blatt, of Oklahoma City, and Dan Daniels, of Little Rock. Both are members of the general committee of the district, the former of Oklahoma and the latter from this state.

In the evening, starting at 8:30 p. m. the exercises took place at the Progress Club where a most interesting program was rendered. Louis Cohen, chairman of the arrangement committee, officiated as master of ceremonies and after a few opening remarks of welcome introduced the several speakers of the evening. President Dr. Davis W. Goldstein welcomed the visitors on behalf of the lodge, while Mayor Henry C. Read added a welcome for the city. J. B. Parker, Dan Daniels of Little Rock, Simon Joel, also made most interesting talks and received hearty applause. The chief address of the evening was that of Rabbi Blatt, of Oklahoma City, who dwelt principally on the merits of the order and what it did for the cause of Judaism. His address was well received.

ATLANTA, GA.

The January business meeting of Gate City Lodge No. 144 of Atlanta, Ga., brought out an unusually large attendance. A class of eight candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge, the membership of which has now reached the 200 mark. The special order of business was the installation of the officers-elect for the ensuing year and the appointment of various standing committees. An address by Dr. David Marx on "Bluebird" was the special feature of the meeting. Various committees have been appointed by the lodge to make the necessary arrangements in connection with the coming convention of the District Grand Lodge to be held in Atlanta on March 31 next. The silver jubilee of the Atlanta Orphans' Home will also be celebrated at the time the convention meets.

NEW CASTLE, PA.

On Sunday evening, Feb. 1, 1914. New Castle Lodge No. 609, of New Castle. Pa., tendered the newly elected Second Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, Brother Marcus Feuchtwanger, a banquet. During the toasts Hon. B. A. Winternitz, on behalf of the members of the Lodge, presented Brother Feuchtwanger with a loving cup in recognition of his services to the Lodge. Bro. Feuchtwanger responded in appropriate terms of appreciation. Other members delivered short addresses touching on the good of the Order, and also upon the B'nai B'rith Orphanage now in course of erection at Erie, Pa..

WHEELING, W. VA.

An important business and social session of Wheeling Lodge No. 615 of Wheeling, W. Va., was held at the Temple on Feb. 22, 1914. The meeting was in the nature of a farewell to Rabbi Abr. Brill, the founder of the Lodge who will leave his present charge for Meridian, Miss., where he has accepted the rabbinate of the congregation in that city.

One of the features in connection with the meeting was the initiation of a class of 16 candidates. Following the initiation Mr. L. B. Stein, president of the lodge, in a splendid address presented Rabbi Brill with a token. Following the presentation speech Rabbi Brill, in well chosen remarks, expressed appreciation to the members of the lodge for the honor conferred upon him. The meeting of the evening was brought to a close with a farewell dinner.

HOUSTON, TEXAS.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated on Sunday evening, Jan. 25, by Houston, Herzl and Lone Star Lodges of the B'nai B'rith of Houston, Texas, at the city auditorium. An interesting program had been arranged for the occasion, including musical selections and addresses. The guests of honor were Mr. A. L. Kramer of Dallas, Texas, President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, and Capt. Leon Schwarz of Mobile, Past President of the District Grand Lodge. A joint meeting of the lodges was held in the afternoon, at which a class of seventy-five candidates apportioned to the various Lodges was initiated by the joint degree team. Addresses were delivered by the visiting Grand Lodge officers and by Brothers M. C. Wagner and H. J. Dannenbaum.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

The election of officers of Samuel Lodge No. 668 of Vancouver, B. C., was held on Jan. 4, 1914. Dr. B. H. Rosengart addressed the members on the importance of the work of the Order. A vote of thanks was accorded to the retiring President, Judge S. Schultz, for valuable services rendered during his past two terms of office. The lodge decided to make every second meeting in the month a social meeting and to run a series of entertainments and dances.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland Lodge No. 16, held an informal banquet and dance, on Washington's birthday, Sunday, Feb. 22. The speakers of the evening were: Brother Harry Simon, of St. Louis, President D. G. L. No. 2, whose subject was "The Aims & Purposes of B'nai B'rith," and Brother Martin A. Marks, of Cleveland, Past President D. G. L. No. 2, who delivered an oration on "George Washington." Dancing was enjoyed after the supper. About 250 members and their friends attended the affair.

INSTITUTION OF B'NAI B'RITH LODGE AT KINSTON, N. C.

A B'nai B'rith lodge, to be known as Kinston Lodge No. 632, was instituted at Kinston, N. C., on February 17, 1914, by Brother Lionel Weil, President of District Grand Lodge No. 5. Mr. Alex. Gross, a prominent merchant of the city, was elected president and the prospects are that under his guidance the lodge will grow and prosper.

RESOLUTION BY COOSA LODGE.

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to take from our midst

BROTHER DAVE RICH;

And Whereas, In his death our Lodge loses one of its charter members, and the highest type of an American Jew, and an ideal Ben B'rith;

Therefore, Be It Resolved, by Coosa Lodge 734, I. O. B. B., That we deeply sympathize with his loved ones, and to them extend the fraternal hand of friendship and in "benevolence, brotherly love and harmony" Coosa Lodge 734 extends its deepest sympathy to the bereaved family of our departed Brother;

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy published in The B'nai B'rith News and a copy sent to his family.

DISTRICT No. 1.

Under the joint auspices of Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., and the Council of Jewish Women of New Haven, a lecture was given by Rev. Dr. Maurice Harris of New York on "The Obligations of Womanhood." The meeting was open to the public and was largely attended.

The 60th anniversary of Washington Lodge No. 19 of New York City was held on Saturday evening, February 21, 1914, at the Hotel Ansonia, and consisted of a musical, supper and dance.

Memorial services under the auspices of Horeb Lodge No. 25 of New Haven, Conn., were held at lodge rooms on Sunday evening, February 22, 1914, at which Rev. Dr. Thorner and Mr. Isidore Metzger were the principal speakers. The lodge orchestra furnished appropriate music.

Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., secured the first prize at the recent Grand Lodge convention of District No. 1 for the highest increase in membership during 1913. On February 18th the lodge held a social meeting, consisting of a card party, at which prizes were distributed and refreshments served. The affair closed with informal dancing.

At a meeting of Harmony Lodge No. 711 of Bridgeport, Conn., held on February 11, 1914, it was resolved to establish a forum. Sessions will be held monthly and arrangements will be made for having prominent men speak on these occasions. The first meeting will be held in March, at which Attorney General John H. Light of Norwalk will be the speaker.

Zerubbabel Lodge No. 53 of Rochester, N. Y., is arranging to celebrate the 50th anniversary of its institution on Thursday, March 26, 1914, with an appropriate banquet and dance. The lodge has extended a cordial invitation to the President of the Order to be its guest of honor and to deliver an address upon the work of the Order.

DISTRICT No. 2.

At a meeting of Eshcol Lodge No. 55 of Dayton, Ohio, held on February 2, 1914, Rabbi David Lefkowitz and S. G. Kusworm were appointed to represent the lodge in the selection of a community house.

For the purpose of providing work for discharged Jewish prisoners an undertaking has been launched by a committee representing the B'nai B'rith lodges of several cities and composed of Mr. Jacob Billikof of the Welfare Board of Kansas City, Rabbi Bernstein of St. Joseph and Charles Ettenson of Leavenworth. The plan is to establish an employment bureau whereby discharged prisoners may leave the institution with some prospect ahead of them of obtaining suitable employment.

DISTRICT No. 3.

At an open meeting of Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672 of Pittsburgh, Pa., held on February 25, 1914, Mr. Allen Davis delivered an address on the subject of "The Modern Drama," which was received with marked approval. In addition to the address a short musical program was carried out.

Homestead Lodge No. 586 of Homestead, Pa., held the last of its winter series of dances on February 24, 1914, at the Elks' Temple. The "Board of Education" of the B'nai B'rith lodges of Allegheny County were the guests of honor on that evening.

The Pittsburgh Independent Ladies' Auxiliary of the B'nai B'rith Orphanage located at Erie, Pa., held its installation of officers and entertainment on February 22, 1914. A package party was given for the benefit of the home and several speakers addressed the meeting.

Memorial services under the auspices of Braddock Lodge No. 516 of Braddock, Pa., were held on Sunday evening, March 1st, at Carnegie Hall, with Rev. Dr. J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburgh officiating. This was the first service of this character ever held in Braddock and the large attendance and interest displayed by the members was sufficiently encouraging to warrant a continuance of this method of paying tribute to the memory of the departed members of the Order.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of Abraham Lippman Lodge No. 672 of Pittsburgh held its annual meeting on January 28, 1914. The meeting was attended by a large number and the president in her annual message dwelt upon the many works of charity supported by the auxiliary during the past year. The meeting was brought to a close with the election of officers.

The B'nai B'rith of Newark, N. J., held a benefit recently at the Shubert Theater for the B'nai B'rith Orphanage at Erie, Pa.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Theodor Herzl Lodge No. 314 entertained the Daughters of the Covenant and their friends at a select card and dancing social on February 10 in their meeting rooms. It was pronounced a grand success, and the committee having the affair in charge was complimented upon the able manner in which they had handled and prepared the entertainment to the enjoyment of all present.

The Caricature Committee of Theodor Herzl Lodge is the most active standing committee. On February 16, a play in the Empress Theater presented by Bert Leslie and company, entitled "The King of Slang," was modified to eliminate the characterizing of the Jew, after being called to the attention of the management by one of the members, who immediately complied with the request of the Committee, and courteously added that the theater would always be glad to correct anything objectionable which the committee should see and report to the management.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Under the able leadership of its newly elected president, L. K. Samuels, and its vice-president, Morris N. Goldtree. Ophir Lodge No. 21, the "mother lodge" of District No. 4, has taken on a new lease of life. In the coming months it is the aim to thoroughly arouse the rank and file of the membership to a renewed fraternal activity, and plans are being formulated with the assistance of Ophir Auxiliary to accomplish these ends.

The Daughters of the Covenant, auxiliary to the B'nai B'rith lodges of Portland, Ore., installed its officers on Jan. 13. Mr. D. N. Mosessohn acted as installing officer. The retiring president, Mrs. A. Davidson, was presented with a token by the members of the auxiliary, President-elect Mrs. J. Lauterstein making the presentation address. After the meeting refreshments were served.

A public installation of officers was held on Sunday, Jan. 4, 1914, by Baron de Hirsch Lodge No. 420 of Butte, Mont. This was the first time in the history of the lodge that a public installation was held, and it was largely attended. After the meeting a dance was given and light refreshments were served.

Hope Lodge No. 126 of Stockton, Cal., is arranging for a memorial service in honor of the departed members of the Order, which is intended to be a public affiair and will be held at the Temple.

The net profits from the great Road Show, presented under the auspices of B. F. Peixotto Lodge No. 421 of Salt Lake City, Utah, as arranged by Brother M. D. Joseph, amounted to $538, and this sum will be devoted to charitable purposes.

DISTRICT NO. 5.

The annual convention of District Grand Lodge No. 5 will be held at Atlanta, Ga., on Monday, March 30, 1914. There will be a preconvention session on Sunday night when Dr. Rosenau of Baltimore, who has been most active in creating the new Baltimore Lodge, and David Stern of Goldsboro, N. C., who was prominent in the matter of the Bible in the public school, will be orator and essayist respectively.

In connection with the convention a meeting of the board of directors of the Atlanta Orphans' Home will be held on Sunday, March 29.

At the recent election of officers of Malachi Lodge No. 146 of Macon, Ga., mostly young men were elected, and good results are expected from the incoming administration. The lodge is looking forward to a visit from First Vice-President Rabbi I. E. Marcusson of Charleston and a special meeting will be arranged in his honor.

December proved so successful that the lodge intends giving another affair in the near future. The plan is to give a one-act play or sketch, some musical numbers, to be concluded with a dance.

During the present year Dan Lodge No. 593 of Charleston, S. C., confidently expects a continuation of the prosperity of the past year, and all things indicate that the results, for which the members are working and hoping, will be realized.

Baltimore Lodge No. 748 of Baltimore, Md., is arranging for a semi-public meeting on the evening of March 9, 1914, at which Brother Simon Wolf of Washington and Rabbi E. N. Calisch of Richmond, Va., will be present, and from which the lodge hopes to obtain practical results in the way of dissemination of B'nai B'rith principles as well as increase of membership.

As a result of the visit of Rabbi F. L. Rosenthal of Columbus, Ga., First Vice-President of District Grand Lodge No. 5, to Brunswick, Ga., a class of 20 candidates was initiated by the degree team of the lodge.

DISTRICT NO. 6.

Mr. Edward S. Glickauf, a past president of Ramah Lodge No. 33 of Chicago, has been elected general manager of the Thompson-Reid Ice Cream Co., with which concern he has been associated since 1892.

Public installation of the officers of the two Milwaukee lodges, namely, Gilead No. 41 and Isaac Lodge No. 87, took place in the club room of the Hotel Pfister on Jan. 12, 1914. Mr. Chas. L. Aarons, First Vice-President of the District Grand Lodge, conducted the installation ceremonies, and Dr. Chas. S. Levi delivered the address of the evening, which was received with marked approval.

John Hay Lodge No. 634 of Fargo, N. D., is planning a series of intellectual meetings the coming year. Brother Hugo Stern has been appointed chairman of the committee and will have charge of these meetings.

At the regular meeting of Minnesota Lodge No. 157 of St. Paul, Minn., held on Feb. 23, 1914, resolutions were adopted on the death of Brother Henry Greenebaum of Chicago, first President of District Grand Lodge No. 6.

Mishan Lodge No. 247 of Kalamazoo, Mich., has undertaken the task of procuring a census of the Jewish population of Kalamazoo. This no doubt will become the means of getting the Jews in closer touch with one another.

Jacob H. Schiff Lodge No. 694 of Lansing, Mich., is planning a Purim party on the evening of March 12, 1914. An officer of the Grand Lodge is expected to attend the affair and deliver an address on the work of the Order. The evening's program will be concluded with a Purim ball.

During the past year Emes Lodge No. 67 of Springfield, Ill., has been quite active in increasing its membership. Quite a number of new members, all young men, have joined the lodge during the past year, and new applications are being presented at each meeting of the lodge. The membership of the lodge is larger now than at any period in the history of its existence.

DISTRICT NO. 7.

Grand President Arthur L. Kramer has been making a tour of the state of Texas in the interest of the increased membership for District No. 7. He has recently visited the cities of Ft. Worth, Houston and San Antonio and reports good results. A two days' canvass in Houston resulted in the securing of 60 new applications for membership and a like canvass in San Antonio resulted in the securing of 40 new applications. President Kramer reports that much good work has been done throughout the district, and that large increases are being reported from various quarters.

Esther Lodge No. 159 of Helena, Ark., held its annual meeting on February 1, at which the officers for the ensuing year were installed. Esther Lodge is recognized as being one of the strongest and most efficient lodges in the State, taking active part in all matters for which the Order was founded.

Shreveport, La., and Louisiana Lodge No. 107 of that city are making elaborate preparations for the entertainment of delegates and visitors to the convention of the District Grand Lodge to be held here on April 26, 1914.

At the regular meeting of Memphis Lodge No. 35 of Memphis, Tenn., held on Feb. 8, 1914, which was largely attended, seven delegates to represent the lodge at the coming annual convention of the District Grand Lodge were elected, and a class of candidates initiated. Mr. Geo. Ellman of the Jewish Settlement House made an address in regard to the work he is undertaking.

The installation of officers of Memphis Lodge No. 35 was held on Jan. 11, 1914, and was attended by a large number of members. The installation ceremonies were conducted by Brother Sam Schloss, the only surviving charter member of the lodge. An interesting feature was that Mr. Schloss inaugurated his grandson, Gilbert M. Schloss, as president of the lodge.

Beth Zur Lodge No. 84 of Mobile, Ala., met on Sunday, February 8, 1914. The meeting was largely attended, the members being attracted by the annual friendly contest for the selection of delegates to the District Grand Lodge convention. Five delegates were elected, and in addition thereto the lodge made three nominations for representatives to the coming convention of the Order to be held in San Francisco in 1915.

Mr. C. N. Frohlich of Memphis, past president of Memphis Lodge, visited Clarksdale, Miss., on Sunday, February 1, and reorganized the lodge at that point with a charter membership of 25 and the prospect of an additional ten members before the annual convention of the District Grand Lodge.

The recently instituted B'nai El Lodge of Dallas, Tex., is progressing rapidly, and at the second meeting ten new members were initiated. Much credit is due to Brother M. Philipson, who devoted a great deal of time and labor to bringing about the institution of this new lodge.

B'nai B'rith Day was celebrated by Phoenix Lodge No. 279 of Pine Bluff, Ark., at the Temple on Sunday, February 8, 1914. Rabbi Jos. Jasin presided. The introductory address was made by Hon. S. R. Bloom. The installation of officers was conducted by Rabbi Witt, and addresses were delivered by Brothers B. B. Weil, S. Klarberg, S. Levin and Rabbi Witt. A musical program of varied numbers was also carried out.

Deborah Lodge No. 161 of Greensville, Miss., celebrated B'nai B'rith Day at the Temple with a musical program. Mr. Joseph Hirsh of Vicksburg, member of the executive committee of the Order, delivered the address.

Mr. Arthur L. Kramer of Dallas, Tex., President of District Grand Lodge No. 7, visited Houston recently in the interests of the Order.

The first meeting of Clarksdale Lodge No. 660 of Clarksdale, Miss., which was recently reorganized, was held on Sunday, Feb. 15, on which occasion the election of officers for the ensuing year was held.

Rabbi Edward S. Levy of Ft. Smith, Ark., died on Feb. 26, 1914. In the passing away of Rabbi Levy the congregation as well as the B'nai B'rith lodge of which he was an honored worker, sustained a loss of a man whose place will be hard to fill. The funeral exercises were held under the auspices of Ft. Smith Lodge on March 1, and Rabbi Louis Witt of Little Rock officiated.

OBJECT TO EXCAVATIONS OF HOLY PLACES.

The excavations attempted by a scientific exposition on the Mount of Olives was interrupted by the Governor of Jerusalem at the instance of the protests made by the Jews. It was contemplated to excavate the reputed grave of the prophet Zechariah, but the Jews raised such a vigorous protest against a violation of a place considered by them sacred that the Governor was obliged to suspend operations temporarily.

DESIRABLE NEWCOMERS.

With all the talk of the restriction of aliens there is not a voice of consequence heard against the Jew. No people have greater reason to point with pride to the progressiveness of the Jew than the American Jew.

The Jew in America occupies an eminent position in the world of business and finance. While loving tradition and custom, handed down through centuries the Jewish immigrant is not a pullback. Energy and thrift, two of the greatest qualifications for success are his, and his adaption to hustling American ways and manners and customs is quick.—Hazelton, (Pa.) Sentinel.

NO BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The bill to compel the reading of the Bible in public schools of Maryland was rejected by the House of Delegates on February 12, 1914.

B'NAI B'RITH OF DALLAS FORMALLY DEDICATE NEW HALL.

B'nai B'rith Hall, the newly completed club rooms of Dallas Lodge No. 197, I. O. B. B., was formally dedicated on January, 28, 1914. The combination of the celebration of B'nai B'rith Day and the fortieth anniversary of the Dallas Lodge was made the occasion of the dedicatory exercise, and an elaborate program was carried out. Several hundred members, including a party of more than fifty from Fort Worth, with their ladies and invited guests, were present.

The big lodge room was filled to capacity with an audience that showed its enthusiasm for the order and the cause for which it stands by frequent and vehement bursts of applause for the speakers.

The opening remarks were made by H. S. Scheline, president of Dallas Lodge No. 197, who spoke briefly of his pleasure at welcoming so large a gathering on such an auspicious occasion, and introduced Arthur L. Kramer, president of the District Grand Lodge No. 7. Mr. Kramer delivered the formal address of welcome and presided over the remainder of the meeting as master of ceremonies.

No formal exercises of dedication were held, this portion of the program being confined to a dedicatory address by Dr. William H. Greenburg, rabbi of Temple Emanu-El. In a short but forceful talk Dr. Greenburg voiced the high ideals of the Order of B'nai B'rith and expressed the hope that the new club quarters may be consecrated to lofty purposes.

A brief history of Dallas Lodge No. 197 was read by D. A. Eldrige, in which he reviewed the main events in the development of that body from its original charter membership of 32 to its present membership of 275.

The principal speaker of the evening was Leon Schwarz of Mobile, Ala., ex-president of District No. 7, who delivered a strong address upon the aims and ideals of the B'nai B'rith, the work which it has accomplished and which it means to accomplish in the future.

He discussed at some length the original motives and ideals which led to the organization of the B'nai B'rith, declaring that what it stands for today is infinitely higher and better than the original conception. "The B'nai B'rith of today," he said, "I am, safe in declaring, comes nearer to being an absolute altruistic organization than anything of its kind in existence."

In closing his address Mr. Schwarz made an eloquent appeal for more personal service from Jews for their fellow-men. The only thing that threatens the future of the B'nai B'rith, he said, is the growing tendency of modern days to give "personal service by proxy." Money, mere alms, he said, is not sufficient, no matter how great the amount. "It is not sufficient." he cried, "that with money you furnish temples for our people, but that with personal service you furnish people for our temples. It is not sufficient that with wisdom you furnish good laws for our people, but with personal service that you furnish good people for our laws."

Following the closing prayer by Rabbi Louis M. Eppstein, A. Weber, secretary of the Dallas lodge for twenty years, was presented with a handsome gold emblem in token of appreciation of his fellow members.

The close of the program was followed by an informal dance.

THE LITERARY TEST.

New York's imported gunmen were all able to read and write. The authors of black-hand letters are all literate. A good many honest, hardworking immigrant laborers cannot read. The lower house of Congress has just passed the bill shutting out the honest illiterate simply because he is illiterate. The effect of the bill if it should become law will be to shut out a type of laborers who are always needed in busy times, and to deny to many persecuted Jews in Russia an asylum in a free country. Immigrants as a whole are somewhat more illiterate than the country at large, but children born in this country of immigrant parents are only 1.1 per cent illiterate at the age of 10 or over, while native children of native parents are 3.7 per cent illiterate at the same age. The American standard of literacy is, therefore, not in danger from the immigrant. Neither is the standard of citizenship in danger, for Congress has complete control of the naturalization laws.—St. Louis Republic.

MONUMENT TO M. LOTH UNVEILED.

A beautiful eulogy was pronounced upon the life of the late Moritz Loth, founder and first President of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, by Dr. Kaufman Kohler, President of the Hebrew Union College, at the exercises marking the unveiling of a monument in his memory at the United Jewish Cemetery at Cincinnati, O., on February 18, 1914. The services, which were held in the chapel, were attended by the widow of Mr. Loth, the children and relatives; representatives of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations; members of the faculty of Hebrew Union College, the Board of Trustees of the College, the students of the institution. and leaders in local Judaism.

The invocation was given by Dr. Louis Grossmann, rabbi of the Plum Street Temple. The choir of the Hebrew Union College rendered several selections. Prayer was offered by Dr. Jacob Mielziner, rabbi of the Reading Road Temple. A. G. Holzberg, a student of the college, sang a solo, "As the Hart Panteth for the Water Brooks."

The memorial address was delivered by Dr. Kohler.

Dr. D. Philipson pronounced the benediction.

The memorial, which was erected by a committee of personal friends, is a shaft more than 30 feet in height. It is of Grecian design and one of the tallest ever reared in this city. It was wrought from a huge slab of Vermont marble. The inscription on it is: "Moritz Loth, First President of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations. Born December 29, 1832. Died February 18. 1913."

RACE PREJUDICE.

Men of six races in New York recently met and discussed the question: "How can race prejudice be dispelled and the spirit of brotherhood be made to prevail in America?"

The best answer was given by a Jew, Dr. Samuel Schulman, Rabbi of Temple Beth El in the metropolis. He said: "Give every man a square deal." The rabbi defined race prejudice as laziness in thinking resulting in an unreasoning antipathy. The mere fact that a discussion of race prejudice was held he declared to be an indication that race prejudice exists. Race prejudice, said the representative of the Japanese nation, Dr. Toyokichi Iyenaga, professor of history at the University of Chicago, is more pronounced among Americans than among Europeans.

Of all countries in the world which should not have race prejudice the United States stands foremost. This has been called "the melting pot of the nations" because annually to our shores come many thousands of aliens to be, in a few short years, transformed into Americans. We call the process "assimilation." The earlier immigration was from northern Europe—England, Ireland, Scotland, Norway, Holland, Denmark. The later is from southern and southeastern Europe—Russia, Austria, Hungary, Italy, Greece, Turkey. It is because the men and women of these races seem different from those to which we have become accustomed that a new interest has arisen in the problem of immigration. Yet it seems reasonable that the nation which assimilated the northern also should be able, if it is patient enough, to assimilate the southern Europeans and perhaps Asiatics.

Race prejudice is based on ignorance. About the best illustration of this was furnished in a magazine story of a few months ago. The "typically American" employer of a modest and unassuming Bohemian bookkeeper made a remark which reflected on the latter's nationality and the underling then rose and overwhelmed him with a recital of what Bohemia had done for art, for literature, for music and for civilization in general. The representatives of almost any of the European nations could mention names and exploits which produce a thrill in the mind of the man who knows history. The trouble is that so many of us know so little of what other nations have contributed to the sum total of human progress. As knowledge of foreign traditions and achievements spreads we learn that the German, the Pole, the Bohemian, the Greek, the Hollander, the Irishman, the Spaniard, the Frenchman, the Russian, the Swede and the Dane each has given some exploit or some inspiring ideal to the world. In other words, as we become acquainted, we learn to value and appreciate each other.—Lexington (Ky.) Leader.

King of Roumania Grants Audience to Jewish Leader

(Report by our Special Correspondent.)

In accordance with our last communication regarding the project of forming an International Committee with reference to the political situation in Roumania concerning the Jewish question, we have to bring to your notice some new occurrences. Yet, before coming to the political situation we will refer to the matter of the formation of the International Committee, and in order to dispel certain doubts we consider it necessary to give the following explanation:

The aim which is pursued is to procure the diplomatic intervention of the great powers for the application of article 44 of the Berlin Treaty. Some think that this kind of intervention is of greater importance, and that it is expedient to give it the first consideration. These people attach the greatest value to diplomatic measures. We are of the same opinion, but we understand that these proceedings constitute one of a number of measures to be employed as needed by our cause.

It is the desire and intention to procure at the same time consideration for all the measures stated in the previous communications, and also a permanent protest of civilized Europe against the treatment of the Jews of Roumania.

The diplomatic intervention is considered good, not because it will bring brilliant results, but because it is the regular way of voicing protestations against vexations of which the Jews are victims. Those who are familiar with the country and are aware of the interest which it takes in foreign opinion, know, that it is difficult for Roumania to resist the energetic, continued and systematic protest of the public opinion of the world.

Immediately after the compliance of Mr. Clemanceau, the appeal of the International Committee, signed by Mr. Luzzatti and by the Marquis Viconty-Venosta, will be published.

Prompt agitation is timely, for political events of great importance are about to take place in Roumania. In the first place it is quite certain that the cabinet will retire and will be re placed by a ministry of the liberal party whose hostile disposition towards the Jews is a secret to nobody. The intention is attributed to this party to proceed without mercy gainst the "Union" because the same had the courage to revive the Jewish question.

The "Union" counts today in the country 80 sections with about 12,000 members and a weekly journal printed in 15,000 copies.

The liberal party can never forgive the "Union" because it is today a force, a decided power ready to fight for enual rights. This is the reason why it is thought that the liberals may resort to intimidation and repression with the aim of destroying the "Union." It is therefore of the greatest importance to the Jewish population of Roumania that the International Committee shall be instituted as soon as possible, so that in case of violence there is somebody to raise its voice in foreign lands. Special attention is called to this point. The defence in the Occident must be prepared at any price. The day has arrived when it must be considered that here they wish to stifle the Jewish protests and actions.

In the second place the liberal party proposes to revise the constitution. It is only a question of weeks. It is important that the Roumanian Jews take urgent measures and institute an intense agitation to watch an event of this nature and of this importance. It is important for them to obtain a modification of article 7 of the constitution, to further the solution of the Jewish problem. This agitation finds against it a powerful adversary, the implacable liberal party. Upon this occasion the International Committee must play a part, the importance of which it is unnecessary to demonstrate. The revision of the Roumanian constitution is intimately connected with the solution of the Jewish question. This is why the formation of the International Committee is deemed such an urgent necessity. The action of such a Committee on the outside and that of the "Union" on the inside will undoubtedly provoke a renewal of anti-Semitism in the country. The proof of it is what has happened in Jassy on the occasion of a meeting of Socialists at which the Jewish question was also discussed in a favorable sense.

The manifestations of hostility against the Jews happened there under the friendly eye of the police. Several Jews were beaten and some of them were wounded. Other disorders of the same kind may be expected.

When the liberal government understands that the foreign press is watching and protesting against the agitations and the barbarities of the anti-Semites supported by the police, when it knows beforehand that an organization like an Internationl Committee exists for the purpose of defending the Jewish population of Roumania, it will try to maintain order in the country. It is therefore evident that it is an absolute necessity that the International Committee be created and begin its work.

The following report of the last audience which was granted by the King of Roumania to a leader of the Roumanian Jews is noteworthy. The result of it is that the question of the naturalization of the mobilized Jews seems to be buried.

Conversation With the King.

Dr.—I come again to the old and ever new Jewish question.

The King—Oh, a great change of ideas has taken place. The lists for the naturalization of the mobilized were already being prepared and then the anti-Semitic agitations commenced.

Dr.—I am surprised that the agitations did not begin before the Jews of the country raised the Jewish question.

The "Evenimentul" of Jassy, the "Vittorul" and other papers of the liberals and nationalists commenced a violent campaign of invective and threats. The "Liga Culturale" followed suit.

The King—But it is the congress of the "Union" which is taken as a pretext.

Dr.—Yes, solely as a pretext. What can we do if the rights which we demand are not considered dignified and pacific. All these agitations emanate from the anti-Semites.

The King—Yes, from the Cuza gang. There is also an Arion. Who is he?

Dr.—The President of the Liga Culturala, a discontented man who up to this day having failed to obtain a ministerial portfolio thinks to profit by this agitation and to attain power. This action is culpable for it compromises the aim of the League. In reality what value is there in such an agitation? It is only a superficial current. At bottom it is nothing. Do we wish to let the Jewish question be dependent upon such manifestations? It never settles our case. In consulting history we see that the currents against the religious minorities have always appeared, but there were always statesmen who were conscious of their duties, who possessed great courage, who, without being intimidated, accomplished great reforms.

I am an old fighter and what I know today does not surprise me. Does it surprise your Majesty? And besides were we not helped by these factional revolutions? What are the impossible issues in which we find ourselves? Who are the statesmen who are willing to do their duty?

American Ambassador Visits B'nai B'rith Lodge

Annual Festival of B'nai B'rith of Constantinople

(By our Correspondent, Dr. Israel Auerbach, Constantinople.)

My to-day's report will inform you of a real occurrence, namely: the third annual festival of our Lodge No. 678 and our District Grand Lodge. But this alone does not form the whole significance of the day. Its main feature consisted in the visit paid to our lodge by his Excellency Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Ambassador of the United States of North America in Constantinople. Our distinguished coreligionist has already demonstrated before the world by his former activity in our city that he does not feel like being a high functionary of his country who is conscious of his official responsibility only, but considers himself at the same time as a true and warm hearted son of Israel. But this evening has brought him near to us as a brother of our Order who is filled with B'nai B'rith ideals and who brings to us a full understanding of the aims and work of our lodge and Grand Lodge.

The Lodge hall was festively decorated for the reception of the illustrious guest. The Star Spangled Banner of the United States waved at the side of the Turkish flags. Some young friends got together a small string orchestra which played the American national hymn as the Ambassador entered and continued to inspire the festivities with joyous harmonies.

After the opening of the Lodge by our worthy President, Brother Dr. Markus, a member of our Grand Lodge delivered an address of welcome which, according to the custom of our Lodge, was in the Hebrew language.

Then the festive oration was read in German by the Secretary of the Grand Lodge.

Oration of the Grand Secretary, Brother Dr. Israel Auerbach.

Excellency!

Highly Esteemed Brother!

The Grand Lodge of the Orient of the Independent Order B'nai B'rith District No. 11 as well as Constantinople Lodge No. 678 have conferred the honor upon me of extending to you in the names of both a hearty and loyal welcome.

We behold in you not only a distinguished guest, but also one of our brethren, and this in a manifold significance: You are a brother of our Order, a brother of our blood, a brother of our sentiment. The last may seem a daring assertion, but the entire manner in which you, Excellency, have manifested yourself on entering our city as Ambassador of the mighty and free United States of America, not only as the representative of your great fatherland and your lofty duty, but also as an adherent of your race and your faith, the old and eternally young Judaism, shows that we may dare to call you brother of our sentiments. Whoever makes such a confession so plainly, so proudly and decisively entertains the same desires as we do: to demonstrate that we revere Judaism and desire its preservation; that we not only wish to devote ourselves, our immediate vocation and our work to our people, but also the work of our present and of our future. In this sense every one is our brother who within the fold of Judaism and for the welfare of Judaism makes himself the highest which his capacity and ability permit. Your Excellency will therefore grant us the privilege of specially emphasizing the Jewish side of your personality and position, although we in our circle by no means misconceive their general human aspect.

Honor is one of the fundamental pillars which still hold upright the Judaism of our times. All other nations of the earth have their country, their language, their living culture in all forms of life, their organized world of law and economy, their might and power of expansion; all these are factors which bring to them externally fame and glory and internally selfconsciousness and pride, waves of new power of life and joy in the certainty of the future. Judaism has nothing, or almost nothing, of all these earthly gifts; it is just hardly beginning to think of resurrection and re-possession of country, language and living culture; but one thing it has which in spite of all these things it uses as a compensation and substitute: its national honor. This it gains from a double source of time; from its past and its present. An older comprehension was satisfied with that amount of honor which our past national life contributed to us: the shining deeds of the fathers seemed sufficient to serve as glittering armor for the grandchildren; the greatness of former times was enough consolation and recompense for the littleness of to-day; the achievements of ancient Israel were to justify the existence of the Jewish people of our days. This conception has outlived itself long ago. Our epoch, the real, the positive, I might say the American, gives nothing for things that were once upon a time; it wants to see how things are acquired to regain by new effort things which were acquired by inheritance in order to be able to recognize them as justly possessed and worthy of respect. Lazy sons of assiduous fathers, weakly descendants of a time of heroes, are looked upon as deteriorated, as persons done with; they are despised and rejected. Therefore Judaism, which is thousands of years old, must produce new and current values on every day which history gives it; it must always create and fight for new honor. If it should not do these things, it would be lost. It would be deprived in the outside world of the last remnant of recognition and with it suffer the loss of all forbearance, for only the powerful are to-day respected and permitted to live. But in our own midst the resultant harm would be even much worse. The pride in the old possessions of Judaism, in the creation of the Bible, which means our world ruling system of the knowledge of God and the ethics of humanity, would disappear, religious feeling would no longer have any worth, and then firmness and cohesion would be lost among the members of our people, if in our own times no new reasons for pride were created daily. In order to live, Judaism of to-day must show achievements. They are indispensable if we wish that the souls of the brethren of our people remain devout, selfconscious and looking joyfully into the future.

Fate does not permit our race to-day to create new values and new honors as it did once as a unit, as a whole. One may deplore it and strive to bring about a change, but he must acknowledge it. But our individuals, on the contrary, still have power and scope (of which no persecution in any country can rob them) to be active as producers. Every creating, great, important, famous and high-standing Jew contributes in this sense to the strengthening and the preserving of Judaism. Their honor redounds to the honor of Judaism. They deserve well of Judaism, just as those Romans deserved well of ancient Rome and for whom it erected monuments. Of course, there are exceptions among them: there are those who shine for the benefit of Judaism against their wills, who in their hearts have turned from it and wish to strive solely for their class, for their present fatherland, for mankind, only not in the name of Judaism from whose blood they descended. These are a blessing to our people without their wish to be such.

Judaism will still rejoice in their existence, but love and thanks it will not give them. However, there are besides these other Jews who cling to their people in the depths of their hearts, who are working as men in the place assigned to them by time, in the land which protects them and which they serve, but everything they do, be it quietly or loudly acknowledged, they do at the same time because they are Jews and for the honor and glory of Judaism. They earn the acknowledgment, gratitude and love of their oppressed but noble people.

It is the expression of this gratitude and love which prompts us to receive your Excellency, our highly esteemed guest, in our temple with honor and devoted love. We do it the more joyfully because it is also in the nature of our Order to serve Judaism just in such sense, namely, by raising its ethical value in the world. And that which is the duty of the Order in a greater measure is also our duty on a smaller scale: to enhance Jewish honor, to arouse the Jewish forces, to uplift Jewish individuals ethically and intellectually, to cultivate individualities and to inculcate them with love for the great and Jewish ideals. We try to accomplish it by the intellectual advancement of our members, by creating centers of force and work in communal affairs, by the elimination of evils and obstructing conditions which hinder the uplift of the masses or which lower our standard; by establishing and maintaining schools and by aiding students. Even our care of the poor can be placed in this line. If we should not do these things, then nobody would attend to them, or the Christians would do them, the missionaries would take up this work, and both instances would bring shame upon us, would drive Jewish souls away from us to other communions and other ideals. We practice this care of the poor because distress kills; it lays low individualities and strangles talents. While we ameliorate the misery of Jews we remove human pain, but we also set free Jewish forces, help the mass of our people to develop their possibilities, such possibilities as are shown by the numerous great men of America who have emerged from our poor and pitiful immigrant masses. The will to accomplish all this in our midst is not merely a program or a phrase, but it is a fact which is substantiated by the three years of existence, the happy close of which we celebrate to-day.

It is not for the sake of indulging in vanities or to lull the energy of our people by the sing-song of success that I venture to present here a meager statement of our achievements. It is only done to reassure ourselves and to demonstrate to our esteemed guest, who is a worker on a grand scale, in the American sense, that also in this house some work is being done.

The big fire of Balat in 1911, the earthquake catastrophe in the Marmara basin in 1912, the destruction of the Jewish quarter during the riots in Fez, the sufferings of the refugees of the Balkan war—all these furnished our Grand Lodge the opportunity to organize active aid, to collect and to distribute many thousands of francs, to elaborate projects for enduring help and to start their realization. It has taken an active part in the protection of the Jews of Salonika, after the city was taken possession of by the Greeks, and was successful. It supports the National Library in Jerusalem, the hospital Shaare Zion in Jaffa, a public school in Cairo, a kindergarten and a library in Safed. It has established a kindergarten in our city, in Balat, taking care of 200 children. It must be stated that our Grand Lodge could not have done all these things with its own means. Brethren of the whole world and in a great measure our brethren in free America, the glorious fatherland of his Excellency, have contributed liberally to it. But the Oriental District has certainly done its share materially and accomplished everything morally. It does not stop at what it has done. Its working program for the future is a wide one; fighting white slavery is one of its main undertakings. But of this we will speak again, and I hope again in the presence of our illustrious guest.

The local Lodge has not remained behind the Grand Lodge in zeal. It has established its own meeting place, the "Bergel Fund" for unostentatious charity work with small sums; it successfully agitated for peace in the Jewish community of Constantinople, which was rent by strife; it organized a library and public lectures; it created a central organization consisting of representatives of all Jewish societies and introduced general statistics and the study of the economic conditions of the Jews of Constantinople. Our brethren are leaders and organizers in all works of public welfare. The Jewish hospital is a subject of their care, and the Association of Jewish Physicians has brethren of our Lodge at its head. The aims for the future are here also widely extended: the abolishment of street begging, the creation of employment bureaus and loan funds and, above all, the great work of organizing our women, are still waiting to be brought to a successful issue.

Even if much is yet uncompleted, we can still say to ourselves for the ease of our minds: Our wishes are high; no other organization of Jews in our city knows of a higher one or has as rich a working program, finds as much joy and force in its labor, spreads proportionately as much welfare, furnishes similar influence for uniting the different elements, attempts and undertakes as much to raise the Jewish honor as we do. This clear statement does not imbue us with haughtiness, but only inspires us with selfconsciousness, new obligation and new force. At the annual festival we indulge in a retrospect, perhaps a proud retrospect, but only to continue to strive and to place new aims before us. Our highly esteemed guest will pardon us when we cause him to be a witness to this retrospect. We take the liberty to do it because we know that he is our brother and because we most humbly and joyfully hope that he may come as closely to us, B'nai B'rith of No. 678, as his great work and his political position will permit him. He may be assured of this, that his fraternal co-operation with our endeavors will be considered by us as a great honor and will bring happiness to Judaism in our midst—that Judaism which has a place deep in his heart, without causing injury to his strong feelings for the happiness and greatness of his fatherland.

Highly esteemed and dear brethren! I congratulate you heartily to the close of our Lodge year! I congratulate you heartily on the beginning of the new! Always forward! Always upward! To the glory of our people, to the welfare of the Ottoman Empire, to the elevating and ennobling of all mankind!"

Reponse by Ambassador Morgenthau

When the speaker concluded his address, Brother Morgenthau rose to respond. He started to speak in German, but his peroration was in English. After expressing words of thanks for the hearty reception which was extended to him, he depicted the feelings which penetrated his soul when he received the offer to represent the United States as Ambassador of his country in Turkey. At first he hesitated to assume the post so full of honors as well as of responsibilities for the reason that he is a Jew; but he at last gave up all his demurrings and resolved to accept it just because he is a Jew. He believed he owed it to his people to preserve and deserve the honor which his nomination reflects upon the Jewish name for the sake of his people. The thought also influenced him that in such a high-standing station he might perhaps be in a position to be of service to his people. His long occupation with Jewish public affairs in the United States enabled him, in fact, to give advice in the Orient and to work for the benefit of Jewry as much as is consistent with the character of his office. His Excellency then described his activity in the service of our B'nai B'rith Order in America and the enormous merits which this Order gained on account of the elevations of the Jewish immigration element in the United States. It was to a great extent the work of the Order which transformed the desperately separated masses, who came over without a proper attitude and without education, into high-standing, proud citizens who to-day play a prominent part in the great and mightily flourishing commonwealth. On his arrival here he found the Order engaged in similar work and he was extraordinarily glad to have learned from the address of Brother Auerbach how the work is done here. Something very interesting and causing happiness arrested his attention in this hall, namely, the fact that the same grade of intelligence, mettle and energetic strength are expressed in the countenances as he had noticed in America among the men who have transformed themselves from poor ignorant Jews into great merchants and politicians. That conditions are here smaller and more circumscribed, does not matter as much as one may be inclined to believe when it comes to estimate the value of the achievements of real men. According to the experience of the psychologists, the kind and quantity of the energy to be employed is in reality the same whether it is a question of some great state leadership or of directors and reformers in the narrow circle of a small community. He therefore looked upon the undertakings and wide reform plans of the men who are united in the Lodge and Grand Lodge of Constantinople with great sympathy and high appreciation. On his part, he would gladly contribute as much as possible to the success of these undertakings. He assured the brethren that the Jew and brother are not sleeping within him; that he belonged to his people and is in sympathy with the good work the Order is doing.

Enthusiastic applause greeted these words, which were spoken with feeling and in a tone of deep conviction.

The festive session was then continued with an address by Grand President Niego and the initiation of new members. After the Lodge was closed, the brethren, among them also his Excellency Brother Morgenthau, remained in joyful communion.

I have to inform you to-day of one more communal event, namely, the new election of the Board of Directors of the local community. The board consists of nine persons who form the so-called "Medshliss dshismay," and whose great duty it is to administer and represent jointly with the Chief Rabbi, the so-called Hahambashi, not only the great community of Constantinople, with its 70,000 Jews, but also the entire Turkish Jewry.

It is interesting to know that this body experienced a radical transformation in the last new election. In place of the former men who, it seems, did not understand how to do justice to their task in the Jewish and modern sense, younger forces stepped in, of whom it is generally expected that they will cure all the ills and will restore all conditions to a healthful state. Not less than seven members of our Lodge are among these nine men, the eighth one is just about joining the Lodge, so that we can justly speak of a B'nai B'rith communal board. An eloquent testimonial of the confidence which our Lodge enjoys with the Jewish public, it shows that all salvation is here expected to come from the vivifying and rejuvenating force of our Order.

On Saturday, February 28, a public lecture was delivered in the Lodge by Zeki Bey Elbola, Osmanic Judge of preliminary examination and member of the newly elected communal board, whose topic was "The Foundations of Jewish Law." The lecture with its deep thought and its profusion of documentary evidence from Bible and Talmudic literature, was greatly applauded by the very numerous audience.

THE TOWER OF HOPE.

There is an old popular Jewish belief that when two confessors of the One God will proclaim the "Shema Israel" in the exact moment when the morning star rises, this confession will make such a profound impression in the celestial world that the Messiah will have to appear. This poetic and touching popular belief found a naive and affecting expression in the fact that in Jerusalem a group of pious Jews have erected a look-out tower upon the highest point of which, a balcony, two persons are keeping watch every night and are looking out to note the exact moment when the morning star appears on the horizon. If they should once succeed and have exclaimed "Hear O, Israel, the Eternal, our God, the Eternal is One!" then the Messianic era will at once begin and the redemption of Israel and the world will have to come. Alas, up to this hour they did not succeed. But is there a people that can hope and wait so persistently and so firmly as the Jews? The pretty tower is maintained by contributions from all parts of the world. In the basement is a synagogue, and on the top stand the two Jews who scan the heavens and hope and wait. Like a picture from Biblical times the trim building rises on high, a token of the power of Jewish belief and the joy of Jewish hope.

(We translate this article from "Ost and West" not on account of the intrinsic value of its information, but solely on account of the quaint and touching aspect of the idea it expresses. For this reason our readers may find it interesting. Editor.)

NEED OF AN INTERNATIONAL IDEAL.

By Abraham Nowak.

For the past hundreds of years, the stream of Jewry has flowed continuously, curving through the borders of every nation. But today owing to a diffusion of diffidence and the lack of a common affinity among the atoms, this "lonely river in the midst of the ocean of mankind," is slowly losing its distinctness and its entity. Now and then, here and there, streamlets flow into the ocean of mankind and disappear. The "perpetual insidiously destructive wash of the waves of alien life" is slowly corroding the bulwarks of Judaism. Only the intangible defenses of the Spirit are left us.

But inwardly as well as outwardly, the forces of decentralization are raging. And disintegration has lodged its teeth into the very vitals of Judaism. Where once existed unity, there is now plurality. There is no one-mindedness. There is no strong connecting constructive, common current of emotion, of aspiration, of idealization.

Only the tragic tones of the "Yudenschmerz" remind us of our common origin.

We must needs strengthen mightily the Jewish spiritual consciousness against the disintegrating forces in Jewry.

We must needs have again the burning conviction of some great world—part yet to play, and the firm faith in some great world-end yet to serve.

Only such a conviction, only such a faith, can justify Israel's isolation—her standing apart as a "nation of witnesses."

We must needs have some grand international ideal to compound the various elements in Jewry into one.

Such an ideal is held aloft in the symbolic seven-fold sun of the Menorah—whose ordained ministers are the B'nai B'rith—the seven-fold sun of the Menorah, in the glowing heat of which, the hearts of all true Jews, orthodox and non-orthodox, missionary idealists and National Zionists—all will be melted in Brotherly Love, in Benevolence and in Harmony—the seven-fold sun of the Menorah, in the actinic rays of which, the dark clouds of religious bigotry will be dispelled, and the bandage from off the eyes of justice will be torn, and the cannon melted into plowshares and Truth, in empyrian glory, will canopy the earth.

Glorious vision of the future!

It is the International Ideal of the B'nai B'rith.

CONVERTED JEWS IN RUSSIA.

The Holy Synod published the statistics of the Jews converted to the orthodox faith during the year 1912. According to these statistics, 1,362 Jews became members of the Orthodox Church, and 84 converted Jews returned to the Jewish religion. The statistics, it will be observed, do not include those Jews who embraced the Catholic, Protestant, and the Mohammedan faiths. The number of converts to Protestantism is very high, as many Jews who decide to leave their religion for the puropse of entering educational institutions join the Protestant Church, to the annoyance of the Orthodox Russian authorities. Hundreds of them have recently been punished by an order declaring their conversion in Findland null and void. In order to remain in the educational institions they will be forced formally to reenter the Jewish faith and then Join the Orthodox Church.

MR. SCHIFF GIVES 4,000 BOOKS.

The Library of Congress had a notable addition to its collection, the second gift of Jacob H. Schiff of New York. It is to supplement the gift made by him in 1912 of a collection of Hebrew books, comprising 10,000 volumes.

Deinard, the well-known collector, after disposing of the first collection, went to Europe and then to Palestine for the purpose of forming a second collection, which supplemented the first. It comprises more than 4,000 volumes, touching every field of Jewish thought and learning, religious and secular, extending over many centuries.

The collection includes Bibles, with their commentaries and super-commentaries; Mishnah and Talmud, with their commentaries; Midrash, codes of law, sermons, liturgy, philosophy, philology, scientific works, history and geography. Many of the books are first editions and rare.

THE KEHILLAH

BY PROF. GOTTHARD DEUTSCH, Ph.D.

VI.

Judaism boasts of proclaiming the belief in the kingdom of priests, and of its consistent opposition to clerical power. Nevertheless, the rabbi always had a considerable influence as spiritual leader. This naturally was more the case in times, when the study of religious documents was the exclusive spiritual occupation of the people. The work of Mendelssohn and his school beginning about 1780 was not felt very strongly until a generation afterwards. The battle against the inroads of the modern movement tending to the secularization of life, begins with the rabbis of the latter part of the eighteenth century. Prominent amongst them was Ezekiel Landau, Chief Rabbi of Prague. He was born in Poland, 1713, and was elected Chief Rabbi of Prague in 1755, holding his position until his death in 1793. As a man who understood his time, he did not come out with his views plainly. He knew enough of politics to understand as long as the Emperor had made up his mind that the only way for the improvement of the position of the Jews was secular education, it would be folly to oppose him. In his works he only occasionally throws out hints to show that the modern system of education was the deathblow to traditional Judaism. In personal contact with his pupils he undoubtedly expressed himself more clearly. Unfortunately we do not possess—at least to my knowledge—private sources that would throw light on his influence. We might have had them, had we been more careful to collect them. Aaron Kornfeld, the last principal of a Yeshibah in Bohemia who died in 1881 at the age of 86, could have furnished me such information. His father, Marcus Baer, was one of Ezekiel Landau's favorite disciples, and he certainly told his son something about the intimate life of his great teacher.

In this way two generations show the great change that took place in the life of the Jews by the beginning of the nineteenth century. The Kornfelds were a family who for generations kept a distillery in the little Bohemian town of Goltsch-Jenikau. This business ought to be studied thoroughly in its bearing on the condition of the Jews. As far as my knowledge goes, this has not been done. The distillery is called in Yiddisch "Rande" and the distiller"Randar." The word comes from medieval Latin and is connected with the English "rent." The distiller is the tenant of the landed estate proprietor who from medieval times in the feudal state, possessed amongst other monopolies, that of distilling on his estate. The best way of exploiting this monopoly was to farm it out to a Jew. I find this fact mentioned first in the works of Solomon Luria, rabbi in Lublin, Poland, in the sixteenth century. This business, which was connected with other profitable opportunities, such as cattle feeding and dealing in produce, offered a comfortable livelihood, and so occasionally, as in the case of the Kornfield family a man had sufficient spare time to devote himself to Talmudic studies. My grandfather, born 1781, was a diciple of the Jeshibah of Jenikau, probably when it was presided over by Marcus Baer Kornfeld. The latter's son Aaron, continued the work of his father, and among his disciples was for a time also Isaac M. Wise. In the forties it declined, and many years before the end of his life. Aaron Kornfeld saw the Jeshibah gone out of existence. His nephew, Sigmund Kornfeld, was president of a bank in Budapest and a Hungarian baron.

The generation, following Ezekiel Landau, had already a harder fight with the modern spirit. Its leading representative in our country was Marcus Benedict, or as he was called among the Jews, Mordecai Benet, Landrabbiner of Moravia. Born in Hungary in 1753. his mother, who was from Nikolsburg, brought him to her native city as a child, and at an age, which in those days was considered very young, he was in 1791, elected Landrabbiner of Moravia, which office he held until his death at Karlsbad in 1829. He was, even at his age, where Talmudic learning was common, considered one of the greatest Talmudic scholars. In all questions of religious life he was of uncompromising conservatism. When the Austrian government proposed to establish a rabbinical seminary, and to compel the rabbis to take a philosophical course in a university, he opposed this move. Of course he could not come out openly with the declaration that secular education was sinful, but he said the preparation for the rabbinate required so much time that the candidate could not give any of it to secular studies. He had, however, to make concessions. The government demanded that every Jew who applied for a license to marry, had to pass an examination in religion. For this purpose Herz Homberg, at one time tutor in Mendessohn's family, wrote a textbook called "Bene Zion." The Landrabbiner was asked to give it his approval and could not refuse it. His own son, Naphtali, who died as rabbi of Schaffa, Moravia, in 1857, wrote also such a text book with the consent of his father. Naphtali was already a modern man, who contributed to the Hebrew periodical "Kerem Chemed," edited by the representatives of the progressive school. A grandson of his, named for him, was a pupil of mine, when I taught in Bruennn, and was barely able to read a line of Hebrew. Another grandson was a fellow student of mine at the Gymnasium of Nikolsburg, and neither in his konwledge of Hebrew, nor in his practical life, maintained the standard of the family. Another sign of the difficulty under which the orthodox rabbis of that time had to labor, was the attitude of Marcus Benedict to Mendelssohn's Pentateuch translation. The Austrian government was strongly protectionist. It therefore wished to keep the money which Jews spent in buying Hebrew books, at home, and gave to a Christian, Anton Schimd, later on ennobled, the privilege of opening a Hebrew printing press in Vienna. This establishment published a great number of Hebrew and rabbinic works of a very high character and in a form which was up to the best standard of Hebrew printing. At a later period Isidor Busch, well known in this country as an active worker for the B'nai B'rith cause, bought an interest in the firm, but the business declined, and the firm went out of existence. Amongst the most popular works of that period were the Bible, with German translation and Hebrew commentary, begun by Mendelssohn, and the holy day prayer books with equal arrangements, for the first time edited by the excellent scholar, Wolf Heidenheim in Roedelheim, 1803. Anton von Schmid proposed to edit both works, of which the latter possessed a copyright according to rabbinic law. In order to make this work popular the government wanted Mordecai Benet to approve of it. He faced two difficulties. A German translation of the Pentateuch was in his eyes a heretical work, but as he couldn't say so, he saved his conscience by ignoring this part of the work in his recommendation, speaking merely of the text and the Hebrew commentary. Somewhat easier was the problem in the question of the infringement on the copyright of Heidenheim's work. This copyright rested on a rabbinical Cherem, which declared that anyone who would reprint the work without the author's permission, was under the ban. Benedict declared that in as much as the government prohibited the pronunciation of a Cherem, it was inoperative, and at all events it could not have any effect on a Christian. This decision was strongly attacked by Benedict's contemparary, Moses Sofer, who logically declared that, while we cannot enforce a Cherem, we surely should not lend a hand in making it inoperative. The government, however, was stronger, and the public did not care for such scruples so that Schmid's publications were a great financial success.

The powerful challenge issued by a new era to an age that had become an anchronism, made itself felt in the early decades of the nineteenth century, even in the small country congregations. Our people were not of the historical bend. What we know of the rabbis of olden times is limited to brief notes in the socalled "memor" books, and the tombstone inscriptions. The oldest rabbi whose name I could discover in our records, was Jacob Eliezer Bunswick. the great grandfather of my great grandfather. He was in 1708 "Klausprimator" in Mannheim, which means presiding rabbi of a college consisting of ten members founded from a legacy of 100,000 florins, left by Lemle Moses Reinganum, for the purpose of maintaining the study of the Torah in accordance with the Biblical precepts, "Thou shalt meditate upon it day and night." Afterwards Reb Leser, as he was called, was rabbi of Kanitz, and finally of Vienna, where, as the congregation had no corporate rights, he was registered as chaplain to the court-Jew, Samson Wertheimer. He left numerous works, but none of them was published. All that is left of his liteary activity is an index to rabbinical literature, preserved in the royal library of Berlin, a fragment of another work in my possession, and an appeal, written by his son Selig, to assist him in publishing the works of his father. Reb Leser, judging by his family name, was a native of western Germany, as was in all likelihood also his son-in-law, Joseph, who died in 1723, six years before his father-in-law, and is already known by the family name of Deutsch. His signature appears under the resolutions passed by the periodically assembled representatives of Moravian congregations, and his tombstone praises him as an excellent Hazan, and a Talmudic scholar. Somewhere around the middle of the eighteenth century we had a rabbi by the name of Geschlik Wannerfried, evidently from the town by the same name in Hesse, whose family later on adopted the name of Fried for short. His grandson Leser, on the mother's side a descendant of the old Rabbi Leser, was the earliest rabbi whom the people within my recollection knew. What they told me about him, were the usual routine anecdotes of his great piety and learning, but nothing that could illustrate the personal life of that period. He died in 1819, and Steinschneider, the great bibliographer, ascribed to him the work of the older Rabbi Leser; Zunz in his "Memorable Dates" followed him, and so we have another instance of the uncertainty of historic tradition.

Somewhat more distinct were the traditions after the death of Rabbi Leser. His successor was Joseph Feilbogen, who died in 1869, nearly eighty-five years of age, having, however, left Kanitz in 1824. Whether he had any trouble with the progressive elements, I do not know. He had them about thirty years afterwards, when he was rabbi of Holleschau. and some radicals proposed the abolition of the time honored custom of "Schulkloppen." This means that the sexton went from house to house, announcing by three knocks on the door with a wooden hammer the beginning of the services at the synagog. Rabbi Joseph Feilbogen adjured his congregation not to provoke the wrath of God, which had already manifested itself by an epidemic causing numerous deaths of children. One of Joseph Feilbogen's sons. Benjamin. was rabbi in Ottakring, a suburb of Vienna. and his son Sigmund. created in 1908 quite an excitement in connection with a visit to Rome, which is worth while recording as a piece of history.

Sigmunt Feilbogen. was professor of political economy at the Acadamy of Commerce in Vienna. Being sent by the government to do some research work in Italy in 1908. he went to Rome to see the Easter celebration. Through the recommendation of the Austrian minister to the Vatican. he obtained permission for himself. his wife and the latter's sister. to attend the mass said by the Pope himself. When the time came for communion. he fell in line. and received the consecrated host from the hands of the Pope. It seemed to agree with him and his wife. but the sister-in-law could—literally—not swallow the miraculous wafer. She put a handkerchief to her mouth. placing the host in it. One of the guards noticed it. had her arrested. and naturally a great scandal followed. The Professor declared that he had long before intended to become a Catholic. and having the opportunity of receiving the sacrament from the hands of the Pope, he could not wait until baptism would entitle him to this great privilege which he might never have an opportunity to obtain. Some papers announced that the Professor had formally converted to the Catholic church. but in 1910. he again publicly denied the rumor. It is certain. however. tht he would not have been willing to lay down his life in order to preserve such time honored customs as "Schulkloppen." Rabbi Joseph Feilbogen was succeeded by Rabbi Joseph Spiro. who held his office from 1824 until 1830 He was a native of Triesch in Moravia. and was successively Daian in his native town, afterwards rabbi in Habern. Bohemia. and finally in Kanitz. where he died. In his days open disregard of rabbinical law became already a serious problem. For the first time in history a ball was given. in honor of an engaged couple. How this was possible under the narrow housing conditions in the ghetto is a problem to me, but as I saw similar miracles in my own days, in the still surviving houses of the ghetto, the historicity of the fact admits of no doubt. The rabbi was provoked at this attempt, and sent word to my grandfather, Leser, named for the famous ancestor, with the strict order that this outrage of moral sentiment shall not be tolerated. The sexton delivered the message in clear terms, "Reb Leser, the rabbi sends you word that under no condition shall boys and girls dance with each other at that ball." My grandfather replied coolly: "Give my compliments to the rabbi and tell him that if the boys wanted to dance with the boys, they would not have arranged a ball." The rabbi's decision was disregarded, although it is based on authorities that can be traced back to the thirteenth century. The repetition of the condemnation of this social pleasure, would seem to indicate that even in the seventeenth century, when rabbinical authority was at its height, Cupid defied church and council as he does today. Equally unsuccessful was Rabbi Joseph, when he tried to prevent another breach of religious law. The first married woman refused to wear the "Sheitel." Few people know that this Sheitel was already a reform. Henriette Herz, the famous Berlin beauty, and society leader, who married in 1779, tells us that she had to wear the bonnet, and when she, the girl-wife of fifteen, the daughter and the wife of a physician, appeared on the day after her wedding before her mother, she was scolded because a lock of her hair stubbornly protruded from under the bonnet. It was about 1800 that the compromise was made allowing married women to wear false hair. Some orthodox rabbis denounced this already as a breach of tradition, while others thought, it would protect tradition against further inroads. As we see, it did not. The woman, of whom I speak, I knew quite well, and she told me the story personally. She was from Nikolsburg, and from a prominent—it is hardly necessary to say—strictly orthodox family. Her husband was a disciple of the Jeshibah of Prague, and very likely, owing to the influences that prevailed amongst the young men at that time, a liberal. The rabbi, called on the young woman personally, which was an unusual honor in those days, especially as they lived out of town in a potash factory, one of the Jewish industries in those days, but the strong appeals were of no avail. The bad example was once set, and of the generation of my mother, only one woman that I can remember wore the Sheitel. The old-fashioned bonnet I saw only in one solitary instance, in the case of the wife of our old rabbi, who died in 1866. The wife of his successor had not even a Scheitel.

A little more successful was the rabbi in fighting another evil. Austrian congregations had adopted the narrow fiscal principle of the government, raising revenue by the creation of monopolies. Such a monopoly was the kosher wine. My grandfather obtained from the congregation the exclusive privilege of selling kosher wine. The rabbi was opposed to this system, because he feared that owing to the usual quarrels of a small congregation, some people would rather buy wine that was not kosher than patronize a man, with whom they lived on bad terms. He, therefore, assembled ten men in the congregational meeting room, took a Sefer Torah in his hand, and declared that the wine, sold by Reb Leser Reb Zalme Wolfens, was as prohibited as the wine offered as libation to the idols, and that one who drank it would incur the penalty of trangressing the Cherem as had been incurred by Achan, when he appropriated some of the booty of Jericho. The sin of drinking wine that was not kosher, is a standing complaint in the rabbinical literature in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Our congregation, like many others, had a special prayer in its "Memor" book, asking the blessing of heaven for those who refrained from this sin. Some may have been impressed by the rabbi's warning, but the business of my grandfather proved a failure for an entirely different reason. The Jews had to pay a special tax for all provision that they used, and my grandfather had tried to smuggle a consignment of wine without paying this excise duty. One of the strict observers of the dietary law informed against him. My grandfather was fined very heavily. He appealed. The fine was reduced, but the heavy court costs, the bribes and the fine, ruined his business. The curse of the rabbi had done its work.

THE LEO M. FRANK CASE

New Revelations Justify Demand for A New Trial

Republished from Chicago Examiner.

The case of Leo M. Frank, college graduate and heir to a big fortune, under sentence of death in Atlanta, Ga., is one of those events in the history of crime that overflows the bounds of local interest and attracts the attention of the whole country. Some of these cases attract the attention of the world—like the Dreyfus case, or, more recently, the Beilis case.

Frank will be thirty years old April 17—the date set for his hanging. His conviction has been affirmed by the State Supreme Court and the State of Georgia is preparing for the execution, despite a tremendous agitation against it.

The newspapers of Atlanta are demanding that Frank have another trial; the ministers of that city from their pulpits preach that his trial was unfair. The question of his innocence or guilt stirred the South.

Yet, during his trial, there was no sentiment that was not hostile to him. The courtroom was surrounded by mobs clamoring for his death. It openly threatened that if the jury failed to send him to the gallows he would be lynched. Five thousand persons cheered the verdict, and the prosecutor was carried from the courtroom on the shoulders of the mob in token of appreciation of his victory.

Defense Alleges Conspiracy.

Against the press, the ministers and an army of friends who have arisen to work for justice for Frank, is the police department of Atlanta and the prosecuting officers—steadfast in their determination to carry out the verdict obtained, according to the contention of the defense, by a conspiracy of these same law forces.

Frank was convicted of killing Mary Phagan, a fourteen-year-old girl, who, according to the testimony adduced at his trial, died in resisting his advances. There had been fifteen murders of women under atrocious conditions in Atlanta and the police had failed to bring any of them home to a perpetrator. This was blamed for the excitement over the killing of this young white girl and the necessity that the law forces find a victim.

Friends Believe Him Innocent.

Leo Frank was superintendent of the factory of the National Pencil Company in Atlanta. His uncle, a Brooklyn millionaire, is president of the company and the young man is his heir. He is an honor graduate of Cornell, is married and. up to the time of his arrest, stood high in the estimation of the community. How completely his friends believe in him is evidenced by his re-election to the presidency of the local B'Nai B'rith organization after a jury had pronounced him guilty of a hideous murder and a judge had sentenced him to be hanged.

It is not a case of anti-Semitism, for men of all creeds are among those who insist he is innocent and demanding that a way be found to avoid a legal murder.

Mary Phagan was found dead, concealed in a sack in the basement of Frank's factory, April 27, 1913, the day following the Confederate Decoration Day. Frank was told of the finding of the body and went from his home and identified the girl as one of his former employes. Voluntarily he told that the day before he was working in his office about noon when the girl came in to get what money she had coming to her and to ask for re-employment. He thus established the fact against himself of being the last person known to have seen her alive.

On this single fact he was arrested, released and re-arrested. Then the police began the work of making out a case against him.

Presently there appeared an attorney who said he had been engaged by the girl's relatives. He said the police were trying to shield Frank, implying that there had been bribery to afford the young man a change to escape. There were complications of politics that made such an accusation of consequence. The police and prosecuting forces started in to demonstrate that they were after Frank in earnest. The theory on which they worked was that the accused was a degenerate, and that he had attacked other girls. They scoured the city for disreputable women and negroes who could be induced to appear against him. The result of such a campaign in an excitable Southern city may be imagined.

Conley Aids the Police.

Presently the police took into custody a factory roustabout, "Jim" Conley, who gave them the story they wanted, and Frank was brought to trial. Conley testified that he had come into the factory while Frank was in his office with the girl. He said Frank had told him to mount guard outside the office and protect him from interruption. He said he heard a shriek, quickly muffled, and soon Frank called to him. He said he entered the office and saw the superintendent, who sent him into an adjoining room, where he found the girl's body.

"She resisted me and I hit her too hard," the negro said Frank told him.

Then Conley said he got a gunny sack and tied the body in it, put the bundle on his shoulder and started to carry it to the elevator. It slipped from his hands, he said, and Frank helped him carry it to the elevator, on which it was taken to the basement. Conley said they left it there while they returned to Frank's office, where Conley wrote some notes that were found beside the body. Conley said Frank gave him $200, but took it from him when he failed to burn the body in the factory furnace.

Terribly direct testimony that, but it subsequently developed that Conley had told the police four different stories, of which the one given at the trial was the last. First, he said he had not been at the factory the day of the murder. Then he said he could not write. Later he said he had written the notes the day before the murder at Frank's dictation.

Conley fixed the time of the carrying of the body to the basement at 12:56 p. m.

Element of Time Enters.

It was 12:02 when his stenographer left Frank alone in the office. It was 12:10 when Mary Phagan came there. At 12:20 Lennie Quinn, factory foreman, came in and found Frank seated calmly at his desk, working as usual. To make Conley's story credible it must be assumed that Frank made his advances to the girl, fought her and killed her, carried her body 150 feet to the room where Conley says he found it, returned to his desk and composed himself to work —all within ten minutes.

Moreover, Conley says he wrote the notes on Frank's desk. It has been discovered since the trial that the notes were not on Frank's stationery, but on a series of pads that had not been in use in the factory for years, but that might have been picked from the rubbish heaps in the basement.

Frank left the factory about 1 p. m. and arrived at his home for dinner at 1:20.

Albert McKnight, a negro, husband of the cook at Frank's home, swore that the factory superintendent had come home in an excited and nervous condition, had refused dinner and gone out almost immediately. Also that he had said he had had trouble with a girl at the factory, thus contradicting Frank's statement that he had dined at home, and shattering his alibi.

Strong corroborative evidence against Frank, but since the trial McKnight has made affidavit that he did not see Frank at all on the day of the murder and that his testimony was framed for him by a white man and was given in order to get the reward offered for the conviction of the murderer of Mary Phagan.

Witnesses Admit Perjury.

A disreputable woman made affidavit accusing Frank, thus bearing out the police charges against his personal habits, showing him capable of doing all that Conley had charged him with. The same woman since the trial has confessed that the police had induced her to make the affidavit, though there was no truth in it.

Another woman who had heard a scream from the factory the afternoon of the murder tells of the effort to have her swear that the scream startled her an hour earlier in order that Conley's statement of the time of the murder should have corroboration.

Various people, reputable and disinterested, tell of meeting Frank on the street at the time Conley swore he was with Frank disposing of the body in the basement.

Half a dozen girls have sworn that the police or the prosecutors tried to get them to testify to advances or attacks by Frank to bear out the theory against the young superintendent. They tell also of offers of money to induce them to give such testimony.

Frank himself testified to the girl's coming to his office, getting her money and departing unharmed, leaving him still working over his accounts. He received the verdict calmly and when he was sentenced made a statement to the court, so dignified and eloquent that even his enemies marveled at it.

His Statement to Court.

"If the State and law wills," said Frank, "that my life be taken as a blood atonement for the poor little girl who was ruthlessly killed by another, then it remains for me to die with whatever fortitude my manhood may allow. But I am innocent of this crime and the future will prove it. I am now ready for your sentence."

His lawyer's plea for a new trial was denied. The Supreme Court, by a vote of four to two, affirmed the conviction and the sentence and Frank is now in the Atlanta jail, with the date for his hanging fixed, while the whole state seethes with the debate over his guilt or innocence.

Is Frank, the college graduate and man of brilliant promise, the most vicious of mankind, or is he the victim of a conspiracy by police and prosecutors to maintain a fiction of efficiency?

His whole life has been raked up and every word of his associates. teachers and schoolmates is a word in his favor.

Against him, it is pointed out, there is next to nothing behind the statement of a negro roustabout, himself in peril of the noose if the crime is not fixed on Frank, and the words of witnesses, most of whom have recanted.

Yet Frank is ordered to death on April 17, and the authorities say the sentence will be carried out.

It is officialdom against public sentiment, the stubborn pride of man hunters against the remorseful community that realizes that, in its fury at a frightful crime, it was unfair to the man on whom suspicion lit.

Is it any wonder that the case of Leo Frank is attracting the sympathetic attention of the whole country?

PRESS COMMENTS.

The Atlanta Journal.

On April 26, 1913, in the City of Atlanta, in a building situated on one of the most crowded thoroughfares, a young girl just budding into womanhood was cruelly and brutally murdered. The crime was enveloped in deepest and most impenetrable mystery. Circumstances pointed vaguely to several individuals as being the possible murderer, but to no one convincingly. The city and indeed the whole country were horrified. The very brutality of the crime aroused public indignation to a degree of frenzy almost inconceivable. The criminal was demanded and the criminal must be found.

An irresponsible drunken negro charged Leo Frank with the crime. He related in minute and nauseating detail the horrible circumstances surrounding the murder. No other victim could be discovered, and in the absence of convincing evidence against anybody else, public fury gradually centered on Frank.

As time went on the mystery deepened. There was no satisfying circumstance indicating that Frank committed the crime and it required the negro's testimony to furnish even a basis for the accusation. The fact that this horrible crime had been committed and no other victim could be discovered was alone sufficient to cause the negro's testimony to be accepted by the public. He would not have been believed under other conditions, but an outraged public demanded a victim, and circumstances seemed in some slight degree to sustain the negro's testimony.

Frank was placed on trial last August. Public indignation was still at white heat. The trial was perhaps the longest and certainly the most sensational that ever occurred in the South. The jury found Frank guilty. A new trial was refused. The presiding judge stated in his refusal that he had been unable to make up his mind as to whether the man was guilty or innocent, but that the determination of that question was in the province of the jury, and the jury had declared him guilty. The Supreme Court was appealed to, and that Court decided that no error had been committed sufficient to justify setting aside the jury's verdict. Frank is under sentence of death. He is to be hanged on April 17th, unless execution of the sentence is delayed.

The Journal cares absolutely nothing for Frank, or for those who were engaged in his defense or prosecution. If Frank is found guilty after a fair trial, he ought to be hanged and his case should be made a horrible example to those who would destroy human life, for generations to come.

We recognize the justice of the rule that precludes the press from discussing, editorially at least, cases while pending in court. We have always respected both the necessity and the propriety of this rule. We do not wish to violate it now, but this case is so extraordinary in every phase and detail, so important in the consequences that may follow and so dangerous to the sanctity of the courts and the safety of the people themselves, that ordinary rules do not apply. Besides, so far as the record shows, this is a finished case. The prisoner has been sentenced to death, and nothing remains but to execute the mandate of the court. We do not therefore violate the proprieties of journalism nor offend against the peace, good order and dignity of the State, when in simple justice and with profound respect for the courts and jury, as well as the lawyers on both sides of this remarkable case, we plead for a new trial for this unfortunate man.

The courts have their great responsibilities and their arduous duties to perform, and be it said to their everlasting credit, they discharge those duties to the best of human ability. But even juries are sometimes swayed by environment and the judicial ermine is not infallible. Infallibility is an attribute of omnipotence and omniscience only. Responsibility for the enforcement of the law and the punishment of crime rests largely but not exclusively upon the courts. The press also has its share of responsibility, and it seems to The Journal that the time has come for the press to speak. The Journal will do so now even though every other newspaper in Georgia remains silent.

It is our duty to help enforce the laws and punish crime, but it is a far more solemn duty to know with reasonable certainty at least that men accused of crime are guilty before they are punished. Error in the administration of the law must be corrected before its consequences are visited upon those not legally convicted; otherwise the law itself falls into disrepute and becomes the scorn of those who should uphold it.

In this respect the press is responsible no less than the courts. Its duties are not in conflict but in aid of the courts. It is the amicus curiae, the friend of the court, in such matters. It is in this spirit that we appeal for a new trial for Frank. Is Frank guilty of the murder of Mary Phagan? We do not know. He may be guilty or he may be innocent. He may be a fiend incarnate, or he may be the victim of a cruel conspiracy. Whether he is innocent or guilty is not now the question.

Leo Frank has not had a fair trial. He has not been fairly convicted and his death without a fair trial and legal conviction will amount to judicial murder.

We say this with a full understanding of the import of our words and the responsibility that rests upon us in making this appeal. We do so, not in disrespect for the court or the lawyers or the jury. They did the best they could with the lights before them. We honor them for faithfully performing a most unpleasant duty as they saw it.

But this we do say without qualification: it was not within the power of human judges and human lawyers and human jurymen to decide impartially and without fear the guilt or innocence of an accused man under the circumstances that surrounded this trial.

The very atmosphere of the courtroom was charged with an electric current of indignation, which flashed and scintillated before the very eyes of the jury. The courtroom and streets were filled with an angry, determined crowd, ready to seize the defendant if the jury had found him not guilty. Cheers for the prosecuting counsel were irrepressible in the courtroom throughout the trial and on the streets unseemly demonstrations in condemnation of Frank were heard by the judge and jury. The judge was powerless to prevent these outbursts in the courtroom and the police were unable to control the crowd outside.

So great was the danger that the Fifth Regiment of the National Guard was kept under arms throughout a great part of the night, ready to rush on a moment's warning to the protection of the defendant. The press of the city united in an earnest request to the presiding judge to not permit the verdict of the jury to be received on Saturday as it was thought it would be, because it was known that a verdict of acquittal would cause a riot such as would shock the country and cause Atlanta's streets to run with innocent blood. Under such indesirable conditions as these, Frank was tried and convicted. Was a fair trial, under such circumstances, possible? Could a man be legally and fairly convicted while a threatening and uncontrollable mob was breathing vengeance in the very faces of the judge and jury?

Frank may be guilty. If so he should suffer the extreme penalty of the law by hanging, for surely no more horrible crime was ever committed; but in the name of Justice and in the name of the good people of the State of Georgia, who believe in fair play, who stand for the enforcement of law and the punishment of crime, after legal conviction, let this man be fairly tried. If he is guilty, he will be convicted again. The majesty of the law cannot be offended, justice cannot be defeated, the feelings of an outraged community cannot be further outraged, by according to this man a fair and impartial trial.

The evidence on which he was convicted is not clear. Suppose he is hanged and it should develop that the man was innocent as he claims? The people of this state would stand before the world convicted of murdering an innocent man by refusing to give him an impartial trial. Such a horrible thing is unthinkable. And yet it is possible; yea, an absolute certainty that we are going to do that very thing unless the courts interfere.

Ought Frank to have a new trial? The question carries its own answer:

o

Chicago Daily Journal.

Civilized people throughout the world remember Russia's famous "Bloody Sunday."

A body of discontented people had wished to march to the palace and lay their grievances before the czar.

A council of the grand dukes had been held on Saturday night at the palace to agree on a "policy of repression" to be practiced the next day if the workmen persisted in carrying out their march.

In the dark after midnight the czar and his family fled from St. Petersburg.

And the next day—on Sunday—the slaughter of the workmen was accomplished. It was a thoroughly characteristic SHEEP-KILLING, though the victims were human beings.

On Sunday evening one of the grand dukes hastened from the city to tell the czar of the murder of hundreds of his subjects.

"DO YOU THINK ENOUGH HAVE BEEN KILLED TO CONVINCE THE PEOPLE that these rebellions will be suppressed?" the czar asked his grand duke.

This merciless picture of a degenerate ruler you will find in a very interesting book just published, the author of which is a Russian noble who was a member of the czar's official staff.

And besides giving you a clear view of a nation's ruler, it serves to illustrate a similar happening, in slightly different guise, in the southern city of ATLANTA.

A year ago an Atlanta factory girl named Mary Phagan was murdered. Her body was found in the basement of a pencil factory.

In the course of the investigation into her death the superintendent of the factory, a young Jew, named Leo M. Frank, was arrested.

Later he was tried and convicted of the crime; convicted on shallow as well as perjured testimony.

The highest court in Georgia upheld his conviction and sentenced him to die on his birthday, April 17.

In the city of Atlanta, during the year preceding the death of Mary Phagan, there had been FIFTEEN MURDERS and the police had caught none of the murderers.

The Phagan girl being white, her death caused a general outcry against the inefficient police and the police, at bay, made up their minds to find a victim. It has been shown beyond question that the police forced witnesses to swear falsely through the use of their vicious system so often termed the "third degree." It has been proved that they made ignorant persons give testimony wholly untrue and prepared under their own direction.

And on this testimony that convicted the young factory superintendent Frank the state of Georgia and its judicial system IS GOING TO MURDER FRANK.

The time had come in Atlanta to convict SOMEBODY of murder. ENOUGH PEOPLE HAD BEEN SLAIN to awe the remainder of the people into submission.

And that is why Frank has been sentenced to die in April—not because he has been proved guilty of murder, but because public sentiment at the time of his trial was firmly determined that somebody had to be hanged for Mary Phagan's death.

You are not asked to believe Frank innocent. You merely are told that he has been convicted on testimony which has been proved false and that he is the victim of clamor. You are told that he has not had a fair trial and that his conviction on such testimony is AN OUTRAGE AGAINST HUMANITY and a grewsome distortion of justice.

Frank may be guilty, but the state has not proved him guilty on any credible testimony.

To hang Frank on such testimony will be as big a crime as was the choking to death of Mary Phagan.

And public sentiment OUTSIDE of Georgia should do something in Frank's behalf.

Frank was and is trusted in the Jewish community that forms a part of Atlanta's population. He was President of the Atlanta B'nai B'rith at the time the Phagan girl died, and he is STILL its president because the local Jews believe him innocent. Hundreds of substantial business and professional people in Atlanta—non-Jews—BELIEVE HIM INNOCENT and protest against his paying the penalty.

We suggest to you, the many readers of this newspaper, that you take a hand in the Frank case and write to the governor of Georgia making strong protest against OFFICIAL MURDER.

The governor of Georgia is JOHN M. SLATON, and your letter will reach him if addressed to him at the Atlanta postoffice.

In addition to writing to him, we suggest that you discuss this case with your family and friends and get THEM to write Gov. Slaton. You should take this action promptly. Dont' wait for a week or longer, but mail the letter today or tomorrow.

WHAT PROMINENT PEOPLE THINK OF THE CASE.

Prof. J. Lustrat, University of Georgia.

Public feeling such as prevailed in Atlanta at the time of Frank's trial has caused in France an innocent man to be sent to Devil's Island, where, month after month, he had to suffer torments worse than death. I do not claim that Frank is innocent, but I claim that he ought to be given a fair chance to prove his innocence.

Hon. E. H. Michael, Speaker Pro Tem, Georgia House of Representatives.

There was a thirst for the blood of the murderer of Mary Phagan. So intense was this feeling that the very atmosphere in and about the Court House was charged with the sulphurous fumes of anger. I was in the Court House several times during the trial, and the spirit, the feeling, the thought of the crowd affected me. Without reason I found myself prejudiced against Frank. Prejudiced, not from facts and testimony, but by popular belief and hostile feeling manifested by the crowd.

Frank may be guilty, he may be innocent. Certainly he has not had a fair trial. Let's give him one. The Constitution of our State guarantees to every man, white or black, high or low, Gentile or Jew, an absolutely fair trial.

Sam L. Olive, Attorney and Member Georgia Legislature.

"No man should be tried for his life in a community where the trial must be suspended at times for fear of public violence. Frank's guilt or innocence should be judicially ascertained from the untrammeled testimony of creditable witnesses, and the trial should not be held in an atmosphere surcharged with public preconception of guilt. Adding one horror to another neutralizes the effect of neither.

"Guilty or innocent, he is entitled to have 'his day in court'—a day of calmness, a day upon which the cloudless sunlight of truth may shine. This given, the letter and spirit of the law will have been satisfied.

"Obedience is better than sacrifice."

C. L. Elyea, President Elyea-Anstell Co., Atlanta.

"Mr. James R. Gray, City.

Dear Mr. Gray: I wish to express my great appreciation of your editorial of Tuesday in reference to the Frank trial. I am thoroughly convinced that every liberty respecting individual will not only approve but applaud your act.

I could not conceive that public officials and newspapers were so sensitive to public opinion, but the fearless who speak their convictions are the most respected and are the leaders in their respective spheres and I know that your reward in this matter will be great, both as to the approval of those you serve, and to your own conscience. Yours very truly."

F. A. Tipton of Ray-Tipton Co., Atlanta.

"I do not know Frank; I have never seen him. He may be guilty, but personally, I have never so believed. The evidence as given at the trial upon which he was convicted, was of course, convincing to the jurors. else their verdict was impossible; but following it, day by day, I was unable to find the evidence—and, it is a matter of legal record, that Judge Roan so felt.

The state of Georgia owes to herself the granting of a new trial, when further removed from the actual happening, the intensity of the prejudice which unquestionably existed being in a measure modified, there exists an opportunity to consider the evidence—old as well as the new—free from the clamor of those who were so noisily insistent, and a fair and just verdict to be found, a thing which I do not think was possible at the former trial, by reason of the intense hostility of sentiment."

Dr. Wm. Grenshaw, Dean Atlanta Dental College.

"I am among those who doubt the verdict against Mr. Frank in so far as it is predicated upon the evidence and testimony of the negro Jim Conley, who is a self-confessed liar admitted publicly on the stand.

I sincerely trust a new trial can be had and the real murderer found."

J. C. McKemie, Cashier Bank of West Point, West Point, Ga.

"Hon. James R. Gray,
Atlanta Journal, Atlanta Ga.:

"Dear Sir: In the matter of the Frank case, which has attracted much attention from all sources on account of the peculiar conditions surrounding the horrible crime, the opinion of out-of-town people has been governed to a large extent by the overflow of feelings as gathered from "hearsay" evidence.

It is human nature to believe that which we are keyed up to believe, and, as we all know, it is easier to believe that which is "public opinion" and handed out by everyone as "facts" than to stand aside and analyze true conditions, thus, we can see how a jury can render a verdict in the face of lack of evidence.

However, we are too far away from the center of interest to undertake to discuss the matter save from one standpoint, that is, the obligation which we are due to our fellow man. Your very able and clean-cut editorial of last Tuesday places the case before the public mind in such shape that it can be seen from every angle, and it certainly appeals to us in a more potent way than anything we have previously seen on the subject. At this time we can but believe that this man should have a trial based on evidence—and not public feeling."

ATLANTA MINISTERS DEMAND RETRIAL FOR FRANK.

Demand for new trial for Leo M. Frank was strongly voiced by several Atlanta ministers in sermons on March 15, 1914. All declared that in their opinion the condemned man had not been fairly tried and that to execute him under the present sentence would be judicial murder.

We publish herewith extracts of a few sermons:

Dr. G. R. Holderly, Moore Memorial Presbyterian Church.

"As a preacher of the Gospel and as a citizen of Georgia, it becomes my duty for the second time to warn the State of the sin and the danger of taking a human life unless it is absolutely sure that life has been duly forfeited. Leo M. Frank has been condemned to death.

"I am not asserting his guilt or innocence, but Frank has not had a fair trial, as every unbiased man must admit; nor is it likely he can get such a trial in Atlanta on account of the prejudice against him. This should not be, but is true. It would be unfair to hang a sheep-killing dog on the evidence upon which Frank has been convicted.

"Should this man be executed, and it be discovered that he was not guilty, then the State of Georgia would be guilty of an atrocious murder. Leo M. Frank should have a new trial and it should be held in a judicial atmosphere."

Rev. Julian S. Rodgers, Baptist Minister.

"Leo M. Frank has never been fairly convicted. I wouldn't hang a yellow dog on Jim Conley's testimony. much less a white man with a character heretofore unchallenged. The State of Georgia can well afford to spend a king's ransom rather than hang a man about whose guilt there is at least a great shadow of doubt."

Rev. C. O. Bricker, First Christian Church.

"I believe that you will agree with me in saying that between the day of his arrest and the day of the opening of his trial Frank had already been convicted in the minds of 90 per cent of the people, solely on the strength of the revolting and seemingly convincing stories reflecting upon his moral character as they were printed in the newspapers.

"We were in no frame of mind to give him or any other man under the circumstances a fair and impartial trial. We were inflamed and indignant to the point of unreason. Looking back now, I can see that I was in no frame of mind to grant the accused a fair trial. I thought I was, I remember how bitterly I resented a man saying in my presence, 'Frank has not had a fair trial.' He had the sort of trial I wanted him to have. and to admit that it had not been fair would have been to admit that I was unfair and unjust—and we do not readily do that. We believed that he was guilty, and it was the verdict we wanted rather than a trial.

"Frank should have a new trial because of the apparent insufficiency of evidence under which he was convicted. Under ordinary circumstnces we in the South do not take the word of a negro against the word of a white man, but were willing to believe the unsupported story of a drunken, worthless jailbird negro, even after he had sworn to three or four other affidavits and had admitted criminal knowledge and complicity in the crime and was a self-confessed liar and perjurer—in the face of all that, we were willing to believe his last story.

"I submit that Frank should have a new trial because, under the awful tension of public feeling, it was next to impossible for a jury of our fellow human beings to have granted him a fair, fearless, and impartial trial. I do not know whether the shouts of the masses of people reached the judge and jury, but they could not help being deeply impressed and profoundly influenced by what the people were thinking and feeling."

Rev. C. C. Cary, Methodist Minister.

"To hang Frank on the evidence of a self-confessed degraded negro perjurer, would be nothing short of a legal calamity."

Rev. F. A. Line, First Universalist Church.

"Mr. Frank has not had a fair trial—that he could not have a fair trial under the conditions prevailing at the time—is the conviction of an ever increasing number. This fact in itself should be sufficient for the fair-minded people of Atlanta and vicinity."

Rev. C. B. Wilmer, Rector St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

"I am not even questioning the correctness of the conclusion at which they (the jury) arrived. It may be that the same conclusion would be arrived at by any honest and intelligent jury listening to all the evidence and viewing it in the dry light of reason. Nevertheless, the question remains: Ought Atlanta to stand for a trial conducted under the conditions surrounding this trial? On this question Atlanta is herself on trial before the bar of enlightened public opinion all over the country and perhaps all over the civilized world."

TROLLEYS FOR JERUSALEM.

Four separate tramway routes are to be laid down in the Holy City of Jerusalem. They will all start from the Jaffa Gate, the principal entrance into the city, and run outside the city walls through the newer parts of Jerusalem. The first, which will have a length of about two miles, will give easy access to what may be termed the business quarter of the Holy City, while the second, of similar length. will link up the large Jewish colonies to the north with the city's principal entrance. The third will encircle the old city, embracing many of its most historic sites, such as Gordon's Calvary, believed by many scholars to be the scene of the Crucifixion. the Tomb of the Kings, the Mount of Olives. and the Valley of Jehoshaphat. The fourth line will run from the Jaffa Gate to Bethlehem, some six miles distant.

BETTER PROSPECTS FOR YEMEN JEWS.

With the concurrence of the Turkish Government, Haham Bashi Nahoum recently sent a letter to the Imam of Yemen, the religious head and absolute master of the Province, calling his attention to the cruelties inflicted on the Jews and requesting him to order his subordinates to desist from their acts of persecution. M. Nahoum has received a very cordial reply from the Imam who, while denying the truth of the charges brought against his cadis, states that if the situation of the Jews is not satisfactory this is due to the constant quarrels among themselves on religious matters. As a proof of his friendship for the Jews in general, and the Haham Bashi in particular, the Imam has authorized the establishment, by the Alliance Israelite Universelle, of a school at Sanaa, the capital of Yemen.

A JEWISH PROFESSOR AT FRANKFORT UNIVERSITY.

Professor Joseph Horowitz, of the Mohammedan Anglo-Oriental College at Aligarh (India,) has been appointed Professor at the University of Frankfort. He is son of the late Rabbi Dr. Horowitz, of that city.

Anti-Defamation League. Bulletin No. 2

Since the appearance of Bulletin No. 1, the League has been called upon to investigate and take action in about fifty individual cases, wherein the Jew was subjected to ridicule, oppression, or insult. Many of these cases are of so confidential a nature, that it would be unwise to report them, save in a general manner, in a public communication of this kind. Others, however, from their nature, may with propriety be related in detail, so that the many agencies of this League may be apprised of the scope of our activities.

Motion Pictures.

The League has been active principally in the Motion Picture field. It was felt that, at the present time, this was the most pressing problem confronting us. It is too early, perhaps, to judge of the success which our measures have met. This much is certain, however, that our activities have persuaded certain film manufacturers that pictures defaming the Jew, or holding him up to ridicule or contempt, are unprofitable investments. Through our efforts a Keystone film, entitled "Rebecca's Wedding Day," distributed by the Mutual Film Corporation, was completely suppressed in practically every part of the country. In every state of the Union some action was taken with relation to this film. In practically all of the larger cities the film exchanges, theater managers, or the city authorities were advised of the objectionable features of the picture, and requested to take steps locally to prevent its appearance. It is gratifying to report that in only one or two instances did we fail to meet with a sympathetic and substantial appreciation of our attitude.

Similar action was taken in connection with a film entitled "A Stage Door Flirtation," released by the Lubin Film Manufacturing Co. "The Missing Diamond," another Lubin Film, had been exhibited for some time before it came to our attention, but when we sent out the bulletins in relation to it, members of the committee in those cities, where it had not already been exhibited, were active in preventing its local appearance.

The last Motion Picture Bulletin sent out covered the films entitled "How Moscha Came Back," a Crystal Film. manufactured by the Universal Film Co., and "One of the Finest," a Nestor film, manufactured by the same company.

The net result is that the number of objectionable films has materially decreased. Several companies have discontinued the manufacture of films of this character, and at a recent interview between the managing board of this League and the officers of the Universal Film Co. (controlling about one-third of the film output of the United States), Mr. Carl Laemmle, the president of the company, promised that he would issue instructions to the companies under his control to the effect that no films which tend to bring the Jew into ridicule or contempt should be manufactured in the future.

As this Bulletin goes to press we are in receipt of a letter from the Lubin Manufacturing Company—the manufacturers responsible for "The Missing Diamond" and other pernicious films—in which the general manager advises us as follows: "We would beg to advise you that we are heartily in favor of your movement. It never has been our intention to hold any race or any creed up to public ridicule and such objections as have been made to our films by sensitive persons were always recognized where possible. Occasionally a picture has slipped through where the comedy might be regarded as offending those who looked at the humor with a more or less skeptical vision but to guard against this, in the future we have issued instructions to all of our directors that hereafter no pictures were to be made which might reflect upon any race or religion."

Film Censorship.

The Executive Committee has for some time past been gathering voluminous information with relation to the actual status of motion picture censorship in this country. All of this information is at the disposal of those communities which may desire to introduce local ordinances for the appointment of censorship boards. The Executive Committee recommends that wherever it is found that negotiations with the film exchanges, municipal authorities, or the theatrical managers, are unproductive of results, the model ordinance, which has been drafted, be introduced in the local council, and support for the same sought from all civic societies.

Classification of Cases.

The individual complaints received fall into several well-defined groups, such, for example, as complaints against magazine articles, newspaper items, and advertisements, vaudeville and dramatic performances, and a large group of miscellaneous complaints, such as attempted boycotts, insulting statements in advertising circulars, discrimination in the employment of labor and office help, etc.

Theatrical Performances.

A good illustration of the tactics pursued by this committee in connection with dramatic performances is furnished by the recent white slave play, "The Traffic."

In the first act an incident occurs which is not material to the development of the plot and which seemed to be a gratuitous insult to the Jewish people. The character in this episode was named "Cohenstein." He is the owner of a sweatshop, and the heroine is working for him, at the princely salary of $3 a week. In sewing upon a shirtwaist, she pricks her finger, and a speck of blood stains the linen. Cohenstein thereupon flies into a fury, and tells her that she will receive only one dollar for her week's wages. Upon her protesting he makes an improper proposal.

The manager of the production was requested to meet the committee at its weekly meeting, and talk the matter over. After a lengthy conference, he agreed to change the name and make-up of the character referred to, making it a negative one, so far as nationality, creed, etc., were concerned. He kept his promise.

This play had a run of about three months in Chicago. We cannot be certain, that when taken out on the road the modifications, which we enforced, will be retained. The lodges should make certain, therefore, when the play appears in their city, that the objectionable features have not been reinstated.

Vaudeville Acts.

A large number of complaints against objectionable vaudeville acts have been filed during the past few months. The problem here is much more difficult than in case of objectionable motion pictures. In the first place, many of these complaints come from people who are not members of the League, and who are not therefore familiar with the standards, which we have set for ourselves, in making protests. As a result, it sometimes happens, that an act, which is harmlessly funny, is made the basis of a protest, and serious and unwarranted injury is inflicted upon the actor as a result. The work of the Committee has been handicapped also by the fact that, in many instances, reports of protests have failed to specify wherein the act was objectionable, and to give specific details of the objectionable matter to which exception is taken. Effectual local protests have been made in many cases by resident members of the Executive Committee. In cases where the circumstances warranted it, the action of the local members was followed up in other cities. For example:

In Atlanta one Andy Rice appeared in a local theater in an objectionable vaudeville act. Protest was made to the theater manager, and as a result it was cut out from the program after it had appeared two or three times. The manager of the local theater also wrote to the officers of the Keith Circuit, objecting to further acts of similar character. From Atlanta this act was to be sent to Birmingham, Ala. The manager of the Keith Circuit, however, canceled the contract with Rice by wire prior to his appearance in Birmingham.

Newspapers.

Practically no newspaper items, in which the word "Jew" was improperly used, have been referred to this office within the past few months. The executive committee feels that this is due in large part to the circular sent to every newspaper in the country, advising them what the League considers the proper use of the word "Jew," and requesting their co-operation in not misusing it.

Now and then, objectionable newspaper advertisements slip in, but in every instance, all that was required to rectify the matter, was a visit or a letter from our local committee member. Thus, in St. Louis, an advertisement in the Post Dispatch by a music teacher stipulated that no lessons would be given to "Jews or Negroes." The advertisement was immediately removed, as soon as the attention of the newspaper manager was called to the same, and a full apology offered for the carelessness in allowing the same to appear in its columns. Similarly, in Atlanta, an advertisement for a salesman stipulated that "No Jews, Drunkards, Gamblers or Beginners need apply." This advertisement was removed at once, when called to the attention of the advertising manager, by the local member of the executive committee.

In Winnipeg, Canada, an advertisement read as follows: "We are in among the Jews, but we have good goods, at right prices." Whatever the insinuation may have been, the matter was called to the attention of the editor, and we received his promise that no advertisement of a similar nature would appear in his paper hereafter.

It is obvious that there is no desire on the part of these newspapers to intentionally affront the Jew, but it is only by persistent efforts that we can succeed in educating them to be more careful in the editing of copy for advertisements, in this respect.

Magazine Articles.

Some objectionable magazine articles have appeared. The Semi-monthly Magazine of the Chicago Tribune printed a story, entitled "Bringing the Fairies to Broadway." This story was designed for children, and was of such a nature as to poison the child-mind against the Jew. A letter of protest was sent to the editor of the magazine, who assured us in reply that he had "no idea or intention in any way of defaming the character of the Jew." The letter indicated that a more careful editorial policy will be pursued by this particular magazine in the future.

Oral Hygiene, a journal for dentists, printed an open letter in its November issue, in which the following appeared: "It may be that the last three words in the Jewish Bible are 'Get the Money,' but thank Goodness we are not all Jews, and there are some things in this old world besides money." This magazine is edited in Indianapolis, and upon complaint being made by our local committee member and by others throughout the country, the December issue of the magazine contained reprints of the correspondence, and an editorial in which the magazine disclaimed any responsibility or sympathy for the ideas contained in the November article.

Protests were made to the editors of several other magazines, wherein objectionable articles appeared. The results were eminently satisfactory.

Miscellaneous.

A large number of miscellaneous complaints have been called to the attention of the League. Space will permit of statement of only a few.

1. In Fort William, Canada, a school trustee, when on a visit to one of the public schools of the city, made certain statements, which were objectionable to people of our faith, and demand was made upon him for an apology, which was immediately forthcoming. The gentleman in question stated in part: "I gladly tender a full and complete apology. I do so without any feeling of hostility to the people of the Jewish faith. In placing this letter before you I wish to state that as a public school trustee, and a private citizen, I have always looked upon your people as upon other citizens, and this incident will not make any difference in my feelings."

2. In Galveston, prompt and effective measures were taken by our local committee members to prevent the presentation in private theatrical performances of several pernicious anti-Jewish acts.

3. In Seattle, objectionable tactics on the part of the district attorney, in unnecessarily directing the attention of the jury to the religion of certain defendants, was made the basis of a complaint, which resulted in a promise that the offense would not be repeated.

4. In Birmingham, Ala., steps were taken to prevent the initiation in that city of a discriminatory policy on the part of apartment house owners. It is understood that Birmingham has been free from this particularly obnoxious form of discrimination.

5. About the middle of November we had a reflex of the Polish boycott exhibited in Chicago. A Polish upholstering company, on Milwaukee avenue Chicago, placed a large placard in front of the store, containing a full-sized caricature of a Jew and a statement to the effect that in Russia the Jews suck the blood of the Christian children, but in America they suck the blood of all Christians—and urging the Poles to boycott all Jewish merchants. The sign caused rioting, and was torn down by the policeman on the beat. A few days later another sign to the same effect appeared. A committee then called upon the captain of the West Chicago Avenue police station. The captain tore down the sign, warning the proprietor at the same time that if anything of the kind were shown in the future, he would get a jail sentence. The captain promised that if any more rioting occurred in the neighborhood, the man would be promptly arrested

Conclusion.

We again desire to emphasize the fact that in order to accomplish the best results, work of this nature must be conducted with discretion and dignity Our organization has become recognized for the fairness of our actions, and our protests have gained an added weight thereby. The only way to preserve this respect is for us to make a protest only when the seriousness of the case warrants some action on our part and we are absolutely sure of our facts. To make complaint when the harm done is trival or inconsequential, or when no thorough investigation has been made, can only weaken the effect of protests in serious cases. We, therefore, particularly urge upon all interested in this work that they conform to these standards and, if possible, co-operate with the local member of the Executive Committee, or with the central office before taking any action. Threats of all kinds should be most studiously avoided. The work in order to be of lasting effect must be by appeals to reason. Let us appeal to the sense of fairness of those who offend, explain the injustice perpetrated and the deplorable results if permitted to go unchecked

Much good work has been accomplished by the League. Much remains to be done, which in view of the encouragement afforded by the success thus far achieved, is cheerfully undertaken by those who have been active in the interests of the League.

HENRI BERGSON.

The fame of the Jewish philosopher of France, who has recently become one of the Immortals by having been made a member of the French Academy, is rapidly spreading all over the world. The hall in the university where he delivers his lectures in Paris is daily overcrowded by men and women of all classes of society so that the students are beginning to complain of being crowded out from the lectures of their teacher. Professor Bergson is being placed by many of his admirers higher than Spinoza, Kant or any other philosopher of modern times. The thinkers of the world are interested in the effect of Bergson's original system of philosophy upon the traditional doctrines of theology. The doctrines of Bergson of creative evolution, of indeterminate theology and of human freedom, are being discussed by religious teachers, in their relation to current religious interests and ideas. The philosophy of Bergson centers in freedom. The universe is a product of free creation because it is not force or mechanism, but freedom and life. In addition to the above, E. C. Wilm, professor of religion in Wells College, says in regard to Bergson that what occultists and dreamers need is "that the northwest wind of science should get into them and blow their sickliness and barbarism away." And that is what all good men and women need is to be freed from misgivings and fear, and to be fortified in their better resolutions, so as to fit them for the highest task of which man is capable, the task, namely, of sustaining and furthering the interests of right and of truth. To these ends Bergson is anxious to contribute.

It is a gratifying fact to us Jews that the two greatest philosophers of the present age are sons of Israel. The one is Henri Bergson of France and the other is Hermann Cohen of Germany. These two illustrious names reflect great honor upon their people. Israel takes pride in the great Benedict Spinoza, who was far removed from Judaism and stood much nearer to the dominating majority. We certainly should take pride in Henri Bergson and Hermann Cohen, who stand nearer to Judaism in their philosophical teachings than Spinoza, the expounder of pantheism.

KING OF ROUMANIA GRANTS AUDIENCE TO JEWISH LEADER.

The King—Were I the Czar of Russia. I could order things. But as a constitutional monarch I have to depend upon the ministers and upon parliament. We assume that the greatest number of naturalizations will be voted. I have signed the decree. For the present moment, it requires tranquility. I told Dr. Gaster to prevent the foreign agitation. It only excites the minds. And in spite of it, a Jewish delegation presented itself before Sir Grey. This very day the "Berliner Tageblatt" publishes an exaggerated correspondence of the disorders at Jassy occasioned by the meeting of the Socialists.

Dr.—This incident is also instructive for it proves the lamentable degree which we have reached. The disorders were favored by the police. The investigation has demonstrated it.

The King—This is sad. I deplore these excesses. You know that on my arrival in this country I expressly visited the synagogue at Jassy. Far from causing displeasure, I was greeted by the population on coming out from the synagogue with sympathetic manifestations. I have given the Order of the "L'Etoile Roumaine" with the grade of commander to Rabbi Dr. Beck.

Dr.—It was myself who pinned this decoration in the temple on the breast of the Rabbi and stated in my remarks that this decoration reflects honor not only on Dr. Beck but also on the entire community.

The King—That was also my intention.

But I repeat, for this reason the agitation in foreign countries should cease.

Dr.—Your Majesty knows well that the "Union" is unable to stop the foreign gentlemen from occupying themselves with a question which is of interest to humanity and civilization. We decline all responsibility in this matter.

The King—County Karoly attacked us in a very vehement manner before the Hungarian delegations.

Dr.—Not out of love for the Jews.

The King—I know, it is as an appositionist and to cause bitterness to the life of the government. Count Berchthold has also not answered in an absolutely correct manner. He asserted implicitly that the Powers signatory to the Berlin treaty have the right to intervene and demand the execution of article 44.

Dr.—I wish to remark to your Majesty that today the Jewish affair is not like the one of 40, 30 or 20 years ago! A new generation has come. The 10,000 Jews who served in soldiers' uniform and who went bravely to Bulgaria ready to look death in the face, to pour out their blood for the king and for the fatherland, will not permit themselves to be treated as slaves and vagabonds. They are aware of their rights and demand to have a fatherland, the liberty to work and to live.

No power on earth can keep them back and they intend to take up the fight with energy and without hesitation, come what will. It is not courage which they lack. Those who believe that their dignity can be pushed to the rear, are mistaken. Here is an example, it is now two weeks since the "Liga Culturala" held its meeting in the "Dacia," when the agitators cried, "On the way to Dr. Stern!"

The King—(Interrupting.)—Yes, I know it, but measures have been taken.

Dr.—If the excited people were advised to go to the Jewish quarter they would have found an edifying reception and they would have returned with broken heads. The times are past when every blackguard can rush upon the Jews who are trembling with fear in their homes.

Things have changed, your Majesty, and the Jewish question has permanently become the order of the day.

I have seen the Minister of the Interior Take Jonesco. He told me that on account of the uproar in the country—

The King—Yes, lately I have also received daily telgrams and letters protesting against naturalization in bulk. I threw them into the waste basket.

Dr.—The Minister of the Interior told me that nothing can be done so far. But as the present government goes out he will not be sorry to leave the Jewish question as an inheritance to the liberals.

The King—Oh, the liberals are hostile to you, the Bratianos especially.

Dr.—We will have an understanding with them. It is known that this frightful situation cannot last much longer. I wish to make a proposition to the liberals.

The King—What is it?

Dr.—A sort of a compromise. My co-religionists do not aspire to become senators and deputies, nor to acquire lands, they are much too poor for that. For the moment this is their least concern. What they wish is not to be treated as strangers and not to be exposed to severities and not to be treated as aliens. They wish to be assured the right to work and to enjoy a peaceful existence. This constitutes the minimum of our claims, until the day when we obtain political rights. This proposition was made by a distinguished member of the liberal party, Mr. Porumbaro. By adopting it the dreadful laws passed since 1866 against the aliens will no longer be applied to the Jews, laws which deprive the Jews of all means to live and place them in a position of inferiority.

Thanks to your Majesty a step was taken last year in this direction. According to article 5 of the handicraft law, a distinction is established, in that which concerns labor, between aliens and native Jews. It is easy to generalize this measure and to declare by a law that the native Jews are not strangers except in that which concerns the right of election to parliament and the right to acquire lands. This would be equivalent to a transition, to the very times of complete emancipation. Thus the irritating character of the question would be removed. I recommend this important subject to the earnest attention of your Majesty.

The King—I will study it and talk it over with some of my advisors.

The King—What is this?

Dr.—A memoir signed by all the sections of the "Union."

The King—What do you wish to do?

Dr.—To present it to the Government and to Parliament.

The King—(After a pause)—I beg of you to do nothing for the moment. Let the billows become calm.

In the course of the conversation the King declared that on account of the agitation of the anti-Semites no ministry will broach the Jewish question.

THE EMPLOYMENT BUREAUS AND THE BAPTISM PLAGUE.

We quote the following from a circular sent on Sept. 22, this year, by the Association of Employment Bureaus of the Grand Lodge for Germany to the individual employment offices in Germany:

"At present a new duty devolves upon the employment offices. By their arduous work they must stem the tide of the desertions from Judaism. The economic anti-Semitism of our day which has made it difficult for Jews to be placed in banks, industrial establishments and even in large mercantile houses, has robbed many coreligionists of the possibility of earning a livelihood and has driven them by the cares for sustenance to desert Judaism, as it is clearly demonstrated by the statistical data of the baptism movement during the last few years. It is self-understood that we most emphatically condemn this desertion of the flag. But this is of no avail, we must moreover remove the cause of the desertion by creating possibilities for earning a living.

By personal agitation we must influence our Christian fellow citizens who are free from prejudice to employ in their industries merchants, bank officials, chemists, engineers, and to give employment to capable Jewish workmen and mechanics, tradesmen and laborers.

We must especially awaken the conscience of our coreligionists who have something to say in banks and industrial undertakings, remind them of their duty to the faith of their fathers and impress upon them to use their influence that Jewish applicants should receive consideration when vacancies are to be filled.

Our young people, empolyes, academicians, mechanics, etc., must gain the conviction that we are endeavoring to help them to smoothen their path of life, that they are not left to remain lonely and forgotten.

Then they will not become exasperated, deny their attachment to Judaism and withdraw from it.

We therefore ask you to turn your attention and your efforts to this new and most important problem. The employment bureau will then not contribute to the material condition only of our coreligionists but also to the strengthening of Judaism."

COMMUNICATED.

Editor B'nai B'rith News:

Your leading article of the February edition of the "News" bearing the title "Zionism and Nationalism" is devoted to the reproduction of an address by Jacob H. Schiff, the noted philanthropist of New York, delivered before the Menorah Society of the City College of that city. In that address Mr. Schiff opposes Zionism or at least the worldwide Jewish movement known by that name, and makes a strong plea to the Jewish youth of America not to permit itself to be engulfed in that movement under penalty, as he sees it, of our total extinction, presumably as a race or nation.

As an active member of the Order B'nai B'rith and at present honored in the discharge of the duties as President of one of its lodges, I will not assume that your spreading this speech so conspicuously in that issue indicates any anti-Zionist feelings or that you adopt its arguments as the official attitude of the Order. I rather suppose that in giving prominence to that address you were actuated and prompted by the spirit of "free press" and the eminence of its source. For this very reason, I also believe that in the same spirit of free and candid expression you will give attention in your columns to views that not so much defend the Zionistic attitude as demand more light of those who warn us against it, as does Mr. Schiff, to aid in a full and proper determination of the issues.

I wish to say in advance that nothing I shall say is intended in the remotest degree to impugn the motives of Mr. Schiff or to say anything disparaging to him. I yield to no one in the respect and admiration of his great qualities and it is not his money that I worship. but the man. In this day when Mammon is so triumphant in despoiling his disciples of the qualities of manliness and when so many of our own race prove it by dejudaizing themselves, it is indeed pleasing and even inspiring to contemplate the life of Mr. Schiff. But he would, I am sure, suffer in our respect if he laid claim to infallibility, and I am equally sure he does not.

So much of Mr. Schiff's address which is retrospective, prospective and historical of Jews in the United States is unquestionably sound. Following that he proceeds with a rather flattering estimate of the unifying forces of Zionism and its effects. But he plunges into troubled waters when he labors to answer his own question why it is a paradox for an American Jew to be at the same time a Jewish Nationalist and so difficult does he find this self-imposed task that he only finds refuge or solace in a quotation from Dr. Ludwig Haas, a Jewish deputy in the German Reichstag. But why, pray, ask the question at all? Why build up an obstruction and then worry trying to overcome or evade it? There are, I understand, Irish Nationalists in America, who for decades were laboring for Home Rule in Ireland, and there are Poles and their name is legion, who labor quite as fervently for the liberation of their partitioned country from German, Austrian and Russian yoke, as ever did your Zionists for the restoration of Palestine. And so you can go along and find that at one time or another every nationality or element that goes to make up that composite, figuratively styled by Mr. Zangwill, "the melting pot," worked on behalf of their oppressed brethren elsewhere for the establishment and maintenance of a fit government even as our Revolutionary fathers gave up their life. liberty and happiness for a legally assured and independent government obtaining its powers by the consent of the governed. It occurred to no one. much less to themselves to conjure an imaginary paradox and to regard either their motives or actions as incompatible with their loyalty and patriotism as American citizens.

Mr. Schiff is eloquent when he argues that as American Jews we are not a separate nation, but submerged in the body politic by reason of a common culture and language and the inference is irresistible that Zionism has no place here. It is unnecessary to traverse the claim that a nation is only known by a "common culture and language." Let it for argument's sake stand admitted. The main argument, however. proceeds from a wrong premise. Your most ardent Zionist does not expect to colonize Palestine with American Jews. There never would be such a movement if he did. It is for the hounded and haunted coreligionists in benighted kingdoms of Europe that he seeks to establish an asylum. What are you going to do with them? Encourage them to come here to the land of the brave and free? Are we who are here so sure of our position that we can dream of everlasting security and welcome to the whole house of Israel? If we are, what does the anti-defamation league mean? What means the clamoring for legislation to penalize owners of public resorts and public clubs who wish to exclude us from their company? Why does Mr. Schiff and other great Jewish leaders have to marshal all their forces to meet the onslaught of the immigration restrictionists year in and year out? Why, pray, the necessity of our friends in Congress and state legislatures to rise, from time to time, in our defense with eulogistic memorials and speeches? Do you hear of any great orations in these bodies recounting the glories of the Christian religion or any nation professing Christianity? No, it is not necessary. With us it is getting chronic. There is apparently still need for defense and every defense presupposes an attack. Yes, "Our country 'tis of thee, of thee we sing," is excellent material for a Fourth of July oration, but we must not permit it to decoy us into too sound a slumber.

In the final two paragraphs of his speech, Mr. Schiff criticises Zionism and predicts its utter and complete failure, because as he says, it welcomes believer and absolute unbeliever into a Jewish nation. The statement by itself is somewhat paradoxical for your unbeliever does not recognize the social limitations or confines implied by the word nation, he is cosmopolitan, a member of the whole human race with humankind for his nation. But grant that such combination as a Jewish Nationalist and a total unbeliever is possible, it is somewhat singular for one so enlightened as Mr. Schiff to favor a catechism of an individual's exact belief before admitting him into a movement whose sole object is a political one, that of securing a politically independent and legally assured home for such of our oppressed co-religionists as are deprived of all human rights and driven from pillar to post, in the respective countries where they abide. I repeat it is all the more singular when you realize this position is taken at a time when almost every civilized nation has freed itself from its own church affiliations at the risk almost of open revolution and when one (Portugal) is engaged in the throes of a death struggle to free itself from the fangs of the church.

But suppose Mr. Schiff's disqualification for the unbeliever were a desirable one, is it feasible? What is a believer and an unbeliever? Must one believe in all miracles. ceremonials and ritualism or merely in an all powerful Creator. Let Mr. Schiff lay down an exact standard or test and he will have done for theology more than all religious ministers and their written works have accomplished.

Prof. Eliot of Harvard. one of the, if not the foremost educator in America, is undoubtedly not an unbeliever and I doubt not in the estimation of millions of Americans, a good Christian, yet what would his good fellow Christians have done to him a couple of centuries ago. nay, what would they do to him today if they possessed the power? In our own midst, ask our Orthodox brethren what sort of believer even a Reformed Rabbi is and you will realize what a veritable labyrinth of intricacies the question will lead you into.

I am not a representative of Zionism; in fact I held aloof of it all these years. I started with a presumption against it, but feel drawn towards it by its irresistible logic, yet my mind is still in the formative period on the subject, and I would like Mr. Schiff or any one else believing as he does to answer the questions presented. It may be of little moment to Mr. Schiff or for that matter to Zionism whether I decide one way or the other, but as one of the many thousands of the younger men to whom Mr. Schiff makes his appeal, who may be in the same frame of mind. it may be worth his while to answer. so as to aid us in a proper solution of this all important question.

SECRETARY OF STATE AS PRESIDENT OF LITERARY SOCIETY.

The Hungarian Jewish Literary Society, one of the most important of its kind, has elected Dr. Leopold Vadasz, Secretary of State at the Ministry of Justice, as its President. Dr. Vadasz is a competent Talmudist, and is thoroughly acquainted with Hebrew literature generally. In spite of the onerous duties of his responsible post he still finds time to follow the modern development of Jewish literature.

FAIR PLAY.

Law and order are the mark of civilized communities. In the dawn of history a man's strong arm made for protection of life and home and honor. When attacked, the man of power took the law into his own hands and sought redress by his own might. The murderer was pursued by the victim's kin. Resentment and passion and the warm heart shut out an equitable consideration of mitigating circumstances and often enough the wrong man suffered punishment while the perpetrator of the crime went free. Civilization has taken the right of revenge out of the hands of the individual or an aggregate of individuals. Mob justice has no place in well ordered communities. Lynch law is a disgrace where it still lingers. For, though it may here and there bring condign punishment upon real offenders, it is just as frequently liable to err. Moreover it undermines the respect for law. Directed as it usually is against a section of the population, it grows into a habit and, given the mood, may be applied to other sections as well. When the mob and behind it the press intimidate or influence judge and jury, a fair trial is impossible.

Every law-abiding citizen must wish to see crime punished. The miscreant who wantonly takes a life must forfeit his life. No false sentimentalism will condone cold-blooded murder. The community must needs be shocked when a crime has been committed in its midst. But no community has a right to overawe the court. Legal procedure must be allowed to take its wonted course. When a man has been brought before the bar of justice, let him suffer just penalty if he has been found guilty by due process of law. In Anglo-Saxon countries, a man is presumed to be innocent until the contrary has been proved by legal evidence. If the evidence is inconclusive, the doubt must be turned in favor of the accused. For it is far better that many criminals should escape than that one innocent man should suffer at the hands of the law for a crime he did not commit. To prejudge is not to judge. To render sentence without due regard to the evidence is to be guilty of gross perversion of justice.

When a community is so prejudiced as to make a fair trial impossible, the law provides for a change of venue. When a jury is so blinded by prejudice as to overlook gaps in the evidence it is unfit to sit in judgment upon a fellowman. Once more be it understood; be a man ever so high by virtue of education or wealth or social position, the bestial instincts may still crop out and in a moment of insane forgetfulness of duty and station lead him into the abysmal depths of crime and shame. We may pity such men, but we cannot and must not condone their offence. No stone must be left unturned to bring him who takes a life to a punishment commensurate with his crime. But the evidence should be of such a nature as to leave no room for reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. Above all, the head must be kept cool and reason must hold the passions and the preconceived notions and the prejudices in check. The mob without and the sensational headlines in the press must not dictate to the court within.

A fair trial must be granted to a man upon whom suspicion has been cast. And if new evidence is secured or the conduct of a former trial is assailed as having been governed by haste or passion, the appeal for a fairer, less passionate, objective re-trial should be heeded. It may be that the verdict of the former tribunal will be sustained. Then the community has done its duty. The evil shall have been removed from its midst, and it can say that it has acted fairly and squarely. Should the former verdict be set aside, then the community should be glad that it has been saved from committing a blunder tantamount to a crime, a crime against the foundations of liberty.

The law condemns and the law acquits. There is no other method. A guilty man may escape punishment for lack of legal evidence. He is still guilty before his conscience and God. But were society to condemn him illegally, the sin would be society's. These all are axiomatic propositions. When in a community in which a man is on trial for his life the populace clamors for his life to such an extent that its cries penetrate the court room and are felt by those engaged in the trial to such an extent that the defendant's attorneys feel that they are not safe from public wrath, when under such conditions a man is convicted and sentenced to be hanged, society has committeed a greater sin than the defendant, even if the defendant is guilty.

That nation stands the highest among civilized nations which best protects the rights of every one of its citizens, be he rich or poor, powerful or weak, and where the courts of law and the prosecutor and society at large have nothing to reproach themselves for.

As the rabbis say, a judge can only act according to what his eyes see. But in order that the clear vision may not be dimmed passion must be ruled out of court; all men must be judged alike, all have an inherent right to fair play.

THE SEASON OF OUR FREEDOM.

The tale of the enslavement of our fathers in Egypt and the subsequent delivery is year in year out unfolded by parent to child in answer to the query, What is this? What mean all these ceremonies? "Though we be all wise and intelligent and familiar with the Torah, it is incumbent upon us to narrate the story of the exodus." Seder night is a children's festival. It fascinates them. The food is different. The bread of affliction has in the course of centuries been made palatable in the form of a variety of culinary productions. The unleavened bread takes us into the remotest antiquity. And as the child expects no archaeological or critical exposition, the simple answer furnished by the Haggadah in conformity with the Scriptures will stand unchalleneged. The other features are in part as old, in part somewhat recent, bringing us in contact with Roman times. But through it all runs the story of a small family of nomadic folk invading Palestine and thence driven by famine to the rich land of Goshen where grown into a numerous people it is enslaved by the Pharaohs and then after a lapse of centuries recalled to freedom and the faith of the ancestors by a great leader and prophet. At the foot of Mount Sinai a covenant is established cementing the people forever. They conquer that narrow strip of land which links two continents and opens up a third, they consolidate themselves into a national unit soon enough broken in twain, they forfeit land and state to the northern invader, a small minority unwilling to be submerged returns and builds up a polity grounded in the law of Moses, now under the dominion of the northern king and now under that of the southern king, it wins at last independence and national greatness rivaling the past until through discord and the aggressiveness of another world empire it becomes a prey to the Roman eagle.

Then the homeless wanderer begins his career of vicissitudes so full of pathos and tragedy and withal not devoid of a cretain measure of joy, that joy of freedom within despite the chains of bondage that are forged from without. The Haggadah invests the Pharaoh of oppression with typical significance. "It is not a single Pharaoh that stood up to destroy us, but in every generation the Pharaohs rise up against us and the Lord rescues us out of their hands." The spectre of the medieval ghetto and of its modern counterpart in Eastern Europe hovers above the festive board. When the door is opened to let the wandering prophet in who is the type of his race and the embodiment of its sorrows and joyful hopes, the ear is made attentive, and the heart a quiver lest our kind neighbors have again raised the lying cry of a murdered Christian boy. If we want to know the horrors which the joyous night brought to our people in the middle ages, let us transfer ourselves in thought to Kiev and the other cities and towns of barbarous Russia. "But the Lord rescues out." It is the Lord's night, the Passover night. He is our Watchman who sleepeth not nor slumbereth.

Well may we rejoice in our freedom in this land of the free. Would that the same could be said of the Jewish people as a whole. So long as a portion of Jewry, and not an insignificant one at that, is denied the rights of free movement and is confined to a pale with its iniquitious hardships, so long as there is a body of Jews groaning under discriminations, so long as even in enlightened countries a premium is placed upon apostasy and prejudice is rampant, so long we must cry out with the Haggadah: "This year slaves, next year freemen." In what manner it will please Providence to accomplish our full emancipation it is beyond the ken of man to forsee or predict. But the day of redemption will come in one form or another, nay in more than one form. Against that day we must safeguard our integrity. We must not wantonly destroy ourselves or in sheer despondency give up the fight for freedom. We are the protagonists in the battle for freedom of conscience. Neither by coercion nor by cajolery shall we give up our birthright, the birthright of free human beings. We are not ready to disband. It were a crime against the best interests of mankind. We still have a task before us. But to acquit ourselves worthily of our task we must be free, free politically, free economically, free spiritually. To nobody's hurt and the good of all we shall live on. We shall organize for legitimate self-protection. We shall zealously watch over the boon of freedom that has been accorded to some of us. We shall protest against iniquitous discrimination, libels, persecutions. We shall build up in our people a strong corporate consciousness making for stability. We shall cherish the fair name of the Jew We shall stand by the covenant of our fathers and hold fast thereto. We shall continue to imbue our children with the same memories and the same hopes that make the Jewish people a resolute champion of the rights of individuals and peoples to realize the best that is in them without let or hindrance. The song of the night when the holy feast is kept shall resound in the habitations of Israel made resplendent by the inner light of freedom. It is the song of joy over past redemptions, it is the song of gladness over the vindication that is to come and which will mean the fullest measure of liberty to mankind in general and to Israel among them. It is the song of the Passover which is to come and which will transcend the glories of the Passover of Egypt. "This is the day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoice and be glad thereon!"

THE HEBREW ORPHANS' HOME OF ATLANTA, GA.

The brightest pages in the history of the achievements of American Israel are undoubtedly those which contain the records of Jewish American benevolent and educational institutions. The worth and value of the contributions of American Israel to the commerce, the industry and the development of the economic resources of our commonwealth are unquestionably great. But the greatest glory of American Israel is reflected in the history of its charitable deeds and mental progress.

The B'nai B'rith leaders and the workers in the ranks of the Order have always contributed and they still contribute a large share of work to the making of this history. They were and still are the creators, supporters and administrators of many of our Jewish hospitals, orphan asylums and homes for the aged in all parts of this wide land.

In the present issue we publish extracts from a report of the Hebrew Orphan's Home of Atlanta, Ga. It is a true B'nai B'rith institution. The moving spirit in the establishment of this Home was Brother Simon Wolf, of Washington, D. C., one of the most faithful and zealous leaders of the Order of B'nai B'rith. The Home was dedicated on March 25, 1889 and last month it celebrated its silver jubilee. Brother Wolf has been the President of the Home from its very beginning to the present year and on the occasion of its 25th anniversary he was elected honorary President for life. Brother Wolf fully deserved the honor bestowed upon him, for under his administration the Home has been conducted on the most progressive lines. It has always been a real home to the many orphans who were raised within its protecting precincts.

DEATH OF ISAAC CORDOZA SEIXAS.

The death is announced at New York City of Isaac Cordoza Seixas in his seventy-eighth year. He was a direct descendant of Rabbi Gersham Mendes Seixas of revolutionary fame. Gersham Mendes Seixas was born in New York in 1745. In 1780, when the British were about to occupy New York, he took the scrolls of the law and other ceremonial paraphernalia of the synagogue to Philadelphia and there founded the Mickve Israel congregation. He was one of the fourteen clergymen who participated in the ceremony of inaugurating George Washington as first president of the United States. He was also one of the incorporators and first trustees of Columbia College in the City of New York. Lucius L. Solomons of San Francisco, so prominent in B'nai B'rith circles, is a scion of this family.

KAUFMAN HAYS.

On Monday night, March 9, 1914, a family gathering at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Martin A. Marks of Cleveland, celebrated the 79th birthday of Mr. Kaufman Hays. In speaking of this event the Jewish Independent of Cleveland, said:

Mr. Hays is fully as active today as he was a quarter century ago and does not dream of retiring from business. He is now and has been many years treasurer of the Jewish Orphan Asylum; he is vice president of the Cleveland Worsted Mills Co., member of the Executive Board of the First National bank and member of the Finance Committee of the Citizens Savings and Trust Co. His name in these organizations is not merely to lend dignity to them, for he is as active as the youngest of his associates. Some years ago he was vice president of the City Council, and following the defalcation of City Treasurer Thomas Axworthy, Mr. Hays was appointed his successor.

Mr. Hays landed in New York sixty-two years ago—a youth of seventeen—with just half a dollar in his pocket. He came to Cleveland one of the early Jewish pioneers and married the daughter of Simson Thorman, the first Jewish settler in Cleveland.

Had the money requisite of the immigration law of today been in force in 1852, the year of Mr. Hays' arrival, the ambitious young immigrant would have been sent back to Germany.

Congregation Emanuel of Denver, Colo. is arranging a celebration commemorating the 25th anniversary of Rev. Dr. Wm. S. Friedman as rabbi of the congregation. The affair will be held at the Temple on Friday evening, April 17, 1914.

OFFICIAL.

Cincinnati, O., March 25, 1914.

To the Lodges of the District:

It is my sorrowful duty to advise you of the death on the 23rd of this month, after a lingering illness, of Bro. Abe Bloch, who for eleven years has served as the efficient and painstaking Treasurer of the District Grand Lodge.

Bro. Bloch brought to the service of the District the most conscientious and earnest continued performance of duty imbued as he was with a spirit which carried into his daily life the principles which the order teaches.

His death leaves with those who knew him best and who were brought into most intimate contact with him in his public, private or charitable work, the most tender recollections and highest appreciation of him as a man and brother of the Order.

To fill the vacancy, Bro. William Ornstein of Cincinnati, has been appointed as Treasurer of the District Grand Lodge by the President of the District.

Fraternally yours,
VICTOR ABRAHAM,
Sec. D. G. L. No. 2, I. O. B. B.

THE NEW RUSSIAN PREMIER AND THE JEWISH QUESTION.

M. Goremykin, the new Premier of Russia, expressed himself in a recent interview on the Jewish question as follows:

"It is too early for me to say anything as yet, but you may take it from me that Jews as well as Christians will always be treated justly, as far as lies within my power. The Emperor has the interests of his Jewish subjects at heart as much as he has those of Christians. His Majesty wants only that the laws be observed and his protection will always be granted to those who obey them."

GRIEVANCES OF ROUMANIAN JEWS.

At Bucharest, a few days ago, a deputation of Roumanian Jews handed to the representatives of the Hungarian Press a memorandum concerning the wretched plight of their coreligionists. The oppression which they suffer is well known, but a few points in the memorandum may here be cited. The Jews are not allowed to perform any public function whatsoever. They may not even work as streetcleaners or lamplighters. A Jew cannot even earn his living as a clerk, for of every four employes only one may be a Jew. There are, however, only a few firms which employ four clerks. No one can leave the country without a passport, which is not freely granted. Secret flight is also difficult, for in case of a whole family it is too conspicuous and the head cannot depart alone, leaving those dependent upon him in misery.

Conference of Representatives of German and Austrian Districts

Two meetings of great importance were recently held in Berlin.

One meeting took place on January 31st this year, to which at the request of the General Committee of the Order the joint committee of the four Berlin lodges and their presidents invited the brethren of Berlin.

This extraordinary meeting of the Berlin lodges was caused by the religious and political conflicts which at present are raging in the midst of Jewry and are threatening the very existence of Judaism. Although the quarrel has thus far stopped in front of the gates of the lodges, the Grand Lodge could not pass by without taking notice; especially when it was pressed by the individual parties to take a position in one or the other direction.

The General Committee has therefore urged this meeting of the four Berlin lodges, for the purpose of discussing in a large gathering of brethren the duties of the Grand Lodge, whether the observing of a strict neutrality in political and religious questions shall remain a fundamental law, as before in the order B'nai B'rith in Germany or not.

The great temple of the Berlin lodges where the meeting was held was crowded to its utmost capactiy. Besides the members of the General Committee and the many members of the Berlin lodges a number of brethren from Austria also participated in the deliberations. These were: Professor Ehrmann of Vienna, Vice-Grand President Hammerschlag of Prague, Ex-President Dr. Sonnenschein of Troppau and Ex-President Kohn of Vienna. The subject for the discussion was: "The Interior and Exterior Problems of the Order." The speakers were Brother Maretzki of the Deutsche Reichs Lodge; Brother Elbogen of Berthold Auerbach Lodge; Brother Maximilian Stein of Montefiore Lodge and Brother Grand Secretary Alfred Goldschmidt of Spinoza Lodge.

The meeting was opened by the President of the Deutsche Reichs Lodge, Brother Kaufmann with greetings to the assembled brethren and he then surrendered the chair to the Grand President of the District Grand Lodge, who opened the deliberations with an elaborate address in which he explained the purpose of the meeting. In addition to the above speakers the following brethren also addressed the meeting: Professor Ehrmann, Vice Grand President Kuznitzky, Judicial Counsellor Brother Strassmanon of Berthold Auerbach Lodge, and Brother Ex-President Kirschstein of the Deutsche Reichs Lodge. It was midnight when Brother Timendorfer closed this very impressive and instructive convocation of the Berlin Lodges.

For a long time the leaders of Districts VIII and X entertained the wish to discuss in a joint session several questions which concern both districts. And on Sunday, February 1st, a joint meeting of both districts was held in the Lodge Hall, No. 10, Kleist street, Berlin. Professor Ehrmann presided and the following subjects formed the order of the day:

District No. 10.

1. Relief Fund. Speaker Brother Edm. Kohn.
2. Interchange of reports by the organs of the lodges. Speaker Brother Hammerschlag.
3. Bringing Galician Jews to labor in mines and smelter works. Speaker Brother Sonnenschein.
4. Attitude of both districts in great international relief work. Speaker Brother Edm. Kohn.
5. The publication of a work on the Beilis case. Speaker Brother Ehrmann.

District No. 8.

6. Mixed Marriages and Lodge Membership. Speaker, Brother Maretzki.
7. History of the Order for the 75th anniversary of its existence in 1918. Speaker Brother Bloch, assisted by Brother Maxim Stein.
8. Employment Bureau. Speaker Brother Bloch, assisted by Brother Finkel.
9. Children's Resorts in Galicia. Speaker Brother Metzenberg.

At the close of the session Brother Timendorfer stated with satisfaction that an agreement has been reached by both districts in the main questions and he expressed the hope that the joint deliberations would be fruitful of good results for both districts.

DEATH OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF POLAND.

The death is announced of the Governor-General of Poland, General Scalon. He was one of the few Russian officials who, while executing anti-Jewish orders received from St. Petersburg, invariably opposed them. Whenever it lay in his power he defended the Jewish cause, and in a letter to M. Posse he once wrote that he became a supporter of the emancipation of the Jews, as during his residence in Poland he had learned to respect them. As a protest against the anti-Jewish boycott, the deceased used to patronize the Bezalel stores. The Jewish community participated in his funeral.

ANNUAL REPORT OF AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE.

We are in receipt of the seventh annual report of the American Jewish Committee, covering its work for the year 1913. The report contains a great amount of interesting information and dwells upon many activities undertaken by the Committee, notably the raising of funds for the sufferers of the Balkan war, representations to the American government in the matter of securing for those Jews who were formerly Turkish subjects and are now subjects of the Balkan States, guarantees of civil, political and religious liberty, activity in opposing restrictive measures in pending immigration bills, and efforts to alleviate the condition of the Jews in Roumania.

FOREIGNERS IN PRUSSIAN UNIVERSITIES.

The Prussian Minister for Public Worship and Education has announced that 900 has been fixed as the total number of foreigners who will be admitted into the Universities in the State. The "Numerus Clausum" will not, however, apply to the Technical High Schools.

HOME FOR WAR ORPHANS.

Under the presidency of Chief Rabbi Dr. Ehrenpreis of Bulgaria, a committee has been formed in Sofia for the purpose of establishing in that city an asylum for destitute orphans, numbering about 250, of the Bulgarian Jewish soldiers who fell in the recent war

THE ANTI-SEMITIC BOYCOTT MOVEMENT.

The boycott movement, which has reached a certain stand still in Russian Poland, has now spread over to Galicia, and is advancing here with unforeboded rapid strides. In Ropczyce a Christian consumers' association was formed which has succeeded, with the aid of the district and general committee, in rendering all the Jewish business men of the little town breadless. The Catholic clergy especially has incited the populace of the town against the Jewish population. The priest Stawasz in Ropczyce urges the believers from the pulpit to open boycotting against the Jews. Every Sunday he forbids his congregation to have any dealings with the Jews and threatens those who disobey with heavy ecclesiastical punishments. It is self-understood that the peasants obey the obtrusive words of their priest. So the Jewish merchants lost their customers. All Christian maid servants have given notice to the Jews that they will quit and it even happens that a Christian midwife refuses to visit a Jewish lying-in woman because the priest has prohibited it.

RECORDER'S TRIBUTE TO JEWS.

Mr. Huntley Jenkins, defending in a case at the Old Bailey, remarked: "When a Jew loses money, you know he is apt to say things which are not quite accurate."

The Recorder—I should be sorry to pass such a severe criticism on the race.

Mr. Jenkins—There are Jews and Jews.

The Recorder—I have always understood that in business transactions they were most honorable people. I have often heard peeople say they would rather do business with Jews than anybody else. They will drive a hard bargain, but they are honest.

BANQUET TO JUDGE PHILIP STEIN

On Thursday evening, March 12, 1914, Purim night, District Grand Lodge No. 6, jointly with Ramah Lodge No. 33, of Chicago, tendered a banquet to Judge Philip Stein at the Sherman Hotel on the occasion of his 70th birthday. More than 200 members and their ladies were present to pay their respects to the Judge, among them a number of judges and prominent attorneys of the city.

President Adolf Kraus acted as toastmaster, and Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch offered prayer. Numerous telegrams and letters were received at the banquet table from a host of admiring friends and well wishers. Addresses were delivered by the following: Judge Edward O. Brown of the Appellate Court, speaking of Judge Stein as a judge; Hon. Edgar B. Tolman, former Corporation Counsel, tendered greetings on behalf of the bar; Alfred R. Urion, former President of the School Board, spoke of Judge Stein as a member of the Board. Chas. L. Aarons, of Milwaukee, First Vice President of the District Grand Lodge, in a happy address, presented a magnificent silver Menorah as a gift of the Grand Lodge in recognition of Judge Stein's services to the District for many decades. Hugo Sonnenschein, in behalf of Ramah Lodge, presented the Judge with a beautiful loving cup in recognition of his services to the Lodge. Jacob Furth, of St. Louis, Treasurer of the Order, reviewed Judge Stein's services to the Order at large, and at the conclusion of his address presented the Judge with a silver coffee service. Dr. S. Wolfenstein, of Cleveland, formerly superintendent of the Jewish Orphan Asylum, presented the Judge on behalf of the Board of Trustees and Directors, with a beautifully engrossed copy of resolutions. Wm. Wilhartz on behalf of Oriental-Hillel Lodge presented a silver water pitcher, and he was followed by Louis Etz Hokin of David Fish Lodge, who on behalf of his Lodge presented the Judge with a B'nai B'rith jewel. The most touching address, however, was that of the judge's oldest grandson, Master William Schoenberg, who recited a poem composed for the occasion and which touched not only the Judge, but the entire audience, moving many to tears. A short response was then made by Judge Stein, expressing his deep appreciation for the honor conferred upon him.

The affair was brought to a close with dancing, which lasted until 1 o'clock in the morning.

In chronicling the foregoing event in the Chicago Israelite, Rabbi Schanfarber wrote of Judge Stein as follows:

"Judge Stein has been a resident of Chicago for more than two score years and has always been closely identified with everything appertaining to Jewish as well as civic interest. His high character as a man, his strict honesty and integrity, his deep sense of justice and righteousness have won for him the highest respect and esteem by all those who know him, irrespective of race or creed. His eminent ability as a jurist gained for him a place on the bench of the Superior Court. His judicial temperament is evidenced in his attitude toward the everyday affairs of life. He is rigorous in his demand for what he believes to be true and right, but he does not exact more from others than he demands of himself. He is ever open-minded and progressive letting into his soul the new light coming from whatever source it may. He was among the first to ally himself with the work of the fraternal orders, such as the B'nai B'rith and the Free Sons and there is no office in the gift of these organizations which he has not been asked to grace. In later years he has become more closely identified with the congregation than in the earlier years of his activity in this city. Whatever be the duty he assumes he gives his personal attention to it, and never shirks any of its responsibilities. For some years Judge Stein was a member of the Board of Trustees of the United Hebrew Charities and served as an active member of the Relief Board. Among the Jewish citizens of Chicago he holds high rank for his sterling qualities as a man and his unswerving fidelity to every high and noble virtue. The Israelite joins the large chorus of well-wishers in congratulating Judge Stein on the occasion of his seventieth anniversary and hopes and prays that he may live to see many returns of the day surrounded in health and happiness by those whom he loves and those who love him."

A Gap in our Educational System

By Dr. Max L. Margolis

WRITTEN FOR THE B'NAI B'RITH NEWS.

The Jewish educational system in this country whether on the right or on the left seems on the whole to make provision only for the child and the grown youth. There is a woeful gap covering the period of adolescence.

A word of explanation is necessary. The children are taken care of in the Talmud Torah or the Sunday School. Much as the methods and hours differ in the two institutions, they have this in common that their aim is to provide elementary instruction in the Jewish religion. For it matters little whether catechism and history are wanting in the Talmud Torah curriculum and the teaching of Hebrew is either wholly absent or is reduced to a minimum in the Sunday school, the avowed purpose of both is to teach the Jewish religion. The crowning act in the Sunday School is that of confirmation. It amounts to a formal initiation into the community and fits the graduate for membership in the synagogue. The Bar Mizwah ceremony among the orthodox fulfills the same function for the boys. Few of the Talmud Torah pupils are beyond the age of thirteen. Where an equivalent education is obtained privately it usually terminates at the same age.

The religious teacher is the rabbi. Even in orthodox communities the rabbi is either directly or indirectly the school superintendent. Where is this functionary educated? Obviously in the theological school. But neither the Sunday School graduate nor the Talmud Torah alumnus can advance straightway from the one or the other to the theological school. Where is he to receive his preparatory training?

So long as the students of our theological scools will be recruited from the immigrant the difficulty will not be felt here. The immigrant usually past adolescence has a good though often unsystematic knowledge of Hebrew lore. If he lacks secular training, his mature mind enables him to make up his deficiencies in a short time. But the real test of the efficency of the theological institution must be shown in the manner it adapts itself to the requirements of the native who comes either from the Talmud Torah or Sunday School. The so-called Teachers' Institutes or Colleges afford a help. But even they do not provide all the necessary preparation. They naturally stop short somewhere in the middle. For their function is not to prepare for a higher school, but to train teachers. They do not ocver entirely the ground of the perparatory departments which the theological schools wisely maintain by the side of the strictly theological division.

The preparatory school, we notice, has come in for a deal of criticism in England where Jews' College maintains a similar organization. The pros and cons which were recently developed in a meeting of the governing board of that institution offer food for thought to everybody who is interested in Jewish education. The Hebrew Union College started out with a preparatory department which is still maintained. If I am not mistaken, there was a time when the department was looked at askance. But, if I am correctly informed, faculty and governors were averse to do away with it. The experience was in the first place that taking mature students from the universities had its difficulties. They either lacked in preparation, or were overprepared. When I recently visited Cincinnati I found a graduate of a Western College studying the Hebrew alphabet by the side of a boy thirteen or fourteen years old. It was surely not his fault that his home city was poor in training facilities for him. Then again the gentleman with a bachelor's degree or a master's who had sat at the feet of professors in a Semitic faculty had imbibed notions which were not Jewish. He had learned to look upon Judaism from the angle of vision of his professor. His character was formed The theological school might give him more erudition, but he was no more to be bent or swerved from a point of view which had been ingrained in him. If on the other hand his Hebrew education was imperfect, it was difficult to fit him in the curriculum adjusted to less mature students. And the chances were that he would leave the theological institution half baked. I am referring to natives. The other class of students do not come within the purview of this discussion. I presume that the experiences will be the same the world over, whether in New York or in London or in Berlin. Of course, on the continent of Europe the gap is bridged over far more readily. Yet within my own memory I have known cases not dissimilar to our own. I remember a young man who entered the University of Berlin as a student of the classics and then switched over to "theology." He had great difficulty in making up his deficiencies.

The cost of maintaining a preparatory department should not play a part in the discussion at all. It is claimed that a certain percentage of the boys drops out. So much the better for the ministry. These boys found that they were not fitted for the profession. The fittest survived. But is it true that the money spent on the "unfit" was wasted? By no means. We in America have always felt that the money was indeed well spent. These boys went into business or into other professions. But they were not detached from Judaism. On the contrary, their association with candidates for the ministry gave them an advantage. They had absorbed a measure of Jewish lore not elsewhere obtainable. Well may the institution be proud that it sent out into the world young men who as members or as officers of congregations will be far superior to the ordinary run and be able more intelligently to cope with problems of Jewish life. When I was in Berkeley, I was visited by a former Cincinnati pupil who was engaged in business somewhere North. He had not forgotten his college days. He had carried away something with him which was worth while. He did not seem to think that the years he spent in the preparatory classes were wasted.

What is imperatively needed is a secondary school for carrying on Jewish education through the period of adolescence. Such schools should be found in every large center. They will not attract many pupils. But there will always be a goodly number. The graduates may and may not advance to the theological school. But it is important that the community should be leavened with such material. A few afternoons in the week and the evening hours might be available to many a high school pupil or even boys and girls who after quitting the grammar school go to work. Gratz College in Philadelphia does similar teaching to an efficient degree. Its standards are being constantly raised. A fourth year is being contemplated. Even thus it may not be able to effect a juncture with the neighboring institution which is the highest in the land and which stands for research in the various branches of Jewish learning. Here, however, the gap would be easy to fill. Other communities are far less fortunate. But the need is felt. Judaism is a religion of the Book. It means knowledge of Jewish literature and of Jewish history. It is possible to take a native boy and by graded instruction make of him a Bible student. I know that the belief is largely held that Talmud students can be made only abroad. I for one make bold to dissent. If the same methods were used and the teachers were willing to write a few books less and to do a little more teaching, there would be developed right here in America native Talmud students. A little more work and a little more patience —that is all that would be required. The Yeshibahs, so called, in this country are trying the experiment. They will succeed in the end.

It is far easier to demolish and abolish than to create. Let the present paper be construed as a brief for the preparatory school where it exists. The standards and experiences of other denominations are not to the point. Our ministers have a great deal more to learn than a few lessons in theology or in the art of sermon building. They must be at home in Jewish literature. The subject is so vast that to commence it in mature age is preposterous. The study must be begun early. The foundations must be well laid if the structure that is raised on the top is to last. Such has been the experience of the Jewish teachers from times immemorial. By that experience it is wise to abide.

Russia and the Medical Profession

By Dr. M. Fishbein, Chicago

The fame and worth of the Jew as a physician are well known, and from the time of Maimonides there have been many Jewish names in the literature of science in general and medicine in particular. A recent incident in connection with the meeting of the Twelfth International Congress on Ophthalmology to be held in St. Petersburg in 1914 further exemplifies the position held by the Jewish physician today.

The matter has been very succinctly stated by the Berlin correspondent of the Journal of the American Medical Association, who says in the issue for Jan. 31, 1914:

Protest Against the International Congress of Ophthalmology at St. Petersburg.

As the readers of The Journal must know, foreign physicians of the Jewish faith are allowed to enter Russia only by special permission of the government—a permission which is accorded only in exceptional cases, and for a short period. In order that Jewish physicians may not be excluded from international medical congresses, such an exceptional permit has generally been granted by the government for each meeting; and by this means it was possible for Jews to take part in the International Medical Congress held in Moscow about ten years ago, as well as in the International Congress of Gynecology which took place last year.

Each time earnest protests were publicly made against such an uncivilized discrimination against Jewish physicians. At the time of the International Medical Congress the protest was made by the congress itself, on the motion of Rudolf Virchow. As the same procedure is to be repeated on the occasion of the International Congress of Ophthalmology, which, according to the present plans, is to be held in St. Petersburg in August, the well-known Professor Hirschberg of this city has published a statement declaring that in view of this humiliating exception he will not attend the congress, and he requests his colleagues to absent themselves as well. The president of the Belgian Ophthalmologic Society has already published a sharp protest to the same effect, and it seems as if the meeting of the congress might be endangered in this way. Such an outcome would be exceedingly regrettable for the sake of our Russian colleagues, who are entirely innocent of the inimical attitude of their government toward civilization; but it would be a generally approved reprimand to the Russian government, which probably would be made to feel that eventually it must rise to the plane of European civilization if it cares to maintain further international relations.

The excitement caused by the action of the Russian government in this matter has been considerably heightened by the recent treatment of the noted psychiatrist, Bechterew. Bechterew made a thorough and correct report regarding the recent trial for ritual murder in Kiev, which, however, was opposed to that given by the fanatical Sikorski, who is probably himself suffering from a senile psychosis. The report of Bechterew was markedly unsatisfactory to the prosecution. On account of this report, Bechterew has been deprived of his office and removed from the management of the institute which was founded by him.

In view of such censorship of science and its representatives, many people have justly reached the opinion that a country which has a government of this kind at its head is not yet fit for international scientific congresses.

In the same issue the Journal says editorially:

Russian Attitude Toward Jewish Ophthalmologists.

Our Berlin correspondent calls attention to the agitation to prevent the success of the International Congress of Ophthalmology to be held in St. Petersburg, Russia, on account of the exclusion of some and the restrictions imposed on other Jewish members. Because of the many withdrawals from the congress, which might have been expected as the result of an appeal to the profession published by Dr. Hirschberg of Berlin, the following announcement was made early in January by Professor Bellarminoff, the head of the congress at St. Petersburg: "The minister of the interior has granted, without exception, unhindered entrance into the empire and unlimited stay to all members of the Twelfth International Congress of Ophthalmology." Apropos of this message, the editor of the Berliner klinische Wochenschrift says in the current issue:

"It can only be a matter of keen regret that this announcement came so late, or rather was issued too late. The experience with reference to the International Medical Congress at Moscow in 1897 and the unanimous opposition which the contemplated restriction of passports met from the national committee in Germany, on the initiative of Rudolf Virchow, should have been recalled and heeded in time to spare the organization committee of the Congress of Ophthalmology this painful situation."

The bulletin of the Russian minister of the interior announces in another place that "Members of the Israelitish faith on presentation of their passports will be allowed unhindered entrance and unlimited stay."

Even though the Russian government has made these forced concessions, we feel that the Berlin correspondent very nicely stated the position of the world generally when he said: "A country with a government of this kind at its head is not yet fit for international scientific congresses."

JEWISH PUBLICATIONS.

A Jewish Child's Book by Katherine Myrtilla Cohen (The Jewish Publication Society of America, Philadelphia, Publishers).

The author of this little primer for Jewish children deserves credit for her work. We need such booklets for our little folks in the home and in the Sabbath school. The author certainly has the right idea. The reading matter of this twenty-eight page little volume and the conception of the twelve illustrations of the ceremonials in the synagogue and home are all right. We have absolutely no fault to find with the author, who no doubt meant it well. But we cannot understand why the publishers paid so very little attention to the typographical part of the work. From an artistic standpoint it is an absolute botch. The type appears old and battered and the press work is very negligently done. The colored illustrations are of the poorest kind, the plates are faultily registered and the colors are dubbed. Such illustrations are not calculated to inspire the child with admiration of or even respect for Jewish art. And this at a time when a Jewish artist like Professor Boris Schatz of the Bezalel School of Arts and Crafts of Jerusalem, is holding exhibitions in this country of beautiful products of Jewish artistic workmanship and is striving to convince the world that there are gifted artists and capable artisans among the Jews! This little publication fails to come up to the standard set for itself by the Jewish Publication Society.

THE JEW AND THE MODERN WORLD.

Ben Altheimer's review of Anti-Semitism in Germany, reproduced in yesterday's Republic from The American Citizen, is much more than a clear and scholarly presentation of an important chapter of contemporary history, done with distinct literary charm. The story has what fullness of knowledge alone could never give; it has that force and carrying power that come only from one who has felt deeply as well as seen truly, who writes from the heart. And the end of it sets one dreaming of the future of the Jew in a society such as the world is fast developing where race and religious prejudices are dissolved and each man stands as he has deserved to stand in the eyes of his fellows. Today, when every physician is the conscious debtor of the Jew Ehrlich and every serious thinker is quick to acknowledge his obligation to the Jew Bergson, when the careless passer-by who whistles the Barcarolle from Hoffman or the Melody in F is an unconscious debtor to Jewish musical genius, are we not on the threshold of new and great things? All that the Jew has accomplished for his fellows in the past he has done in spite of hate and opposition and cold dislike. Yet he has given us philosophers and statesmen, poets and musicians, scientists and philanthropists. What will he not render to his fellows when he is met in the spirit of his service, as the modern age is beginning to meet him?—St. Louis Republic.

NEWS FROM LONDON

BY OUR CORRESPONDENT DR. M. EPSTEIN

London, March 19, 1914.

The papers are very full in England just now. The so-called "crisis" in the Irish question practically monopolizes attention, and to add to the excitement we get such stirring events as the shooting of a Paris editor in his den by the wife of a high-placed cabinet minister. Within the community we have nothing to compare with all this in fascination and attraction. For how is the world with us wagging? Jews' College is much discussed—Jews' College, our one and only clergy training school. But the discussion, so far as the bulk of the community is concerned, is somewhat half-hearted. We really don't care tremendously as to what happens to Jews' College. And this is the root of the evil. If the public did care sufficiently, things in that institution would very soon change. There would, for one thing, be more students. There might even be students of a different calibre, such as some spirits in our midst dream of. And then, the staff would not be so over-worked; the Principal and his assistants might get more time for research. It is a little difficult to bring home to the average business man that one of the first activities of any institution for the cultivating of higher learning is to prosecute research. And the first need for research is ample leisure. Leisure then the staff should have. The friends of the College who are also the best friends of communal progress in England might well cry out just now: "O for a Carnegie or a Rockefeller!"
